After this Thomas Baniſter departed from Tauris, and went to Shamaky to giue order for the tranſporting of thoſe commodities which were bought for England. And hauing diſpatched them away, he went there hence to Arraſh, a towne foure dayes iourney with camels from Shamaky for the buying of rawe ſilke. But there by reaſon of the vnwholeſomneſſe of the aire, and corruption of the waters in the hote time of the yeere, he with Lawrence Chapman and ſome other Engliſh men vnhappily died: which being knowen of M. Ducket, he immediatly came from Tauris to Arraſh, to take poſſeſſion of the goods, for otherwiſe by the cuſtome of the countrey, if there had bene no merchant or other friend of his to enter vpon that which he left, all had fallen into the Shaughs hands, which goods notwithſtanding could not bee recouered from the officers which had ſeized and ſealed vp the ſame, vntill M. Ducket had bene in perſon with the Shaugh, and had procured his order for the deliuerie thereof.

The death of Thomas Baniſter and Lawrence Chapman.

Lionel Plumtree, in the meane time that M. Ducket was at Casbin in ſute for goods, vpon the perſwaſion of certaine Boghariens, made prouiſion for a iourney to Cathaia, with cariages and commodities, and hauing all things ready, departed ſecretly with a Carauan: but being gone forwards on his way ſixe dayes iourny, ſome fifty horſemen by the procurement of Humfry Greenſell (who afterwards being at Ormus in the Eaſt Indies, was there cruelly burnt in the Inquiſition by the Portingals) were ſent after him in poſte from Soltan Erasbec, the Shaughs lieutenant, to fetch him backe againe, not ſuffering him to paſſe on ſo perillous and dangerous a iourney for feare of diuers inconueniences that might follow.

Humfrey Greenſell burnt at Ormus.

After this M. Ducket returned from Casbin to Shamaky againe, and immediately made preparation for a iourney to Caſſan, being about foure dayes iourney from Shamaky, and caried with him foure mules laden with mony.

In the way of his trauel he paſſed through Perſepolis, ſometime the roiall ſeate of the Emperors of Perſia, but now altogether ruined and defaced, whereof remaine to be ſeene at this day two gates onely that are diſtant one from the other the ſpace of 12. miles, and ſome few pinnacles in the mountains and conueiances for freſh water.

The foreſaid Caſſan is a towne that conſiſteth altogether of merchandiſe, and the beſt trade of all the land is there, being greatly frequented by the merchants of India.

Here our men bought great ſtore of al maner of wrought ſilkes, and ſome ſpices, and good ſtore of Turkie ſtones.

The towne is much to be commended for the ciuil and good gouernment that is there vſed. An idle perſon is not ſuffred to liue amongſt them.

The child that is but fiue yeeres old is ſet to ſome labour. No ill rule, diſorder or riote by gaming or otherwiſe, is there permitted. Playing at Dice or Cards is by the law preſent death.

At this Caſhan they remained about the ſpace of tenne weekes, and then came downe againe to Skamaky, and after ſome time ſpent in diuers places of the countrey for buying of rawe ſilke and other commodities, they came at laſt to Shauaran againe, where their ſhip was in harbour, and then they ſhipt all their goods and embarked themſelues alſo, ſetting ſayle the eight day of May, in the yeere 1573. intending to fetch Aſtracan. By reaſon of the varietie of the windes and dangerous flats of the Caſpian ſea, they beat it vp and downe ſome 20. dayes. And the 28. day riding at anker vpon the flats, certaine Ruſſe Caſſaks, which are outlawes or baniſhed men, hauing intelligence of their being there, and of the great wealth that they had with them, came to them with diuers boates vnder the colour of friendſhip, and entred their ſhip, but immediately they tooke their hatchets & ſlew diuers of the Ruſſes that were of the ſhip vpon the hatches: Whereupon maſter Ducket, Lionell Plumtree, William Smith, the maſter, a man of ſingular valure, and Amos Riall being vnder the ſpardecke, did ſo well behaue themſelues, that they ſkowred the hatches, and ſlew 14. of the Caſſaks gunners, and hurt and wounded about 30. more, being of them al in number 150. at the leaſt, armed with caliuers and other weapons fit for ſo villanous a purpoſe.

M. Ducket notwithſtanding and the reſt aforeſaid receiued diuers wounds from the enemie, and were ſo hurt, and withall ſo oppreſſed with the multitude and force of them, that they were at laſt conſtrained to make an agreement with the Caſſaks by rendring the ſhip into their hands, hauing receiued firſt their othes ſworne by their crucifixes, not to do any further harme to their perſons.

The Engliſh ſhip taken by the Caſſaks.

Thus the ſhippe being taken, and all the Engliſh grieuouſly hurt, the Caſſaks immediately diſcharged the ſhip of them, putting them all into the ſhip boate with two or three Perſian targets full of horſe fleſh and ſwines fleſh, without further victuals or reliefe: they being in that caſe, made the beſt haſt they could to get to Aſtracan: and being come to the towne, maſter Ducket made great ſute to the captaine to haue men and boates ſet out for the reſcuing and recouering of the ſhip if it were poſſible: who immediately ſent out his ſonne with fortie boates and fiue hundred men to purſue the Pirats, and by good hap came to the place where they rid at anker with the ſhip, but by reaſon of their fooliſhnes in ſtriking vp their drums before they were come neere them, the Caſſaks diſcouering the boats, cut their gables and put out to ſea, whereupon the boats not being able to follow them, returned againe to Aſtracan. After which, 60. boats more were ſent out to purſue them againe the ſecond time: & that ſecond army came to a place where they found many of thoſe Caſſaks and ſlew them, and found out the places where they had hid certaine parcels of their goods in the earth in the cheſts of the ſhip: all which they recouered againe for the Engliſh merchants, to the value of 5000. li. of 30. or 40. thouſand pound, but all the reſt the Caſſaks in the ſhip had caried away.

In the ſame place they found further diuers of the Caſſaks which the Engliſhmen had ſlaine, buried in the earth, and wrapt ſome in fortie or fiftie peeces of Sattin and Taffataes, and ſome in Turkie carpets cut & ſpoiled by thoſe villanous Pirats, of whom afterwards as many as could be taken by the Perſians who entirely loued the Engliſh merchants, were put to moſt cruell torments in all places according to their deſerts.

But our men being thus ſpoyled of their goods, and wounded in their bodies, remained about two moneths at Aſtracan for their better recouerie: & hauing gotten ſome reaſonable ſtrength, they then prouided boates and went vp the riuer of Volga to Cazan, with ſuch goods as they had recouered from the Caſſaks. From Cazan they went towards Yeraſlaue, but in the way the ice intercepted them about the beginning of October, where ſuddenly in the night they were taken with a cruell and vehement froſt, and therewithall the waters ſo congeled, that their boates were cruſhed and cut in ſunder with the ice, whereby they ſuſtained both a further danger of life and loſſe of goods: but as much as they could preſerue with much adoe, they conueyed ouer land in ſleds to Vologda, and from thence ſent much of it to Saint Nicholas to be laden in the ſhips for England.

Ice in the beginning of October.

But Maſter Ducket, Lionel Plumtree and Amos Riall went with ſome parcels to the Moſko, and there ſold certaine quantities of it to the Emperour, who pitying the mightie loſſe that they had ſuſtained by his owne rebellious people and ſubiects, bought himſelfe as much as hee liked, and payed preſent money for the ſame: So that Winter being ſpent out in Moſko, and ſuch wares prouided by them as ſerued for England, they departed to Saint Nicholas, and there embarked in the moneth of Auguſt: and hauing endured a very terrible paſſage in nine weekes and three dayes, with ſome hardneſſe of victuals, contrary and furious windes, and other ſea accidents, they arriued at London in the moneth of October, one thouſand fiue hundred ſeuentie and foure, and ſo made an ende of an vnfortunate voyage: which if it had pleaſed God to proſper, that all things had come home as ſafely as they were carefully prouided, and painfully laboured for, it had proued the richeſt voiage and moſt profitable returne of commoditie, that had euer bene vndertaken by Engliſh merchants, who, notwithſtanding all miſfortunes, loſt nothing of their principall aduenture, but onely the intereſt and gaine that might haue riſen by the vſe of their ſtocke in the meane time.

Further obſeruations concerning the ſtate of Perſia, taken in the foreſayd fift voyage into thoſe partes, and written by M. Geffrey Ducket, one of the Agents emploied in the ſame.

Shamaky is the faireſt towne in all Media, and the chiefeſt commoditie of that countrey is rawe ſilke, & the greateſt plentie thereof is at a towne three dayes iourney from Shamaky called Araſh: and within 3. dayes iourney of Araſh is a countrey named Groſin, whoſe inhabitants are Chriſtians, & are thought to be they which are otherwiſe called Georgians: there is alſo much ſilke to be ſold. The chiefe towne of that countrey is called Zegham, from whence is caried yeerely into Perſia, an incredible quantitie of Haſell nuts, all of one ſort and goodneſſe, and as good and thin ſhaled as are our Filberds. Of theſe are caried yeerely the quantitie of 4000. Camels laden.

Groſin or Georgia.

Of the name of the Sophy of Perſia, & why he is called the Shaugh, and of other cuſtomes.

The king of Perſia (whom here we call the great Sophy) is not there ſo called, but is called the Shaugh. It were there dangerous to cal him by the name of Sophy, becauſe that Sophy in the Perſian tongue, is a begger, & it were as much as to call him, The great begger. He lieth at a towne called Casbin, which is ſituate in a goodly fertile valley of 3. or 4. daies iourny in length. The towne is but euil builded, and for the moſt part all of bricke, not hardened with fire, but only dried at the ſunne, as is the moſt part of the building of all Perſia. The king hath not come out of the compaſſe of his owne houſe in 33. or 34. yeeres, whereof the cauſe is not knowen, but as they ſay, it is vpon a ſuperſtition of certaine prophesies to which they are greatly addicted: he is now about 80. yeeres of age, and very luſty. And to keepe him the more luſty, he hath 4. wiues alwayes, and about 300. concubines, and once in the yeere he hath all the faire maidens and wiues that may be found a great way about brought vnto him, whom he diligently peruſeth, feeling them in all parts, taking ſuch as he liketh, and putting away ſome of them which he hath kept before, & with them that he putteth away, he gratifieth ſome ſuch as hath done him the beſt ſeruice. And if hee chance to take any mans wife, her huſband is very glad thereof, and in recompenſe of her, oftentimes he giueth the huſband one of his old ſtore, whom he thankfully receiueth.

How ſtrangers are vſed.

If any ſtranger being a Chriſtian ſhall come before him, he muſt put on a new paire of ſhooes made in that countrey, and from the place where he entreth, there is digged as it were a cauſey all the way, vntil he come to the place where he ſhal talke with the king, who ſtandeth alwayes aboue in a gallerie, when he talketh with any ſtrangers: and when the ſtranger is departed, then is the cauſey caſt downe, and the ground made euen againe.

Of the religion of the Perſians.

A goodly and well grounded religion.

Their religion is all one with the Turkes, ſauing that they differ who was the right ſucceſſor of Mahumet. The Turkes ſay that it was one Homer and his ſonne Vſman. But the Perſians ſay that it was one Mortus Ali, which they would prooue in this maner. They ſay there was a counſell called to decide the matter who ſhould be the ſucceſſor: and after they had called vpon Mahumet to reueale vnto them his will and pleaſure therein, there came among them a litle Lizard, who declared that it was Mahumets pleaſure that Mortus Ali ſhould be his ſucceſſor. This Mortus Ali was a valiant man and ſlew Homer the Turkes prophet. He had a ſword that hee fought withall, with the which hee conquered all his enemies, and killed as many as he ſtroke. When Mortus Ali died, there came a holy prophet, who gaue them warning that ſhortly there would come a white Camell, vpon the which he charged them to lay the body and ſword of Mortus Ali, and to ſuffer the Camel to cary it whither he would. The which being performed, the ſaid white camell caried the ſword & body of Mortus Ali vnto the ſea ſide, and the camell going a good way into the ſea, was with the body & ſword of Mortus Ali taken vp into heauen, for whoſe returne they haue long looked in Perſia. And for this cauſe the king alwayes keepeth a horſe ready ſadled for him, and alſo of late kept for him one of his owne daughters to be his wife, but ſhe died in the yere of our Lord, 1573. And they ſay furthermore, ỷ if he come not ſhortly, they ſhalbe of our beliefe: much like the Iewes, looking for their Meſſias to come & reigne among them like a worldly king for euer, and deliuer them from the captiuitie which they are now in among the Chriſtians, Turkes, and Gentiles.

The Shaugh or king of Perſia is nothing in ſtrength & power comparable vnto the Turke: for although he hath a great Dominion, yet is it nothing to be compared with the Turks: neither hath he any great Ordinance or gunnes, or harquebuſſes. Notwithſtanding his eldeſt ſonne Iſmael about 25. yeeres paſt, fought a great battell with the Turke, and ſlew of his armie about an hundreth thouſand men: who after his returne, was by his father caſt into priſon, and there continueth vntil this day: for his father the Shaugh had him in ſuſpicion that he would haue put him downe, and haue taken the regiment vnto himſelfe.

Their opinion of Chriſt.

Their opinion of Chriſt is, that he was an holy man and a great Prophet, but not like vnto Mahumet: ſaying, that Mahumet was the laſt prophet by whom all things were finiſhed, & was therefore the greateſt. To prooue that Chriſt was not Gods ſonne, they ſay that God had neuer wife, and therefore could haue no ſonne or children. They go on pilgrimage from the furtheſt part of Perſia vnto Mecha in Arabia, and by the way they viſite alſo the ſepulchre of Chriſt at Ieruſalem, which they now call Couch Kaly.

The moſt part of ſpices which commeth into Perſia is brought from the Iſland of Ormus, ſituate in the gulfe of Perſia called Sinus Perſicus, betweene the maine land of Perſia and Arabia, &c. The Portingals touch at Ormus both in their voyage to Eaſt India and homeward againe, and from thence bring all ſuch ſpices as are occupied in Perſia and the regions thereabout: for of pepper they bring very ſmall quantitie, and that at a very deare price.

The Turkes oftentimes bring pepper from Mecha in Arabia, which they ſell as good cheape as that which is brought from Ormus. Silkes are brought from no place, but are wrought all in their owne countrey. Ormus is within two miles of the maine land of Perſia, and the Portingals fetch their freſh water there, for the which they pay tribute to the Shaugh or king of Perſia.

Their money.

Within Perſia they haue neither gold nor ſiluer mines, yet haue they coined money both of gold and ſiluer, and alſo other ſmall moneys of copper. There is brought into Perſia an incredible ſumme of Dutch dollars, which for the moſt part are there imploied in raw ſilke.

Their bookes and learning.

They haue few bookes and leſſe learning, and are for the moſt part very brutiſh in all kind of good ſciences, ſauing in ſome kind of ſilke works, and in ſuch things as pertaine to the furniture of horſes, in the which they are paſſing good.

Such was the law of the Macedonians for treaſon.

Their lawes are as in their religion, wicked and deteſtable. And if any man offend the prince, he puniſheth it extreemely, not onely in the perſon that offendeth, but alſo in his children, and in as many as are of his kin. Theft and murther are often puniſhed, yet none otherwiſe then pleaſeth him that is ruler in the place where the offence is committed, and as the partie offending is able to make friends, or with money to redeeme his offence.

Diſſention for religion.

There is oftentimes great mutinie among the people in great Townes which of Mortus Ali his ſonnes was greateſt: inſomuch that ſometimes in the towne two or three thouſand people are together by the eares for the ſame, as I haue ſeene in the towne of Shamaky and Ardouil, and alſo in the great City of Teueris, where I haue ſeene a man comming from fighting, in a brauerie bringing in his hand foure or fiue mens heads, carying them by the haire of the head: for although they ſhaue their heads moſt commonly twiſe a weeke, yet leaue they a tuft of haire vpon their heads about a foote long. I haue enquired why they leaue the tuft of haire vpon their heads. They anſwer, that thereby they may eaſilier be caried vp into heauen when they are dead.

Their prieſts and preaching. Their Lent.

For their religion, they haue certaine prieſts who are apparelled like vnto other men. They vſe euery morning and afternoone to go vp to the tops of their churches, and tell there a great tale of Mahumet and Mortus Ali: and other preaching haue they none. Their Lent is after Chriſtmas, not in abſtinence from fleſh onely, but from all meats and drinks, vntill the day be off the ſkie, but then they eate ſomtimes the whole night. And although it be againſt their religion to drinke wine, yet at night they will take great exceſſe thereof and be drunken. Their Lent beginneth at the new Moone, and they do not enter into it vntill they haue ſeene the ſame: neither yet doeth their Lent end, vntill they haue ſeen the next new Moone, although the ſame (through cloſe weather) ſhould not be ſeen in long time.

Their ſaints and holy men.

Pilgrimage.

They haue among them certaine holy men whom they call Setes, counted holy for that they or any of their anceſtors haue bene on pilgrimage at Mecha in Arabia, for whoſoeuer goeth thither on pilgrimage to viſite the ſepulchre of Mahumet, both he and all his poſteritie are euer after called Setes, and counted for holy men, and haue no leſſe opinion of themſelues. And if a man contrary one of theſe, he will ſay that he is a Saint, and therefore ought to be beleeued, and that hee cannot lie, although he lie neuer ſo ſhamefully. Thus a man may be too holy, and no pride is greater then ſpirituall pride of a mind puffed vp with his owne opinion of holineſſe. Theſe Setes do vſe to ſhaue their heads all ouer, ſauing on the ſides a litle aboue the temples, the which they leaue vnſhauen, and vſe to braid the ſame as women do their haire, and to weare it as long as it will grow.

Their praier & worſhipping of God and Mahumet.

Euery morning they vſe to worſhip God, Mahumet, and Mortus Ali, & in praying turne themſelues toward the South, becauſe Mecha lieth that way from them. When they be in trauell on the way, many of them will (as ſoone as the Sunne riſeth) light from their horſes, turning themſelues to the South, and will lay their gownes before them, with their ſwords and beads, and ſo ſtanding vpright worſhip to the South: and many times in their prayers kneele downe and kiſſe their beads, or ſomwhat els that lieth before them.

Waſhing and outward cleanlineſſe.

The men or women doe neuer goe to make water, but they vſe to take with them a pot with a ſpout, and after they haue made water, they flaſh ſome water vpon their priuy parts, and thus doe the women as well as the men: and this is a matter of great religion among them, and in making of water, the men do cowre downe as well as the women.

Their ſwearing.

When they earneſtly affirme a matter, they will ſweare by God, Mahumet, or Mortus Ali, and ſometimes by all at ones: as thus in their owne language, ſaying, Olla, Mahumet, Ali. But if he will ſweare by the Shaughs head, in ſaying Shaugham baſſhe, you may then beleeue him if you will.

The kings magnificence.

The Shaugh keepeth a great magnificence in his court: and although ſometimes in a moneth or ſixe weekes none of his nobilitie or counſaile can ſee him, yet goe they daily to the court, and tary there a certaine time vntill they haue knowen his pleaſure whether hee will commaund them any thing or not. Hee is watched euery night with a thouſand of his men, which are called his Curſhes, who are they that hee vſeth to ſend into the Countreis about his greateſt affaires. When he ſendeth any of them (if it be to the greateſt of any of his nobilitie) he will obey them, although the meſſenger ſhould beat any of them to death.

The kings company with his wiues and concubines.

The Shaugh occupieth himſelfe alwayes two dayes in the weeke in his Bathſtoue, and when he is diſpoſed to goe thither, he taketh with him fiue or ſixe of his concubines, more or leſſe, and one day they conſume in waſhing, rubbing, and bathing him, and the other day in paring his nailes, and other matters, The greateſt part of his life hee ſpendeth amongſt his wiues and concubines. Hee hath now reigned about fiftie and foure yeeres, and is therefore counted a very holy man, as they euer eſteeme their kings, if they haue reigned fiftie yeeres or more: for they meaſure the fauour of God by a mans proſperitie, or his diſpleaſure by a mans misfortune or aduerſitie. The great Turke hath this Shaugh in great reuerence, becauſe he hath reigned king ſo long time.

The ſucceſſion of þ kingdom.

I haue ſayd before that hee hath foure wiues, and as many concubines as him liſteth: and if he chance to haue any children by any of his concubines, and be minded that any of thoſe children ſhall inherite after him, then when one of his wiues dieth, the concubine whom hee ſo fauoureth, hee maketh one of his wiues, and the childe whom he ſo loueth beſt, he ordaineth to bee king after him.

Circumciſion.

What I heard of the maner of their mariages, for offending of honeſt conſciences and chaſte eares, I may not commit to writing: their faſting I haue declared before. They vſe circumciſion vnto children of ſeuen yeeres of age, as do the Turkes.

Their houſes and maner of eating.

Their houſes (as I haue ſaid) are for the moſt part made of bricke, not burned but only dried in the Sunne: In their houſes they haue but litle furniture of houſhold ſtuffe, except it be their carpets and ſome copper worke: for all their kettles & diſhes wherein they eate, are of copper. They eate on the ground, ſitting on carpets croſſe legged as do Tailors. There is no man ſo ſimple but he ſitteth on a carpet better or worſe, and the whole houſe or roume wherein he ſitteth is wholy couered with carpets. Their houſes are all with flat roofes couered with earth: and in the Sommer time they lie vpon them all night.

Bondmen and bondwomen.

Women bought & ſold, and let to hire.

They haue many bond ſeruaunts both men and women. Bondmen and bondwomen, is one of the beſt kind of merchandiſe that any man may bring. When they buy any maydes or yong women, they vſe to feele them in all partes, as with vs men doe horſes: when one hath bought a yong woman, if he like her, he will keepe her for his owne vſe as long as him liſteth, and then ſelleth her to an other, who doeth the like with her. So that one woman is ſometimes ſold in the ſpace of foure or fiue yeeres, twelue, or twentie times. If a man keepe a bondwoman for his owne vſe, and if hee find her to be falſe to him, and giue her body to any other, he may kill her if he will.

When a merchant or traueller commeth to any towne where he entendeth to tary any time, he hireth a woman, or ſomtimes 2. or 3. during his abode there. And when he commeth to an other towne, he doeth the like in the ſame alſo: for there they vſe to put out their women to hire, as wee do here hackney horſes.

Abundance of oile iſſuing out of the ground.

There is a very great riuer which runneth through the plaine of Iauar, which falleth into the Caſpian ſea, by a towne called Bachu, neere vnto which towne is a ſtrange thing to behold. For there iſſueth out of the ground a marueilous quantitie of oile, which oile they fetch from the vttermoſt bounds of all Perſia: it ſerueth all the countrey to burne in their houſes.

Oleum Petroleum.

This oyle is blacke, and is called Nefte: they vſe to cary it throughout all the Countrey vpon kine & aſſes, of which you ſhall oftentimes meet with foure or fiue hundred in a company. There is alſo by the ſaid towne of Bachu another kind of oyle which is white and very precious: and is ſuppoſed to be the ſame that here is called Petroleum. There is alſo not farre from Shamaky, a thing like vnto tarre, and iſſueth out of the ground, whereof we haue made the proofe, that in our ſhips it ſerueth well in the ſtead of tarre.

Two ſorts of kine.

In Perſia are kine of two ſorts: the one like vnto ours in theſe partes: the other are marueilous euill fauoured, with great bones and very leane, and but litle haire vpon them: their milke is walowiſh ſweete: they are like vnto them which are ſpoken of in the Scripture, which in the dreame of Pharao ſignified the ſeuen deare yeeres: for a leaner or more euill fauoured beaſt can no man ſee.

Foxes in great plenty.

In the countrey of Shiruan (ſometime called Media) if you chance to lie in the fields neere vnto any village, as the twilight beginneth, you ſhall haue about you two or three hundred foxes, which make a marueilous wawling or howling: and if you looke not well to your victuals, it ſhal ſcape them hardly but they will haue part with you.

The Caſpian ſea doeth neither ebbe nor flowe, except ſometimes by rages of wind it ſwelleth vp very high: the water is very ſalt. Howbeit, the quantitie of water that falleth out of the great riuer of Volga maketh the water freſh at the leaſt twentie leagues into the ſea. The Caſpian ſea is marueilous full of fiſh, but no kind of monſtrous fiſh, as farre as I could vnderſtand, yet hath it ſundry ſortes of fiſhes which are not in theſe parts of the world.

The mutton there is good, and the ſheepe great, hauing very great rumpes with much fat vpon them.

Rice and mutton is their chiefe victuall.

The copy of a letter ſent to the Emperour of Moſcouie, by Chriſtopher Hodſdon and William Burrough, Anno 1570.

MOſt mightie Emperour, &c. Whereas Sir William Garrard and his felowſhip the company of Engliſh merchants, this laſt Winter ſent hither to the Narue three ſhips laden with merchandiſe, which was left here, and with it Chriſtopher Hodſdon one of the ſayd felowſhip, and their chiefe doer in this place, who when hee came firſt hither, and vntill ſuch time as hee had diſpatched thoſe ſhips from hence, was in hope of goods to lade twelue or thirteene ſailes of good ſhips, againſt this ſhipping, wherefore he wrote vnto the ſayd Sir William Garrard and his companie to ſend hither this ſpring the ſayd number of thirteene ſhips. And becauſe that in their comming hither wee found the Freebooters on the ſea, and ſuppoſing this yeere that they would be very ſtrong, he therefore gaue the ſaid ſir William and his Companie aduiſe to furniſh the ſayd number of ſhips ſo ſtrongly, as they ſhould bee able to withſtand the force of the Freebooters: whereupon they haue according to his aduiſe ſent this yeere thirteene good ſhips together well furniſhed with men and munition, and all other neceſſaries for the warres, of which 13. ſhips William Burrough one of the ſaid felowſhip is captaine generall, vnto whom there was giuen in charge, that if hee met with any the Danske Freebooters, or whatſoeuer robbers and theeues that are enimies to your highneſſe, he ſhould doe his beſt to apprehend and take them. It ſo happed that the tenth day of this moneth the ſayd William with his fleete, met with ſixe ſhips of the Freebooters neere vnto an Iland called Tuttee, which is about 50. verſts from Narue, vnto which Freebooters he with his fleete gaue chaſe, and tooke of them the Admirall, wherein were left but three men, the reſt were fled to ſhore in their boats amongſt the woods vpon Tuttee, on which ſhip he ſet fire and burnt her. He alſo tooke foure more of thoſe ſhips which are now here, and one ſhip eſcaped him: out of which foure ſhips ſome of the men fled in their boates and ſo eſcaped, others were ſlaine in fight, and ſome of them when they ſaw they could not eſcape, caſt themſelues willingly into the Sea and were drowned. So that in theſe fiue ſhips were left but 83. men.

Fiue ſhips of Freebooters taken.

The ſaid Wil. Borough when he came hither to Narue, finding here Chriſtopher Hodſdon aforenamed, both the ſaid Chriſtopher and William together, in the name of ſir William Garrard and the reſt of their whole companie and felowſhip, did preſent vnto your highneſſe of thoſe Freebooters taken by our ſhips 82. men, which we deliuered here vnto Knez Voiuoda, the 13. of this moneth. One man of thoſe Freebooters we haue kept by vs, whoſe name is Haunce Snarke a captaine, And the cauſe why we haue done it is this: When wee ſhould haue deliuered him with the reſt of his felowes vnto the Voiuodaes officers, there were of our Engliſhmen more then 50. which fell on their knees vnto vs, requeſting that he might be reſerued in the ſhip, and caried back into England: and the cauſe why they ſo earneſtly intreated for him, is, that ſome of thoſe our Engliſhmen had bene taken with Freebooters, and by his meanes had their liues ſaued, with great fauour beſides, which they found at his hands. Wherefore if it pleaſe your highneſſe to permit it, we will cary him home with vs into England, wherein we requeſt your maieſties fauour: notwithſtanding what you command of him ſhalbe obſerued.

Wee haue alſo ſent our ſeruant to your highneſſe with ſuch beſtellings and writings as wee found in thoſe ſhippes: whereby your Maieſtie may ſee by whom, and in what order they were ſet out, and what they pretended, which writings wee haue commended vnto Knez Yoriue your Maieſties Voiuoda at Pleſco, by our ſeruant. And haue requeſted his furtherance for the ſafe deliuerie of them to your maieſties hands: which writings when you haue peruſed, we deſire that they may be returned vnto vs by this our ſeruaunt, as ſpeedily as may bee: for theſe ſhips which we now haue here will be ſoone diſpatched from hence, for that we haue not goods to lade aboue the halfe of them. And the cauſe is, we haue this winter (by your maieſties order) bene kept from trafiquing, to the companies great loſſe. But hoping your maieſtie will hereafter haue conſideration thereof, and that we may haue free libertie to trafique in all partes of your maieſties Countries, according to the priuiledge giuen vnto vs, we pray for your maieſties health, with proſperous ſucceſſe to the pleaſure of God. From Narue the 15. of July, Anno 1570.

Your Maieſties moſt humble and obedient,
Chriſtopher Hodſdon. William Borough.

A letter of Richard Vſcombe to M. Henrie Lane, touching the burning of the Citie of Moſco by the Crimme Tartar: written in Roſe Iſland the 5. day of Auguſt, 1571.

The citie of Moſco burnt by ỹ Crimme. Engliſhmen ſmothered at the burning of Moſco.

M. Glouer and M. Rowley preſerued.

MAſter Lane I haue me commended vnto you. The 27. of July I arriued here with the Magdalene, and the ſame day and houre did the Swalow and Harry arriue here alſo. At our comming I found maſter Proctor here, by whom wee vnderſtand very heauie newes: The Moſco is burnt euery ſticke by the Crimme the 24. day of May laſt, and an innumerable number of people: and in the Engliſh houſe was ſmothered Thomas Southam, Tofild, Wauerley, Greenes wife and children, two children of Rafe, & more to the number of 25. perſons were ſtifeled in our Beere ſeller: and yet in the ſame ſeller was Rafe, his wife, Iohn Browne, and Iohn Clarke preſerued, which was wonderfull. And there went into that ſeller maſter Glouer and maſter Rowley alſo: but becauſe the heate was ſo great, they came foorth againe with much perill, ſo that a boy at their heeles was taken with the fire, yet they eſcaped blindfold into another ſeller, and there, as Gods will was, they were preſerued. The Emperour fled out of the field, and many of his people were caried away by the Crimme Tartar: to wit, all the yong people, the old they would not meddle with, but let them alone, and ſo with exceeding much ſpoile and infinite priſoners, they returned home againe. What with the Crimme on the one ſide, and with his crueltie on the other, he hath but few people left. Commend me to miſtreſſe Lane your wife, and to M. Locke, and to all our friends.

Yours to command, Richard Vſcombe.

A note of the proceeding of M. Anthonie Ienkinſon, Ambaſſadour from the Queenes moſt excellent Maieſtie, to the Emperour of Ruſſia, from the time of his arriuall there, being the 26. of Iuly 1571. vntill his departure from thence the 23. of Iuly 1572.

THe ſaid 26. day I arriued with the two good ſhips called the Swalow and the Harry in ſafetie, at the Baie of S. Nicholas in Ruſſia aforeſayd, and landed at Roſe Iſland, from whence immediately I ſent away my interpreter Daniel Siluester in poſt towards the Court, being then at the Moſco, whereby his maieſtie might as well bee aduertiſed of my arriuall in his Dominions, as alſo to know his highneſſe pleaſure for my further acceſſe. And remaining at the ſayd Iſland two or three dayes, to haue conference with your Agent about your affaires, I did well perceiue by the wordes of the ſayd Agent and others your ſeruants, that I was entred into great perill and danger of my life: for they reported to mee that they heard ſaid at the Moſco, that the princes diſpleaſure was ſuch againſt me, that if euer I came into his countrey againe, I ſhould looſe my head, with other words of diſcouragement. Whereat I was not a litle diſmaid, not knowing whether it were beſt for me to proceed forwards, or to returne home againe with the ſhips for the ſafegard of my life. But calling to mind mine innocencie and good meaning, and knowing my ſelfe not to haue offended his Maieſtie any maner of wayes either in word or deed, or by making former promiſes not performed, heretofore by mine enemies falſly ſurmiſed: and being deſirous to come to the triall thereof, whereby to iuſtifie my true dealings, and to reproue my ſayd enemies as well here as there, who haue not ceaſed of late by vntrue reports to impute the cauſe of the ſayd Emperors diſpleaſure towards you to proceed of my dealings, and promiſes made to him at my laſt being with him (although by his letters to the Queenes Maieſtie, and by his owne words to me the contrary doeth appeare) I determined with my ſelfe rather to put my life into his hands, & by the prouidence of God to proſecute the charge committed vnto me, then to returne home in vaine, diſcouraged with the words of ſuch, who had rather that I had taried at home, then to be ſent ouer with ſuch credite, whereby I might ſift out their euil doings, the onely cauſe of your loſſe.

Wherefore, leauing the ſaid ſhips the nine and twentieth day of the moneth, I departed from the ſeaſide, and the firſt of Auguſt arriued at Colmogro, where I remained attending the returne of my ſaid meſſenger with order from his Maieſtie.

But all the Countrey being ſore viſited by the hand of God with the plague, paſſage in euery place was ſhut vp, that none might paſſe in paine of death: My meſſenger being eight hundreth miles vpon his way, was ſtayed, and kept at a towne called Shasko, and might not bee ſuffered to goe any further, neither yet to returne backe againe, or ſende vnto me: by meanes whereof in the ſpace of foure moneths, I could neither heare nor know what was become of him, in which time my ſaid meſſenger found meanes to aduertiſe the Gouernour of the Citie of Vologda, as well of his ſtay, as of the cauſe of his comming thither, who ſent him word that it was not poſſible to paſſe any neerer the Prince without further order from his Maieſtie, who was gone to the warres againſt the Swethens, and that he would aduertiſe his highneſſe ſo ſoone as he might conueniently: And ſo my ſaid meſſenger was forced to remaine there ſtill without anſwere. During which time of his ſtay through the great death (as aforeſaid,) I found meanes to ſend another meſſenger, with a guide by an vnknowen way through wilderneſſe, a thouſand miles about, thinking that way he ſhould paſſe without let: but it prooued contrary, for likewiſe hee being paſſed a great part of his iourney, fell into the handes of a watch, and eſcaped very hardly, that hee and his guide with their horſes had not bene burnt, according to the lawe prouided for ſuch as would ſeeke to paſſe by indirect wayes, and many haue felt the ſmart therrof, which had not wherewith to buy out the paine: neither could that meſſenger returne backe vnto me.

And thus was I kept without anſwere or order from his Maieſtie, and remained at the ſaide Colmogro, vntill the 18. of Ianuary following, neither hauing a Gentleman to ſafegard me, nor lodging appointed me, nor allowance of victuals according to the Countrey faſhion for Ambaſſadours, which argued his grieuous diſpleaſure towards our nation. And the people of the Countrey perceiuing the ſame, vſed towards mee and my company ſome diſcourteſies: but about the 28. day aforeſaid, the plague ceaſed, and the paſſages being opened, there came order from his Maieſtie that I ſhould haue poſte horſes, and bee ſuffered to depart from Colmogro to goe to a Citie called Peraſlaue neere to the Court, his Maieſtie being newly returned from the ſaid warres. And I arriued at the ſaid Peraſlaue the 3. of February, where I remained vnder the charge of a gentleman, hauing then a houſe appointed me, & allowance of victuals, but ſo ſtraitly kept, that none of our nation or other might come or ſende vnto me, nor I to them. And the 14. of March folowing, I was ſent for to the Court, and being within three miles of the ſame, a poſte was ſent to the Gentleman which had charge of me, to returne backe againe with mee to the ſaid Peraſlaue, and to remaine there vntill his Maieſties further pleaſure, wherewith I was much diſmayed, and marueiled what that ſudden change ment, and the rather, becauſe it was a troubleſome time, and his Maieſtie much diſquieted through the ill ſucceſſe of his affaires, (as I did vnderſtand.) And the twentieth of the ſame, I was ſent for againe to the Court, and the 23. I came before his Maieſtie, who cauſed mee to kiſſe his hande, and gaue gratious audience vnto my Oration, gracefully receiuing and accepting the Queenes Maieſties princely letters, and her preſent, in the preſence of all his nobilitie. After I had finiſhed my Oration, too long here to rehearſe, and deliuered her highneſſe letters, and preſent (as aforeſaid) the Emperour ſitting in royall eſtate ſtood vp and ſaid, How doth Queene Elizabeth my ſiſter, is ſhe in health? to whom I anſwered, God doth bleſſe her Maieſtie with health, and peace, and doeth wiſh the like vnto thee Lord, her louing brother. Then his Maieſtie ſitting downe againe, commaunded all his nobilitie and others to depart, and auoyde the chamber, ſauing the chiefe Secretarie, and one other of the Counſell, and willing me to approch neere vnto him with my Interpretor, ſaid vnto me theſe words.

Anthony, the laſt time thou waſt with vs heere, wee did commit vnto thee our truſtie and ſecret Meſſage, to be declared vnto the Queenes Maieſtie herſelfe thy Miſtreſſe at thy comming home, and did expect thy comming vnto vs againe at the time wee appointed, with a full anſwere of the ſame from her highneſſe. And in the meane time there came vnto vs at ſeuerall times three meſſengers, the one called Manly, the other George Middleton, and Edward Goodman, by the way of the Narue about the Merchants affaires: to whom wee ſent our meſſenger to know whether thou Anthony, were returned home in ſafetie, and when thou ſhouldeſt returne vnto vs againe: but thoſe meſſengers could tell vs nothing, and did miſcall, and abuſe with euill words, both our meſſenger and thee, wherewith wee were much offended. And vnderſtanding that the ſaid Goodman had letters about him, we cauſed him to be ſearched, with whom were found many letters, wherein was written much againſt our Princely eſtate, and that in our Empire were many vnlawfull things done, whereat we were much grieued, & would ſuffer none of thoſe rude meſſengers to haue acceſſe vnto vs: and ſhortly after wee were infourmed that one Thomas Randolfe was come into our Dominions by the way of Dwina, Ambaſſadour from the Queene, and we ſent a Gentleman to meete and conduct him to our Citie of Moſco, at which time we looked that thou ſhouldeſt haue returned vnto vs againe. And the ſaid Thomas being arriued at our ſaid Citie, wee ſent vnto him diuers times, that hee ſhould come and conferre with our Counſell, whereby we might vnderſtand the cauſe of his comming, looking for anſwere of thoſe our princely affaires committed vnto thee. But hee refuſed to come to our ſaid Counſell: wherefore, and for that our ſaide Citie was viſited with plague, the ſaide Thomas was the longer kept from our preſence. Which being ceaſed, foorthwith wee gaue him acceſſe and audience, but all his talke with vs was about Merchants affaires, and nothing touching ours. Wee knowe that Merchants matters are to bee heard, for that they are the ſtay of our Princely treaſures: But firſt Princes affaires are to be eſtabliſhed, and then Merchants. After this the ſaid Thomas Randolfe was with vs at our Citie of Vologda, and wee dealt with him about our Princely affaires, whereby amitie betwixt the Queenes Maieſtie and vs might bee eſtabliſhed for euer, and matters were agreed and concluded betwixt your Ambaſſadour and vs, and thereupon wee ſent our Ambaſſadour into England with him to ende the ſame: but our Ambaſſadour returned vnto vs againe, without finiſhing our ſaid affaires, contrary to our expectation, and the agreement betwixt vs, and your ſaid Ambaſſadour.

Thus when his Maieſtie had made a long diſcourſe, I humbly beſeeched his highneſſe to heare me graciouſly, and to giue me leaue to ſpeake without offence, and to beleeue thoſe wordes to be true which I ſhould ſpeake. Which he graunted, and theſe were my words.

Moſt noble and famous Prince, the meſſage which thy highneſſe did ſende by mee vnto the Queene her moſt excellent Maieſtie touching thy Princely and ſecret affaires, immediatly, and ſo ſoone as I came home, I did declare both ſecretly and truely vnto the Queenes Maieſtie her ſelfe, word for word, as thou Lord diddeſt commaund mee. Which her highneſſe did willingly heare and accept, and being mindefull thereof, and willing to anſwere the ſame, the next ſhipping after, her Maieſtie did ſende vnto thee, Lord, her highneſſe Ambaſſadour Thomas Randolfe, whoſe approoued wiſedome and fidelitie was vnto her Maieſtie well knowen, and therefore thought meete to bee ſent to ſo worthy a Prince, who had Commiſſion not onely to treate with thy Maieſtie of Merchants affaires, but alſo of thoſe thy Princely and ſecret affaires committed vnto mee. And the cauſe (moſt gracious Prince) that I was not ſent againe, was, for that I was imployed in ſeruice vpon the Seas againſt the Queenes Maieſties enemies, and was not returned home at ſuch time as Maſter Thomas Randolfe departed with the Shippes, to come into thy Maieſties Countrey, otherwiſe I had bene ſent. And whereas thy Maieſtie ſaith, that Thomas Randolfe would not treate with thy Counſell of the matters of his Legation, hee did (Lord) therein according to his Commiſſion: which was: Firſt to deale with thy Maieſtie thy ſelfe, which order is commonly vſed among all Princes, when they ſend their Ambaſſadours about matters of great waight. And whereas the ſaide Thomas is charged that hee agreed and concluded vpon matters at the ſame time, and promiſed the ſame ſhould bee perfourmed by the Queene her Maieſtie: Whereupon (Lord) thou diddeſt ſend thy Ambaſſadour with him into England, for anſwere thereof: It may pleaſe thy Maieſtie to vnderſtand, that as the ſaide Thomas Randolfe doeth confeſſe, that in deede hee had talke with thy Highneſſe, and counſell diuers times about princely affaires: euen ſo hee denieth that euer hee did agree, conclude, or make any promiſe in any condition or order, as is alleaged, otherwiſe then it ſhould pleaſe the Queene her Maieſtie to like of at his returne home, which hee did iuſtifie to thy Highnes Ambaſſador his face in England. Wherefore, moſt mighty Prince, it doth well appeare, that either thy Ambaſſador did vntruly enforme thy Maieſtie, or els thy princely minde, and the true meaning of the Queenes highnes her Ambaſſador, for want of a good Interpretor, was not well vnderſtood: and how thankefully the Queene her Maieſtie did receiue thy highnes commendations, and letters ſent by thy Maieſties Ambaſſador, and how gratiouſly ſhee gaue him audience ſundry times, vſing him with ſuch honour in all points for thy ſake, Lord, her louing brother, as the like was neuer ſhewed to any Ambaſſador in our Realme, and how honourably with full anſwere in all things, her Maieſtie diſmiſſed him, when hee had finiſhed all thy princely affaires (as it ſeemed) to his owne contentation, it may well appeare by a true certificate lately ſent with her highnes letter vnto thee Lord, by her meſſenger Robert Beaſt, and her Maieſtie did ſuppoſe that that thy Ambaſſador would haue made report accordingly, and that by him thy highnes would haue bene ſatiſſied in all things: otherwiſe ſhe would haue ſent her Maieſties Ambaſſador with him vnto thee Lord againe. But now her highnes perceiuing that thy Maieſtie is not fully ſatiſfied in thy Princely affaires, neither by Thomas Randolfe, her highnes Ambaſſador, nor by thine owne Ambaſſador Andrea Sauin, nor yet by her Maieſties letter ſent by the ſaid Andrea: and alſo ſo vnderſtanding thy great griefe and diſpleaſure towards ſir William Garret, and his company, merchants traffiking in thy Maieſties dominions, hath thought good to ſend mee at this preſent vnto thee Lord Emperor, and great duke, as wel with her highnes ful mind, touching thy princely affaires, as alſo to know the iuſt cauſe of thy Maieſties ſaid diſpleaſure towards the ſaid company of merchants: and hath commanded me to anſwere to all things in their behalfe, and according to their true meanings. For her highnes doth ſuppoſe thy Maieſties indignation to proceede rather vpon the euill, and vntrue reports of thy late Ambaſſador in England, and of ſuch wicked perſons of our nation reſident here in thy highnes dominions, rebels to her Maieſtie, and their Countrey, then of any iuſt deſerts of the ſaid merchants, who neuer willingly deſerued thy highneſſe diſpleaſure, but rather fauour in all their doings and meanings. And ſince the firſt time of their traffiking in thy Maieſties dominions, which is now nineteene yeres, the ſaid merchants haue bene, and are alwayes ready and willing truely to ſerue thy highneſſe of all things meete for thy Treaſurie, in time of peace and of warre in deſpite of all thy enemies: although the Princes of the Eaſt Seas were agreed to ſtoppe the ſound, and the way to the Narue, and haue brought, and do bring from time to time ſuch commoditie to thee, Lord, as her Maieſtie doeth not ſuffer to be tranſported foorth of her Realme to no other Prince of the world. And what great loſſes the ſaid ſir William Garret, with his company hath ſuſtained of late yeeres in this trade, as well by Shipwracke, as by falſe ſeruants it is manifeſtly knowen: and what ſeruice the ſaid companies ſhips did vnto thy Maieſtie againſt thy enemies, two yeeres paſt in going to the Narue, when they fought with the king of Poles ſhippes Freebooters, and burnt the ſame and ſlew the people, and as many as were taken aliue deliuered vnto thy Captaine at the Narue, I truſt thy highneſſe doth not forget. Wherefore moſt mighty prince, the premiſes conſidered, the Queene her moſt excellent Maieſtie thy louing ſiſter, doeth requeſt thy highnes to reſtore the ſaid ſir William Garret with his company into thy princely fauour againe, with their priuiledges for free traffique with thy accuſtomed goodnes and iuſtice, to be miniſtred vnto them throughout all thy Maieſties dominions, as aforetime: and that the ſame may be ſignified by thy Princely letters, directed to thy officers in all places, any thy highneſſe commandement or reſtraint to the contrary notwithſtanding. And further that it will pleaſe thy Maieſtie, not to giue credite to falſe reports, and vntrue ſuggeſtions of ſuch as are enemies, and ſuch as neither would haue mutuall amitie to continue betwixt your Maieſties, nor yet entercourſe betwixt your countries. And ſuch rebels of our nation, as Ralfe Rutter, and others which lye lurking here in thy highnes dominions, ſeeking to ſowe diſſentions betwixt your Maieſties by falſe ſurmiſes, ſpending away their maſters goods riotouſly, and will not come home to giue vp their accomptes, aduancing themſelues to be merchants, and able to ſerue thy highnes of all things fit for thy treaſurie, whereas indeed they be of no credite, nor able of themſelues to do thy Maieſtie any ſeruice at all: the Queenes highnes requeſt is, that it would pleaſe thy Maieſtie to commaund that ſuch perſons may be deliuered vnto me to be caried home, leaſt by their remaining here, and hauing practiſes and friendſhip with ſuch as be not thy highneſſe friendes, their euil doing might be a cauſe hereafter to withdraw thy goodnes from ſir William Garret and his company, who haue true meaning in all their doings, and are ready to ſerue thy highneſſe at all times, vſing many other words to the aduancement of your credits, and the diſgracing of your enemies, and ſo I ceaſed for that time.

Then ſayd his Maieſtie, We haue heard you, and will conſider of all things further, when wee haue read the Queene our ſiſters letters: to whom I anſwered, that I ſuppoſed his Maieſtie ſhould by thoſe letters vnderſtand her highneſſe full minde to his contentation, and what wanted in writing, I had credite to accompliſh in word. Wherewith his Maieſtie ſeemed to be wel pleaſed, and commaunded me to ſit downe. And after pauſing a while, his Maieſtie ſaid theſe words vnto me, It is now a time which we ſpend in faſting, and praying, being the weeke before Eaſter, and for that we will ſhortly depart from hence, towards our borders of Nouogrod, wee cannot giue you anſwere, nor your diſpatch here, but you ſhall goe from hence, and tary vs vpon the way, where wee will ſhortly come, and then you ſhall knowe our pleaſure, and haue your diſpatch. And ſo I was diſmiſſed to my lodging, and the ſame day I had a dinner ready dreſt ſent me from his Maieſtie, with great ſtore of drinkes, of diuers ſorts, and the next day following, being the foure and twentieth of March aforeſayde, the chiefe Secretary to his Maieſty, ſent vnto mee a Gentleman, to ſignifie vnto mee, that the Emperours Maieſties pleaſure was, I ſhould immediatly depart towards a Citie, called Otwer, three hundred miles from the aforeſaid Sloboda, and there to tary his highnes comming vnto a place called Staryts, three ſcore miles from the ſayd Otwer.

Then I ſent my Interpretor to the chiefe Secretary, requeſting him to further, and ſhew his fauour vnto our ſaide merchants in their ſutes, which they ſhould haue occaſion to moue in my abſence: who ſent me word againe, that they ſhould be wel aſſured of his friendſhip, and furtherance in all their ſutes. And forthwith poſt horſes were ſent me, with a Gentleman to conduct me. And ſo departing from the ſaid Sloboda, I arriued at the ſaid Otwer, the 28. of March aforeſaid, where I remained til the eight of May folowing. Then I was ſent for to come vnto his Maieſtie, to the ſaid Staryts, where I arriued the tenth of the ſame, and the twelfth of the ſame I was appointed to come to the chiefe Secretary, who at our meeting ſaid vnto me theſe words.

Our Lord Emperor, and great Duke, hath not onely peruſed the Queene her highnes letters ſent by you, and thereby doeth perceiue her minde, as well touching their princely affaires, as alſo her earneſt requeſt in the merchants behalfe, but alſo hath well pondered your words. And therefore his Maieſties pleaſure is, that you let me vnderſtand what ſutes you haue to moue in the merchants behalfe, or otherwiſe, for that to morrowe you ſhall haue acceſſe againe vnto his highnes, and ſhall haue full anſwere in all things, with your diſpatch away.

Then after long conference had with him of diuers matters, I gaue him in writing certaine briefe articles of requeſts, which I had drawen out ready, as foloweth:

1 Firſt the Queenes Maieſtie her requeſt is, that it would pleaſe the Emperors highneſſe to let me know the iuſt cauſe of his great diſpleaſure fallen vpon ſir William Garrard, & his company, who neuer deſerued the ſame, to their knowledge.

2 Alſo that it would pleaſe his highnes not to giue credite vnto falſe and vntrue reports, by ſuch as ſeeke to ſowe diſſention, and breake friendſhip betwixt the Queenes highneſſe, and his Maieſtie.

3 Alſo that it would pleaſe his Maieſtie to receiue the ſaid ſir William Garrard, with his company into his fauour againe, and to reſtore them to their former priuiledges and liberties, for free traffike in, and through, and out of al his Maieſties dominions, in as ample maner as aforetime, according to his princely letters of priuiledge, and accuſtomed goodnes.

4 Alſo it would pleaſe his highnes to graunt, that the ſaid company of merchants may haue iuſtice of all his ſubiects, as well for money owing vnto them, as other their griefes and iniuries, throughout al his dominions ſuffred ſince the time of his diſpleaſure, during which time, the merchants were forced by ſeuere iuſtice to anſwer to al mens demands, but theirs could not be heard.

5 Alſo that his Maieſtie would vnderſtand, that much debts are owing to the ſaid merchants, by diuers of his Nobilitie, whereof part are in durance, and ſome executed, and the ſaid merchants know not howe to be paide, and anſwered the ſame, except his highnes pitie their caſe, and commaund ſome order to be taken therein.

6 Alſo it would pleaſe his highnes to commaund that the ſaide merchants may be payde all ſuch ſumme or ſummes of money as are owing, and due vnto them by his Maieſtie, for wares, as well Engliſh, as Shamaki, taken into his highnes treaſury by his officers in ſundry places, the long forbearing whereof hath bene, and is great hinderance to the ſaid company of merchants.

7 Alſo it would pleaſe his Maieſtie to vnderſtand, that at this preſent time there are in Perſia of Engliſh merchants, Thomas Baniſter, and Geffrey Ducket, with their company, & goods, ready to come into his Maieſties countrey of Aſtracan, and would haue come the laſt yeere, but that the ſhip, with our merchants and mariners appointed to goe for them, were ſtayed at Aſtracan by his highnes Captaine there, to the great hinderance of the ſaid merchants. Wherefore it may now pleaſe his Maieſtie to direct his princely letters vnto his Captaines and rulers, both at Aſtracan and Cazan, not onely to ſuffer our people, as well merchants as mariners, quietly and freely to paſſe and repaſſe with their ſhippes, barkes, or other veſſels downe the riuer Volga, and ouer the Mare Caſpium, to fetch the ſayd Engliſh merchants, with their company and goods, out of the ſayd Perſia, into his Maieſties dominions, but alſo that it would pleaſe his highnes ſtreightly to commaund, that when the ſayd Thomas Baniſter, and Geffrey Ducket, with their charge, ſhal arriue at the ſayd Aſtracan, his Maieſties Captaine there, and in all other places vpon the riuer Volga, ſhall ſo ayde and aſſiſt the ſayd merchants, as they may be ſafely conducted out of the danger of the Crimmes, and other their enemies.

8 Alſo it may pleaſe his highnes to vnderſtand, that lately our merchants comming from Shamaki, haue bene ill vſed by his Maieſties Cuſtomers, both at Aſtracan and Cazan, at both which places they were forced to pay cuſtome for their wares, although they ſolde no part thereof, but brought the ſame into his highneſſe treaſury at Sloboda: and the ſayd Cuſtomers did not onely exact, and take much more cuſtome then was due by his Maieſties lawes, but alſo for want of preſent money, tooke wares much exceeding their exacted cuſtome, and doe keepe the ſame as a pawne. It may therefore pleaſe his highnes to direct his princely letters to the ſaid Cuſtomers, to ſignifie vnto them his great goodnes againe reſtored vnto the ſaid Engliſh merchants, as alſo to commaund them to ſend the ſaid merchants their ſaid goods ſo detained, vp to the Moſco, they paying ſuch cuſtome for the ſame, as ſhall be by his Maieſtie appointed.

9 Alſo that it would pleaſe his highneſſe to grant, that ſir William Garrard with his companie may eſtabliſh their trade for merchandiſe at Colmogro in Dwina, and that ſuch wares as ſhal be brought out of our Countrey fit for his treaſurie might be looked vpon, and receiued by his officers there: and that his Maieſties people traffiking with our merchants may bring downe their commodities to the ſaide Colmogro, by meanes whereof the ſaide Engliſh merchants auoyding great troubles and charges, in tranſporting their goods ſo farre, and into ſo many places of his dominions, may ſell the ſame better cheape, to the benefite of his Maieſties ſubiects.

10 Alſo if it ſeemed good to his highnes, that the whole trade likewiſe from Perſia, Boghar, and all other thoſe Countreys beyond the Mare Caſpium, might be eſtabliſhed at Aſtracan, the ancient Marte towne in times paſt, which would be both for the great honour and profite of his Maieſty, and ſubiects, as I am well able to prooue, if it will pleaſe his highneſſe to appoint any of his counſell to talke with me therein.

11 Alſo foraſmuch as it pleaſed his Maieſtie, immediatly after the burning of the Moſco, to command that the ſaid Engliſh merchants ſhould giue in a note into his Treaſury, for their loſſes ſuſtained by the ſaid fire, which was done by William Rowly, then chiefe Agent for ſir William Garrard and his company, and the particulars in the ſame note conſumed with the ſaid fire did amount to the ſumme of 10000. rubbles and aboue: It may pleaſe his highnes of his accuſtomed goodnes and great clemencie to conſider of the ſame, and to giue the ſaid company ſo much as ſhal ſeeme good vnto his Maieſtie, towards their ſaid loſſes.

12 Alſo that it will pleaſe his highneſſe to vnderſtand that the Queenes moſt excellent Maieſtie, at the earneſt ſute and requeſt of Andrea Sauin his Maieſties Ambaſſadour, did not onely pardon and forgiue Thomas Glouer his great and grieuous offences towards her highneſſe committed, onely for his Maieſties ſake, but alſo commanded ſir William Garrard with his company, to deale fauourably with the ſaid Glouer in his accomptes, to whom he was indebted greatly, and being their ſeruant, detained their goods in his hands a long time: whereupon the ſaid ſir William Garrard with his company counted with the ſaid Glouer, and ended all things euen to his ſaide contentation, and was found to bee debter to the ſaid company 4000. rubbles and aboue, and bound himſelfe both by his ſolemne othe, and his hand-writing, to pay the ſame immediatly after his returne into Ruſſia with the ſaid Andrea Sauin, vnto Nicholas Proctor chiefe Agent there, for the ſaid company of merchants. But although it is now two yeeres paſt, ſince the ſaid agreement, and that the ſaid Nicholas hath diuers and ſundry times requeſted the ſaid money of the ſaid Thomas, yet will he not pay the ſame debt, but maketh delay from time to time, alleadging that his Maieſtie oweth him a great ſumme of money, without the payment whereof he cannot be able to pay the ſaid merchants his due debt long forborne, to their great hinderance. In conſideration of the premiſſes, It may pleaſe his highneſſe to giue order that the ſaid Glouer may be payd, and that he may diſcharge his debt to the ſaid company of merchants, and the rather for that hee found ſuch mercie and fauour in England, onely for his Maieſties ſake.

13 Alſo foraſmuch as Ralfe Rutter a rebell to the Queenes Maieſtie, and an enemie to his Countrey, and to ſir William Garrard and his company, hath of long time remained here, liuing of the ſpoyles and goods of the ſaid merchants, which he wrongfully detained in his handes, riotouſly ſpending the ſame, during the time that he was their ſeruant, and would not come home when he was ſent for, and alſo for that the Queenes Maieſtie doth vnderſtand, that the ſaid Ralfe, with other his adherents, doe ſeeke by all falſe meanes to ſowe diſſention, and breake amitie betwixt their Maieſties, and to ouerthrowe the trade of the ſaid merchants: Her highnes requeſt is, that the ſaid Ralfe with his complices may be deliuered vnto me, to be caried home, and none other of her Maieſties ſubiects, not being of the ſocietie of the ſaid Sir William Garrard and his company, to be ſuffered to traffike within his highnes dominions, but to be deliuered to their Agent to bee ſent home: for that the ſaid merchants with great charges and loſſes, both by ſhipwracke, and riotous ſeruants, did firſt finde out this trade, and haue continued the ſame theſe 19. yeeres, to their great hinderance.

14 Alſo whereas diuers maſters and artificers of our Nation are here in his Maieſties ſeruice, and do finde themſelues grieued that they cannot haue licence to depart home into their natiue Countrey at their will and pleaſure: the Queenes Maieſties requeſt is, according to her highnes writing in that behalfe, that not onely it will pleaſe his Maieſtie to permit and ſuffer ſuch artificers here reſident in the ſeruice of his highnes, to haue free libertie to depart, and go home with me, if they requeſt the ſame, but alſo all other the like, which ſhall come hereafter to ſerue his Maieſty, to haue free libertie to depart likewiſe, without any let or ſtay.

15 Alſo it may pleaſe his Maieſty to vnderſtand that during the time of my long being at Colmogro, attending his highneſſe pleaſure for my further acceſſe, I with my company haue not onely bene ill vſed and intreated there, and likewiſe the merchants there, by one Beſſon Myſſereuy his Maieſties chiefe officer, who hath diſhonoured me, and ſmitten my people, and oweth the ſaide merchants much money, and will not pay them: but alſo the ſaide Beſſon hath ſpoken wordes of diſhonour againſt the Queenes Maieſtie. Wherefore it may pleaſe his highneſſe to ſend downe with me to Colmogro, a Gentleman, as well chiefly to ſearch foorth his euil behauiour towards her Maieſtie, as towards me her highneſſe Ambaſſador, and to puniſh him accordingly: and alſo that it would pleaſe his Maieſtie to ſende downe his letter of iuſtice, by vertue whereof the ſaid Beſſon may be forced to pay all ſuch money as he oweth to the ſayd merchants, without delay.

16 Alſo that it would pleaſe his highneſſe to vnderſtand, that ſir William Garrard with his company vnderſtanding of the great dearth in his Maieſties dominions, by licence of the Queens Maieſtie, (not otherwiſe permitted) hath ſent certaine ſhips laden with corne into his highneſſe Countrey of Dwyna, rather for the reliefe of his Maieſties ſubiects, then for any gaine: yet the good wil of the ſaid merchants lightly regarded, they were forbidden to ſel the ſaid corne, to their great diſcouragement hereafter to ſend any more. Wherefore it may pleaſe his highneſſe, to tender the good will of the ſaid merchants, as well in ſending the ſaide corne, as in all other things, ready to ſerue his Maieſtie, and to direct his letters to his officers of Dwina, to ſuffer the ſaide merchants with their company, to ſell the ſaid corne by meaſure, great or ſmall at their pleaſure, without paying cuſtome.

Theſe articles being deliuered to the chiefe Secretary, as aforeſayde, and our talke ended for that time, I departed to my lodging, accompanied with certaine Gentlemen. The next day, being the 13. of May aforeſaid, I had warning earely in the morning, to prepare my ſelfe to be at the Court, betwixt the houres of 10. and 11. of the clocke, where I ſhould haue acceſſe vnto the preſence of the Prince, as well to receiue anſwere of all things, as to bee diſmiſſed to goe home. At which houres I was ſent for to the Court, and brought into the Chamber of preſence, where his Maieſtie did ſit apparelled moſt ſumptuouſly, with a riche Crowne vpon his head, garniſhed with many precious ſtones, his eldeſt ſonne ſitting by him, and many of his Nobilitie about him: and after my duetie done, his highneſſe commanded me to approch very neere vnto him, and ſayde vnto me theſe wordes.

Anthony, the Queene our louing ſiſter her letters wee haue cauſed to be tranſlated, and we well vnderſtand the ſame, and of all things as well therein contained, as by worde of mouth by you to vs declared wee haue well conſidered, and doe perceiue that our ſecret meſſage vnto you committed, was done truely according to our minde (although wee were aduertiſed to the contrary) and nowe wee are by you fully ſatiſfied. And when wee did ſende our Ambaſſadour into England, about thoſe our great and waightie affaires, to conclude the ſame with the Queene our ſiſter, our Ambaſſadour coulde ende nothing for want of ſuch aſſurance as was requiſite in princely affaires, according to the maner of all Countreys, but was diſmiſſed vnto vs againe, with letters of ſmall effect, touching the ſame, and no Ambaſſadour ſent with him from the Queene: which cauſed vs to thinke, that our princely affaires were ſet aſide, and little regarded, wherewith wee were at that time much grieued: for the which cauſe, and for the euill behauiour of your merchants, reſident in our dominions (who haue diuers wayes tranſgreſſed and broken our lawes, liuing wilfully in al their doings) we did lay our heauie diſpleaſure vpon them, and did take away from them their priuiledge, commaunding that the ſame throughout all our dominions, ſhould be voyd, and of none effect: and thereupon did write to the Queene our ſiſter, touching our griefes.

The cauſes of the Emperors diſpleaſure.

And nowe her highneſſe hath ſent vnto vs againe, you her Ambaſſadour, with her louing letters, and full minde, which we doe thankefully receiue, and are thereby fully ſatiſfied. And for that our princely, and ſecret affaires were not finiſhed to our contentation at our time appointed, according to our expectation, we doe now leaue of all thoſe matters, and ſet them aſide for the time, becauſe our minde is nowe otherwiſe changed, but hereafter when occaſion ſhall moue vs to the like, wee will then talke of thoſe matters againe. And for that it hath pleaſed the Queene our louing ſiſter, to ſende vnto vs at this preſent, and doeth deſire to continue in friendſhip with vs for euer (which wee doe gratefully accept, and willingly agree to the ſame) wee of our goodneſſe for her highneſſe ſake, will not onely from henceforth put away, and forget all our diſpleaſure towardes the ſame Sir William Garrard and his company (as though they had neuer offended vs) but alſo will reſtore them to their priuiledges, and liberties, in, and throughout all our dominions, and will ſignifie the ſame by our letters, in all Townes and Cities, where the ſaid merchants do traffique, and we will ſhewe them fauour as aforetime, if they deſerue not the contrary. And if the Queene our ſiſter had not ſent thee Anthony vnto vs at this preſent, God knoweth what we ſhould haue done to the ſaid merchants, or whether we would haue called back our indignation.

Then I humbly beſeeched his Maieſtie, to let me know the particular offences committed by the ſaid merchants, and the offenders names, to the intent I might make report thereof vnto the Queenes Maieſtie, my miſtres, accordingly, that the ſaid offenders might receiue iuſt puniſhments for their deſerts: but he ſaid, I ſhould not know them, becauſe he had cleerely remitted al offences: and further, that it was not princely to forgiue, and after to accuſe the parties, whereby her Maieſties diſpleaſure might fall vpon them at home. Notwithſtanding I did after vnderſtand ſome part thereof, by other meanes.

Then his Maieſtie proceeding in talke, ſaid: As touching the articles of requeſt, concerning the merchants affaires, which you did yeſterday deliuer vnto our Secretary, we haue not onely read the ſame our ſelfe, but alſo haue appointed our ſaid Secretary to declare vnto you our minde, and anſwere to the ſame. And for that we are now vpon our iourney towards our borders, and will depart from hence ſhortly, we will diſmiſſe you to ẏ Queene our louing ſiſter, your miſtres, with our letters, & full minde by word of mouth, touching all your requeſts, & will ſend a gentleman one of our houſhold with you to ſafeconduct you to your ſhips: and of our goodnes will giue you victuals, boates, men, and poſt horſes, ſo many as you ſhall neede. And therewith his Maieſtie ſtanding vp, and putting off his cappe, ſaid vnto me theſe words: Doe our hearty commendations vnto our louing ſiſter, Queene Elizabeth, vnto whom we wiſh long life, with happie ſucceſſe: and therewith his highnes extended his hand to me to kiſſe, and commanded his ſonne, ſitting by him, to ſend the like commendations, which he did, whoſe hand likewiſe I kiſſed. And then his Maieſtie cauſed me to ſit downe, and commaunded wine and drinkes of diuers ſorts to be brought, whereof he gaue me to drinke with his owne hand, and ſo after I departed.

Then the next day, being the 14 of May aforeſaid, I was ſent for to come to the chief Secretary, & one other of the counſel with him, who at our meeting ſaid vnto me theſe words: We are appointed by the Emperor his maieſty, to giue you anſwere from his Highnes, touching your requeſts deliuered in writing, which his Maieſtie himſelfe hath peruſed, & anſwered as followeth.

1 To the firſt requeſt it is anſwered, that all his Maieſties griefes and diſpleaſure (now put away from the merchants) did grow, becauſe the Queenes Maieſtie did not accompliſh and ende with his ambaſſador, his ſecrete and weightie affaires, according to his expectation, and the promiſe made by Thomas Randolph, at his being here: and alſo of the ill behauiour of your merchants reſident here in our Countrey, as his Maieſtie did himſelfe yeſterday declare vnto you.

2 To the ſecond, his Maieſty willeth you to vnderſtand, that he hath not, nor will not hereafter be moued to breake friendſhip with the Queenes Maieſty, without good and iuſt cauſe.

3 To the third, you are anſwered by the Emperors Maieſtie himſelfe, that his great goodneſſe and fauour againe vnto the merchants ſhall be reſtored, and the ſame to be knowen by his gratious letters of priuilege now againe granted.

4 To the fourth, his maieſty hath commanded, that your merchants here reſident ſhall exhibite, and put in writing vnto me his Maieſties Secretarie, all their griefes, and complaints, as well for debts, as other iniuries offred them ſince the time of his Highnes diſpleaſure, and they ſhall haue iuſtice truely miniſtred throughout all his Maieſties dominions without delay.

5 To the fifth, his maieſty doth not know of any debts due vnto the merchants, by any of his Noblemen, as is alleaged: and whether it be true or no, he knoweth not: the trueth whereof muſt be tried out, and thereupon anſwere to be giuen: and hereafter his maieſtie would not haue the merchants to truſt his people with too much.

6 To the ſixth, it is anſwered, that his maieſty hath commanded ſearch to be made what money is owing to the merchants, for wares receiued into his treaſury, as to the article: (the moſt of the bookes of account being burnt in the Moſco) and ſuch as is due, & found meete to be paid, ſhall be paid forthwith to the merchants, their factors or ſeruants, which ſhall come for the ſame. And for payment of the reſt, his maieſties further pleaſure ſhall be ſignified hereafter.

7 To the 7 his Maieſtie doeth anſwere, that letters ſhall be written forthwith to his captaines of Aſtracan, and Cazan, and other his officers, vpon the riuer Volga, to whom it appertaineth, not onely to ſuffer your people, both merchants, & mariners, to paſſe with their ſhips, or barkes, from Aſtracan, ouer the Mare caſpium, to fetche Thomas Baniſter, and Geofry Ducket, with their company, and goods out of Perſia, but alſo when they ſhall arriue within his Maieſties dominions, to aide and aſſiſt them, and ſee them ſafely conducted vp the riuer Volga, from danger of enemies.

8 To the eight, his maieſtie hath commanded letters to be written to the Cuſtomers, both of Aſtracan and Cazan, to make reſtitution to the Engliſh merchants of their goods ſo detained by them for cuſtome, & to take cuſtome for the ſame, according to his Maieſties letters of priuilege.

9 10 To the ninth and tenth articles, his Maieſtie will conſider of thoſe matters, and hereafter will ſignifie his princely pleaſure therein.

11 To the eleuenth, as touching an inuentorie giuen into the treaſury, what goods the merchants had burnt in the Moſco, in their houſes there, his Maieſties pleaſure was to vnderſtande the ſame, to the intent he might know the loſſes of all ſtrangers at that preſent; but not to make reſtitution, for that it was Gods doing, and not the Emperours.

12 To the twelfth, concerning Thomas Glouer, his Maieſtie was enformed by his Ambaſſador of the Queenes great mercy and clemencie towards the ſaid Thomas, for his ſake, which his Highnes receiued in good part, but what agreement or dealings was betwixt the ſaid ſir William Garrard, & his company, & the ſaid Glouer, or what he doth owe vnto the ſaid merchants, his Maieſtie doth not know. And as for the money which the ſaid Thomas ſaith is owing vnto him by the Emperour, his Maieſties pleaſure is, that ſo much as ſhall be found due, & growing vpon wares deliuered vnto the treaſurie, out of the time of his Maieſties diſpleaſure, ſhall be paid forthwith to the ſaid Thomas, and the reſt is forfeited vnto his Maieſtie, and taken for a fine, as appertaining to Rutter and Benner, accompted traitors vnto his Highnes, during the time of his diſpleaſure.

13 To the thirteenth article, concerning Rutter to be deliuered vnto you, to be caried home, the anſwere was, that as his Maieſtie will not detaine any Engliſh man in his Countrey, that is willing to go home, according to the the Queens requeſt: euen ſo will he not force any to depart, that is willing to tary with him. Yet his Highnes, to ſatiſfie the Queenes Maieſties requeſt, is contented at this preſent to ſend the ſaid Ralfe Rutter home with you, and hath commanded that a letter ſhall be written vnto his chiefe officer at the Moſco, to ſend the ſaid Rutter away with ſpeed, that he may be with you at Vologda, by the fine of May, without faile: and touching the reſt of your requeſt in the ſaid article, his Maieſties pleaſure ſhall be ſignified in the letters of priuilege, granted to the ſaid merchants.

14 To the fourteenth, touching artificers, his Maieſtie will accompliſh all the Queenes Highnes requeſt in that behalfe, and now at this preſent doth licence ſuch and ſo many to depart to their natiue countrey as are willing to goe.

15 To the 15, touching Beſſon Meſſeriuy, the Emperors maieſtie is much offended with him, and will ſend downe a gentleman with you to inquire of his ill behauior, aſwel for ſpeaking of vndecent words againſt the Queens maieſtie as you haue alleaged, as alſo againſt you, and the merchants for his outrages mentioned in the article, & the ſaid Beſſon being found guilty, to be impriſoned & puniſhed by ſeuere iuſtice accordingly, and after to put in ſureties to anſwere the Emperors high diſpleaſure, or els to be brought vp like a priſoner by the ſaid gentleman to anſwere his offences before his Maieſtie. And his highnes doth requeſt that the Queenes highnes would doe the like vpon Middleton and Manlie her meſſengers ſent thither two yeres paſt, and of all others for their ill behauiour towards his maieſtie, as may appeare by letters ſent by Daniel Silueſter from his highnes, leaſt by the bad demeanor of ſuch lewd perſons, the amity and friendſhip betwixt their maieſties might be diminiſhed.

16 To the 16 and laſt article, touching the corne brought into the Emperors dominions by the merchants, his maieſtie doth greatly commend them for ſo wel doing, and hath commanded to giue you a letter forthwith in their behalf, directed to his officers of Duina, to ſuffer the ſaid merchants to ſell their corne, by meaſure great or ſmall at their pleaſure without cuſtome.

Thus I receiued a full anſwere from his maieſtie by his chiefe Secretarie & one other of his counſel, to the 16 articles afore rehearſed, by me exhibited in writing touching your affaires, with his letter alſo ſent by me to the Queenes maieſty. Which being done, I requeſted that the new letters of priuilege granted by his highnes vnto you might be forthwith diſpatched, to the intent I might carie the ſame with me. Alſo I requeſted that ſuch money due to you, which it hath pleaſed his maieſty to command to be payd, might be deliuered to me in your behalfe.

Touching the letters of priuilege, the Secretary anſwered me, it is not poſſible you can haue them with you, for they muſt be firſt written and ſhewed vnto the Emperour, and then three to be written of one tenour according to your requeſt, which cannot bee done with ſpeede, for that his maieſties pleaſure is, you ſhall depart this night before him, who to morrowe himſelfe [illegible] towardes Nouogrod: but without faile the ſayd letters ſhall be diſpatched vpon the way, and ſent after you with ſpeede to Colmogro. And as touching the money which you require, it cannot be paid here becauſe we haue not the bookes of accounts, for want whereof we know not what to paie: wherefore the beſt is that you ſend one of the merchants after the Emperour to Nouogrod, & let him repaire vnto me there, and without faile I will paie all ſuch money as ſhall be appointed by his maieſtie to be paied after the bookes ſeene.

But forasmuch as there was none of your ſeruants with me at that preſent (although I had earneſtly written vnto your Agent Nicholas Proctor by Richard Pingle one of your owne ſeruants, one moneth before my comming to Starites, where I had my diſpatch, that he ſhould not faile to come himſelfe, or ſend one of your ſeruants to mee hither, to follow all ſuch ſutes as I ſhould commence in your behalfs, which he neglected to doe to your great hinderance) I requeſted the ſaid Secretarie that I might leaue Daniel my interpreter with him, aſwell for the receit of money, as for the ſpeedy diſpatch of the letters of priuiledge, but it would not be granted in any wiſe that I ſhould leaue any of mine own companie behind me, and thereupon I did take my leaue with full diſpatch, and departed to my lodging, and forthwith there came vnto me a gentleman who had charge as wel to conduct me, and prouide boates, men, poſt horſes and victuals for me all the way to the ſea ſide, being a thouſand and three hundred miles, as alſo to doe iuſtice of the ſayd Beſſone, as aforeſaid. And he ſaid vnto me, the Emperours pleaſure is, that you ſhall preſently depart from hence, and I am appointed to goe with you. And that night I departed from the ſaid Starites, being the fourteenth of May aforeſayd. And paſſing a great part of my iourney, I arriued at the citie of Vologda the laſt of the ſayd May, where I remained fiue daies as well expecting a meſſenger to bring vnto me the new letters of priuiledge, as the comming of Rutter, whom the Emperours maieſtie himſelfe commanded before my face ſhould bee ſent vnto me without faile, and I did ſee the letters written to the chiefe officers at the Moſco for the ſame. Neuertheleſſe the ſaid Rutter did not come, neither could I heare of him after, nor know the ſudden cauſe of his ſtay contrary to the princes owne word and meaning, as I ſuppoſe. But I could not help the matter being farre from the prince, neither could I tell how to haue redreſſe, becauſe by abſence I could not complaine. Notwithſtanding I vſed my indeuour, and ſent a meſſenger Iohn Norton one of your ſeruants from Vologda to Nouogrod, where the court then lay, expreſſely with letters, as well to aduertiſe his maieſtie that the ſayd Rutter was not ſent vnto me according to his highnes commandement & order, as alſo about the diſpatch of the ſaid letters of priuiledge and receit of your money, with ſtraight charge that he ſhould in any wiſe returne vnto me againe before the departing of the ſhips. And the firſt day of Iune I departed from the ſaid Vologda by water towards Colmogro, where I arriued the 21 of Iune aforeſaid, and remained there vntill the 23 of Iuly, looking for the ſaid Iohn Norton to haue returned vnto me in al that time, which had reſpite fully enough in that ſpace both to go to the court to diſpatch his buſines, and to haue returned againe vnto me, but he came not, for it was otherwiſe determined before his going, as I did after vnderſtand, and can more at large by worde of mouth declare vnto your worſhips the occaſion thereof.

Neuertheleſſe, I am well aſſured before this time your Agent hath receiued into his hands the ſayd letters of priuiledges, and ſhall haue diſpatch with expedition in all things touching your affaires, according to his maieſties grant by me obtained, and as he hath written to the Queenes maieſtie at this preſent, wiſhing that as now by my going the Emperour hath withdrawen his grieuous diſpleaſure from you, and reſtored you againe into his fauour, ſo your Agent and others your ſeruants there reſident may behaue, & endeuour themſelues to keepe & augment the ſame, whoſe euill doings haue bene the onely occaſion of his indignation now remitted.

The names of ſuch countries as I Anthony Ienkinſon haue trauelled vnto, from the ſecond of October 1546, at which time I made my firſt voyage out of England, vntill the yeere of our Lord 1572, when I returned laſt out of Ruſſia.

First, I paſſed into Flanders, and trauelled through all the baſe countries, and from thence through Germanie, paſſing ouer the Alpes I trauelled into Italy, and from thence made my iourney through Piemont into France, throughout all which realme I haue throughly iournied.

I haue alſo trauelled through the kingdomes of Spaine and Portingal, I haue ſailed through the Leuant ſeas euery way, & haue bene in all the chiefe Iſlands within the ſame ſea, as Rhodes, Malta, Sicilia, Cyprus, Candie, and diuers others.

I haue bene in many partes of Grecia, Morea, Achaia, and where the olde citie of Corinth ſtoode.

I haue trauelled through a great part of Turkie, Syria, and diuers other countries in Aſia minor.

I haue paſſed ouer the mountaines of Libanus to Damaſco, and trauelled through Samaria, Galile, Philiſtine or Paleſtine, vnto Ieruſalem, and ſo through all the Holy land.

I haue bene in diuers places of Africa, as Algiers, Cola, Bona, Tripolis, the golfet within the gulfe of Tunis.

I haue ſailed farre Northward within the Mare glaciale, where we haue had continuall day, and ſight of the Sunne ten weekes together, and that nauigation was in Norway, Lapland, Samogitia, and other very ſtrange places.

I haue trauelled through all the ample dominions of the Emperour of Ruſſia and Moſcouia, which extende from the North ſea, and the confines of Norway and Lapland, euen to the Mare Caſpium.

I haue bene in diuers countries neere about the Caſpian ſea, Gentiles, and Mahomeans, as Cazan, Cremia, Rezan, Cheremiſi, Mordouiti, Vachin, Nagaia, with diuers others of ſtrange cuſtomes and religions.

I haue ſailed ouer the Caſpian ſea, & diſcouered all the regions thereabout adiacent, as Chircaſſi, Comul, Shaſcal, Shiruan, with many others.

I haue trauelled 40 daies iourney beyond the ſaid ſea, towards the Oriental India, and Cathaia, through diuers deſerts and wilderneſſes, and paſſed through 5 kingdomes of the Tartars, and all the land of Turkeman and Zagatay, and ſo to the great citie of Boghar in Bactria, not without great perils and dangers ſundry times.

After all this, in An. 1562, I paſſed againe ouer the Caſpian ſea another way, and landed in Armenia, at a citie called Derbent, built by Alexander the great, & from thence trauelled through Media, Parthia, Hircania, into Perſia to the court of the great Sophie called Shaw Tamaſſo, vnto whom I deliuered letters from the Queenes maieſtie, and remained in his court 8 moneths, and returning homeward, paſſed through diuers other countries. Finally I made two voyages more after that out of England into Ruſſia, the one in the yeere 1566, and the other in the yeere 1571. And thus being weary and growing old, I am content to take my reſt in mine owne houſe, chiefly comforting my ſelfe, in that my ſeruice hath bene honourably accepted and rewarded of her maieſtie and the reſt by whom I haue bene imploied.

A letter of Iames Alday to the Worſhipfull M. Michael Lock, Agent in London for the Moſcouie company, touching a trade to be eſtabliſhed in Lappia, written 1575.

He maruelleth the company do not cōferre with him of Lappia.

I Haue in remembrance (worſhipful Sir) the talke we had when I was with you, as touching the trade in Lappia: And certeinly I haue ſomething maruelled that in all this time the right wor. your ſocietie haue not giuen order that ſome little conference (by you, or with ſome other) might haue bin had with me touching thoſe parts, conſidering they know (as I thinke) that I remained there one whole yere & more, by which meanes reaſon would that I ſhould haue learned ſomething. But the cauſe why they haue not deſired to conferre with me (as I iudge) reſteth only in one of theſe 4 caſes, that is to ſay, either they thinke themſelues ſo throughly certified of that trade, as more neede not be ſpoken therof, or that they haue no luſt more to deale that waies, or that they hold mee ſo vntruſty to them that they dare not open their minds, for feare or doubt, I ſhould beare more affectiō to others then to them, & ſo diſcouer their ſecrets: or els they think me of ſo ſimple vnderſtanding, that I am not worthy to be ſpoken with in theſe matters. To which 4 caſes I anſwere as followeth: Firſt, if they think themſelues ſo throughly certified as more need not to be ſpoken: certeinly I ſomething maruel by whom it ſhould be: for in ẏ winter paſt there lay but 5 Engliſh perſons there, vz. Chriſtopher Colt, Roger Leche, Adam Tunſtal cooper, one lad, & I: for Henry Cocknedge was the whole winter at Moſco. And of theſe perſons, as touching Colt, I think him (if I may without offence ſpeake my conſcience) the moſt ſimple perſon that was there, (as touching the vnderſtanding of a marchant) although indeed he tooke vpon him very much to his owne harme & others I doubt, for he vſed himſelfe not like a marchant, neither ſhewed diligence like a worthy ſeruant or factor, but lay ſtil in a den al ẏ whole winter, hauing wares lying vpon his hand, which he would not imploy to any vſe; although ſundry waies there were that he might haue put his wares in ready money with gaine, & no great aduenture, which money would haue bin more acceptable to the poore Lappes & fiſhermen at the ſpring, then any kind of wares: but his fond head did as he that had the talent in the Goſpel, & yet he had counſel to the contrary which he diſdained, ſo that men perceiuing his captious head, left not only to counſell him, but alſo ſome, in as much as they might, kept him from knowledge of the trade that might be in that countrey, the winter time, which is better peraduenture then moſt men think of. Wherfore if Colt haue written or ſaid any thing touching thoſe countries, it is doubtful whether it toucheth the effect or not, conſidering he lay ſtill all the winter without trial of any matter. And for Henry Cocknedge aſſuredly (ſpeaking ſo much as I do perfectly know, I muſt needs ſay, that he is a very honeſt yong man, & right carefull of his bu-

Good trade in winter in Lappia.

Henry Cocknedge honeſt, but ignorant.

ſines, and in that reſpect worthy to be praiſed. But yet he being abſent in the winter other then by hearſay he could not learne, ſo that his inſtructions may be ſomething doubtful. And like as of the lad nothing can be learned, ſo am I ſure that Tunſtal the Cooper hath not yet bene ſpoken with, ſo that of thoſe parts certaine knowledge cannot as yet be learned, except by Roger Leche, of whom I confeſſe knowledge may be had, for indeed there is no Engliſh man liuing that hath like knowledge in thoſe countries as he hath, nor that is able to do ſo much with the people as he may: he in the winter trauailed one waies & other nere 300 miles: he of a litle made ſomthing, and learned not only the maners, conditions & cuſtoms of the people, but alſo he learned of al kind of commodities in thoſe regions how they may be bought at the moſt aduantage, that gaine may be made of them: So that I confeſſe, if he hath giuen intelligence to the right Wor. company, then haue they no neede to ſpeake with me or any other for to learne of thoſe countries (except it be to heare mine opinion) which in truth I wil alwaies open vnto them. But the effect of ỹ beneficial ſecrets of that countrey is to be inquired of him, & in mine opinion worthy to be learned, except, as in the ſecond caſe, they liſt no more to deale that waies. To which I anſwere, that if they deale not that waies, & that with ſpeede they ſeeke not to preuent others ỹ mean to deale there, although not Engliſh men, let them then not thinke long to haue any profitable trade in Ruſſia: for the greater part of that benefit wil be wiped from them, or 5 yeere to an end, as I will ſhew good reaſon, if I be demanded the queſtion. Therefore if they will maintaine the Ruſſia trade with aduantage, then ought they to looke to this in time, and ſo may they keepe the Ruſſia trade as it is, and likewiſe make a trade in Lappia more profitable then that, and therfore this is to be conſidered, rather then to prohibite Engliſhmen frõ the trade of Vedagoba. For if they looke not to this, and that in time, they may be likened (if it might be without offence ſpoken) to two dogs that ſtriue for the bone whiles the third run away with it: and yet meane I not otherwiſe, but in ſuch order, as not Engliſhmen only, but alſo Hollanders, Brabanders, & others may be iuſtly and vtterly put from the trade in Lappia, and the company to keepe the whole trades to themſelues without interruption of any, to their great benefit, which I wiſh to them from the bottome of my heart, as euer I wiſhed wealth to mine own perſon: And thereby hold me excuſed in the third caſe I write of. And for the fourth as touching my iudgement, as I confeſſe it is not very deepe, ſo I thanke God I am not vtterly without vnderſtanding (although I be poore) & therfore peraduenture holden out of reputation, yet God doth diſtribute his gifts as it pleaſeth him. I haue ſeen wiſe men poore in my time, & fooliſh men rich, and ſome men haue more knowledge then they can vtter by ſpeech, which fault was once obiected againſt me by a great learned man of this realme: but ſurely how weak ſoeuer my vtterance is, my meaning is faithful and true, and I wiſh in my heart to your laudable company al the gaine that may be, or els I pray the Lord God to confound me as a falſe diſſembler. It greeueth me to ſee how of late they haue bin brought to great charges, beating the buſh, as the old terme is, & other men taking the birds: this laſt yere hauing in Lappia 2 ſhips, as I am partly informed, they both brought not much aboue 300 barrels of traine oile, yet am I ſure there was bought beſides them of the Ruſſes, Corels, & Lappes, 1183 barrels, beſides 27 barrels Colt ſold to Iacob the Hollander, at two barrels for one Northerne dozen. And yet there is a greater inconuenience ſpringing, which if it take a litle deeper roote it will be (I feare) too hard to be pulled vp, which for loue & good will (God is my witnes) I write of, wiſhing as to my deare friends that they ſhould looke to it in time, if they meane to keepe the trade of Ruſſia or Lappia. And thus loue hath compelled me to write this aduertiſement, which I wiſh to be accepted in as good part, as I with good will haue written it.

Roger Leche expert of Lappia.

If the companie do not enter into the trade of Lappia, others wil preuent them.

The trade of Vedagoba.

He can ſay ſomewhat though not much.

1183 barrels of oyle bought by others. Colt ſold 27 barrels to a Hollander.

The requeſt of an honeſt merchant to a friend of his, to be aduiſed and directed in the courſe of killing the Whale, as followeth. An. 1575.

I pray you pleaſure me in getting me perfect information of the matter hereunder ſpecified.

For the prouiſion and furniture for a ſhippe of 200 tunnes, to catch the Whale fiſh in Ruſsia, paſſing from England. How many men to furniſh the ſhip.

How many fiſhermen ſkilful to catch the Whale, & how many other officers and Coopers.

How many boats, and what faſhion, and how many men in each boate.

What wages of ſuch ſkilfull men and other officers, as we ſhall neede out of Biskay.

How many harping irons, ſpeares, cordes, axes, hatchets, kniues, and other implements for the fiſhing, and what ſort and greatnes of them.

How many kettles, the greatneſſe and maner of them, and what mettall, and whether they bee ſet on triuets or on furnaces for boiling of the traine oyle, and others.

What quantitie of caſke, and what ſort of caſke, and what number of hoopes and twigges, and how much thereof to be ſtaued for the traine.

What quantitie of victuals, and what kinde of victuals for the men in all the ſhip for 4 moneths time.

For the common mariners and officers to gouerne the ſhip, we ſhall not neede any out of Biſkaie, but onely men ſkilfull in the catching of the Whale, and ordering of the oile, and one Cooper ſkilfull to ſet vp the ſtaued caſke.

Alſo what other matters are requiſite to be knowen, and done for the ſaid voyage to catch the Whale, not here noted nor remembred.

These requeſts were thus anſwered, which may ſerue as directions for all ſuch as ſhall intend the ſame voyage, or the like for the Whale.

A proportion for the ſetting forth of a ſhip of 200 tunne, for the killing of the Whale.

There muſt be 55 men who departing for Wardhouſe in the moneth of April, muſt bee furniſhed with 4 kintals and a halfe of bread for euery man.
250 hogſheds to put the bread in.
150 hogſheds of Cidar.
6 kintals of oile.
8 kintals of bacon.
6 hogſheds of beefe.
10 quarters of ſalt.
150 pound of candles.
8 quarters of beanes and peaſe.
Salt fiſh & herring, a quantitie conuenient.
4 tunnes of wines.
Half a quarter of muſtard ſeed, and a querne.
A grindſtone.
800 empty ſhaken hogſheds.
350 bundles of hoopes, and 6 quintalines.
800 paire of heds for the hogſheds.
10 Eſtachas called rores for harping irons.
10 pieces of Arporieras.
3 pieces of Baibens for the Iauelines ſmall.
2 tackles to turne the Whales.
A halſer of 27 fadom long to turne ye whales
15 great Iauelines.
18 ſmall Iauelins.
50 harping irons.
6 machicos to cut the Whale withall.
2 doozen of macheros to minch the Whale.
2 great hookes to turne the Whale.
3 paire of Can hookes.
6 hookes for ſtaues.
3 dozen of ſtaues for the harping irons.
6 pullies to turne the Whale with.
10 great baſkets.
10 lampes of iron to carie light.
5 kettles of 150 li. the piece, and 6 ladles.
1000 of nailes for the pinnaſes.
500 of nailes of Carabelie for the houſes, and the wharfe.
18 axes and hatchets to cleaue wood.
12 pieces of lines, and 6 dozen of hookes.
2 beetles of Roſemarie.
4 dozen of oares for the pinnaſes.
6 lanternes.
500 of Teſia.
Item, gunpowder & matches for harquebuſhes as ſhalbe needfull.
Item, there muſt be caried from hence 5 pinnaſes, fiue men to ſtrike with harping irons, two cutters of Whale, 5 coopers, & a purſer or two.

A note of certaine other neceſſarie things belonging to the Whalefiſhing, receiued of maſter W. Burrough.

A ſufficient number of pullies for tackle for the Whale.
A dozen of great baſkets.
4 furnaces to melt the Whale in.
6 ladles of copper.
A thouſand of nailes to mend the pinnaſes.
500 great nails of ſpikes to make their houſe
3 paire of bootes great and ſtrong, for them that ſhall cut the Whale.
8 calue ſkins to make aprons or barbecans.

The depoſition of M. VVilliam Burrough to certaine Interrogatories miniſtred vnto him concerning the Narue, Kegor, &c. to what king or prince they doe appertaine and are ſubiect, made the 23 of Iune, 1576.

These articles ſeeme to haue bene miniſtred vpon the quarel between Alderman Bond the elder, and the Moſcouie company, for his trade to the Narue without their conſent.

The firſt Interrogatorie.

First, whether the villages or townes vulgarely called the Narue, Kegor, Pechingo and Cola, and the portes of the ſame townes, as well at the time of the grant of the letters of priuilege by the Emperour to our merchants, as alſo in the yeeres of our Lord, 1566, 1567, 1568, 1569, 1570, 1571, 1572, 1573, 1574, and 1575. reſpectiuely were (as preſently they be) of the iuriſdiction, and ſubiect to the mightie prince the Emperour of Ruſſia: and whether the ſaide Emperour of Ruſſia, by all the time aforeſaide, was chiefe lord and gouernour reſpectiuely of the ſaid places, and ſo vulgarly knowen, had, and reputed: and whether the ſaid townes and places, and either of them be ſituated towards the North and Northeaſt or Northweſt, and betweene the North and the Eaſt point: and be the ſame places whereunto by force of the ſaid priuilege, it is forbidden to any other ſubiect to haue traffike, ſauing to the ſocietie aforeſaid.

The deponents answer.

To this Interrogatorie the deponent ſaith, that it is true that the villages, townes and places vulgarly called the Narue, Kegor, Pechingo and Cola, and the portes thereof, at the time of the grant of the ſaid priuilege (as he iudgeth) were reputed reſpectiuely to be vnder the iuriſdiction, & ſubiect to the Emperour of Ruſſia, and ſo from the time of the ſaid grant, vnto the yeere, 1566, and that in the yeeres of our Lord, 1566, 67, 68, 69, 70, 71, 72, 73, 74, and 1575. reſpectiuely they were (as preſently they be) of the iuriſdiction, and ſubiect vnto the mighty prince the Emperour of Ruſſia, and the ſame Emperour of Ruſſia, by all the time aforeſaid, was chiefe gouernour reſpectiuely of the ſaid places, and ſo vulgarly knowen, had and reputed. And that all the ſaid places are ſituated from London Northwards, betweene the Eaſt and the North, and within the grant of the letters patents, and priuileges of the ſaid companie of merchants for the diſcouery of new trades, and the ſame places whereunto by force of the ſaid letters patents, it is forbidden to any other ſubiect to haue traffike ſauing to the ſocietie aforeſaid.

Notwithſtanding the Deponent ſaith, that he hath heard it credibly reported by diuers, that the king of Denmarke of late yeres, or euery yeere once, hath had one of his ſubiects or more by himſelfe, or with his guide a Lappian, that hath at the places Cola, Kegor, and diuers other places in Lappia, taken of the Lappies certain tribute or head pence, which the ſaid Lappies haue willingly giuen to winne fauour of the ſaide prince, and to liue quietly by his ſubiects, the people of Finmarke which border vpon their countrey, whereof Wardhouſe is the ſtrongeſt hold, & bordereth neere vnto them. Hee hath alſo hearde that in the time of peace betweene the ſaide Emperour of Ruſſia, and the kings of Sweden, there was yeerely for the king of Sweden one or more that came into Lappia vnto diuers places, in maner as the king of Denmarkes ſeruant vſeth to doe, and did demaund of them ſome tribute or duetie which they willingly paide: but ſince the late warres betweene the ſaide Emperour and king of Sweden, hee hath not heard of any thing that hath bene paide by them to the king of Sweden: ſuch is the ſimplicitie of this people the Lappies, that they would rather giue tribute to all thoſe that border vpon their countrey, then by denying it haue their ill willes.

But the trueth is, as this Deponent ſaith, that the ſaide mightie prince the Emperour of Ruſſia is the chiefe lord and gouernour of the ſaide countrey of Lappia, his lawes and orders are obſerued by them, hee takes toll and cuſtome &c. of them. They are infidels, but if any of them become Chriſtians it is after the Ruſſe law. If there happen any controuerſie betweene thoſe people, ſuch as cannot be ended amongſt themſelues, or by the Emperours deputies in that countrey, they repaire to the Mosko as their higheſt Court, and there haue it ended. Betweene the place ſpecified Kegor, and the confines of Finmarke aforeſaide in Lappia, is the monaſterie Pechingo, which are monkes, and vſe the Ruſſe lawe, the chiefe or head of that abbey is alwayes appointed by the cleargie in Mosko.

Pechingo abbey.

Alſo in the yeere of our Lord 1557. the ſaid Deponent was at the place Kegor, in the moneth of Iune, the 29. day being S. Peters day, at which time was a great aſſembly of people at a mart there, the Ruſſes, Kerils and Lappians on the one ſide ſubiects to the ſaid mighty prince the Emperour of Ruſſia, and the Norwegians or Norſes and people of Finmarke ſubiects to the king of Denmarke on the other part, they did barter and exchange fiſh for other commodities. The deputie for the Ruſſe had the chief gouernment of the ſaid Mart, and tooke toll of theſe people ỹ were ſubiect to his maſter, and the captaine of Wardhouſe had then the gouernment of the people ſubiect to his maſter the king of Denmark. He ſaith alſo, that betweene the abbey Pechingo, and the abbey of S. Nicholas in Ruſſia, vpon the border of the ſaid coaſt of Lappia, he hath bene vpon the ſhore at diuers places, where freſh riuers fall into the Sea, where are commonly taken freſh ſalmons, all which places he doth know for certaine, that they were farmed out to the ſubiects of the ſaid Emperour, and he the ſaid Emperour receiued yeerely the rent for them. And further he ſaith that it hath bene further credibly reported vnto him, that there is not any ſuch riuer or creek of freſh water which falleth out of the ſaid countrey of Lappia into the ſea, betweene the ſaid abbey Pechingo, and the bay of S. Nicholas, but they are all and euery of them farmed out, and the Emperour receiueth the rent for them.

Item,

The ſecond Interrogatorie.

Item, whether as well before, as alſo within the memorie of men, till the time of the graunt of the ſaid letters patents any of the Engliſh merchants (ſauing the merchants of the ſaid ſocietie) ſubiects of this realme of England, haue commonly exerciſed or frequented buſineſſe or trade in the ſaid villages or townes called the Narue, Kegor, Pechingo, and Cola, or in any of them, or in any ports or territories of the ſaid Emperour of Ruſſia.

The deponents anſwer.

To this Interrogatorie the Deponent anſwereth, that the ſubiects of this realme before the graunt of the ſaid letters patents did not commonly exerciſe, neither frequent or trade to any of the ſaid places called the Narue, Kegor, Pechingo or Cola, or to any of them.

Certaine reaſons to diſſwade the vſe of a trade to the Narue aforeſaide, by way through Sweden.

The merchandiſe of the Narue are groſſe wares, viz. flaxe, hempe, waxe, tallow and hides.

The traffique at that place ſtandeth vpon the agreement and liking of the Emperour of Ruſſia, with the king of Sweden: for all theſe merchandiſes that are brought thither come from Pleſcoue, Nouogrod, and other parts of the Emperours dominions.

For tranſporting thoſe merchandiſes from Narue to Stockholm, or what other place ſhall bee thought conuenient in Sweden, it muſt be in veſſels of thoſe countries, which wilbe of ſmal force to reſiſt Freebooters, or any other that ſhall make quarel or offer violence againſt them.

When the goods are brought into Sweden, they muſt be diſcharged, and new laden into ſmaller veſſels, to cary the ſame by riuer or lake a part of the way, and againe to be vnladen and tranſported by land to Newles.

So as the ordinary charges for tranſporting of goods from Narue to Newles by way as aforeſaid, beſides the ſpoile by ſo often lading and vnlading, cariage by land, and the dangers of the ſeas, pirats, &c. will be ſuch as when it ſhalbe ſo brought to Newles it wil be as deare to the merchants in that place as it ſhall be worth to be ſold in London, wherefore the trade that wayes cannot be profitable to our nation.

Note.

Moreouer, when the goods ſhall be in Newles, it may bee thought doubtfull to bring it thence quietly without diſliking or forcible reſiſtance of the king of Denmarke, foraſmuch as he maketh quarell, and alleageth damage vnto him in his tolles of the Sound by our trade to S. Nicholas, how much more will he now doe by this way, and with how much greater aduantage may he performe it? The danger that may grow in our trade to Ruſſia by way of S. Nicholas, through the diſpleaſure that the Emperour may conceiue by our trade with the Sweden to Narue is alſo to be conſidered.

A remembrance of aduiſe giuen to the merchants, touching a voyage for Cola abouesaid. 1578.

Whereas you require my counſell after what order the voyage for Cola is to be ſet forth, I anſwere that I know no better way then hath bene heretofore vſed, which is after this maner. Firſt of all we haue hired the ſhip by the great, giuing ſo much for the wearing of the tackle and the hull of the ſhippe, as the ſhip may be in bigneſſe: as if ſhee bee about the burden of an hundred tunnes, we pay foureſcore pound, and ſo after that rate: and thereunto we doe victual the ſhip our ſelues, and doe ſhip all our men our ſelues, ſhipping no more men, nor giuing them more wages then we ſhould doe if they went of a merchants voyage, for it hath bene a great helpe to our voiage hitherto, to haue our men to fiſh with one boate, & coſting vs no more charges then it ſhould do, if our men ſhould lie & doe nothing ſauing the charges of ſalt, & of lines, which is treble paid for againe. For this laſt yere paſt our men killed with one boat betwixt 9. or 10. thouſand fiſh, which yeelded to vs in money with the oile that came of it, about 15. or 16. ſcore pounds, which is a great helpe to a voyage. And beſides al this, our ſhip did take in ſo much oile and other commodities as we beſtowed 100. whole clothes in. But becauſe, as I doe ſuppoſe, it is not the vſe of London to take ſhips to fraight after that order before preſcribed, neither I think that the mariners wil take ſuch paines as our men will: Therefore my counſell is, if you thinke good, to freight ſome ſhip of Hul or Newcaſtle, for I am ſure that you may haue them there better cheap to freight, then here at London. Beſides al this, one may haue ſuch men as wil take paines for their merchants. And furthermore when it ſhal pleaſe God that the ſhip ſhal returne to come to diſcharge at Hull, which will be the moſt for your profit for the ſales of all ſuch like commoditie as comes from that place, as for fiſh, oyle, and Salmon chiefly, hee that will ſeeke a better market for the ſales then at Hull, he muſt ſeeke it out of England, for the like is not in England. This is the beſt way that I can deuiſe, and moſt for your profite, and if you will, I will alſo ſet you downe all the commodities that are neceſſarie for ſuch a voyage, and which way alſo that the Hollanders may within two or three yeeres be forced to leaue off the trade of Cola which may eaſily be done. For if my abilitie were to my will, I would vſe the matter ſo that they ſhould either leaue off the trade, or els cary light ſhips with them home againe.

Hull the beſt market of England for ſale of fiſh.

A dedicatorie Epiſtle vnto the Queenes moſt excellent Maieſtie, written by Maſter William Burrough late Comptroller of her Highneſſe nauie, and annexed vnto his exact and notable mappe of Ruſſia, briefly containing (amongſt other matters) his great trauailes, obſeruations, and experiments both by ſea and land, eſpecially in thoſe Northeaſtern parts.

To the moſt high and renowmed Princeſſe ELIZABETH by the grace of God Queene of England, France and Ireland, &c.

My minde earneſtly bent to the knowledge of nauigation and Hydrographie from my youth (moſt excellent my dread Soueraigne) hath eftſoones beene moued by diligent ſtudie to ſearch out the chiefeſt points to them belonging: and not therewith ſufficed hath alſo ſought by experience in diuers diſcoueries and other voyages and trauailes to practiſe the ſame. I was in the firſt voyage for diſcouerie of the partes of Ruſſia, which begun in anno 1553. (being then ſixteene yeeres of age) alſo in the yeere 1556. in the voyage when the coaſtes of Samoed and Noua Zembla, with the ſtraightes of Vaigatz were found out: and in the yeere 1557, when the coaſt of Lappia, and the bay of S. Nicholas were more perfectly diſcouered. Since which time, by my continuall practiſe in the voyages made yeerely to S. Nicholas in Ruſſia, or to the Narue, and to ſome other countreys alſo by Sea: as likewiſe in paſſing from S. Nicholas to Moſco, and from Moſco to Narue, and from thence backe againe to S. Nicholas by land, in the yeeres 1574. and 1575. (being then Agent in thoſe countreis for the companie of Engliſh merchants for diſcoueries of new trades) ſetting downe alwayes with great care and diligence, true obſeruations & notes of al thoſe countreys, Iſlands, coaſts of the ſea, and other things requiſite to the artes of Nauigation and Hydrographie: and with like diligence gathering exact notes and deſcriptions of the wayes, riuers, cities, townes, &c. as I paſſed by land: I finde my ſelfe ſufficiently furniſhed to giue report vnto your Maieſty, and to make deſcription of thoſe North parts of the world in forme and maner of euery leagues diſtance that I haue paſſed & ſeene in all thoſe my trauels. The places herein deſcribed, which I haue not ſeene and tried my ſelfe, I haue ſet downe by the beſt authorities that I could finde, and therein may erre with the learned Gerardus Mercator, Abraham Ortelius, and the reſt: but for the maine part which is from Rochel in France hither to London, and from hence Eaſtward to Narue by ſea, and from thence to Moſco and to S. Nicholas by land: alſo from hence Northwards and Northeaſtwards by Sea to Saint Nicholas, and to the ſtraight of Vaigatz (firſt crauing humbly your highneſſe pardon) I dare boldly affirme (and that I truſt without ſuſpect of arrogancie, ſince truely I may ſay it) I haue here ſet it open to the view, with ſuch exactneſſe and trueth, and ſo placed euery thing aright in true latitude and longitude, (accompting the longitudes from the meridian of London, which I place in 21. degrees) as till this time no man hath done the like: neither is any man able by learning onely, except he trauaileth, as I haue done. For as it may be truely ſaide of nauigation and Hydrographie, that no man can be cunning in the one which wanteth conuenient knowledge in the other: and as neither of them can be had without the helpes of Aſtronomie and Coſmographie, much leſſe without theſe two grounds of all artes, Arithmetike and Geometrie: ſo none of the beſt learned in thoſe ſciences Mathematicall, without conuenient practiſe at the ſea can make iuſt proofe of the profite in them: ſo neceſſarily dependeth art and reaſon vpon practiſe and experience. Albeit there are diuers both learned and vnlearned, litle or nothing experienced, which in talke of nauigation will enter deeply and ſpeake much of and againſt errours vſed therein, when they cannot reforme them. Such alſo haue written thereof, pretending ſingular great knowledge therein, and would ſo be accompted of, though in very deede not worthy the name of good and ſufficient pilots. To whom I thinke it ſhall not be amiſſe in defence of rules builded vpon reaſon, and in practiſe allowed, thus much to ſay for anſwere. It is ſo, that there are rules vſed in nauigation which are not perfectly true: among which the ſtreight lines in ſea-cardes, repreſenting the 32. points of the compaſſe or windes, are not holden to be the leaſt, but noted of ſuch talkers for principall, to condemne the occupiers thereof for ignorance: yet hath the famous and learned Gerardus Mercator vſed them in his vniuerſal mappe. But ſuch as condemne them for falſe, and ſpeake moſt againſt their vſe cannot giue other that ſhould ſerue for nauigation to better purpoſe and effect. Experience (one of the keyes of knowledge) hath taught mee to ſay it. Wherein with my abilitie, together with ſome part of my ſtudie, I am the rather moued (in this my plot) to make ſome triall vnto you maieſtie: for that I perceiue that ſuch attempts of newe diſcoueries (whereunto this noble Iſland is moſt aptly ſituated) are by your royall maintenance ſo willingly furthered: beſeeching your highneſſe ſo to accept of theſe my trauailes, as a pledge of my well willing to my countrey, and of my loyall ſeruice to your maieſtie, whoſe healthfull happie life and reigne God continue which is Almightie. Amen.

Your Maieſties moſt humble ſubiect
William Burrough.

The Queenes Maieſties letters to Shaugh Thamas the great Sophi of Perſia, ſent by Arthur Edwards, William Turnbull, Matthew Tailbois, and Peter Gerard appointed Agents for the Moſcouie companie, in their ſixt voyage to Perſia, begun in the yeere 1579.

To the moſt noble and inuincible Emperour of Perſia, King of Shiruan, Gilan, Groſin, Coraſſan, and great Gouernour of the Indies.

ELizabeth by the grace of God Queene of England, France and Ireland, defender of the faith, &c. To the moſt noble and inuincible Emperour of Perſia, King of Shiruan, Gilan, Groſin, Coraſſan, and great gouernour euen vnto the Indies, ſendeth greeting. Moſt noble and inuincible Prince, it is now ‖ tenne yeeres ſince, or thereabouts, wherein (after the honourable ambaſſade of the noble man Anthony Ienkinſon our welbeloued ſubiect, to your moſt noble and inuincible father performed) we laboured to bring to paſſe by Thomas Banniſter and Gefferey Ducket merchants, our ſubiects, that throughout all the kingdomes ſubiect to his empire, free power might be giuen to Will. Garrard, Thomas Offley, William Cheſter knights, Rowland Haiward, Lionel Ducket, William Allen, Thomas Banniſter, Gefferey Ducket, Lawrence Chapman Merchants, and vnto their ſocietie, to enter into his lands and countreys at al times when they would and could, there to exerciſe & vſe their trade of merchandiſe, and from thence likewiſe after exchange or ſale made of thoſe wares, which they ſhould bring with them with his like good leaue and fauour, to carie from thence thoſe things wherwith his dominions do abound & with vs be ſcant. Which our petition the moſt noble prince your father took ſo thankfully and in ſuch good part, that he not onely graunted franke and commodious leaue, as was deſired: but the ſame he would to bee vnto them moſt free and beneficiall, and to haue continuance for many yeeres and times. The benefite of the which his wonderfull liberality, our ſubiects did enioy with ſuch humanitie & freedome as there could be no greater, till the time that by reaſon of wars more and more increaſing in thoſe partes, by the which our ſubiects were to make their iourney into Perſia, they were debarred and ſhut from that voyage & traffique. The which traffique the ſaid ſocietie being eftſoones deſirous to renew to the weale and commoditie of both our dominions they haue now ſent into Perſia their factors & Agents Arthur Edwards, William Turnbull, Matthew Tailbois, Peter Gerrard merchants, with their aſſociats, whom we beſeech your inuincible maieſty to entertaine with that fauour wherewith your father did imbrace Tho. Banniſter & Geffrey Ducket, and to enfranchiſe their whole ſocietie with that freedome, that neither they through any their miſdemeanours towards your ſubiects, may thereof ſeeme vnworthy (as we hope they will not) neither we our ſelues otherwiſe enioy them, then with the perpetuall remembrance of your good affection towards vs, and with the like fauourable inclination of our part towards you. The matter it ſelfe & tract of time ſhall ſufficiently proue the foreſaid maner of traffike vnprofitable to neither of vs. For ſo hath one God the chiefe gouernor of all things diſpoſed of our affaires on earth, that echone ſhould need other. And as for our people & ſubiects of the Engliſh nation, in verie deed your maieſty ſhal find them made and faſhioned ſo pliant to the performance of all dueties of humanity, that it can neuer repent you to haue graunted them this franke traffike, nor ſhame vs to haue obteined it for them at your hands. That therefore it may pleaſe your maieſty to yeeld vnto them this at our requeſt, moſt earneſtly we beſeech you. And we (as it wel beſeemeth a prince) if euer hereafter we may, will ſhew our ſelfe not to bee vnmindfull of ſo great a benefit. We wiſh your maieſty wel & proſperouſly to fare. Aduertiſe-

Aduertiſements and reports of the 6. voyage into the parts of Perſia and Media, for the companie of Engliſh merchants for the diſcouerie of new trades, in the yeeres 1579. 1580. and 1581. gathered out of ſundrie letters written by Chriſtopher Burrough, ſeruant to the ſaide companie, and ſent to his vncle Maſter William Burrough.

First it is to be vnderſtood, that the ſhips for the voiage to S. Nicholas in Ruſſia, in which the factors and merchandiſe for the Perſian voyage were tranſported, departed from Graueſend the 19. of Iune, 1579. which arriued at S. Nicholas in Ruſſia the 22. of Iuly, where the factors and merchants landed, and the merchandiſe were diſcharged & laden into doſhnikes, that is, barkes of the countrey, to be caried from thence vp by riuer vnto Vologda. And the 25. day of yͤ ſaid Iulie, the doſhnikes departed from Roſe Iſland by S. Nicholas vp the riuer Dwina, Peremene, that is to ſay, in poſte, by continuall ſailing, rowing, ſetting with poles, or drawing of mē, which came to Colmogro the 27. day, and departed thence the 29. of Iulie vp the ſaid riuer Dwyna, and came to Vſtyoug (which is at the head of the riuer Dwina, and mouth of Sughano) the 9. of Auguſt, where they ſtayed but a ſmall time, prouiding ſome victuals, and ſhifting certaine of their caſſacks or barkmen, & ſo departed thence the ſame day vp the riuer Sughano, and came to Totma (which is counted ſomewhat more then halfe the way from Vſtioug) the 15. day, where they ſhifted ſome of their caſſaks, and departed thence the ſame day, and came to the citie Vologda the 19. of Auguſt, where they landed their goods, and ſtaied at that place till the 30. of the ſame. Hauing prouided at Vologda, Telegas, or wagons, whereupon they laded their goods, they departed thence with the ſame by land towards Yeraſlaue the ſaid 30. of Auguſt at eight of the clocke in the morning, and came to the Eaſt ſide of the riuer Volga ouer againſt Yeraſlaue, with 25. Telegas laden with the ſaid goods the ſeuenth of September at fiue of the clocke afternoone. Then the three ſtrugs or barks prouided to tranſport the ſaide goods to Aſtracan (where they ſhould meete the ſhip that ſhould carie the ſame from thence into Perſia) came ouer from Yeraſlaue vnto the ſame ſide of the riuer Volga, and there tooke in the ſaid goods. And hauing prepared the ſaid barks ready with all neceſſary furniture they departed with them from Yeraſlaue downe the riuer of Volga on the 14 day of September at nine of the clocke in the morning, and they arriued at Niznouogrod the 17 day at three of the clocke afternoone, where they ſhewed the Emperors letters to paſſe free without paying any cuſtome, and taried there about three houres to prouide neceſſaries, and then departing, arriued at Cazan (or neere the ſame towne) on the 22. of September at fiue of the clock afternoone, where (through contrary windes, and for prouiding new caſſaks in the places of ſome that there went from them) they remained till the 26. day, at what time they departed thence about two of the clocke after noone, and arriued at Tetuſhagorod, which is on the Crim ſide of Volga, and in latitude 55. degrees 22. minutes, the 28. day at ten in the forenoone, where they ankered, and remained about 3. houres, and departing thence came to Oueak, which is on the Crims ſide (on the Weſterne ſide of Volga) the ſixt of October about fiue of the clocke in the morning. This place is accounted halfe the way betweene Cazan and Aſtracan: and heere there groweth great ſtore of Licoris: the ſoile is very fruitfull: they found there apple trees, and cherrie trees. The latitude of Oueak is 51. degrees 30. minutes. At this place had beene a very faire ſtone caſtle called by the name Oueak, & adioyning to the ſame was a towne called by yͤ Ruſſes, Sodom: this towne & part of the caſtle (by report of the Ruſſes) was ſwallowed into the earth by the iuſtice of God, for the wickedneſſe of the people that inhabited the ſame. There remaineth at this day to be ſeene a part of the ruines of the caſtle, and certaine tombs, wherein as it ſeemeth haue bin laid noble perſonages: for vpon a tombe ſtone might be perceiued the forme of a horſe and a man ſitting on it with a bow in his hand, and arrowes girt to his ſide: there was a piece of a ſcutchion alſo vpon one of the ſtones, which had characters grauen on it, whereof ſome part had beene conſumed with the weather, and the reſt left vnperfect: but by the forme of them that remained, we iudged them to be characters of Armenia: and other characters were grauen alſo vpon another tombe ſtone. Nowe they departed from Oueak the ſaid ſixt of October at fiue of the clocke after noone, and came to Perauolok the 10. day about eleuen or twelue of the clocke that night, making no abode at that place, but paſſed alongſt by it. This word Perauolok in the Ruſſe tongue doeth ſignifie a narrow ſtraight or necke of land betweene two waters, and it is ſo called by them, becauſe from the riuer Volga, at that place, to the riuer Don or Tanais, is counted thirty verſts, or as much as a man may well trauell on foote in one day. And ſeuen verſts beneath, vpon an Iſland called Tſaritſna the Emperour of Ruſſia hath fiftie gunners all the ſummer time to keepe watch, called by the Tartar name Carawool. Betweene this place and Aſtracan are fiue other Carawools or watches,

2 The ſecond named Stupino Carowool, diſtant from the firſt 50. verſts.
3 The third called Polooy Carowool, is 120. verſts diſtant from the ſecond.
4 The fourth named Keezeyur Carawool, is 50. verſts diſtant from the third.
5 The fift named Ichkebre, is 30. verſt diſtant from the fourth, and from Ichkebre to Aſtracan is 30. verſts.

Peter Garrard.

The 16. of October they arriued at Aſtracan, with their three ſtrougs in ſafetie about nine of the clock in the morning, where they found the ſhip prouided for the Perſia voyage in good order & readineſſe. The 17. day the foure principal factors of the company, Arthur Edwards, William Turnbull, Matthew Talbois, and Peter Garrard, were inuited to dine with the chiefe diake or ſecretary of Aſtracan (Vaſili Pheodorouich Shelepin) who declared then vnto them the troubles that were in Media and Perſia: and how the Turke with helpe of the Crims had conquered, and did poſſeſſe the greateſt part of Media: alſo he laid before them that Winter was at hand, & if they ſhould put out with their ſhip to the ſea, they ſhould bee conſtrained to take what hazards might happen them by wintring in the parts of Media, or els where, for backe againe to that place there was no hope for them to returne: whereupon the ſaid factors determined to ſtay there all Winter to learne further of the ſtate of thoſe countreis.

Ice at Aſtracan for foure moneths.

The 19. of Nouember the winde being Northerly, there was a great froſt, and much ice in the riuer: the next day being the 20. of Nouember the ice ſtood in the riuer, and ſo continued vntill Eaſter day.

The 22. of December departed this life Iohn Moore the gunner of the ſhip.

Anno 1580.

Thurſday the 7. of Ianuary betweene 8. and 9. of the clocke at night there appeared a croſſe proceeding from the moone, with two galles at the South and North end thereof.

The 6. of Ianuary being Twelfe day (which they call Chreſhenia) the Ruſſes of Aſtracan brake a hole in the ice vpon the riuer Volga, & hallowed the water with great ſolemnity according to the maner of their countrey, at which time all the ſouldiers of the towne ſhot off their ſmal pieces vpon the ice, and likewiſe to gratifie the captaine of the caſtel being a Duke, whoſe name is Pheodor Michalouich Troiocouria, who ſtood hard by the ſhip, beholding them as they were on the riuer, was ſhot off all the ordinance of our ſhip being 15. pieces, viz. 2. faulcons, 2. faulconets, 4. fowlers, 4. fowlers chambers, and 3. other ſmall pieces made for the ſtrougs to ſhoote halfe ſtones, and afterwards the great ordinance of the caſtle was ſhot off.

On the 31. of Ianuary there happened a great eclipſe of the moone, which began about 12. of the clocke at night, and continued before ſhe was cleare an houre and a halfe by eſtimation, which ended the firſt of February about halfe an houre paſt one in the morning: ſhe was wholly darkned by the ſpace of halfe an houre.

The 26. of February the towne of Nagay Tartars, called the Yourt, which is within 2. quarters of a mile of the caſtle of Aſtracan, by caſualty was ſet on fire about 10. of the clock at night, & continued burning til midnight, whereby one halfe of it was burnt, and much cattell deſtroyed. The Nagayes that inhabite that towne, are the Emperour of Ruſſia his vaſſals: It is ſuppoſed there are of them inhabiting that place of men, women, and children, the number of ſeuen thouſand. That night the Allarum was made in the caſtle and towne of Aſtracan. The captaine thereof had all his ſouldiers in very good order and readineſſe, being of them in number two thouſand gunners and caſſaks, that is to ſay, a thouſand gunners, which are accounted meere ſouldiers, and are not put to any other ſeruice then the vſe of their pieces, watch, &c. as ſouldiers which alwaies keepe the caſtle, and the caſſaks alſo vſing their pieces, do keepe the towne, and are commonly ſet to all kind of labours.

The 7. of March 1580. the Nagayes and Crims came before Aſtracan to the number of one thouſand foure hundred horſemen, which incamped round about, but the neereſt of them were two Ruſſe verſts and a halfe off from the caſtle and towne: ſome of them lay on the Crims ſide of Volga, and ſome on the Nagay ſide, but none of them came vpon the Iſland that Aſtracan ſtandeth on. It was ſaid that two of the prince of the Crims his ſonnes were amongſt them. They ſent a meſſenger on the eight day to the captaine of Aſtracan, to ſignifie that they would come and viſit him: who anſwered, he was ready to receiue them: and taking a great ſhot or bullet in his hand, willed the meſſenger to tel them that they ſhould not want of that geare, ſo long as it would laſt. The ninth day newes was brought that the Crims determined to aſſault the towne or caſtle, and were making of fagots of reede, to bring with them for that purpoſe. The tenth day two Ruſſes that were captiues, and two of the Tartars bondmen came away from the Nagayes, and came into Aſtracan. The ſame day word was brought to the Duke of two Nagayes which were ſeene at Goſtine houſe, ſuppoſed to be ſpies, but were gone againe from thence before they were ſuſpected.

Aſtracan ſituate vpon an Iſland.

ſuſpected. This Goſtine houſe is a place a litle without the towne where the Tiſiks (or Perſian merchants) do uſually remaine with their merchandize. The 11. day the ſaid Nagayes, and one more with them, came againe to that houſe early in the morning, where they were taken by the Ruſſes, and brought to the captaine of the caſtle, and being examined, confeſſed that their comming was onely to ſeeke two of their bondmen that were runne from them: whereupon their bondmen were deliuered to them: which fauour the ſaid captaine cōmonly ſheweth if they be not Ruſſes, and they were ſet at libertie. The 13. day they brake vp their camps, and marched to the Northwards into the countrey of Nagay.

The variation of the compas in Aſtracan was 13. deg. 40. minuts.

The 17. of April the variation of the compaſſe obſerued in Aſtracan was 13. deg. 40. min. from North to Weſt. This ſpring there came newes to Aſtracan that the queene of Perſia (the king being blind) had bene with a great army againſt the Turks that were left to poſſeſſe Media, and had giuen them a great ouerthrow: yet notwithſtanding Derbent, & the greateſt part of Media were ſtill poſſeſſed and kept by the Turks. The factors of the company conſulting vpon their affayres, determined to leaue at Aſtracan the one halfe of their goods with Arthur Edwards, and with the other halfe the other three factors would proceed in the ſhip on their purpoſed voyage to the coaſt of Media, to ſee what might be done there: where, if they could not find ſafe traffike, they determined to proceed to the coaſt of Gilan, which is a prouince nere the Caſpian ſea bordering vpon Perſia: and therupon appointed the ſaid goods to be laden abord the ſhip, and tooke into her alſo ſome merchandize of Tiſiks or Perſian merchants.

The 29. of April Amos Riall, and Anthony Marſh, the companies ſeruants were ſent from Aſtracan by the ſaid factors, by the riuer Volga to Yeraſlaue, with letters of aduiſe to be ſent for England, and had order for ſtaying the goods in Ruſſia that ſhould come that yeere out of England for maintaining the trade purpoſed for Perſia, vntill further triall were made what might be done in thoſe parts.

May.

The firſt day of May in the morning, hauing the ſhippe in readineſſe to depart, the factors inuited the duke Pheodor Micalouich Proiocoorow, and the principall ſecretary Vaſili Pheodorouich Shelepin, with other of the chiefeſt about the duke to a banket abord the ſhip, where they were interteined to their good liking, and at their departure was ſhot off all the ordinance of the ſhip, and about nine of the clocke at night the ſame day they weyed anker, and departed with their ſhip from Aſtracan, and being but litle winde, towed her with the boat about three verſts, & then ankered, hauing with them a pauos or lighter to helpe them at the flats. The ſecond day at foure of the clocke in ẏ morning they weyed & plyed downe the riuer Volga toward the Caſpian ſea. The ſeuenth of May in the morning they paſſed by a tree that ſtandeth on the left hand of the riuer as they went downe, which is called Mahomet Agatch, or Mahomets tree, & about three verſts further, that is to ſay, to the Southwards of the ſaid tree is a place called Vchoog, that is to ſay, the Ruſſe weare: (but Ochoog is the name of a weare in the Tartar tongue) where are certain cotages, and the Emperour hath lying at that place certaine gunners to gard his fiſhermen that keepe the weare. This Vchoog is counted from Aſtracan 60. verſts: they proceeded downe the ſaid riuer without ſtaying at the Vchoog. The ninth and tenth dayes they met with ſhoald water, and were forced to lighten their ſhip by the pauos: the 11. day they ſent backe to the Vchoog for an other pauos: This day by miſchance the ſhippe was bilged on the grapnell of the pauos, whereby the company had ſuſtained great loſſes, if the chiefeſt part of their goods had not beene layde into the pauos: for notwithſtanding their pumping with 3. pumps, heauing out water with buckets, and all the beſt ſhifts they could make, the ſhippe was halfe full of water ere the leake could be found and ſtopt. The 12. day the pauos came to them from the Vchoog, whereby they lighted the ſhippe of all the goods. The 13. day in the morning there came to them a ſmall boat, ſent by the captaine of Aſtracan, to learne whether the ſhippe were at ſea cleere of the flats. The 15. day by great induſtry and trauell they got their ſhip cleare off the ſhoales and flats, wherewith they had beene troubled from the ninth day vntill then: they were forced to paſſe their ſhippe in three foot water or leſſe. The 16. day they came to the Chetera Bougori, or Iſland of Foure Hillocks, which are counted forty verſts from Vchoog, and are the furtheſt land towards the ſea. The 17. day they bare off into the ſea, and being about twelue verſts from the Foure hillocks, riding in fiue foot and a halfe water about eleuen of the clocke in the forenoone, they tooke their goods out of the pauoſes into the ſhippe, and filled their ſhippe with all things neceſſary. The 18. day in the morning about ſeuen of the clock, the pauoſes being diſcharged departed away towards Aſtracan, the winde then at Southeaſt, they road ſtill with the ſhippe, and obſeruing the eleuation of the pole at that place, found it to be 45. degrees 20. minutes. The 19. day, the winde Southeaſt, they road ſtill. The 20. day the winde at Northweſt they ſet ſaile about one of the clocke in the morning, & ſteered thence South by Weſt, & Southſouthweſt, about 3. leagues, and then ankered in 6. foot and a halfe water, about nine of yͤ clocke before noone, at which time it fell calme: the eleuation of the pole at that place 45. degrees 13. minuts. The 21. hauing the winde at Northweſt, they ſet ſaile, and ſtered thence South by Weſt, and South vntill eleuen of the clocke, and had then nine foote water: and at noone they obſerued the latitude, and found it to be 44. degrees 47. minuts: then had they three fathoms and a halfe water, being cleare of the flats. It is counted from the Foure hillockes to the ſea about fiftie verſts. From the ſaid noonetide vntill foure of the clocke they ſayled South by Eaſt fiue leagues and a halfe: then had they fiue fathoms and a halfe and brackiſh water:

Brackiſh water farre within the ſea.

from that till twelue at night they ſayled South by Eaſt halfe a league, Eaſt tenne leagues: then had they eleuen fathome, and the water ſalter. From that till the 22. day three of the clocke in the morning they ſayled three & fifty leagues, then had they ſixteene fathome water: from thence they ſayled vntil noone South and by Weſt ſeuen leagues and a halfe, the latitude then obſerued

43. degrees 15. minuts.

43. degrees 15. minuts, the depth then eight and twentie fathoms, and ſhallow ground: from that vntill eight of the clocke at night, they ſayled South by Eaſt fiue leagues and a halfe, then had they three and fortie fathoms ſhallow ground. From thence till the 23. foure a clocke in the morning, they ſailed Southſouthweſt three leagues and a halfe: then could they get no ground in two and fiftie fathoms deepe. From thence vntill noone they ſayled South nine leagues, then the latitude obſerued was 42. degrees 20. minuts. From that till the 24. day at noone they ſayled

41. degrees 32. minuts.

South by Weſt ſeuenteene leagues and a halfe, then the latitude obſerued was 41. degrees 32. minuts. From noone till ſeuen of the clocke at night, they ſailed Southſouthweſt foure leagues, then had they perfect ſight of high land or hilles, which were almoſt couered with ſnow, and the mids of them were Weſt from the ſhip, being then about twelue leagues from the neareſt land: they ſounded but could finde no ground in two hundred fathoms. From thence they ſailed Southweſt vntil midnight: about three leagues from thence till the 25. day foure of the clock in the morning, they ſayled Weſt three leagues, being then litle winde, and neere the land, they tooke in their ſayles, and lay hulling: at noone the latitude obſerued, was 40. degrees 54. minuts:

they ſounded but could get no ground in two hundred fathoms. At foure of the clocke in the afternoone, the winde Northweſt, they ſet their ſailes, & from thence till the 26. day at noone they ſailed Eaſt ſoutheaſt foure leagues. From thence they ſailed till eight of the clocke at night Southweſt three leagues, the winde then at North. From thence they ſailed vntill the 27. day two of the clocke in the morning, Weſtſouthweſt eight leagues, the winde blowing at North very much. From the ſayd two til foure of the clocke they ſailed South by Weſt one league: then being day light, they ſaw the land plaine, which was not paſt three leagues from them, being very high ragged land. There were certaine rocks that lay farre off into the ſea, about fiue leagues from the ſame land, (which are called Barmake Taſh) they ſayled betweene thoſe rocks and the land, and about fiue of the clocke they paſſed by the port Bildill, where they ſhould haue put in but could not: and bearing longſt the ſhoare about two of the clocke afternoone, they came to Bildih in the countrey of Media or Sheruan, againſt which place they ankered in 9. foot water. Preſently after they were at anker, there came aboord of them a boat, wherein were ſeuen or eight perſons, two Turks, the reſt Perſians, the Turkes vaſſals, which bade them welcome, and ſeemed to be glad of their arriuall, who told the factors that the Turke had conquered all Media, or the countrey Sheruan, and how that the Turks Baſha remained in Derbent with a garriſon of Turkes, and that Shamaky was wholly ſpoyled, and had few or no inhabitants left in it. The factours then being deſirous to come to the ſpeech of the Baſha, ſent one of the Tiſikes (or merchants that went ouer with them from Aſtracan, paſſingers) and one of the companies ſeruants Robert Golding, with thoſe ſouldiours, to the captaine of Bachu, which place ſtandeth hard by the ſea, to certifie him of their arriuall, and what commodities they had brought, and to deſire friendſhippe to haue quiet and ſafe traffike for the ſame. Bachu is from Bildih, the place where they road, about a dayes iourney, on foote eaſily to be trauelled, which may be ſixe leagues the next way ouer land: it is a walled towne, and ſtrongly fortified. When the ſayd meſſenger came to the captaine of Bachu, the ſaid captaine gaue him very friendly intertainment, and after he vnderſtood what they were that were come in the ſhippe, and what they had brought, he ſeemed to reioyce much thereat: who gaue the ſaid Golding licence to depart backe the next day, being the eight and twentieth day: and promiſed that he would himſelfe come to the ſhippe the next day following: with which anſwere the ſaid Golding returned and came to the ſhippe the ſayd eight and twentieth day about nine of the clocke at night. The nine and twentieth day in the morning the factours cauſed a tent to be ſet vp at ſhoare neare the ſhippe, againſt the comming of the ſayd captaine: who came thither about three of the clocke after noone, and brought about thirtie ſouldiers, that attended on him, in ſhirts of male, and ſome of them had gauntlets of ſiluer, others of ſteele, and very faire. The factors met him at their tent, and after very friendly ſalutations paſſed betweene them, they gaue him for a preſent a garment of cloth of veluet, and another of ſcarlet, who accepted the ſame gratefully. After they had talked together by their interpretors, as well of the ſtate of the voyage and cauſe of their comming thither, as alſo learned of the ſayde captaine the ſtate of that countrey, the factours made requeſt vnto him, that he would helpe them to the ſpeech of the Baſha, who anſwered that their demand was reaſonable, and that he would willingly ſhew them therein what pleaſure he could, and ſayd, becauſe the way to Derbent, where the Baſha remayned, was dangerous, he would ſend thither, and certifie him of their arriuall, and what commodities they had brought, and ſuch commodities as they would deſire to exchange or barter the ſame for he would procure the ſaid Baſha to prouide for them: and therefore willed the factors to conſult together, and certifie him what they moſt deſired, and what quantitie they would haue prouided: ſo whileſt the factors were conſulting together thereupon, the captaine talked with a Tiſike merchant that came ouer in the ſhip with them from Aſtracan, which Tiſike, among other matters in talke, certified the captaine, that the night before, the factors & their company were determined to haue returned backe againe to Aſtracan, and that they were about to wey their ankers, which in deed was true, but the maiſter of the barke Thomas Hudſon of Limehouſe perſwaded them that the wind was not good for them to depart, &c. When the factors came againe to talke with the captaine, they deſired to goe to the Baſha, and that he would ſafely conduct them thither: he granted their requeſts willingly, deſiring them to goe with him to a village hard by, and there to abide with him that night, and the next day they ſhould go to Bachu, and from thence proceede on their iourney to Derbent. They were vnwilling to go that night with him, becauſe their prouiſion for the way was not in readineſſe, but requeſted that they might ſtay til the morning. Thereupon the captaine ſayd it was reported vnto him, that they ment the night before to haue gone away: and if it ſhould ſo happen, he were in great danger of looſing his head: for which cauſe he requeſted to haue ſome one for a pledge: wherefore M. Garrard one of the factors offered himſelfe to go, who, becauſe he could not ſpeake the Ruſſe tongue, tooke with him Chriſtopher Burrough, and a Ruſſe interpretour: that night they road from the ſeaſide, to a village about ten miles off, where at ſupper time the captaine had much talke with M. Garrard of our countrey, demanding where about it did lie, what countreys were neare vnto it, and with whom we had traffike, for by the Ruſſe name of our countrey he could not coniecture who we ſhould be: but when by the ſituation he perceiued we were Engliſhmen, he demanded if our prince were a mayden Queene: which when he was certified of, then (quoth he) your land is called Enghilterra, is it not? anſwere was made, it was: whereof he was very glad when he knew the certainety. He made very much of them, placing M. Garrard next to himſelfe, and Chriſtopher Burrough, with the Ruſſe interpretour for the Turkie tongue hard by. There was a Gillan merchant with him at that preſent, of whom he ſeemed to make great account: him he placed next to himſelfe on the other ſide, and his gentlemen ſate round about him talking together. Their ſitting is vpon the heeles, or croſſe legged.

Supper being brought in, he requeſted them to eate. After their potage (which was made of rice) was done, and likewiſe their boyled meat, there came in platters of rice ſodden thicke, and hony mingled withall: after all which, came a ſheepe roſted whole, which was brought in a tray, and ſet before the captaine: he called one of his ſeruitours, who cut it in pieces, and laying thereof vpon diuers platters, ſet the ſame before the captaine: then the captaine gaue to M. Garrard and his company one platter, and to his gentlemen another, and to them which could not well reach he caſt meat from the platters which were before him. Diuers queſtions he had with M. Garrard and Chriſtopher Burrough at ſupper time, about their diet, inquiring whether they eat fiſh or fleſh voluntarily, or by order. Their drinke in thoſe partes is nothing but water. After ſupper (walking in the garden) the captaine demanded of M. Garrard, whether the vſe was in England to lie in the houſe or in the garden, and which he had beſt liking of: he anſwered, where it pleaſed him, but their vſe was to lie in houſes: whereupon the captaine cauſed beds to be ſent into the houſe for them, and cauſed his kinſman to attend on them in the night, if they chanced to want any thing: he himſelfe with his gentlemen and ſouldiers lying in the garden.

In the morning very early he ſent horſe for the reſt of the company which ſhould go to Derbent, ſending by them that went tenne ſheepe for the ſhippe. In that village there was a Stoue, into which the captaine went in the morning, requeſting M. Garrard to go alſo to the ſame to waſh himſelfe, which he did. Shortly after their comming out of the Stoue, whileſt they were at breakfaſt, M. Turnbull, M. Tailboyes, and Thomas Hudſon the M. of the ſhippe, came thither, and when they had all broken their faſts, they went to Bachu: but Chriſtopher Burrough returned to the ſhip, for that he had hurt his leg, and could not well endure that trauell. And from Bachu they proceeded towards Derbent, as it was by the captaine promiſed, being accompanied on their way for their ſafe conduct, with a gentleman, and certaine ſouldiers, which had the captaine of Bachu his letters to the Baſha of Derbent, very friendly written in their behalfe. In their iourney to Derbent they forſooke the ordinarie wayes, being very dangerous, and trauelled thorow woods till they came almoſt to the towne of Derbent: and then the gentleman road before with the captaines letters to the Baſha, to certifie him of the Engliſh merchants comming, who receiuing the letters, and vnderſtanding the matter, was very glad of the newes, and ſent forth to receiue them certaine ſouldiers gunners, who met them about two miles out of the towne, ſaluting them with great reuerence, and afterwardes road before them: then againe met them other ſouldiours, ſome what neerer the caſtle, which likewiſe hauing done their ſalutations road before them, and then came foorth noble men, captaines, and gentlemen, to receiue them into the caſtle and towne. As they entred the caſtle, there was a ſhot of twentie pieces of great ordinance, & the Baſha ſent M. Turnbull a very faire horſe with furniture to mount on, eſteemed to be worth an hundred markes, and ſo they were conueyed to his preſence: who after he had talked with them, ſent for a coate of cloth of golde, and cauſed it to be put on M. Turnbulles backe, and then willed them all to depart, and take their eaſe, for that they were wearie of their iourney, and on the morrow he would talke further with them. The next day when yͤ factors came againe to the preſence of the Baſha, according to his appointment, they requeſted him that he would grant them his priuilege, whereby they might traffike ſafely in any part and place of his countrey, offering him, that if it pleaſed his Maieſtie to haue any of the commodities that they had brought, and to write his mind thereof to the captaine of Bachu, it ſhould be deliuered him accordingly. The Baſhaes anſwere was, that he would willingly giue them his priuilege: yet for that he regarded their ſafetie, hauing come ſo farre, & knowing the ſtate of his countrey to be troubleſome, he would haue them to bring their commodity thither, & there to make ſale of it, promiſing he would prouide ſuch commodities as they needed, and that he would be a defence vnto them, ſo that they ſhould not be iniured by any: wherupon the factors ſent Thomas Hudſon backe for yͤ ſhip to bring her to Derbent, and the Baſha ſent a gentleman with him to the captaine of Bachu, to certifie him what was determined, which meſſage being done, the captaine of Bachu, and the Baſhaes meſſenger, accompanied with a doozen ſouldiours, went from Bachu with Thomas Hudſon, & came to the ſhip at Bildih the 11. day of Iune. After the captaine and his men had beene aboord and ſeene the ſhip, they all departed preſently, but the gentleman, meſſenger from yͤ Baſha, with three other Turks, remained aboord, and continued in the ſhip till ſhe came to Derbent: the latitude of Bildih by diuers obſeruations is 40. degrees 25. minuts: the variation of the compaſſe 10. degrees 40. minuts from North to Weſt. After the returne of Thomas Hudſon backe to Bildih, they were conſtrayned to remaine there with the ſhippe through contrary windes vntill the 16. day of Iune foure of the clocke in the morning, at which time they weyed anker, ſet ſaile and departed thence towards Derbent, and arriued at anker againſt Derbent Eaſt and by South from the ſayd caſtle in foure fathome and a halfe water, the 22. day of Iune at ten of the clocke in the morning: then they tooke vp their ordinance, which before they had ſtowed in hold for eaſing the ſhippe in her rowling. In the afternoone the Baſha came downe to the waterſide againſt the ſhippe, and hauing the ſaid ordinance placed, and charged, it was all ſhotte off to gratifie him: and preſently after his departure backe, he permitted the factors to come aboord the ſhippe. The 29. day their goods were vnladen and carried to the Baſhaes garden, where he made choyce of ſuch things as he liked, taking for cuſtome of euery fiue & twenty karſies, or whatſoeuer, one, or after the rate of foure for the hundred. The factors after his choyce made, determined to ſend a part of the reſt of the goods to Bachu, for the ſpeedier making ſale thereof, for which cauſe they obtained the Baſhaes letter to the captaine of Bachu, written very fauourably in their behoofe: and thereupon was laden and ſent in a ſmall boat of that countrey in merchandize, to the value (very neere) of one thouſand pound ſterling: videlicet, one hundreth pieces of karſies, ſeuen broad clothes, two barrels of cochenelio, two barrels of tinne, foure barrels of ſhaffe. There went with the ſame of the companies ſeruants William Winckle, Robert Golding, and Richard Relfe, with two Ruſſies, whereof one was an interpretor, beſides foure barkemen. They departed from Derbent with the ſaid barke the 19. of Iuly, and arriued at Bildih the 25. day: their paſſage and carriage of their goods to Bachu was chargeable, although their ſales when they came thither were ſmall: they had great friendſhip ſhewed them of the captaine of Bachu, as well for the Baſhaes letter, as alſo for the factors ſakes, who had dealt friendly with him, as before is declared. Robert Golding deſirous to vnderſtand what might be done at Shamaky, which is a daies iourney from Bachu, went thither, from whence returning, he was ſet on by theeues, and was ſhot into the knee with an arrow, who had very hardly eſcaped with his life & goods, but that by good hap he killed one of the theeues horſes with his caliuer, and ſhot a Turke thorow both cheeks with a dag. On the firſt day of Auguſt the factors being aduertiſed at Derbent that their ſhip was ſo rotten & weake, that it was doubtfull ſhe would not carry them backe to Aſtracan, did thereupon agree and bargen at that place with an Armenian, whoſe name was Iacob, for a barke called a Buſſe, being of burden about 35. tunnes, which came that yere from Aſtracan, and was at that inſtant riding at an Iſland called Zere, about three or foure leagues beyond or to the Eaſtwardes of Bildih, which barke for their more ſafety, they ment to haue with them in their returne to Aſtracan, and thereupon wrote vnto Wincoll and the reſt at Bachu, that they ſhould receiue the ſame Buſſe, and lade in her their goods at Bildih to be returned to Derbent, and to diſcharge their firſt boate, which was obſerued by them accordingly. When all their goods were laden aboord the ſayd Buſſe at Bildih, and being ready to haue departed thence for Derbent, there aroſe a great ſtorme with the winde out of the ſea, by force whereof the cables and halſers were broken, and their veſſell put a ſhoare, and broken to pieces againſt the rockes: euery of them that were in her ſaued their liues, and part of the goods. But there was a Carobia or cheſte, wherein were dollers, and golde, which they had receiued for the commodities of the company, which they ſold at Bachu, which at the taking out of the Buſſe, fell by the barkes ſide into the water amongſt the rockes, and ſo was loſt. The packes of cloth which they could not well take out of the Buſſe were alſo loſt, other things that were more profitable they ſaued.

Zere Iſland.

The Engliſh ſuffer ſhip-wracke.

The 18. of Auguſt, the Factors receiued from the Baſha 500. Batmans of raw ſilke, parcell of the bargaine made with him, who bade them come the next day for the reſt of the bargaine.

The 19. day the Factors went to the Baſha according to his appointment, but that day they could not ſpeake with him, but it was deliuered them as from him, that they ſhould looke and conſider whether any thing were due vnto him or not, which grieued the Factors: and thereupon M. Turnebull anſwered, that their heads & all that they had were at the Baſhaes pleaſure: But then it was anſwered there was no ſuch matter in it: but that they ſhould caſt vp their reckonings, to ſee how it ſtood betweene them. The 20. day they caſt vp their reckonings. The 21. they went to haue ſpoken with the Baſha, but were denied audience.

The 22. day they heard newes by a Buſſe that came from Aſtracan, that Arthur Edwards (whom the Factors left at Aſtracan with the moitie of the goods) was dead, who departed this life the   of Arthur Edwards dieth at Aſtracan.

The 23. day the Factors receiued more from the Baſha 500. Batmans of ſilke. The 4. of September newes was brought to Derbent, that Golding comming from Shamaky was ſet on by theeues (Turkes) and had hurt one of them.

September.

The 5. Tobias Atkins the gunners boy died of the fluxe, who was buried the 6. day 2. miles to the Southward of the Caſtle of Derbent, where the Armenian Chriſtians do vſually bury their dead. About the 20. of September newes came to Derbent, that the Buſſe which they had bought of Iacob the Armenian as before, was caſt away at Bildih, but they receiued no certaine newes in writing from any of our people.

The 26. of September was laden aboord the ſhip 40. bales of ſilke. From the 26. till the 2. of October, they tooke into the ſhip, bread, water, and other neceſſary prouiſion for their ſea ſtore: the ſaid 2. day of October, the Factors were commanded vpon the ſuddaine to auoide their houſe, and get them with their prouiſion out of the towne: Whereupon they were conſtrained to remoue and carry their things to the ſea ſide againſt the ſhip, and remained there all the night. The cauſe of this ſudden auoyding them out of the towne (as afterwards they perceiued) was for that the Baſha had receiued newes of a ſupplie with treaſure that the Turke had ſent, which was then neare at hand comming toward him.

The 3. day of October all things were brought from the ſhoare aboord the ſhip: and that day the Factors went to the Baſha to take their leaue of him, vnto whom they recommended thoſe the Companies ſeruants, &c. which they had ſent to Bachu, making accompt to leaue them behinde in the Countrey: who cauſed their names to be written, and promiſed they ſhould want nothing, nor be iniuried of any. After this leaue taken, the Factors went aboord purpoſing preſently to haue ſet ſaile and departed towards Aſtracan, the winde ſeruing well for that purpoſe at South Southeaſt: And as they were readie to ſet ſaile, there came againſt the ſhip a man, who weued: whereupon the boate was ſent a ſhoare to him, who was an Armenian ſent from William Wincoll, with his writing tables, wherein the ſaid Wincoll had written briefly, the miſhap of the loſſe of the Buſſe, and that they were comming from Bildih towardes Derbent, they, and ſuch things as they ſaued with a ſmall boate, forced to put a ſhoare in a place by the ſea ſide called the Armenian village: Whereupon the Factors cauſed the ſhippe to ſtay, hoping that with the Southerly winde that then blew, they would come from the place they were at to the ſhip, but if they could not come with that winde, they ment to ſaile with the ſhippe, with the next wind that would ſerue them, againſt the place where they were, & take them in, if they could: which ſtay and loſſe of thoſe Southerly windes, was a cauſe of great troubles, that they afterwardes ſuſtained through yce, &c. entring the Volga as ſhalbe declared.

The 4. day the winde South Southeaſt, the ſhippe rode ſtill: This day Chriſtopher Burrow was ſent to ſhore to Derbent to prouide ſome neceſſaries for the voyage, & with him a Tiſike or two, which ſhould goe in the ſhippe paſſengers to Aſtracan. And being on ſhoare he ſaw there the comming in of the Turkes treaſure, being accompanied with 200. ſouldiers, and one hundreth pioners, beſides Captaines and Gentlemen: the Baſha with his Captaines and ſouldiers very gallantly apparelled and furniſhed went out from Derbent about three or foure miles, to meete the ſaid treaſure, and receiued the ſame with great ioy and triumph. Treaſure was the chiefe thing they needed, for not long before the ſouldiers were readie to breake into the Court againſt the Baſha for their pay: there was a great mutinie amongſt them, becauſe hee had long differred and not payed them their due. The treaſure came in ſeuen wagons, and with it were brought tenne pieces of braſſe.

The Turke his treaſure ſent to Derbent.

In the parts of Media where they were, there was no commoditie to be bought of any value, but raw ſilke, neither was that to be had but at the Baſhaes hands: who ſhortly after their comming thither taxed the Countrey for that commoditie. His dealing with our Marchants as it was not with equitie in all points according to his bargaine, ſo it was not extreme ill. Of the commodities they carried hee tooke the chiefeſt part, for which he gaue but a ſmall price in reſpect of the value it was there worth, and becauſe he had prouided ſuch quantitie of commoditie for them, which otherwiſe they could not haue had, the Countrey being ſo troubleſome, and trauaile by land ſo dangerous, he vſed them at his pleaſure.

The newes that was reported vnto them at Aſtracan touching the warres betweene the Turkes & Perſians differed litle from the truth: For the Turkes armie with aide of the Crims, (being in number by yͤ information of two Spaniards that ſerued in thoſe wars, about 200000) inuaded and conquered the Countrey of Media in Anno 1577. When the great Turke vnderſtood of the conqueſt, he appointed Oſman Baſha (the ſaid Baſha, and now Captaine of Derbent) gouernour of the whole Countrey, who ſettled himſelfe in Shamaky the chiefe Citie of Media, and principall place of traffike, vnto whom was ſent from the great Turke, in ſignification of the gratefull acceptation of his ſeruice and the great conqueſt, a ſword of great value.

Oſman Baſha.

After the ſaid Baſha had brought the Countrey in order to his liking, and placed garriſons where he thought conuenient, the armie was diſſolued and ſent backe: When the Perſians vnderſtood that the Turkes armie was diſſolued and returned, they gathered a power together, and with the Queene of their Countrey as chiefe, they entred the Countrey of Media, and ouerranne the ſame with fire and ſword, deſtroying whatſoeuer they found, as well people, cattell, as whatſoeuer els, that might be commodious to the Turkes. And after they had ſo ouerrunne the Countrey, they came to Shamaky, where the ſaid Baſha Lieutenant generall of the great Turke was ſettled, and beſieged it: whereupon the Baſha ſeeing hee could not long indure to withſtand them, fled thence to Derbent where he now remaineth.

Derbent built by Alexander the great.

Derbent is a ſtrong Caſtle which was built by Alexander the great, the ſituation whereof is ſuch, that the Perſians being without Ordinance, are not able to winne it but by famine. When the Turkes were fled from Shamaky, the Perſians entred the ſame and ſpoyled it, leauing therein neither liuing creature nor any commoditie, and ſo returned backe into Perſia, and ſetled themſelues about Teueris, where there grewe ſome queſtion among them for the kingdome. Afterwards the Perſians hauing intelligence of an armie from the Turke comming into Media, gathered themſelues together in a great armie and encountring the ſaid Turkes, ſet vpon them on the ſudden, and vanquiſhed them, putting them all to the ſword. This ouerthrow of the Turkes grieued the Baſha of Derbent, and made him to haue the more care for his owne ſafetie. Moreouer, newes was brought vnto him that the Kiſel Baſhaes, (that is to ſay the nobles and Gentlemen of Perſia) were minded to ſet vpon him, and that neere vnto Bachu there lay an army readie to beſiege it. Whereupon the Baſha oftentimes would ride about the Caſtle of Derbent viewing the ſame, and the ſprings that did come to it, and where he ſaw any cauſe of reformation, it was amended.

The variation of the Compaſſe.

The latitude of Derbent (by diuers obſeruations exactly there made) is 41. deg. 52. min. The variation of the Compaſſe at that place about 11. degrees from North to Weſt. From Derbent to Bildih by land 46. leagues. From Derbent to Shamaky by land, 45. leagues. From Shamaky to Bachu about 10. leagues, which may be 30. miles. From Bachu to Bildih fiue or ſixe leagues by land, but by water about 12. leagues. From the Caſtle Derbent Eaſtwards, there reach two ſtone wals to the border of the Caſpian ſea, which is diſtant one Engliſh mile. Thoſe wals are 9. foote thicke, and 28. or 30. foote high, and the ſpace betweene them is 160. Geometricall paces, that is 800 foot. There are yet to be perceiued of the ruine of thoſe wals, which do now extend into the ſea about halfe a mile: alſo from the caſtle Weſtward into the land, they did perceiue the ruines of a ſtone wall to extend, which wal, as it is reported, did paſſe from thence to Pontus Euxinus, and was built by Alexander the great when the caſtle Derbent was made.

The 5 of October about noone the winde Northnortheaſt they wayed ancre, and ſet ſaile from Derbent, being alongſt the coaſt to the Southwards to ſeeke their men: but as they had ſailed about foure leagues the winde ſcanted Eaſterly, ſo that they were forced to ancre in three fathom water.

The 6 day they wayed ancre, and bare further off into the ſea, where they ancred in ſeuen fathom water, the ſhip being very leake, and ſo rotten abaft the maine maſt, that a man with his nailes might ſcrape thorow her ſide.

The 7 day about 7 of the clocke in the morning, they ſet ſaile, the winde Southweſt. They conſidered the time of the yere was farre ſpent, the ſhip weake, leake and rotten, and therefore determining not to tary any longer for Wincoll and his fellowes, but to leaue them behinde, bent themſelues directly towards Aſtracan: and ſailing Northnortheaſt vntill midnight about 16 leagues, the winde then came to the Northnorthweſt, and blew much, a very ſtorme, which cauſed them to take in all their ſailes, ſauing the fore corſe, with which they were forced to ſteere before the ſea, South by Weſt, and Southſouthweſt. And on the 8 day about two of the clocke in the morning their great boat ſunke at the ſhips ſterne, which they were forced to cut from the ſhip to their great griefe and diſcomfort: for in her they hoped to ſaue their liues if the ſhip ſhould haue miſcaried. About 10 of the clocke before noone they had ſight of the land about 5 leagues to the South of Derbent, and bare longſt the coaſt to the Southeaſtwards vnto Nezauoo, where they came at ancre in three fathoms, and blacke oze, good ancre holde, whereof they were glad, as alſo that the winde was ſhifted to the Northweſt, and but a meane gale. Wincoll and the reſt of his fellowes being in the Armenian village, which is about 18 verſts to the Weſtwards of Nezauoo, the place whereagainſt they rode at ancre, ſaw the ſhip as ſhe paſſed by that place, and ſent a man in the night following alongſt the coaſt after her, who came againſt the ſhip where ſhe rode, and with a firebrand in the top of a tree made ſignes, which was perceiued by them in the ſhippe, whereupon they hoiſed out their ſkiffe, and ſent her aſhore to learne what was meant by the fire: which returned a letter from Wincoll, wherein he wrote that they were with ſuch goods as they had at the Armenian village, and prayed that there they might with the ſame goods be taken into the ſhips. The 9 day it was litle winde, they wayed and bare a little further off into the ſea towards the ſaid village, and ancred. The 10 day they ſent their ſkiffe to the Armenian village to fetch thoſe men and the goods they had, with order that if the winde ſerued, that they could not returne to fetch the ſhip, they of the ſhip promiſed to come for them, againſt the ſaid village. This day it was calme.

Nezauoo.

The 11 day the winde Northweſt they rode ſtill. The 12 day the winde Southeaſt they wayed ancre, & bare againſt & nere to the Armenian village where they ancred, and then the ſkiffe came aboord and tolde them that our people at ſhore were like to be ſpoiled of the Tartars, were it not that the gunners defended them: then was the ſkiffe ſent backe againe to charge them at any hand they ſhould haſten aboord the ſhip whatſoeuer it coſt them. Whereupon, all the company came aboord the ſame day ſauing Richard Relfe and two Ruſſes, but aſſoone as the ſkiffe was returned aboord the ſhip, the winde blew at Southeaſt, and the ſea was growen, ſo as they were forced to take in their ſkiffe into the ſhip, and rode ſtill till the 13 day, and then being faire weather, early in the morning the ſkiffe was hoiſed out of the ſhip, and ſent to ſhore to fetch the ſaid Relfe and the two Ruſſes, which were ready at the ſhore ſide, and with them two Spaniards that were taken captiues at the Goletta in Barbary, which ſerued the Turke as ſouldiers. Thoſe Spaniards (of Chriſtian charity) they brought alſo aboord the ſhip to redeeme them from their captiuity, which were brought ouer into England, and ſet free and at liberty here in London, in September 1581. The winde this day at Northnortheaſt, faire weather. The 14 day they ſent the ſkiffe to ſhore, and filled freſh water. The 15 day they rode ſtill, being litle winde and fog. The 16 day the winde Eaſtſoutheaſt, they wayed ancre and ſet ſaile, bearing Northwards towards Aſtracan, and the ſame night they ancred in ten fathoms water, about fiue miles from the ſhore of the Shalkaules countrey, which place is eight leagues Northnorthweſt from Derbent. The 17 day the winde at North very ſtormy, they rode ſtill all that day and night. The 18 the winde all Southeaſt about one of the clocke afternoone, they wayed ancre, and ſailed thence till foure of the clocke Northnortheaſt fiue leagues, then they might ſee the land Northweſt about tenne leagues from the winde Southeaſt: from thence they ſailed til midnight Northnortheaſt twelue leagues. From thence till the 19 day ſeuen a clocke in the morning they ſailed Northnortheaſt eight leagues: the winde then Eaſtſoutheaſt, a faire gale, they ſounded and had 17 fathoms, and ſand, being (as the Maſter iudged) about the head of Sherly: from thence till 12 of the clocke at noone they ſailed North 5 leagues, the winde then at Eaſt a faire gale, they ſounded and had 5 fathoms. From thence till 8 of the clocke at night, they ſailed North 7 leagues, the winde then at Northeaſt with ſmall raine, they tooke in their ſailes, and ancred in 3 fathoms water and ſoft oze, where they rode ſtill all night, and the 20 day and night the winde Northeaſt, as before with ſmall raine.

The 21 day the winde Northweſt, they likewiſe rode ſtill. The 22 day about 3 of the clocke in the afternoone, they wayed ancre, the winde Weſtnorthweſt, and ſailed from thence till ſixe of the clocke at night North 4 leagues, then they ancred in 2 fathoms and a halfe ſoft oze, the winde at Weſt a ſmall breath.

The 23 day about 7 of the clocke in the morning, they wayed ancre, and ſet ſaile, being litle winde Eaſterly, and ſailed till 2 of the clocke after noone Northweſt in with the ſhore about ſixe leagues, and then ancred in 6 foot water, hauing perfect ſight of the low land (ſand hilles) being about 3 miles from the neereſt land. This place of the land that they were againſt, they perceiued to be to the Weſtwards of the 4 Iſlands (called in the Ruſſe tongue Chetera Bougori) and they found it afterwards by due proofe, to be about 50 verſts, or 30 Engliſh miles to the Southweſt, or Southweſt by South, from the ſayd Chetera Bougori.

The 24 day the winde at Eaſt, and by South, a Sea winde called Gillauar, cauſed them to ride ſtill. The 25 day they thought good to ſend in their ſkiffe Robert Golding, and certaine Ruſſes, to row him alongſt Northwards by the ſhore, to ſeeke the foure Iſlands, and ſo to paſſe vnto the Vchooge, and there to land the ſayd Robert Golding to proceed to Aſtracan, to deliuer Amos Riall a letter, wherein he was required to prouide Pauoſes to meete the ſhippe at the ſayd Iſlands, and the ſkiffe with the Ruſſes were appointed to returne from the Vchooge with victuals to the ſhippe, which ſkiffe departed from the ſhippe about nine of the clocke in the forenoone. The 26, 27, 28, and 29 dayes, the windes Eaſterly and Northeaſt, they rode ſtill with their ſhip. The 30 day the winde Southeaſt, they wayed, and ſet ſaile to the Northeaſtwards: but the ſhip fell ſo on the ſide to the ſhorewards, that they were forced eftſoones to take in their ſaile, and ancre againe, from whence they neuer remoued her. That day they ſhared their bread: but in their want God ſent them two coueies of partridges, that came from the ſhore, and lighted in and about their ſhips, whereby they were comforted, and one that lay ſicke, of whoſe life was ſmall hope, recouered his health.

A ſtrange accident of prouiſion for their reliefe.

Nouember.

The 4 of Nouember the ſkiffe returned to the ſhip with ſome victuals, and certified that the foure Iſlands were about 60 verſts from them to the Northeaſtwards. When Robert Golding came to Aſtracan, and deliuered there the Factors letters to Amos Rial, the duke, captaine of that place, was done to vnderſtand of the ſhips arriuall, & of the ſtate they were in, and their requeſt for Pauoſes, who was very glad to heare of their ſafe returne, and appointed to be ſent with all ſpeed two Pauoſes and a Stroog, with gunners to gard and to defend them. With the which Stroog and Pauoſes, Amos Riall went downe to the Chetera Bougori, or 4 Iſlands aforeſayd, where he ſtayed with thoſe barks, according to the Factors appointment. The 5 day they purpoſed to ſend from the ſhip their ſkiffe with the carpenter, and 4 Ruſſes to row him to the 4 Bougories, to requeſt Amos Riall to come from thence with the Pauoſes to the ſhippe with all poſſible ſpeed. The ſkiffe with thoſe men departed from the ſhip in the morning, and within one houre they met with a ſmall boat with Ruſſes, rowing towards the ſhip, which came from the Ouchooge with a wilde ſwine and other victuals to ſell: with the ſame boat the ſkiffe returned backe to the ſhip after the Ruſſes had receiued and were ſatiſfied for the victuals they brought: the ſame day they returned with their boat backe toward the Ouchooge, and with them in the ſame boat was ſent the Carpenter of the ſhippe to the Chetera Bougori, which were in their way, to declare vnto Amos Riall the meſſage before appointed him. From the 5 vntill the 9 day the ſhip rode ſtill with contrary winds Eaſterly. The ſame 9 day came to the ſhippe certaine Ruſſes in a ſmall boat, which brought with them ſome victuals ſent by Amos Riall, and declared that he with the Pauoſes and Stroog had remained at the Chetera Bougori fiue dayes, expecting the comming thither of the ſhip. The 10 day being doubtfull of the Pauoſes comming, they ſent Thomas Hudſon Maſter of the ſhip in the ſkiffe (and with her went the foreſayd ſkiffe boat) towards the Chetera Bougori to the Pauoſes to bring word whether they would come to the ſhip or not, the wind then at Northeaſt with fogge. The 11 day the winde Northerly with fogge, the ſhip rode ſtill. The 12 day Amos Riall, Chriſtopher Fawcet, and a new gunner came to the ſhip, and with them the M. Thomas Hudſon returned; but the Stroog with the gunners remained at the Chetera Bougori; and from thence (when it began to freeſe) returned to Aſtracan, Amos Riall declared that he ſent the carpenter backe from the Chetera Boogori in a ſmall boat on the 10 day, and marueiled that he was not come to the ſhippe (but in the fogge the day before as afterwards they learned) miſſed the ſhippe, and ouerſhot her, and afterwards returning backe, he found the ſhip at ancre, and nothing in her but the Ruſſes that were left to keepe her, and then he departed thence, and went to the Vchooge, and there ſtayed. Preſently vpon the comming of the Pauoſes to the ſhip they vſed as much ſpeed as might be, to get the goods out of the ſhippe into them, and after the goods were laden in, they tooke in alſo of the ſhippes ordinance, furniture and prouiſion, as much as they could.

Ice the 13 of Nouember in the mouth of the riuer of Volga.

The 13 day in the morning Amos Riall was ſent away in a ſmall boat towards Aſtracan, to prouide victuals and cariages to relieue and helpe them, who could paſſe no further then the foure Iſlands, but was there ouertaken with yce, and forced to leaue his boat, and from thence paſſed poſte to Aſtracan, finding at the Vchooge the Carpenter returned from his ill iourney, very ill handled with the extremity of the colde. The ſame day they departed alſo in thoſe lighters with the goods towards the Chetera Bougori, leauing the ſhip at ancre, and in her two Ruſſes, which with three more that went in the Pauoſes, to prouide victuals for themſelues and the reſt, & therewith promiſed to returne backe to the ſhip with all ſpeed, had offered to vndertake for twenty rubbles in money to cary the ſhip into ſome harborow, where ſhe might ſafely winter, or els to keepe her where ſhe rode all winter, which was promiſed to be giuen them if they did it: and the ſame day when with thoſe lighters they had gotten ſight of the foure Iſlands being about eight verſts Southweſt from them, the winde then at Northeaſt, did freeſe the ſea ſo as they could not row, guide, ſtirre or remoue the ſaid lighters, but as the winde and yce did force them. And ſo they continued driuing with the yce, Southeaſt into the ſea by the ſpace of forty houres, and then being the ſixteenth day the yce ſtood. Whiles they droue with the yce, the dangers which they incurred were great: for oftentimes when the yce with the force of winde and ſea did breake, pieces of it were toſſed and driuen one vpon another with great force, terrible to beholde, and the ſame happened at ſometimes ſo neere vnto the lighters, that they expected it would haue ouerwhelmed them to their vtter deſtruction: but God who had preſerued them from many perils before, did alſo ſaue and deliuer them then.

The 16 day.

Within three or foure dayes after the firſt ſtanding of the yce, when it was firme and ſtrong, they tooke out all their goods, being fourty and eight bales or packes of raw ſilke, &c. layde it on the yce, and couered the ſame with ſuch prouiſions as they had. Then for want of victuals, &c. they agreed to leaue all the goods there vpon the yce, and to go to the ſhore: and thereupon brake vp their Cheſts and Corobias, wherewith, and with ſuch other things as they could get, they made ſleddes for euery of them to draw vpon the yce, whereon they layed their clothes to keepe them warme, and ſuch victuals as they had, and ſuch other things as they might conueniently cary, and ſo they departed from the ſayd goods and Pauoſes very early about one of the clocke in the morning, and trauailing on the yce, directed their way North, as neere as they could iudge, and the ſame day about two of the clocke in the afternoone, they had ſight of the Chetera Babbas (foure hillocks of Iſlands ſo called) vnto the ſame they directed themſelues, and there remained that night.

Trauaile vpon the yce.

Chetera Babbas.

The goods and Pauoſes which they left on the yce they iudged to be from thoſe Chetera Babbas about 20 verſts.

And the next morning departed thence Eaſtwards, and came to the Chetera Bougories (or foure Iſlands before ſpoken of) before noone (the diſtance betweene thoſe places is about 15 verſts) where they remained all that night, departing thence towards Aſtracan: the next morning very early they loſt their way through the perſwaſion of the Ruſſes which were with them, taking too much towards the left hand (contrary to the opinion of M. Hudſon) whereby wandering vpon the yce foure or fiue dayes, not knowing whether they were entred into the Crimme Tartars land or not, at length it fortuned they met with a way that had bene trauailed, which croſt backwards towards the ſea: that way they tooke, and following the ſame, within two dayes trauaile it brought them to a place called the Craſnoyare (that is to ſay in the Engliſh tongue) Red cliffe, which diuers of the company knew.

There they remained that night, hauing nothing to eat but one loafe of bread, which they happened to finde with the two Ruſſes that were left in the ſhip to keepe her all the Winter (as is aforeſaid) whom they chanced to meet going towards Aſtracan, about fiue miles before they came to the ſayd Craſnoyare, who certified them that the ſhip was cut in pieces with the yce, and that they had hard ſcaping with their liues.

The Engliſh ſhip cut in pieces with yce.

In the morning they departed early from Craſnoyare towards the Ouchooge, and about 9 of the clocke before noone, being within 10 verſts of the Vchooge, they met Amos Riall, with the carpenter, which he found at Ouchooge, and a gunner newly come out of England, and alſo 65 horſes with ſo many Caſſacks to guide them, and 50 gunners for gard, which brought prouiſion of victuals, ⁊c. and were ſent by the Duke to fetch the goods to Aſtracan. The meeting of that company was much ioy vnto them.

December.

The Factors ſent backe with Amos Riall and the ſayd company to fetch the goods, Thomas Hudſon the Maſter, Tobias Paris his Mate, and ſo they the ſayd Factors and their company marched on to the Vchooge, where they refreſhed themſelues that day, and the night following. And from thence proceeded on towards Aſtracan, where they arriued the laſt day of Nouember. Theſe that went for the goods after their departure from the Factors trauailed the ſame day vntill they came within 10 verſts of the Chetera Babbas, where they reſted that night. The next morning by the breake of the day they departed thence, and before noone were at the Chetera Babas, where they ſtayed all night; but preſently departed thence Thomas Hudſon with the Carpenter and gunner to ſeeke where the goods lay: who found the ſame, and the next day they returned backe to their company at the Chetera Babbas, and declared vnto them in what ſort they had found the ſayd goods.

Their returne to Aſtracan.

The 3 day early in the morning they departed all from the 4 Babbas towards the ſaid goods, and the ſame day did lade all the goods they could find vpon the ſaid ſleds, and with all conuenient ſpeed returned backe towards Aſtracan. And when they came to the Chetera Bougori, where they reſted the night, in the morning very early before the breake of day, they were aſſaulted by a great company of the Nagays Tartars horſemen, which came ſhowting and hallowing with a great noiſe, but our people were ſo inuironed with the ſleds, that they durſt not enter vpon them, but ranne vp, and ſhot their arrowes amongſt them, and hurt but one man in the head, who was a Ruſſe, and ſo departed preſently. Yet when it was day, they ſhewed themſelues a good diſtance off from our men, being a very great troope of them, but did not aſſault them any more. The ſame day our men with thoſe cariages, departed from thence towards Aſtracan, where they arriued in ſafety the 4 of December, about 3 of the clocke in the afternoone, where our people greatly reioyced of their great good happe to haue eſcaped ſo many hard euents, troubles and miſeries, as they did in that voyage, and had great cauſe therefore to praiſe the Almighty, who had ſo mercifully preſerued and deliuered them. They remained the Winter at Aſtracan, where they found great fauour and friendſhip of the duke, captaine, and other chiefe officers of that place: but that Winter there happened no great matter worth the noting.

The breaking vp of the yce.

Morgan Hubblethorne dier ſent into Perſia.

May.

In the ſpring of the yeere 1581, about the mids of March, the yce was broken vp, and cleare gone before Aſtracan, and the ninth of Aprill, hauing all the goods that were returned from the parts of Media, laden into a Stroog, the Factors, William Turnebull, Matthew Taileboyes, Giles Crow, Chriſtopher Burrough, Michael Lane, Laurence Prouſe gunner, Randolfe Foxe, Tho. Hudſon, Tobias Parris, Morgan Hubblethorne the dier, Rich. the ſurgean, Rob. Golding, Ioh. Smith, Edw. Reding carpenter, and William Perrin gunner, hauing alſo 40 Ruſſes, whereof 36 were Caſſacks to row, the reſt merchants paſſengers, departed from Aſtracan with the ſayd Stroog and goods vp the Volga towards Yeraſlaue. They left behinde them at Aſtracan, with the Engliſh goods ⁊ merchandiſe there remaining, Amos Riall, W. Wincoll, and Richard Relfe, and appointed them to ſell ⁊ barter the ſame, or ſo much thereof as they could to the Tiſiks, if there came any thither that ſpring, and to others as they might, ⁊ the reſt with ſuch as they ſhould take in exchange to returne vp to Yeraſlaue that Summer, when the Emperors carriage ſhould paſſe vp the Volga. The 21 day they came with their Stroog to the Perauolok, but made no ſtay at that place: for they had beene much troubled with yce in their comming from Aſtracan. The 3 of May about noone they came to Oueak, and from thence proceeding vp the riuer, on the 17 day William Turnebull departed from the Stroog in a ſmall boat, and went before towards Tetuſha to prouide victuals, and ſend downe to the Stroog, from which place they were then about 230 verſts. The 23 day they met a boat with victuals, which William Turnebull ſent from Tetuſha, and the ſame day they arriued with their Stroog at Tetuſha, where they ſtayed all night, and the next morning betimes departed thence, but W. Turnebull was gone in the ſmall boat before to Cazan, to prouide neceſſaries from thence, and to make way for their diſpatch. The 26 day they arriued with their Stroog at Cazan, where they remained till the fourth of Iune: the Factors ſent Giles Crow from Cazan to the Moſco, with their letters the 30 of May. The 4 day of Iune they departed from Cazan with their Stroog, and arriued at Yeraſlaue the 22 day about 5 of the clocke in the morning.

The 23 day they prouided Telegos, to carry the goods to Vologda. The 24 day hauing the goods laden vpon Telegos, they departed with the ſame towards Vologda, and remained there fiue verſts from Yeraſlaue.

The 29 day they came to Vologda, with all their goods in ſafety, and good order. The ſame 29, William Turnbull and Peter Garrard departed from Vologda poſt by water towards Colmogro, the third of July, hauing their goods laden in a ſmall doſhnik, they departed with the ſame from Vologda towards Roſe Iſland by S. Nicholas, where they arriued in ſafety the 16 of July, and found there the Agents of Ruſſia, and in the rode the ſhips ſent out of England, almoſt laden ready to depart.

The 25 day departed for England (out of the rode of S. Nicholas) the ſhip Elizabeth.

The 26 day departed thence the Thomas Allen and Mary Suſan, and in the Thomas Allen went William Turnbul, Matthew Tailboys, Thomas Hudſon, and others. The goods returned of the Perſia voyage were laden into the ſhip, William and Iohn, whereof was Maſter, William Bigat, and in her with the ſame goods came Peter Garrard and Tobias Parris.

The 11 of Auguſt, the ſame ſhip being laden and diſpatched departed from the rode of S. Nicholas, and with her in company another of the companies fraighted ſhips, called the Tomaſin, whereof was M. Chriſtopher Hall. In their returne homewards they had ſome foule weather, and were ſeparated at the ſea, the William and Iohn put into Newcaſtle the 24 of September: from whence the ſayd Peter Garrard and Tobias Parris came to London by land, and brought newes of the arriuall of the ſhip.

The 25 of September both the ſayd ſhips arriued at the port of London in ſafety, and ankered before Limehouſe and Wapping, where they were diſcharged, 1581.

Certaine directions giuen by M. Richard Hackluit of the Middle Temple, to M. Morgan Hubblethorne, Dier, ſent into Perſia, 1579.

1 For that England hath the beſt wool & cloth of the world, and for that the clothes of the realme haue no good vent, if good dying be not added: therfore it is much to be wiſhed, that the dying of forren countreyes were ſeene, to the end that the arte of dying may be brought into the Realme in greateſt excellency: for thereof will follow honour to the Realme, and great and ample vent of our clothes: and of the vent of clothes, will follow the ſetting of our poore on worke, in all degrees of labour in clothing and dying: for which cauſe moſt principally you are ſent ouer at the charge of the city: and therfore for the ſatiſfying the lords, and of the expectation of the merchants and of your company, it behooues you to haue care to returne home with more knowledge then you caried out.

2 The great dearth of clothes is a great let in the ample vent of clothes, and the price of a cloth, for a fifth, ſixth and ſeuenth part riſeth by the colour and dying: and therfore to deuiſe to die as good colours with the one halfe of the preſent price were to the great commodity of the Realme, by ſauing of great treaſure in time to come. And therefore you muſt haue great care to haue knowledge of the materials of all the countreys that you ſhall paſſe thorow, that may be vſed in dying, be they hearbs, weeds, barks, gummes, earths, or what els ſoeuer.

3 In Perſia you ſhall finde carpets of courſe thrummed wooll, the beſt of the world, and excellently coloured: thoſe cities & townes you muſt repaire to, and you muſt vſe meanes to learne all the order of the dying of thoſe thrummes, which are ſo died as neither raine, wine, nor yet vineger can ſtaine: and if you may attaine to that cunning, you ſhall not need to feare dying of cloth: For if the colour holde in yarne and thrumme, it will holde much better in cloth.

4 For that in Perſia they haue great colouring of ſilks, it behooues you to learne that alſo, for that cloth dying & ſilke dying haue a certaine affinity, and your merchants mind to bring much raw ſilke into the Realme, and therefore it is more requiſit you learne the ſame.

5 In Perſia there are that ſtaine linnen cloth: it is not amiſſe you learne it if you can: it hath bene an olde trade in England, whereof ſome excellent clothes yet remaine: but the arte is now loſt, and not to be found in the Realme.

6 They haue a cunning in Perſia to make in buſkins of Spaniſh leather flowers of many kindes, in moſt liuely colours, and theſe the Courtiers do weare there: to learne which arte were no harme.

7 If any Dier of China, or of the Eaſt parts of the world, be to be found in Perſia, acquaint yourſelfe with him, and learne what you may of him.

8 You ſhall finde Anile there, if you can procure the herbe that it is made of, either by ſeed or by plant, to cary into England, you may do well to endeuour to enrich your countrey with the ſame: but withall learne you the making of the Anile, and if you can get the herbe, you may ſend the ſame dry into England, for poſſibly it groweth there already.

9 Returne home with you all the materials and ſubſtances that they die withall in Ruſſia, and alſo in Perſia, that your company may ſee all.

10 In ſome litle pot in your lodging, I wiſh you to make daily trials in your arte, as you ſhall from time to time learne ought among them.

11 Set downe in writing whatſoeuer you ſhall learne from day to day, leſt you ſhould forget, or leſt God ſhould call you to his mercy: and by ech returne I wiſh you to ſend in writing whatſoeuer you haue learned, or at the leaſt keepe the ſame ſafe in your coffer, that come death or life your countrey may enioy the thing that you goe for, and not loſe the charge, and trauell beſtowed in this caſe.

12 Learne you there to fixe and make ſure the colour to be giuen by logge wood: ſo ſhall we not need to buy woad ſo deare, to the enriching of our enemies.

13 Enquire of the price of leckar, and all other things belonging to dying.

14 In any wiſe ſet downe in writing a true note from whence euery of them doe come, and where, and in what countrey ech of them doth grow, I meane where the naturall place of ech of them is, as how neere to ſuch a city, or to ſuch a ſea, or to ſuch a portable riuer in Ruſſia, Perſia, or elſewhere.

15 If before you returne you could procure a ſingular good workeman in the arte of Turkiſh carpet making, you ſhould bring the arte into this Realme, and alſo thereby increaſe worke to your company.

Commiſsion giuen by ſir Rowland Hayward knight, and George Barne, Aldermen and gouernours of the company of Engliſh Merchants, for diſcouery of new trades, vnto Arthur Pet, and Charles Iackman, for a voyage by them to be made, for diſcouery of Cathay, 1580. in forme following.

IN the Name of God Almightie, and euerlaſting, Amen. This writing for commiſsion Tripartite, made the twentieth day of May Anno Dom. 1580. and in the 22. yeere of the reigne of our Soueraigne Lady Elizabeth by the grace of God, Queene of England, France and Ireland, defender of the faith, &c. Betweene ſir Rowland Hayward knight, and George Barne, Aldermen of the Citie of London, and gouernours of the company of Engliſh Merchants, for diſcouery of new trades, for the behoofe, and in the name of the ſaid company, on the firſt partie, and Arthur Pet of Ratcliffe, in the Countie Middleſex, Captaine, Maſter, and chiefe ruler of the good barke, called the George of London, of the burthen of 40. tunnes, or thereabouts, on the ſecond partie, and Charles Iackman of Popler, in the ſaid Countie of Middleſex, Captaine, Maſter and ruler of the good barke, called the William of London, of the burthen of 20. tunnes, or thereabouts, (which barkes are now riding at anker in the riuer of Thames againſt Limehouſe) on the third partie: witneſſeth, that the ſaid Gouernours, and company haue hired the ſaide Arthur Pet, to ſerue in the ſaid barke, called the George, with nine men and a boy: And likewiſe the ſaid Charles Iackman, to ſerue in the ſaid barke, called the William, with fiue men and a boy, for a voyage by them to be made by Gods grace, for ſearch and diſcoueries of a paſſage by ſea from hence by Boroughs ſtreights, and the Iſland Vaigats, Eaſtwards, to the countreis or dominions of the mightie Prince, the Emperour of Cathay, and in the ſame vnto the Cities of Cambalu and Quinſay, or to either of them.

Burroughs ſtreits.

The which paſſage (vpon authoritie of writers, and great reaſon) is conceiued to bee from the Vaigats Eaſtwards, according to the deſcription in plat of ſpirall lines, made by maſter William Burrough, whereof either of the ſaide Arthur Pet, and Charles Iackman, haue one deliuered vnto them, and alſo one other ſailing carde, and a blanke plat for either of them. But if it ſhould not be in all points, according to that deſcription, yet we hope that the continent or firme land of Aſia doth not ſtretch it ſelfe ſo farre Northwards, but that there may be found a ſea paſſeable by it, betweene the latitude of 70. and 80. degrees. And therefore we haue appointed you with theſe two barkes to make triall of the ſame: wiſhing you both to ioyne in friendſhip together, as moſt deere friends and brothers, to all purpoſes and effects, to the furtherance and orderly performing of the ſame voyage. And likewiſe order your companies, that they of the one barke may haue ſuch loue and care, to helpe and ſuccour them of the other, as moſt deere friends and brothers would doe: ſo as it may appeare, that though they be two barkes, and two companies, (which is ſo appointed for your greater comfort and aſſurance) yet that you are wholy of one minde, and bend your ſelues to the vttermoſt of your powers, to performe the thing that you are both employed for.

Doe you obſerue good order in your dayly ſeruice, and pray vnto God, ſo ſhall you proſper the better.

We would haue you to meete often together, to talke, conferre, conſult, and agree how, and by what meanes you may beſt performe this purpoſed voyage, according to our intents. And at ſuch meeting we thinke it requiſite, that you call vnto you your mates, and alſo Nicholas Chanceler, (whom wee doe appoint as merchant, to keepe accompt of the merchandize you ſhall buy or ſell, barter or change) to the ende that whatſoeuer God ſhould diſpoſe of either of you, yet they may haue ſome inſtructions and knowledge howe to deale in your place, or places. And of all your aſſemblies and conſultations together, and the ſubſtance of matter you ſhal at euery time agree vpon, we would haue you to note them in the paper bookes that wee giue you for that purpoſe, vnto each barke one. We do appoint Arthur Pet in the George, as Admiral, to weare the flagge in the maine top, and Charles Iackman in the William, as Viceadmirall. For good orders to be taken for your good and orderly keeping of company together, which we wiſh may be ſuch, as you ſhould neuer loſe ſight the one of the other, except by both your conſents, to diſcouer about an Iſland, or in ſome riuer, when and where you may certainly appoint to meete together againe, wee referre the ſame to your diſcretions.

And now for your good direction in this voyage, we would haue you with the next good winde and weather, that God ſhall ſend thereunto meete and conuenient, after the 22. day of this preſent moneth of May, ſaile from this riuer of Thames, to the coaſt of Finmarke, to the North Cape there, or to the Wardhouſe, and from thence direct your courſe to haue ſight of Willoughbies land, and from it paſſe alongſt to the Noua Zemla, keeping the ſame landes alwayes in your ſight on your larboordſides (if conueniently you may) to the ende you may diſcouer, whether the ſame Willoughbies land be continent and firme land with Noua Zembla, or not: notwithſtanding we would not haue you to entangle your ſelues in any Bay, or otherwiſe, ſo that it might hinder your ſpeedy proceeding to the Iſland Vaigats.

The land of Samoeda.

And when you come to Vaigats, we would haue you to get ſight of the maine land of Samoeda, which is ouer againſt the South part of the ſame Iſland, and from thence with Gods permiſſion, to paſſe Eaſtwards alongſt the ſame coaſt, keeping it alwayes in your ſight (if conueniently you may) vntill you come to the mouth of the riuer Ob, and when you come vnto it, paſſe ouer the ſaid riuers mouth vnto the border of land, on the Eaſtſide of the ſame (without any ſtay to bee made for ſearching inwardly in the ſame riuer) and being in ſight of the ſame Eaſterly land, doe you in Gods name proceed alongſt by it, from thence Eaſtwards, keeping the ſame alwayes on your ſtarboordſide in ſight, if you may, and follow the tract of it, whether it incline Southerly or Northerly (as at times it may do both) vntill you come to the Countrey of Cathay, or the dominion of that mightie Emperour.

The Queenes letters.

And if God proſper your voyage with ſuch good ſucceſſe, that you may attaine to the ſame, doe you ſeeke by all meanes you can to arriue to the Cities Cambalu, and Quinſay, or to the one of them. But if it happen that you cannot conueniently come to either of thoſe places, or ſhalbe driuen to remaine & winter in ſome other port or place of his dominion, do you ſeeke by all meanes poſſible to winne fauour and liking of the people, by gifts and friendly demeanes towards them, and not to offer violence, or do wrong to any people or nation whatſoeuer, but therein to be innocent as doues, yet wiſie as ſerpents, to auoid miſchiefe, and defend you from hurt. And when you ſhall haue gotten friendſhip through your diſcreete ordering of your ſelues, towards the people, doe you learne of them what you can of their Prince, and ſhewe them one of the Queenes Maieſties letters, which ſhe ſendeth with you (by either of you one, made of one ſubſtance and effect, for ech of you particularly) written in Latine, whereunto her Maieſtie hath ſubſcribed, and cauſed her ſignet ſeale to be ſet, the effect of the ſame letters you haue alſo written in Engliſh, for your owne vnderſtanding thereof.

The ſame her Maieſties letters you ſhall procure to deliuer vnto the ſame mightie Prince, or Gouernour, with ſome preſent to be giuen, ſuch as you ſhall thinke meete and conuenient, vſing your ſelues in all points according to the effect of the ſame letters, and procure againe from the ſame Prince, his letters accordingly.

And if God ſo proſper your voyage, that you may this Summer paſſe the Streights, and compaſſe about the Northermoſt land of Aſia, vnto the countrey of Cathay, or dominion of that mightie Prince, and wintering in it, may obtaine from him his letters of priuiledge againſt the next yeeres ſpring, you may then after your firſt ſetting foorth, ſearch and diſcouer ſomewhat further then you had diſcouered before your wintering, ſo farre as you ſhall thinke conuenient, with regard had, and alwayes prouided, that you may returne home hither, to giue vs aduiſe of your proceedings the ſame Summer, or before the ſharpenes or extremitie of winter ouertake you.

And if it happen you cannot this ſummer attaine to the border of Cathay, and yet find the land beyond the Ob, to ſtretch it ſelfe Eaſterly, with the ſea adioyning vnto it nauigable, doe you then proceed on your diſcouery (as before ſaid) alongſt the ſame continent, ſo farre as you can this ſummer, hauing care in the trauel to finde out ſome conuenient harborow and place, where you may winter: and when you thinke it conuenient, put your ſelfe to wintering, where if you happen to finde people, you ſhall deale with them, as we haue before aduiſed you to do with the people of Cathay, &c. And if you can learne that they haue a prince or chiefe gouernour, do you procure to deliuer vnto the ſame Prince or gouernour one of the Queenes Maieſties letters, as before ſaid, and ſeeke to obtaine againe his letters accordingly. If you ſo happen to winter & obtaine letters of priuiledge, finding the countrey and people, with the commodities to bee ſuch, that by vſing trade thither with the people, and for the commodities, it may be beneficial vnto vs (as we hope you may) the ſame wil be ſome good liking vnto vs: notwithſtanding we would haue you the next ſummer (by the grace of God) at your firſt ſetting out of your wintering harborough, proceed alongeſt that tract of land to Cathay, if you ſee likelihood to paſſe it (for that is the Countrey that we chiefly deſire to diſcouer) and ſeeing you are fully victualed for two yeres and vpwards, which you may very wel make to ſerue you for two yeres and a halfe, though you finde no other help, you may therefore be the bolder to aduenture in proceeding vpon your diſcouery: which if you do, we doubt not, but you ſhall atchieue the Countrey of Cathay, & deliuer to the prince there, one of her Maieſties letters, bringing from thence the ſame princes letters anſwerable: and ſo in the yeere of our Lord 1582, returne home with good newes, and glad tidings, not onely vnto vs the aduenturers in this voyage, but alſo to our whole Countrey and nation, which God graunt you may do, Amen.

But if it happen that the land of Aſia, from beyond the riuer Ob, extende it ſelfe Northwards to 80. degrees, or neerer the poole, whereby you finde it to leade you into that extremitie, that ſmall or no hope may be looked for, to ſaile that way to Cathay, doe you notwithſtanding followe the tract of the ſame land, as farre as you can diſcouer this Summer, hauing care to finde out by the way a conuenient place for you to Winter in, the which (if you may diſcouer the ſame lande of Aſia this Summer to extend it ſelfe to 80. degrees of latitude, and vpwards or to 85. degrees) we wiſh then that the ſame your wintering place may be in the riuer of Ob, or as neere the ſame riuer as you can, and finding in ſuch wintering place, people, be they Samoeds, Yowgorians, or Molgomzes, &c. doe you gently entreat with them as aforeſaide, and if you can learne that they haue a prince or chiefe gouernour amongſt them, doe you deliuer him one of her Maieſties letters, and procure thereof an anſwere accordingly: do you procure to barter & exchange with the people, of the merchandiſe and commodities that you ſhall cary with you, for ſuch commodities as you ſhall finde them to haue, &c.

The Queenes letters.

If you ſo happen to winter, we would haue you the next Summer to diſcouer into the riuer Ob, ſo farre as conueniently you may: And if you ſhall finde the ſame riuer (which is reported to be wide or broad) to be alſo nauigable and pleaſant for you, to trauell farre into, happely you may come to the citie Siberia, or to ſome other towne or place habited vpon or neere the border of it, and thereby haue liking to winter out the ſecond winter: vſe you therein your diſcretions.

The Citie of Siberia.

But if you finde the ſaid riuer Ob to be ſholde, or not ſuch as you may conueniently trauell in with your barkes, do you then the next ſummer returne backe through Boroughs ſtreights: And from that part of Noua Zembla, adioyning to the ſame ſtreights, doe you come alongſt the tract of that coaſt Weſtwards, keeping it on the ſtarbord ſide, and the ſame alwayes in ſight, if conueniently you may, vntill you come to Willoughbies land, if outwards bound you ſhall not happen to diſcouer and trie whether the ſaid Willoughbies land ioyne continent with the ſame Noua Zembla, or not. But if you ſhall then proue them to be one firme and continent, you may from Noua Zembla direct your courſe vnto the ſaid Willoughbies land, as you ſhall thinke good, and as you may moſt conueniently: and from Willoughbies land you ſhall proceed Weſtwards alongſt the tract of it, (though it incline Northerly) euen ſo farre as you may or can trauell, hauing regard that in conuenient time you may returne home hither to London for wintering.

Willoughbies land.

And for your orderly paſſing in this voyage, and making obſeruations in the ſame, we referre you to the inſtructions giuen by M. William Burrough, whereof one copie is annexed vnto the firſt part of this Indenture vnder our ſeale, for you Arthur Pet, another copie of it is annexed to the ſecond part of this Indenture, vnder our ſeale alſo, for you Charles Iackman, and a third copy thereof is annexed vnto the third part of this Indenture, remaining with vs the ſaide companie, ſealed and ſubſcribed by you the ſaid Arthur Pet, and Charles Iackman.

And to the obſeruing of all things contained in this Commiſſion (ſo neere as God will permit me grace thereunto) I the ſaid Arthur Pet doe couenant by theſe preſents to performe them, and euery part and parcell thereof. And I the ſaid Charles Iackman doe for my part likewiſe couenant by theſe preſents to performe the ſame, and euery part thereof, ſo neere as God will giue me grace thereunto.

And in witnes thereof theſe Indentures were ſealed and deliuered accordingly, the day and yeere firſt aboue written. Thus the Lorde God Almightie ſende you a proſperous voyage, with happie ſucceſſe and ſafe returne, Amen.

Inſtructions and notes very neceſſary and needfull to be obſerued in the purpoſed voyage for diſcouery of Cathay Eaſtwards, by Arthur Pet, and Charles Iackman: giuen by M. William Burrough. 1580.

WHen you come to Orfordneſſe, if the winde doe ſerue you to goe a ſeabord the ſands, doe you ſet off from thence, and note the time diligently of your being againſt the ſaide Neſſe, turning then your glaſſe, whereby you intende to keepe your continuall watch, and apoint ſuch courſe as you ſhal thinke good, according as the wind ſerueth you: and frō that time forwards continually (if your ſhip be loſe, vnder ſaile, a hull or trie) do you at the end of euery 4. glaſſes at the leaſt (except calme) ſound with your dipſin lead, and note diligently what depth you finde, and alſo the ground. But if it happen by ſwiftnes of the ſhippes way, or otherwiſe, that you cannot get ground, yet note what depth you did proue, and could finde no ground (this note is to be obſerued all your voyage, as well outwards as homewards.) But when you come vpon any coaſt, or doe finde any ſholde banke in the ſea, you are then to vſe your leade oftener, as you ſhal thinke it requiſite, ſite, noting diligently the order of your depth, and the deeping and ſholding. And ſo likewiſe do you note the depthes into harboroughs, riuers, &c.

How to note downe in his Iournall of the voyage, his dead reckoning, and other obſeruations.

And in keeping your dead reckoning, it is very neceſſary that you doe note at the ende of euery foure glaſſes, what way the ſhippe hath made (by your beſt proofes to be vſed) and howe her way hath bene through the water, conſidering withall for the ſagge of the ſea, to leewards, accordingly as you ſhall finde it growen: and alſo to note the depth, and what things worth the noting happened in that time, with alſo the winde vpon what point you finde it then, and of what force or ſtrength it is, and what ſailes you beare.

But if you ſhould omit to note thoſe things at the end of euery foure glaſſes, I would not haue you to let it ſlip any longer time, then to note it diligently at the end of euery watch, or eight glaſſes at the fartheſt.

Doe you diligently obſerue the latitude as often, and in as many places as you may poſſible, and alſo the variation of the Compaſſe (eſpecially when you may bee at ſhoare vpon any land) noting the ſame obſeruations truely, and the place and places where, and the time and times when you do the ſame.

For noting the ſhape and view of the land at firſt diſcouery, &c.

When you come to haue ſight of any coaſt or land whatſoeuer, doe you preſently ſet the ſame with your ſailing Compaſſe, howe it beares off you, noting your iudgement how farre you thinke it from you, drawing alſo the forme of it in your booke, howe it appeares vnto you, noting diligently how the higheſt or notableſt part thereof beareth off you, and the extreames alſo in ſight of the ſame land at both ends, diſtinguiſhing them by letters, A. B. C. &c. Afterwards when you haue ſailed 1. 2. 3. or 4. glaſſes (at the moſt) noting diligently what way your barke hath made, and vpon what point of the Compaſſe, do you againe ſet that firſt land ſeene, or the parts thereof, that you firſt obſerued, if you can well perceiue or diſcerne them, and likewiſe ſuch other notable points or ſignes, vpon the land that you may then ſee, and could not perceiue at the firſt time, diſtinguiſhing it alſo by letters from the other, and drawing in your booke the ſhape of the ſame land, as it appeareth vnto you, and ſo the third time, &c.

And alſo in paſſing alongſt by any and euery coaſt, doe you drawe the maner of biting in of euery Bay, and entrance of euery harborow or riuers mouth, with the lying out of euery point, or headland, (vnto the which you may giue apt names at your pleaſure) and make ſome marke in drawing the forme and border of the ſame, where the high cliffs are, and where lowe lande is, whether ſande, hils, or woods, or whatſoeuer, not omitting to note any thing that may be ſenſible and apparant to you, which may ſerue to any good purpoſe. If you carefully with great heede and diligence, note the obſeruations in your booke, as aforeſaid, and afterwards make demonſtration thereof in your plat, you ſhall thereby perceiue howe farre the land you firſt ſawe, or the parts thereof obſerued, was then from you, and conſequently of all the reſt: and alſo how farre the one part was from the other, and vpon what courſe or point of the Compaſſe the one lieth from the other.

For obſeruing of tides and currants.

And when you come vpon any coaſt where you find floods and ebs, doe you diligently note the time of the higheſt and loweſt water in euery place, and the ſlake or ſtill water of full ſea, and lowe water, and alſo which way the flood doeth runne, how the tides doe ſet, how much water it hieth, and what force the tide hath to driue a ſhip in one houre, or in the whole tide, as neere as you can iudge it, and what difference in time you finde betwene the running of the flood, and the ebbe. And if you finde vpon any coaſt the currant to runne alwayes one way, doe you alſo note the ſame duely, how it ſetteth in euery place, and obſerue what force it hath to driue a ſhip in one houre, &c.

To take the platformes of places within compaſſe of view vpon land.

Item, as often and when as you may conueniently come vpon any land, to make obſeruation for the latitude and variation, &c. doe you alſo (if you may) with your inſtrument, for trying of diſtances, obſerue the platforme of the place, and of as many things (worth the noting) as you may then conueniently ſee from time to time. Theſe orders if you diligently obſerue, you may thereby perfectly ſet downe in the plats, that I haue giuen you your whole trauell, and deſcription of your diſcouery, which is a thing that will be chiefly expected at your hands. But withall you may not forget to note as much as you can learne, vnderſtand or perceiue of the maner of the ſoile, or fruitfulneſſe of euery place and countrey you ſhall come in, and of the maner, ſhape, attire and diſpoſition of the people, and of the commodities they haue, and what they moſt couet and deſire of the commodities you cary with you. It behoueth you to giue trifling things vnto ſuch people as you ſhall happen to ſee, and to offer them all courteſie and friendſhip you may or can, to winne their loue and fauour towardes you, not doing or offering them any wrong or hurt. And though you ſhould be offered wrong at their handes, yet not to reuenge the ſame lightly, but by all meanes poſſible ſeeke to winne them, yet alwayes dealing wiſely and with ſuch circumſpection that you keepe your ſelues out of their dangers.

Thus I beſeech God Almightie to bleſſe you, and proſper your voyage with good and happie ſucceſſe, and ſend you ſafely to returne home againe, to the great ioy and reioycing of the aduenturers with you, and all your friends, and our whole countrey, Amen.

Certaine briefe aduiſes giuen by Maſter Dee, to Arthur Pet, and Charles Iackman, to bee obſerued in their Northeaſterne diſcouerie, Anno 1580.

If we recken from Wardhouſe to Colgoieue Iſland 400. miles for almoſt 20. degrees difference onely of longitude very neere Eaſt and Weſt, and about the latitude of 70. degrees and two thirde parts: From Colgoieue to Vaigats 200. miles for 10. degrees difference onely in longitude, at 70. degrees of latitude alſo: From Vaigats to the promontorie Tabin 60. degrees difference of longitude (the whole courſe, or ſhorteſt diſtance being Eaſt and Weſt) in the latitude likewiſe of 70. degrees, maketh 1200. miles: then is ſumma totalis from Wardhouſe to Tabin 600. leagues, or 1800. Engliſh miles. Therefore allowing in a diſcouery voiage for one day with another but 50. Engliſh miles, it is euident that from Wardhouſe to Tabin, the courſe may bee ſailed eaſily in ſixe and thirtie dayes: but by Gods helpe it may be finiſhed in much ſhorter time, both by helpe of winde proſperous, and light continuall for the time requiſit thereunto.

When you are paſt Tabin, or come to the longitude of 142. degrees, as your chart ſheweth, or two, three, foure, or fiue degrees further Eaſterly, it is probable you ſhall finde the land on your right hand runne much Southerly and Eaſtward, in which courſe you are like either to fall into the mouth of the famous riuer Oechardes, or ſome other, which yet I coniecture to paſſe by the renowmed Citie of Cambalu, and the mouth to be in latitude about 50. or 52. degrees, and within 300. or 400. miles of Cambalu it ſelfe, being in the latitude of 45. degrees Southerly of the ſaide riuers mouth, or els that you ſhall trend about the very Northerne and moſt Eaſterly point of all Aſia, paſſing by the prouince Ania, and then to the latitude of 46. degrees, keeping ſtill the land in view on your right hand (as neere as you may with ſafetie) you may enter into Quinſay hauen, being the chiefe citie in the Northern China, as I terme it for diſtinctions ſake, from the other better knowen.

M. Dee gaue them a Chart of his owne making, which here he referrs them vnto.

And in or about either or both of theſe two warme places, you may to great good purpoſe bee occupied the whole winter, after your arriuall in thoſe quarters, as ſometime by ſea, ſometime in notable freſh riuers, ſometime in diſcreet view and noting downe the ſituation of the Cities within land, &c. and euer aſſaying to come by ſome charts or maps of the countrey, made and printed in Cathay or China, and by ſome of their bookes likewiſe for language, &c. You may alſo haue opportunitie to ſaile ouer to Iapan Iſland, where you ſhall finde Chriſtian men, Ieſuits of many countreys of Chriſtendome ſome, and perhaps ſome Engliſhmen, at whoſe handes you may haue great inſtruction and aduiſe for you affaires in hand.

Notes in writing, beſides more priuie by mouth, that were giuen by M. Richard Hakluyt of Eiton in the Countie of Hereford, Eſquire, Anno 1580: to M. Arthur Pet, and to M. Charles Iackman, ſent by the Merchants of the Moſcouie companie for the diſcouery of the Northeaſt ſtraight, not altogether vnfit for ſome other enterpriſes of diſcouery, hereafter to be taken in hand.

What reſpect of Iſlands is to be had, and why.

Whereas the Portingals haue in their courſe to their Indies in the Southeaſt, certaine ports and fortifications to thruſt into by the way, to diuers great purpoſes: ſo you are to ſee what Iſlands, and what ports you had neede to haue by the way in your courſe to the Northeaſt. For which cauſe I wiſh you to enter into conſideration of the matter, and to note all the Iſlands, and to ſet them downe in plat, to two ends: that is to ſay, That we may deuiſe to take the benefit by them, And alſo foreſee how by them the Sauages or ciuill Princes may in any ſort annoy vs in our purpoſed trade that way.

And for that the people to the which we purpoſe in this voyage to go, be no Chriſtians, it were good that the maſſe of our commodities were alwayes in our owne diſpoſition, and not at the will of others. Therefore it were good that we did ſeeke out ſome ſmall Iſland in the Scithian ſea, where we might plant, fortifie, and ſtaple ſafely, from whence (as time ſhould ſerue) wee might feed thoſe heathen nations with our commodities without cloying them, or without venturing our whole maſſe in the bowels of their countrey.

And to which Iſland (if neede were, and if wee ſhould thinke ſo good) wee might allure the Northeaſt nauie, the nauie of Cambalu to reſort with their commodities to vs there planted, and ſtapling there.

And if ſuch an Iſland might be found ſo ſtanding as might ſhorten our courſe, and ſo ſtanding, as that the nauie of Cambalu, or other thoſe parties might conueniently ſaile vnto without their diſlike in reſpect of diſtance, then would it fal out well. For ſo, beſides leſſe danger and more ſafetie, our ſhips might there vnlade and lade againe, and returne the ſelfe ſame ſummer to the ports of England or of Norway.

And if ſuch an Iſland may be for the ſtapling of our commodities, to the which they of Cambalu would not ſaile, yet we might, hauing ſhips there, imploy them in paſſing betweene Cambalu and that ſtapling place.

Reſpect of hauens and harborowes.

AND if no ſuch Iſlands may bee found in the Scithian ſea toward the firme of Aſia, then are you to ſearch out the ports that be about Noua Zembla, all along the tract of that land, to the end you may winter there the firſt yeere, if you be let by contrary winds, and to the end that if we may in ſhort time come vnto Cambalu, and vnlade and ſet ſaile againe for returne without venturing there at Cambalu, that you may on your way come as farre in returne as a port about Noua Zembla: that the ſummer following, you may the ſooner be in England for the more ſpeedy vent of your Eaſt commodities, and for the ſpeedier diſcharge of your Mariners: if you cannot go forward and backe in one ſelfe ſame Summer.

And touching the tract of the land of Noua Zembla, toward the Eaſt out of the circle Arcticke in the more temperate Zone, you are to haue regard: for if you finde the ſoyle planted with people, it is like that in time an ample vent of our warme wollen clothes may be found. And if there be no people at all there to be found, then you ſhall ſpecially note what plentie of whales, and of other fiſh is to be found there, to the ende we may turne our newe found land fiſhing or Iſland fiſhing, or our whalefiſhing that way, for the ayde and comfort of our newe trades to the Northeaſt to the coaſts of Aſia.

Reſpect of fiſh and certaine other things.

AND if the aire may be found vpon that tract temperate, and the ſoile yeelding wood, water, land and graſſe, and the ſeas fiſh, then we may plant on that maine the offals of our people, as the Portingals do in Braſill, and ſo they may in our fiſhing in our paſſage, and diuers wayes yeelde commoditie to England by harbouring and victualling vs.

And it may be, that the inland there may yeeld maſts, pitch, tarre, hempe, and all things for the Nauie, as plentifully as Eaſtland doth.

The Iſlands to be noted with their commodities and wants.

TO note the Iſlands, whether they be hie land or low land, mountaine or flat, grauelly, clay, chalkie, or of what ſoile, woody or not woody, with ſprings and riuers or not, and what wilde beaſtes they haue in the ſame.

And whether there ſeeme to be in the ſame apt matter to build withall, as ſtone free or rough, and ſtone to make lime withall, and wood or coale to burne the ſame withall.

To note the goodneſſe or the badneſſe of the hauens and harborowes in the Iſlands.

If a ſtraight be found, what is to be done, and what great importance it may be of.

AND if there be a ſtraight in the paſſage into the Scithian ſeas, the ſame is ſpecially and with great regard to be noted, eſpecially if the ſame ſtraight be narrow and to be kept. I ſay it is to be noted as a thing that doeth much import: for what prince ſoeuer ſhall be Lorde of the ſame, and ſhall poſſeſſe the ſame, as the king of Denmarke doeth poſſeſſe the ſtraight of Denmarke, he onely ſhall haue the trade out of theſe regions into the Northeaſt parts of the world for himſelfe, and for his priuate profit, or for his ſubiects onely, or to enioy wonderfull benefit of the toll of the ſame, like as the king of Denmarke doth enioy of his ſtraightes, by ſuffring the merchants of other Princes to paſſe that way. If any ſuch ſtraight be found, the eleuation, the high or lowe land, the hauens neere, the length of the ſtraightes, and all other ſuch circumſtances are to be ſet downe for many purpoſes: and al the Mariners in the voyage are to be ſworne to keepe cloſe all ſuch things, that other Princes preuent vs not of the ſame, after our returne vpon the diſcloſing of the Mariners, if any ſuch thing ſhould hap.

Which way the Sauage may bee madeable to purchaſe our cloth and other their wants.

If you find any Iland or maine land populous, and that the ſame people hath need of cloth, then are you to deuiſe what commodities they haue to purchaſe the ſame withall.

If they be poore, then are you to conſider of the ſoile, and how by any poſſibilitie the ſame may be made to inrich them, that hereafter they may haue ſomething to purchaſe the cloth withall.

If you enter into any maine by portable riuer, and ſhall find any great woods, you are to note what kind of timber they be of, that we may know whether they are for pitch, tarre, maſtes, deale-boord, clapboord, or for building of ſhips or houſes, for ſo, if the people haue no vſe of them, they may be brought perhaps to vſe.

Not to venture the loſſe of any one man.

You muſt haue great care to preſerue your people, ſince your number is ſo ſmall, and not to venture any one man in any wiſe.

To bring home beſides merchandize certaine trifles.

Bring home with you (if you may) from Cambalu or other ciuil place, one or other yong man, although you leaue one for him.

Alſo the fruites of the Countreys if they will not of themſelues dure, drie them and ſo preſerue them.

And bring with you the kernels of peares and apples, and the ſtones of ſuch ſtonefruits as you ſhall find there.

Alſo the ſeeds of all ſtrange herbs & flowers, for ſuch ſeeds of fruits and herbs comming from another part of the world, and ſo far off, will delight the fanſie of many for the ſtrangeneſſe, and for that the ſame may grow, and continue the delight long time.

If you arriue at Cambalu or Quinſay, to bring thence the mappe of that countrey, for ſo ſhall you haue the perfect deſcription, which is to great purpoſe.

To bring thence ſome old printed bookes, to ſee whether they haue had print there before it was deuiſed in Europe as ſome write.

To note their force by ſea and by land.

If you arriue in Cambalu or Quinſay, to take a ſpeciall view of their Nauie, and to note the force, greatneſſe, maner of building of them, the ſailes, the tackles, the ankers, the furniture of them, with ordinance, armour, and munition.

Alſo, to note the force of the wals and bulwarks of their cities, their ordinance, and whether they haue any caliuers, and what powder and ſhot.

To note what armour they haue.

What ſwords.

What pikes, halberds and bils.

What horſes of force, and what light horſes they haue.

And ſo throughout to note the force of the Countrey both by ſea and by land.

Things to be marked to make coniectures by.

To take ſpeciall note of their buildings, and of the ornaments of their houſes within.

Take a ſpeciall note of their apparell and furniture, and of the ſubſtance that the ſame is made of, of which a Merchant may make a geſſe as well of their commoditie, as alſo of their wants.

To note their Shoppes and Warehouſes, and with what commodities they abound, the price alſo.

To ſee their Shambles, and to view all ſuch things as are brought into the Markets, for ſo you ſhall ſoone ſee the commodities, and the maner of the people of the inland, and ſo giue a geſſe of many things.

To note their fields of graine, and their trees of fruite, and how they abound or not abound in one and other, and what plenty or ſcarſitie of fiſh they haue.

Things to be caried with you, whereof more or leſſe is to bee caried for a ſhew of our commodities to be made.

Karſies of all orient colours, ſpecially of ſtamell, broadcloth of orient colours alſo.

Ortelius booke of Mappes.

If you take Ortelius booke of Mappes with you to marke all theſe Regions, it were not amiſſe: and if need were, to preſent the ſame to the great Can, for it would be to a Prince of marueilous account.

The booke of the attire of all Nations.

Such a booke caried with you and beſtowed in gift would be much eſteemed, as I perſwade my ſelfe.

Bookes.

If any man will lend you the new Herball and ſuch Bookes as make ſhew of herbes, plants, trees, fiſhes, foules and beaſts of theſe regions, it may much delight the great Can, and the nobilitie, and alſo their merchants to haue the view of them: for all things in theſe partes ſo much differing from the things of thoſe regions, ſince they may not be here to ſee them, by meane of the diſtance, yet to ſee thoſe things in a ſhadow, by this meane will delight them.

The booke of Rates.

Take with you the booke of Rates, to the ende you may pricke all thoſe commodities there ſpecified, that you ſhall chance to find in Cambalu, in Quinſey, or in any part of the Eaſt, where you ſhall chance to be.

Parchment.

Rowles of Parchment, for that we may vent much without hurt to the Realme, and it lieth in ſmall roume.

Glew.

To carie Glew, for that we haue plentie and want vent.

Red Oker for Painters.

To ſeeke vent becauſe we haue great mines of it, and haue no vent.

Sope of both kindes.

To try what vent it may haue, for that we make of both kinds, and may perhaps make more.

Saffron.

To try what vent you may haue of Saffron, becauſe this realme yeelds the beſt of the world, and for the tillage and other labours may ſet the poore greatly in worke to their reliefe.

Aquauitæ.

By new deuiſes wonderful quantities may be made here, and therefore to ſeeke the vent.

Blacke Conies skins.

To try the vent at Cambalu, for that it lieth towards the North, and for that we abound with the commoditie, and may ſpare it.

Threed of all colours.

The vent thereof may ſet our people in worke.

Copper Spurres and Hawkes bels.

To ſee the vent for it may ſet our people in worke.

A note and Caueat for the Merchant.

That before you offer your commodities to ſale, you indeuour to learne what commodities the countrey there hath. For if you bring thither veluet, taffeta, ſpice, or any ſuch commoditie that you your ſelfe deſire to lade your ſelfe home with, you muſt not ſell yours deare, leaſt hereafter you purchaſe theirs not ſo cheape as you would.

Seeds for ſale.

Carie with you for that purpoſe all ſorts of garden ſeeds, as well of ſweete ſtrawing herbs and of flowers, as alſo of pot herbes and all ſorts for roots, &c.

Lead of the firſt melting.

Lead of the ſecond melting of the ſlags.

To make triall of the vent of Lead of all kinds.

Engliſh iron, and wier of iron and copper.

To try the ſale of the ſame.

Brimſtone.

To try the vent of the ſame, becauſe we abound with it made in the Realme.

Antimonie a Minerall.

To ſee whether they haue any ample vſe there for it, for that we may lade whole nauies of it and haue no vſe of it vnleſſe it be for ſome ſmall portion in founding of bels, or a litle that the Alcumiſts vſe: of this you may haue two ſortes at the Apothecaries.

Tinder boxes with Steele, Flint & Matches and Tinder, the Matches to be made of Iuniper to auoid the offence of Brimſtone.

To trie and make the better ſale of Brimſtone by ſhewing the vſe.

Candles of Waxe to light.

A painted Bellowes.

For that perhaps they haue not the vſe of them.

A pot of caſt iron.

To try the ſale, for that it is a naturall commoditie of this Realme.

All maner of edge tooles.

To be ſold there or to the leſſe ciuil people by the way where you ſhall touch.

What I would haue you there to remember.

To note ſpecially what excellent dying they vſe in theſe regions, and therefore to note their garments and ornaments of houſes: and to ſee their Die houſes and the Materials & Simples that they vſe about the ſame, and to bring muſters and ſhewes of the colours and of the materials, for that it may ſerue this clothing realme to great purpoſe.

To take with you for your owne vſe.

All maner of engines to take fiſh and foule.

To take with you thoſe things that be in perfection of goodneſſe.

For as the goodneſſe now at the firſt may make your commodities in credite in time to come: ſo falſe and Sophiſticate commodities ſhall drawe you and all your commodities into contempt and ill opinion.

A letter of Gerardus Mercator, written to M. Richard Hakluyt of Oxford, touching the intended diſcouerie of the Northeaſt paſſage, An. 1580.

Literæ tuæ (vir humaniſſime) 19. Iunij demùm mihi redditę fuerunt: vehementer dolui viſis illis tantam, non modo temporis, ſed multò magis tempeſtiuæ inſtructionis iacturam factam eſſe. Optaſſem Arthurum Pet de quibuſdam non leuibus ante ſuum diſceſſum præmonitum fuiſſe. Expeditiſſima ſanè per Orientem in Cathaium eſt nauigatio: & ſæpè miratus ſum, eam fœliciter inchoatam, deſertam fuiſſe, velis in Occidẽtem tranſlatis, poſtquam plus quàm dimidium itineris veſtri iam notum haberent. Nam poſt Inſulam Vaigats, & Noua Zembla continuò ingens ſequitur Sinus, quem ab ortu Tabin immane promontorium complectitur. In hunc medium maxima illabuntur flumina, quæ vniuerſam Regionem Sericam perluentia, vtq; exiſtimo, in intima continentis vſq; magnis nauigijs peruia, facillimam rationẽ exhibent quaſlibet merces ex Cataio, Mangi, Mien, cæteriſque circumfuſis regnis contrahendi, atque in Angliam deportandi. Cæterùm cùm non temerè eam nauigationem intermiſſam crederem, opinabar ab Imperatore Ruſſorum & Moſcouiæ obſtaculum aliquod interiectum fuiſſe. Quod ſi verò cum illius gratia vlterior illac nauigatio detur, ſuaderem profectò nõ primùm Tabin promontorium quærere, atque explorare, ſed Sinum hunc atque flumina, in ijſq; portum aliquem commodiſſimum, ſtationémq; Anglicis Mercatoribus deligere, ex quo deinceps maiore opportunitate, minoribúſque periculis Tabin promontorium, & totius Cathai circumnauigatio indagari poſſet. Eſſe autem ingens in Septentrionem excurrens promontorium Tabin, non ex Plinio tantùm, verùm & alijs ſcriptoribus, & tabulis aliquot (licèt rudius depictis) certum habeo. Polum etiam Magnetis haud longè vltra Tabin ſitum eſſe, certis Magnetis obſeruationibus didici: circa quem & Tabin plurimos eſſe ſcopulos, difficilémq; & periculoſam nauigationem exiſtimo: difficiliorem tamen ad Cathaium acceſſum fore opinor, ea qua nunc via in Occidentem tentatur. Propinquior enim fiet hæc nauigatio polo Magnetis, quàm altera, ad quem propiùs accedere non puto tutum eſſe. Quia verò Magnes alium quàm Mundi polum habet, quo ex omni parte reſpicit; quò propiùs ad eum acceditur, eò directorium illud Nauticũ magnetis virtute imbutum, magis à Septentrione deuiat, nunc in Occidentem, nunc in Orientem, prout quis vel orientalior, vel occidentalior eſt illo Meridiano, qui per vtrumq; polum Magnetis, & Mundi ducitur. Mirabilis eſt hæc varietas, & quæ nauigantẽ plurimùm fallere poteſt, niſi hanc Magnetis inconſtantiam nôrit, & ad poli eleuationem per inſtrumenta ſubindę reſpiciat. In hac re ſi non ſit inſtructus D. Arthurus, aut ea ſit dexteritate, vt deprehenſo errore eum inuenire & caſtigare poſſit, timeo ne deuias faciat ambages, tempus illum fallat, & ſemiperacto negotio, à gelu præoccupetur: Aiunt enim Sinum illum fortiùs quotannis congelari. Quod ſi contingat: hoc quod conſultius mihi viſum fuit, proximum illi erit refugium, vt in eo ſinu, ijſq; fluminibus quæ dixi, portum quærat, & per Legatum aliquem, cum magno Cham, nomine Sereniſſimæ Reginæ notitiam, amicitiámque contrahat: quam opinor Maximo orbis Imperatori gratam, imo gratiſſimam fore propter remotiſſima commercia. Opinor ab oſtijs Bautiſi & Oechardi fluminum maximorum, vſque ad Cambalu Regiam ſummam Chami, non vltra 300. milliaria Germanica eſſe, & iter ſumendum per Ezinam vrbem regni Tangut, quę 100. tantùm milliarijs Germanicis ab oſtijs diſtare videtur, & paret Magno Cham.

Ingens Sinus poſt Inſulam Vaigats & Nouam Zemblam.

Tabin promontorium ingens.

Quo propius ad polum acceditur, eò directorium Nauticum magis à Septentrione deuiat.

Bautiſus & Oechardus maxima flumina in hunc Sinum illabuntur.

Valde optarem cognoſcere, quàm altè communiter exurgat æſtus maris in eo Moſcouiæ portu, quem veſtri pro ſtatione habent, & in alijs verſus orientem locis vſque ad Tabin. Item, an mare in hoc diſtrictu ſemper in vnam partem, videlicet Orientem, aut Occidentem fluat, an verò pro ratione æſtuum fluat, & refluat, in medio inquam canali, hoc eſt, an ibi ſex horis in occaſum, & iterum ſex in ortum fluat, an verò ſemper in eandem partem: aliæ enim ſpeculationes non parum vtiles hinc dependent. Idem optarem à D. Frobiſcero in occidentem obſeruari. Quod ad Sinum Meroſro, & Canadam, ac Nouam Franciam attinet, ea in meis tabulis deſumpta ſunt ex quadam Tabula marina, quę à quodam ſacerdote ex earum ditionum Naucleri peritiſſimi Galli deſcriptione excerpta fuit, & illuſtriſſimo Principi Georgio ab Auſtria epiſcopo Leodienſi oblata. Non dubito, quin quantùm ad littorum ſitum attinet & poli eleuationem, ad veritatem ea quàm proximè accedant. Habebat enim ea tabula præter ſcalam graduum latitudinis per medium ſui extenſam, aliam præterea particularem Nouæ Franciæ littoribus adiunctam, qua deprauatæ latitudines, occaſione erroris Magnetis ibi commiſſæ, caſtigarentur. Iacobi Cnoyen Buſcoducenſis itinerarium per omnem Aſiam, Affricam, & Septentrionem, olim mihi Amicus Antuerpiæ ab alio mutuò acceptum communicauit, eo vſus ſum, & reddidi: poſt multos annos eundem ab amico repetij, & reminiſci ille non potuit à quo accepiſſet. Gulielmi Tripolitani & Ioannis de plano Carpini ſcripta non vidi, tantùm excerpta ex illis quædam

The ſame in Engliſh.

A great gulfe is beyond Vaigats, whereinto mighty riuers deſcend.

The beſt courſe to be taken in diſcoueries.

Sir, I receiued your letters the 19. of Iune: it grieued me much that vpon the ſight of them the time being ſpent, I could not giue any conuenient inſtructions: I wiſh Arthur Pet had bene informed before his departure of ſome ſpeciall points. The voyage to Cathaio by the Eaſt, is doutleſſe very eaſie and ſhort, and I haue oftentimes marueiled, that being ſo happily begun, it hath bene left of, and the courſe changed into the Weſt, after that more then halfe of your voiage was diſcouered. For beyond the Iſland of Vaigats and Noua Zembla, there foloweth preſently a great Baie, which on the left ſide is incloſed with the mightie promontorie Tabin. Into the mids hereof there fall great riuers, which paſſing through the whole countrey of Serica, and being as I thinke nauigable with great veſſels into yͤ heart of the continent, may be an eaſie meanes whereby to traffique for all maner of merchandize, and tranſport them out of Cathaio, Mangi, Mien, and other kingdoms thereabouts into England. But conſidering with my ſelfe that that nauigation was not intermitted, but vpon great occaſion, I thought that the Emperor of Ruſſia and Moſcouie had hindered the proceeding thereof. If ſo be that with his grace and fauour a further nauigation may be made, I would counſell them certainly not firſt to ſeeke out the promontorie Tabin, but to ſearch this baie and riuers aforeſayd, and in them to picke and chuſe out ſome conuenient port and harborough for the Engliſh merchants, from whence afterward with more opportunitie and leſſe perill, the promontorie Tabin and all the coaſt of Cathaio may bee diſcouered. And that there is ſuch a huge promontorie called Tabin, I am certainly perſwaded not onely out of Plinie, but alſo other writers, and ſome Maps (though ſomewhat rudely drawen:) and that the pole of the Loadſtone is not farre beyond Tabin, I haue learned by the certaine obſeruations of the Loadſtone: about which pole and Tabin I thinke there are very many rockes, and very hard and dangerous ſailing: and yet a more hard and difficile paſſage I thinke it to bee this way which is now attempted by the Weſt, for it is neerer to the pole of the Loadſtone, to the which I thinke it not ſafe to approch. And becauſe the Loadſtone hath another pole then that of the world, to the which from all parts it hath a reſpect, the neerer you come vnto it, the more the needle of the Compaſſe doeth varie from the North, ſometimes to the Weſt, and ſometimes to the Eaſt, according as a man is to the Eaſtward or to the Weſtward of that Meridian, that paſſeth by both the poles of the Magnes and the World.

This is a ſtrange alteration and very apt to deceiue the Sailer, vnleſſe hee know the vnconſtancie and variation of the Compaſſe, and take the eleuation of the pole ſomtimes with his inſtruments. If maſter Arthur be not well prouided in this behalfe, or of ſuch dexteritie, that perceiuing the errour he be not able to correct the ſame, I feare leaſt in wandering vp and downe he loſe his time, and be ouertaken with the ice in the midſt of the enterpriſe. For that gulfe, as they ſay, is frozen euery yere very hard. Which if it be ſo, the beſt counſel I could giue for their beſt ſafetie, were to ſeeke ſome harborough in that baie, and thoſe riuers whereof I haue ſpoken, and by ſome Ambaſſador to make friendſhip and acquaintance with the great Can, in name of the Queenes maieſtie, which I beleeue will be gratefull to the mightieſt Emperour in the world, yea moſt excellent for the length of the traffique, and great diſtance of the places. I thinke from the mouthes of the mighty riuers Bautiſus and Oechardus to Cambalu the chiefeſt ſeat of the prince the Can, there are not paſt 300. Germane miles, and to paſſe by Ezina a citie of the kingdom of Tangut, which ſeemeth to be but 100. Germane miles from the mouthes of the ſayd riuers, and is ſubiect to the great Can.

The mouthes of Bautiſus and Oechardus 300. leagues from Cambalu.

I would gladly know how high the ſea doeth flowe commonly in the port of Moſcouia where your men do harborow, and in other Eaſterly places vnto Tabin. And alſo whether the ſea in this ſtraight do flow alwaies one way to the Eaſt or to the Weſt, or whether it do ebbe and flow according to the maner of the tides in the middle of the chanel, that is to ſay, whether it flow there ſixe houres into the Weſt, and as many backe againe to the Eaſt, for hereupon depend other ſpeculations of importance. I would wiſh M. Frobiſher to obſerue the ſame Weſtwards. Concerning the gulfe of Meroſro and Canada, and new France which are in my mappes, they were taken out of a certaine ſea card drawn by a certaine prieſt out of the deſcription of a Frenchman, a Pilot very ſkilfull in thoſe partes, and preſented to the worthy prince George of Auſtria, biſhop of Liege: for the trending of the coaſt, and the eleuation of the pole, I doubt not but they are very neere the trueth: for the Charte had, beſide a ſcale of degrees of latitude paſſing through the middeſt of it, another particularly annexed to the coaſt of New France, wherewith the errour of the latitudes committed by reaſon of the variation of the compaſſe might be corrected. The hiſtorie of the voyage of Iacobus Cnoyen Buſchoducenſis throughout al Aſia, Affrica, and the North, was lent me in time paſt by a friend of mine at Antwerpe. After I had vſed it, I reſtored it againe: after many yeeres I required it againe of my friend, but hee had forgotten of whom hee had borrowed it. The writings of Gulielmus Tripolitanus, and Ioannes de Plano Carpini I neuer ſaw: onely I found certaine pieces of them in other written hand bookes. I am glad the Epitomie of Abilfada is tranſlated, I would we might haue it ſhortly.

Vpon the obſeruations of the tides depend great ſpeculations.

Thus much Sir I thought good to anſwere your letters: if there bee any thing els that you would require of me, I will moſt willingly communicate it with you, crauing this likewiſe of your curteſie, that whatſoeuer obſeruations of both theſe voyages ſhall come to your hands, you would impart them to me, they ſhall all remaine with mee according to your diſcretion and pleaſure, and whatſoeuer I gather of them, I will faithfully ſignifie vnto you by letters, if happily they may yeeld any helpe or light vnto this moſt excellent enterpriſe of nauigation, and moſt profitable to our chriſtian common wealth. Fare you well moſt learned friend. At Duisburg in Cliueland, 28. of Iulie, the yeere, 1580.

At Arthur his returne I pray you learne of him the things I haue requeſted, and whether any where in his voiage, he found the ſea freſh, or not very ſalt: for I ſuppoſe the Sea betweene Noua Zembla and Tabin to be freſh.

Yours wholly to my power to be commanded,
Gerardus Mercator.

The diſcouerie made by M. Arthur Pet, and M. Charles Iackman, of the Northeaſt parts, beyond the Iſland of Vaigatz, with two Barkes: the one called the George, the other the William, in the yeere 1580.

May.

VPon Munday the 30. of May, we departed from Harwich in the afternoone, the winde being at South, and to the Eaſtward. The ebbe being ſpent we could not double the pole, and therefore were conſtrained to put in againe vntill the next day in the morning, being the laſt of May: which day wee wayed our ankers about 3. a clocke in the morning, the wind being Weſt ſouthweſt. The ſame day we paſſed Orfordneſſe at an Eaſt Sunne, and Stamford at a Weſt Sunne, and Yarmouth at a Weſt northweſt ſunne, and ſo to Winterton, where we did anker al night: it was then calme, and the flood was come.

Iune.

The next day being the firſt of Iune, we ſet ſaile at 3. a clocke in the morning, and ſet our courſe North, the wind at the Southweſt, and at Southſouthweſt.

Kene an Iſland of Norway.

The 10. day about one of the clocke in the afternoone, wee put into Norway to a place where one of the headlands of the ſound is called Boetel: the other headland is called Moile. There is alſo an Iſland called Kene. Heere I did find the pole to be eleuated 62. deg. it doeth flowe there South, and it hieth 7. or 8. foote, not aboue.

The 11. day in the morning the winde came to the South and to the Southeaſt: the ſame day at ſixe in the afternoone we ſet ſaile, and bare along the coaſt: it was very foule weather with raine and fogge.

The North cape doubled.

The 22. day the wind being at Weſt, we did hall the coaſt Eaſt northeaſt, and Eaſt. The ſame day at 6. in the morning we did double the North cape. About 3. in the afternoone wee paſt Skites beare neſſe, and hald along the coaſt Eaſt, and Eaſt ſoutheaſt, and all the ſame night wee halled Southeaſt, and Southeaſt by Eaſt.

Wardhouſe.

The 23. day about 3. in the morning we came to Wardhouſe, the wind at the Northweſt. The cauſe of our comming in was to ſeeke the William, whoſe companie wee loſt the 6. day of this moneth, and to ſend letters into England. About one of the clock in the after noone the William alſo came into Wardhouſe to vs in good ſafetie, and all her company in good health.

The 24. the wind came to the Eaſt Northeaſt. This day the William was hald a ground, becauſe ſhe was ſomewhat leake, and to mend her ſteerage. This night about 12. of the clocke ſhe did hale a flote againe.

The 25. day the wind was at Eaſt northeaſt.

The 26. day the Toby of Harwich departed from Wardhouſe for London, Thomas Greene being maſter, to whom we deliuered our letters.

The 27. day the wind was at South ſoutheaſt, and the 28. alſo.

The 29. day about 6. in the afternoone, the wind came to the Weſt northweſt for the ſpace of one houre, and preſently to the Eaſt againe, and ſo was variable all the ſame night.

The 30. about ſixe in the morning, the winde came to Eaſt ſoutheaſt, and continued ſo all the ſame day.

Iuly. The firſt of Iuly about 5. in the afternoone, the wind was at Northnorthweſt: and about 7. of the clocke we ſet ſaile from Wardhouſe Eaſt and by South.

The ſecond day about 5. in the morning, the wind was Eaſt, and Eaſt ſoutheaſt, and we did lie to the ſhorewards. And about 10. in the morning the wind came to South ſoutheaſt, and we laid it to the Eaſtward: ſometime we lay Eaſt by South, ſometime Eaſt ſoutheaſt, and ſometimes Eaſt by North. About 5. in the afternoone we bare with the William, who was willing to goe with Kegor, becauſe we thought her to be out of trie, and ſailed very ill, where we might mend her ſteerage: whereupon maſter Pet not willing to go into harborough ſaid to maſter Iackman, that if he thought himſelfe not able to keepe the ſea, he ſhould doe as he thought beſt, and that he in the meane time would beare with Willoughbies land, for that it was a parcel of our direction, and would meete him at Veroue Oſtroue, or Vaigats, and ſo we ſet our courſe Eaſt northeaſt, the winde being at Southeaſt. Willoughbies land.

50. leagues from Kegor. The 3. day the winde at Southeaſt we found the pole to be eleuated 70. degrees, 46. minuts. The ſame night at 12. of the clocke we ſounded, but had no ground, in 120. fathoms, being fifty leagues from the one ſide by our reckoning Eaſt northeaſt from Kegor.

The 4. day all the morning was calme. This day we found the pole to be eleuated 71. degrees 38. minutes. This day at 9. in the afternoone the wind at Northeaſt with a gentle gale, we hald along Southeaſt by Eaſt.

The 5. day the wind at Northweſt, we hald Eaſt and Eaſt by South: this day we ſaw land, but we could not make it, the wind being Northerly, ſo that we could not come neere to it.

The 6. day about 2. in the afternoone, the wind at North northweſt, we halde Eaſt ſoutheaſt with a faire and gentle gale: this day we met with ice. About 6. in the afternoone it became calme; we with ſaile and oares laide it to the Northeaſt part, hoping that way to cleare vs of it: for that way we did ſee the head part of it, as we thought. Which dane, about 12. of the clocke at night we gate cleere of it. We did thinke it to be ice of the bay of Saint Nicholas, but it was not, as we found afterwards.

A ſight of perfect land. The ſeuenth day we met with more yce, at the Eaſt part of the other yce: we halde along a weather the yce to finde ſome ende thereof by Eaſt northeaſt. This day there appeared more land North from vs being perfect land: the ice was betweene vs and it, ſo that we could not come neerer to it.

The ſame morning at ſixe of the clocke wee put into the ice to finde ſome way through it, wee continued in it all the ſame day and all the night following, the winde by the North Northweſt. Wee were conſtrained to goe many pointes of our compaſſe, but we went moſt an Eaſterly courſe.

The eight day the winde at North northweſt, we continued our courſe, and at fiue in the morning we ſounded, and had 90. fadoms red oze. This day at foure in the afternoone we ſounded againe, and had 84. fadoms oze, as before. At ſixe in the after noone we cleared our ſelues of the ice, and hald along Southeaſt by South: we ſounded againe at 10. a clocke at night, and had 43. fathom ſandy oze.

The 9. day at 2. in the morning, we ſounded againe, and had 45. fadoms, then there appeared a ſhadow of land to vs Eaſt Northeaſt, and ſo we ran with it the ſpace of 2. houres, and then perceiuing that it was but fogge, we hald along Southeaſt.

70. deg. 3. min. This day at 2. in the afternoone wee ſounded and had fiftie fadoms blacke oze. Our latitude was 70. degrees three minutes. At tenne a clocke at night wee ſounded againe, and had fiftie fadoms blacke oze.

The tenth day the wind being at North northweſt, we haled Eaſt and by North, which courſe we ſet, becauſe at ten of the clocke afore noone wee did ſee land, and then wee ſounded hauing 35. fadoms blacke oze. All this day there was a great fogge, ſo that wee durſt not beare with the land to make it, and ſo we kept an outwardly courſe. This day at 6. in the afternoone we eſpied land, wherewith we halled, and then it grew calme: we ſounded and had 120. fadoms blacke oze: and then we ſent our boat a land to ſound and proue the land. The ſame night we came with our ſhip within an Iſland, where we rode all the ſame night. The ſame night wee went into a bay to ride neere the land for wood and water.

An Iſland.

The maine land.

The 11. day the wind came to the Eaſt ſoutheaſt: this day about a league from vs to the Eaſtwards, we ſaw a very faire ſound or riuer that paſt very farre into the countrey with 2. or 3. branches with an Iſland in the midſt.

The 12. of Iuly the wind was Eaſt Southeaſt. This day about 11. a clocke in the morning, there came a great white beare downe to the water ſide, and tooke the water of his own accord, we chaſed him with our boate, but for all that we could doe, he gote to land and eſcaped from vs, where we named the bay Bearebay. This day at 7. in the after noone we ſet ſaile, for we had good hope that the winde would come Weſterly, and with ſaile and oares we gate the ſea. All the night it was calme with fogge.

Bearebay.

The 13. day in the morning the wind was very variable with fog, and as it cleared vp wee met with great ſtore of ice, which at the firſt ſhewed like land. This ice did vs much trouble, and the more becauſe of the fog, which continued vntill the 14. day, 12. of the clocke.

The 14. day in the morning we were ſo imbayed with ice, ẏ we were conſtrained to come out as we went in, which was by great good fortune, or rather by the goodneſſe of God, otherwiſe it had bene impoſſible, and at 12. of the clock we were cleere of it, the wind being at South and South by Weſt. The ſame day we found the pole to be eleuated 70. degrees, 26. minutes: we lay along the coaſt Northweſt, thinking it to be an Iſland, but finding no end in rowing ſo long, we ſuppoſed it to be the maine of Noua Zembla. About 2. in the afternoone we laide it to the Southward to double the ice, which wee could not doe vpon that boorde, ſo that we caſt about againe and lay Weſt along vnder the ice. About ſeuen in the afternoone we gote about the greateſt part thereof. About 11. a clock at night we brought the ice Southeaſt of vs, and thus we were ridde of this trouble at this time.

The ſuppoſed maine of Noua Zembla.

The 15. day about 3. in the morning, the wind was at South ſouthweſt: wee caſt about and lay to the Eaſtwards: the winde did Weſter, ſo that wee lay South ſouthweſt with a ſlatne ſheete, and ſo we ranne all the ſame day. About 8. in the after noone we ſounded, and had 23. fadoms ſmall grey ſand. This night at twelue of the clocke we ſounded againe, and had 29. fadoms ſand, as afore.

The 16. day vnto 3. in the morning we hald along Eaſt Southeaſt, where we found 18. fadoms red ſand, then we hald along Northeaſt. In theſe ſoundings wee had many ouerfals. This day at 10. of the clocke we met with more ice, which was very great, ſo that we coulde not tell which way to get cleere of it. Then the winde came to the South Southeaſt, ſo that we lay to the Northwards. We thought that way to cleare our ſelues of it, but that way we had more ice. About 6. in the afternoone, the wind came to the Eaſt. Then we lay to the Southwards that wee had 30. fadoms blacke oze. This day we found the pole to bee eleuated 69. deg. 40. minutes, and this night at 12. a clocke we had 41. fadoms red ſand.

Many ouerfals.

The 17. day at 3. in the morning, we had 12. fadoms. At 9. we had 8. and 7. all this day we ran South and South by Weſt, at the depth aforeſaid, red ſand, being but ſhallow water. At eight in the afternoone, the winde with a ſhowre and thunder came to the Southweſt, and then wee ranne Eaſt Northeaſt. At 12. at night it came to the South and by Eaſt, and all this was in the bay of Pechora.

The bay of Pechora.

The 18. day at 7. in the morning we bare with the headland of the bay, where wee founde two Iſlands. There are alſo ouerfals of water by tides. We went betweene the maine and the Iſland, next to the head, where we had about 2. fadoms and a halfe. We found the pole eleuated 69. deg. 13 minutes. This day we had ſight of Vaigatz: the land of the maine of Pechora did trend Southeaſt, we hald Eaſt ſoutheaſt, and had 10. fadoms oze all the ſame day vntill 4. in the after noone, then being calme, we ankered in 10. fadoms all the ſame night.

They had ſight of Vaygatz.

The 19. day at two in the morning we ſet ſaile, and ran South and South ſouthweſt all the ſame day at 8. 7. and 6. fadoms, this was all the South part of Vaigatz, this part of the land lieth North and South. This day at 4. in the afternoone we found ſhallow water ſometime 4. fadoms, ſometime 3. and 2. and a halfe, and one fadome and a halfe: there we ankered and ſent our boate away to ſound, and all to leeward we had 4. foote and 3. foote, and 2. foot, there was not water for the boate betweene Vaigatz & the other ſide: finding no more water, there was no other way but to goe backe as we came in, hauing the wind Northweſt, ſo at twelue at night we ſet ſaile.

The 20. day we plied to the Northwards, and got deepe water againe 6. and 7. fadoms.

The 21. day the winde by the Northweſt, we hald along the coaſt North and North north weſt, we had 8. and 9. and 10. fadoms.

An Iſland hauing ſtore of wood & water.

The 22. day the winde came to the Southweſt, wee bare along the coaſt of Vaygatz, as wee found it to lie North and by Weſt, and Northnorthweſt, and North. The winde blewe very much with great fogge, we lacking water and wood bare within an Iſland where wee founde great ſtore of wood and water, there were three or foure goodly ſounds. Vnder two points there was a croſſe ſet vp, and a man buried at the foote of it. Vpon the ſaid croſſe Maſter Pet did graue his name with the date of our Lorde, and likewiſe vpon a ſtone at the foote of the croſſe, and ſo did I alſo, to the end that if the William did chaunce to come thither, they might haue knowledge that wee had beene there. At eight in the afternoone the winde came to the North northweſt, we ſet ſaile and turned out of the Bay. The ſame night the winde came to the Weſt, ſo that wee lay North along the land.

6. faire iſlands.

The 23. day at fiue in the morning, the wind came to the Southweſt, a Sea boord we ſawe a great number of faire Iſlands, to the number of ſixe: a ſea boord of theſe Iſlands, there are many great ouerfals, as great ſtreames or tides: we halde Northeaſt and Eaſt northeaſt as the lande did trend. At eight afore noone the winde came to the Southeaſt with very much wind, raine and fogge, and very great ſtore of ice a ſea boorde: ſo we lay to the Southweſt to attaine to one of the Iſlands to harbour vs if the weather did ſo extremely continue, and to take in our boate, thinking it meete ſo to doe, and not to towe her in ſuch weather. About twelue of the clocke it became very calme vpon the ſudden, and came vp to the Weſt Northweſt, and Northweſt by Weſt, and then we tooke in our boate, and this done, there came downe ſo much winde, as we were not able to ſteere afore it, with corſe and bonnets of each, we hald South with the land, for ſo the land did trend. This day all the afternoone we ſailed vnder a great land of ice, we ſailed betweene the land and it, being not able to croſſe it. About twelue at night we found the ice to ſtretch into the land, that we could not get cleare to the Eaſtward, ſo we laide it to the ſhore, and there we founde it cleare hard aboord the ſhore, and we found alſo a very faire Iſland which makes a very good harbour, and within are 12. fadoms.

An Iſland to the Eaſt of Vaigatz 4. or 5. leagues.

This Iſland is to yͤ Eaſtwards of Vaigatz, 4. or 5. leagues. This land of the maine doth trend Southeaſt, and Southeaſt by Eaſt. It is a very faire coaſt, and euen and plaine, and not full of mountaines nor rocks: you haue but ſhallow water of 6. or 7. fadoms, about a league from the ſhore, all this morning we halled Eaſt ſoutheaſt. This day we found the pole to be eleuated 69. degrees 14. minutes. About 12. a clocke we were conſtrained to put into the ice to ſeeke ſome way to get to the Northwards of it, hoping to haue ſome cleare paſſage that way, but there was nothing but whole ice. About nine in the afternoone we had ſight of the William, and when wee ſawe her, there was a great land of ice betweene her and vs, ſo that we could not come one to the other, but as we came neere to her, we ſounded our trumpet and ſhot off two muſkets, and ſhe put out her flag vpon her foretopmaſte in token that ſhe did ſee vs: all this time wee did ſhorten our ſailes, and went with our foreſaile & mainetopſaile, ſeeking the beſt way through the broken ice, ſhe making alway the beſt that ſhe could to follow vs, we put out our flagge to anſwere her againe with the like: thus wee continued all the afternoone till about 12. a clocke at night, and then we moared our ſhip to a piece of ice to tarie for the William.

The William and the George meete againe.

The 25. day about fiue in the morning, the William came to vs, being both glad of our meeting. The William had her ſterne poſt broken, that the rudder did hang clean beſides the ſterne, ſo that ſhe could in no wiſe port her helme, with all hands ſhe did lighten her ſterne, and trimme her head, and when we had brought her forward all that we could, wee brought a cable vnder her ſterne, and without capſtaine did wind vp her ſterne, and ſo we made it as wel as the place would giue vs leaue, and in the ende wee brought her to ſteere againe. Wee acknowledge this our meeting to be a great benefite of God for our mutuall comfort, and ſo gaue his maieſtie thanks for it. All the night after we tooke our reſt being made faſt vpon a piece of ice: the winde was at Weſt Northweſt, but wee were ſo incloſed with ice that we coulde not tell which way to paſſe. Windes wee haue had at will, but ice and fogge too much againſt our willes, if it had pleaſed the Lord God otherwiſe.

The 26. day the wind was at Weſt Northweſt: we ſet ſaile to the Northwardes, to ſeeke if we could finde any way cleare to paſſe to the Eaſtward, but the further we went that way, the more and thicker was the ice, ſo that wee coulde goe no further. So about foure in the afternoone we were conſtrained to moare vpon another piece of ice. I thinke we ſailed in all a league this day, here we had 15. fadoms oze, and this oze is all the chanell ouer. All the ſame day after foure of the clocke, and all the night we tarried there, being without all good hope, but rather in deſpaire. This day Maſter Iugman did ſee land Eaſt Northeaſt from vs, as he did thinke, whether it were land or no, I cannot tell well, but it was very like land, but the fogges haue many times deceiued vs.

The 27. day the winde was at Northweſt. This day at nine in the morning we ſet ſaile to ſeeke the ſhore. Further into the ice we could not goe, and at ſeuen in the afternoone we moared to a piece of ice, and the William with vs, here we had 14. fathoms oze. At three in the afternoone we warpt from one ice to another. At nine in the afternoone we moared againe to a piece of ice vntill the next day. All this night it did ſnow with much wind, being at Weſt Northweſt, and at Northweſt, and by Weſt.

The 28. day the winde came to the Southweſt, and Southſouthweſt: this day was a very faire day. At one in the afternoone maſter Pet and maſter Iackman did conferre together what was beſt to be done conſidering that the windes were good for vs, and we not able to paſſe for ice, they did agree to ſeeke to the land againe, and ſo to Vaygatz, and there to conferre further. At 3. in the afternoone we did warpe from one piece of ice to another to get from them if it were poſſible: here were pieces of ice ſo great, that we could not ſee beyond them out of the toppe. Thus we warped vntil 9. in the afternoone, and then we moared both our ſhippes to a great and high piece of ice, vntill the next morning.

Their returne.

The nine and twentie day the winde came to the Southweſt, wee ſet ſaile at fiue in the morning to plie into the ſhore if it were poſſible, we made many turnes among the ice to ſmall purpoſe, for with the winde doeth the currant runne. This day by miſfortune a piece of ice ſtroke of our greepe afore at two aforenoone, yet for all this we turned to doe our beſt. The William beeing incumbered with ice, and perceiuing that ſhee did litle good, tooke in all her ſailes, and made her ſelfe faſt to a piece of ice, and about foure in the afternoone ſhe ſet ſaile to followe vs. We were afraide that ſhee had taken ſome hurt, but ſhe was well. At ſeuen afore noone we tooke in all our ſailes to tarie for the William, and made our ſhippe faſt to a piece of ice: the William before ſhe came to vs tooke in all her ſailes, and moared to another piece of ice, and thus we continued vntill the next morning.

The currant runneth with the winde.

The 30. day the winde at Southeaſt, and by South, and at 9. in the morning we ſet ſaile, and ſooner would haue done if yͤ William had bene by vs, but we did tary for her to know whether all was well with her: But as ſoone as we made ſaile, ſhe did the like. All this day wee did our beſt to ſeeke our way as the ice would giue vs leaue, ſometime we lay South, ſometime Weſt, and ſometime Eaſt, and thus we continued vntill eight at night, and then being calme, wee made our ſhip faſt to a piece of ice, and went to ſupper. In the meane time the wind with a faire gentle gale came vp to the Eaſt, and Eaſt and by South, but there came downe a ſhowre of raine with it, which continued the ſpace of one houre: Which being done, it became calme againe, ſo that wee could doe no good all that night, but tooke our reſt vntill the next day.

The 31. the winde being at Southweſt, we ſet ſaile to turne to windeward at three a clock in the morning. In this turning we did litle good, for the currant would not giue vs leaue. For as the winde is, ſo is the currant. We did our beſt vntill ten of the clocke, and then perceiuing that we did no good, and being incloſed with ice, wee made our ſhips faſt to a piece of ice: All this day the William lay ſtill, and did as much good as we that did labour all the forenoone. Thus we took our reſt all the ſame day.

In the afternoone we ſet ſaile, the winde being at South & by Eaſt, we lay to the Weſtwards, as Southweſt and Southweſt and by South, and ſometime to the Weſtward as wee might. Thus we continued vntil 9. at night, and then we could go no further for ice: ſo we with the William were conſtrained to make our ſhip faſt to a piece of ice al the ſame night. This day we found the pole eleuated 69. degrees 20. minutes, and here we had 17. fathoms oze.

The firſt day of Auguſt was verie calme in the morning, the winde beeing at Weſt Northweſt. About twelue the winde came to the Weſt, and continued ſo all the ſame night with great fogge.

Auguſt.

The ſecond day the winde was at Southweſt all day with rayne and fogge. All this day wee were incloſed with ice, ſo that we were forced to lye ſtill. Here we had one and twentie fathoms oze. At ſixe in the afternoone the winde was at Weſt with very much foule weather, and ſo continued all the ſame night.

The third day the winde was at Weſt, and Weſt by North, and Weſt Northweſt, this day we lay ſtill incloſed with yce, the weather beeing darke with fogge: thus abiding the Lords leaſure, we continued with patience. And ſounding we found 21. fathoms.

The fourth day we lay ſtill incloſed with ice, the winde being at Weſt Northweſt, this ice did euery day increaſe vpon vs, yet putting our truſt in God, we hoped to be deliuered out of it in good time.

A whole land of yce.

The fift day all the morning it rained with very much wind, being at South Southeaſt: about 3. in the after noone we ſet ſayle, and preſently it became calme for the ſpace of one houre, then the wind came to the North Northeaſt, and here we had 33. fathoms: thus we made way among the yce Southweſt, and Southſouthweſt, & Weſt, as we might finde our way for the ſpace of 3. houres: then we met with a whole land of yce, ſo that we could go no further: here we mored our ſhip to tarie for a further opening. Here we found 45. fathoms oze, and all the night was very darke with fogge.

The ſixt day hauing no opening of the yce wee lay ſtill, the winde being at Weſt, and Weſt by South: here we had ſixty three fathoms oze: all the ſame night the winde was at the Weſt Northweſt.

The 7. day the winde was at Weſt, and Weſt and by North all day. And all this day we lay ſtill being incloſed with yce, that we could not ſtirre, labouring onely to defend the yce as it came vpon vs. Here we had 68. fathoms oze.

The 8. day was very faire & calme but foggy. This day towards night there was litle winde by the South Southweſt: then the yce began a litle to open, and here we had 70. fathoms oze: all the night was foggy.

70. degr. 4. min.

Froſt.

The appearing of the ſtarres, ſigne of Winter.

The 9. day the winde was at Northweſt, and by Weſt, all the afternoone we lay ſtill becauſe of the yce, which did ſtill incloſe vs. This day we found the pole eleuated ſeuenty degrees, 4. minutes, we had 63. fathoms oze: this night was a very fayre night, but it freezed: in the morning we had much adoe to goe through the ſame: and we were in doubt that if it ſhould haue freezed ſo much the night following, we ſhould hardly haue paſſed out of it. This night there was one ſtar that appeared to vs.

Much ſnow.

The tenth day the winde was at Eaſt Northeaſt with a very ſmall gale. Wee with ſaile and oares made way through the yce: about fiue in the morning we ſet ſaile: ſometime wee lye Southweſt, and ſometime South, and ſometime Weſt, as wee might beſt finde the way. About three in the afternoone the gale began to freſh: about ſixe in the afternoone the winde was at Northeaſt with fogge. Here we had eighty eight fathoms: we bare ſaile all the ſame night, and it ſnowed very much.

The eleuenth day we were much troubled with yce, and by great force we made our way through it, which we thought a thing impoſſible: but extremity doth cauſe men to doe much, and in the weakeneſſe of man Gods ſtrength moſt appeareth. This day we had 95. fathoms. At three in the afternoone the winde came to the Southweſt, we were forced to make our ſhippe faſt to a piece of yce, for we were incloſed with it, and taried the Lordes leaſure. This night we had 97. fathoms.

The 12. day the wind was at the Southeaſt not very much but in a maner calme: at a 11. of the clocke the winde came to the Weſt Southweſt: all the day was very darke with ſnowe and fogge. At 6. in the afternoone we ſet ſaile the winde being at the North Northeaſt: all this night we bare away Southweſt, and Southſouthweſt, as well and as neere as the yce would giue vs leaue: all this night we found the yce ſomewhat fauourable to vs, more then it was before, wherupon we ſtood in good hope to get out of it.

Great ſtore of ſnowe.

The 13. day at 7. in the morning, the winde was at the Northeaſt, and Northeaſt and by Eaſt: all this day we were much troubled with the yce, for with a blow againſt a piece of yce we brake the ſtocke of our ancre, and many other great blowes we had againſt the yce, that it was maruellous that the ſhip was able to abide them: the ſide of our boate was broken with our ſhip which did recule backe, the boate being betwixt a great piece of yce, and the ſhip, and it periſhed the head of our rudder. This day was a very hard day with vs: at night we found much broken yce, and all this night it blewe very much winde, ſo that we lay in drift with the yce, & our drift was South, for the winde was at North all this night, and we had great ſtore of ſnowe.

The 14. day in the morning wee made our ſhippe faſt to a piece of yce, and let her driue with it. In the meane time wee mended our boate and our ſteerage: all this day the winde continued Northerly, and here wee had threeſcore and two fathoms. Thus wee lay a drift all the ſame night.

The 15. day we ſet ſaile at 6. in the morning, the winde being at Northeaſt. At 9. aforenoon we entred into a cleare Sea without yce, whereof wee were moſt glad, and not without great cauſe, and gaue God the praiſe. We had 19. fathoms water, and came in Southweſt all the morning vntill we came to 14. fathoms, and thence we haled Weſt, til we came to 10. fathoms, and then we went Northweſt, for ſo the land doeth trend. At 12. of the clocke we had ſight of the land, which wee might haue had ſooner, but it was darke and foggie all the ſame day: for when wee had ſight of the lande, wee were not paſſing three leagues from it. This day we had the pole eleuated 69 degrees 49 minutes. All day we ran along the coaſt in ten and nine fadoms, pepered ſand. It is a very goodly coaſt and a bolde, and faire ſoundings off it, without ſandes or rocks.

69 degrees 49 minutes.

The 16 day the winde was at Eaſt: this day we were troubled againe with ice, but we made great ſhift with it: for we gotte betweene the ſhoare and it. This day at twelue of the clocke we were thwart of the Southeaſt part of Vaigats, all along which part there was great ſtore of yce, ſo that we ſtood in doubt of paſſage, yet by much adoe we got betwixt the ſhoare and it: about 6 in the afternoone was found a great white beare vpon a piece of ice: all this day in the afternoone it was darke with fogge. And all the night we haled North and North by Weſt, and ſometime North and by Eaſt, for ſo doth the land trend.

They are thwart againſt Vaigats.

The 17 day in the morning we haled Weſt, for ſo doth the land lie. The wind was at Southeaſt, and it was very darke with fogge, and in running along the ſhoare we fell a ground, but God be praiſed without hurt, for wee came preſently off againe. The William came to an anker to ſtay for vs, and ſent ſome of their men to help vs, but before they came we were vnder ſaile, and as we came to the William we did ſtowe our boates, and made ſaile, we went within ſome of the Iſlands, and haled Weſtſouthweſt.

Sands.

The Iſlands.

About two of the clocke in the afternoone, we ſet our courſe Southweſt and by South: ſo we ranne Southweſt vntill twelue at night, the wind came to the Northnortheaſt, and then we haled Weſt.

The 18 day at 6 in the morning we had 16 fadoms red ſand: at 6 in the morning 13 fadoms. At 10, 14 fadoms, and we haled Weſtnorthweſt. At 12 a clocke the winde came to the Eaſt, and Eaſt by South, we haled Weſt and by North all the ſame day and night. At 6 in the afternoone we had 17 fadoms red ſand.

The 19 day the wind was at Eaſtnortheaſt: at 6 in the morning wee had 19 fathoms red ſand: at 12 of the clocke the wind blew North and North by Eaſt, we had 17 fadoms of water, at 3 in the afternoone 15.

The 20 day the wind was at Northeaſt, and Northnortheaſt: at 7 in the morning we had 30 fadomes blacke oze: at twelue of the clocke we were vpon the ſuddaine in ſhoale water, among great ſands, and could find no way out. By ſounding and ſeeking about, we came aground, and ſo did the William, but we had no hurt, for the wind was off the ſhoare, and the ſame night it was calme: all night we did our beſt, but we could not haue her aflote. Theſe ſhoales doe lie off Colgoyeue: it is very flat a great way off, and it doth not high aboue 2 or 3 foote water: it floweth Northeaſt, and Southweſt.

Shoales off Colgoyeue.

The 21 day the wind was at Southweſt, and being very faire weather we did lighten our ſhips as much as was poſſible for vs to doe, by reaſon of the place. The ſame high water, by the helpe of God, we got both a floate, and the wind being at the Southweſt did help vs, for it cauſed it to flow the more water.

This day we found the pole to be eleuated 68 degrees 40 min. In the afternoone we both ſet ſaile to ſeeke way to get out of theſe ſands, our boate a head ſounding, hauing 6, 7, and 8 fadomes all within the ſand which was without vs. We bare to the Southward, and the William bare more to the Eaſtwards, and night being at hand the wind came to the Southeaſt, whereupon we layd it to the Southwards, lying Southweſt, and South and by Weſt, and ran to 19, and 12 and 14 fadoms, and preſently we had but ſixe fadoms, which was off the ſands head, which we were a ground vpon the day before. Then we caſt about to the Eaſtwards for deepe water, which we preſently had, as 10, 15, and 20 and ſo to 23 fadoms.

The 22 day at 8 in the morning, we caſt about to the Southward, and this day in the morning we ſaw the William vnder our lee as far as we could ſee her, and with a great fogge we loſt the ſight of her, and ſince we haue not ſeene her. Thus we ranne till we came to thirtie fadomes blacke oze, which we had at twelue of the clocke, and at three in the afternoone we had twenty and three fadoms, and then we ranne Weſtnorthweſt, and Weſt by North, all the ſame night following.

They loſt the William here.

The 23 day we had at 6 in the morning 27 fadoms, at 8 a clocke 28 fadoms: at 9 the winde being at Eaſtſoutheaſt, we haled Weſtnorthweſt: this day we had ſight of the land of Hugri ſide. At twelue of the clocke we had thirty two fadoms ſand. This day we ranne Weſt and by North, and came to fiue fadoms off the bay of Morzouets. Then we layd it to the Northwards, ſo that we lay Northnortheaſt off. The wind after came to the North, and North by Eaſt, and we lay Eaſt and Eaſt by North, then we layd it to the Weſtward againe: and thus we lay till we came to fortie fadoms, and then we went Northweſt till wee came to fourteene fadoms, and ſo to tenne fadoms. Then we caſt about to the Eaſtwards and lay Eaſt, and Eaſt by North all the ſame night.

The 24 day at 8 in the morning we had 32 fadoms. We ran Northweſt till we came to 11 fadoms, then we lay to the Northwards till 12 at night, and then we came to forty fadoms, then the wind at Northeaſt we lay to the Weſtwards, and haled Northweſt along.

The 25 at 4 in the morning we had 37 fadoms, wee ranne Northweſt, the winde at Northnortheaſt very much.

The 26 day we ran with the ſame winde, and found the pole to be eleuated 70 deg. 40 min.

The 27 at 7 in the morning we ſaw land, which we made to be Kegor, then we haled Northweſt, and North by Weſt to double the North Cape.

The 28 day at 3 in the morning we ran Northweſt, and ſo all day. At night the wind came to the Southweſt, and we ran Northweſt all that night.

The towne of Hungon.

The 29 day we put into a ſound called Tane, and the towne is called Hungon: we came to an ancre at 5 in the afternoone, at 25 fadoms very faire ſand. This ſound is very large and good, and the ſame night we got water aboord.

The 30 day in the morning the winde at Northeaſt, and but litle, we ſet ſaile, and without boate on head we got the ſea about 12 of the clocke: the wind with a faire gale came to the Eaſt Southeaſt, and all this day and night we ran Weſtnorthweſt.

They double the North Cape in their returne.

The 31 day at 12 of the clocke we doubled the North Cape, the wind being at Eaſtſoutheaſt, we haled Weſt all the ſame day, and at night we ran Weſtſouthweſt.

The 1 day of September the wind was at Northeaſt with very much fogge: all this day we ran Weſtſouthweſt: at 2 in the afternoone the wind came North.

The ſecond day at 3 in the morning we doubled Fowlneſſe, & the wind was this day variable at all parts of the Compaſſe. In the afternoone we made but litle way: at 6 a clocke the winde came to the Southweſt, and we went Northweſt. At 9 in the night there came downe ſo much winde by the Weſtſouthweſt, that we were faine to lay it a hull, we haled it to Northwards for the ſpace of 2 houres, and then we layd her head to the Southwards, and at the breake of day we ſaw land, which is very high, and is called by the men of the countrey Fouleneſſe. It is within ful of ſmall Iſlands, and without full of rocks very farre out, and within the rockes you haue fayre ſand at 20 fadoms.

Fowleneſſe.

The 3 day in the morning we bare with the ſound aforeſaid: Within it is but ſhoale water, 4 5 and 3 fadoms, ſandie ground, the land is very high, and the Church that is ſeene is called Helike Kirke. It doeth high here not aboue 8 or 9 foote.

Lowfoote.

The 12 day at 3 in the afternoone, we put into a ſound by Lowfoote, where it doeth flowe Southweſt, and by South, and doth high 7 or 8 foote water.

The 13 day much wind at Weſt: we had a ledge of rocks in the wind of vs, but the road was reaſonable good for all Southerly and Weſterly winds. We had the maine land in the winde of vs: this day was ſtormie with raine.

The ſound of Romeſal.

The 23 day at foure of the clocke in the afternoone we put into Norway, into a ſound called Romeſal, where it floweth Southſoutheaſt, and doth high 8 foote water: this place is full of low Iſlands, and many good ſounds without the high mountaine land. Here is great ſtore of wood growing, as firre, birch, oke, and haſell: all this night the wind was at the South, very much winde, with raine and fogge.

The 28 day in the morning the wind being at Eaſtnortheaſt we ſet ſaile at 8 of the clocke, and haled out of the bay Weſtſouthweſt, and Southweſt, hauing a goodly gale vntill one of the clocke, and then the wind came to Southeaſt, and to the South with raine and fogge, and very much winde: at ſixe of the clocke we came into a very good rode, where we did ride all the ſame night in good ſafetie.

The 29 day we put into a good ſound, the wind by the Southweſt: at three in the afternoone there came downe very much wind by the South, and all night with vehement blaſtes, and raine.

The 30 day all day the wind was at Weſtſouthweſt. And in this ſound the pole is eleuated 63 deg. 10 min.

October.

The firſt day of October the winde was at South with very much winde, and vehement blaſtes.

The 7 day we ſet ſaile: for from the firſt of this moneth vntill this 7 day, we had very foule weather, but ſpecially the fourth day when the wind was ſo great, that our cables brake with the very ſtorme, and I do not thinke that it is poſſible that any more wind then that was ſhould blow:

for after the breaking of our cable, we did driue a league, before our ankers would take any hold: but God be thanked the ſtorme began to ſlacke, otherwiſe we had bene in ill caſe.

The 7 day at night we came to an anker vntil the next day, which was the 8 day of the moneth, when as the winde grew great againe, with raine, whereupon we ſet ſaile and returned into the ſound againe: and at our firſt comming to an anker, preſently there blew ſo much winde, that although our beſt anker was out, yet the extremitie of the ſtorm droue vs vpon a ledge of rocks, and did bruiſe our ſhip in ſuch ſort, that we were conſtrained to lighten her to ſaue her, and by this meanes (by the helpe of God) we got off our ſhip and ſtopped our leakes, and moared her in good ſafety abiding for a wind. We rid from this day by reaſon of contrary winds, with fogge and raine vntill the 24 day, which day in the morning the wind came to the Northeaſt, and at 8 of the clocke we ſet ſaile. This ſound is called Moore ſound, where it higheth about 5 foote water, & floweth Southſoutheaſt. The next day being the 25 day wee put into a ſound which is called Vltar ſound, where was a ſhip of the king of Denmark put into another ſound there by, being 2 leagues to the ſouthwards of vs, that came out of Iſland: yͤ wind was contrary for vs at Southſouthweſt. Moore ſound.

The 12 day of Nouember we ſet ſaile the wind being at the Eaſt Southeaſt, and paſt through the ſound where the kings ſhip did lie: which ſound is called Sloure ſound. But as we did open the ſound, we found the wind at the Southweſt, ſo that we could doe no good, ſo that we moared our ſhip betweene 2 Iſlands vntil the 18 day, and then the weather being faire and calme, we ſet ſaile, & went to ſea hoping to find a faire wind, but in the ſea we found the wind at the Southweſt, and Southſouthweſt, ſo that we were conſtrained to returne into the ſame ſound.

The next day being the 19 the kings ſhip came out alſo, becauſe ſhe ſaw vs put to ſea, & came as farre out as we, and moared where we did moare afore: And at our returne backe againe, we moared our ſhip in an vtter ſound called Scorpe ſound, becauſe the kings ſhip was without victuals, and we did not greatly deſire her company, although they deſired ours. In this ſound the pole is eleuated 62 deg. 47 min. Thus we lay ſtil for a wind vntill the 1 of December, which day we ſet ſaile at 6 a clocke in the morning, & at 4 in the afternoone we laid it to the inwards.

The 9 day we had ſight of the coaſt of Scotland which was Buquhamneſſe.

The 10 day we were open off the Frith.

The 11 day at 4 in the morning we were thwart of Barwike: at 6 we were thwart of Bamburch: the ſame day at 10 at night we were ſhot as farre as Hollyfoote. Then the wind came to the South and Southeaſt, ſo that we lay ſtill vntill the next day in the morning, and then we were conſtrained to put with Tinmouth. The ſame day at night wee haled aground to ſtoppe a leake, which we found to be in the ſkarfe afore. The wind continued by the Southeaſt & Southſoutheaſt vntill the 20 day, and then we ſet ſaile about 12 at night, bearing along the coaſt.

The 22 day by reaſon of a Southeaſt wind, we thought we ſhould haue bene put into Humber, but the wind came to the Weſt, ſo that we haled Southeaſt: and at 3 in the afternoone we haled a ſea bord the ſands, and had ſhoale water off Lymery and Owry, and were in 4 fadomes off them. The next day we haled as we might to ſeaſe Orfordneſſe.

The 24 day we came thwart of the Naſe, about 8 in the morning.

The 25 day being the Natiuity of Chriſt, we came to an anker betweene Old hauen, and Tilberie hope. The ſame day we turned as high as Porſhet.

The 26 day we turned as high as Ratcliffe, and praiſed God for our ſafe returne. And thus I end, 1580.

The William with Charles Iackman arriued at a port in Norway betweene Tronden and Roſtock in October 1580, and there did winter: And from thence departed againe in Februarie following, and went in company of a ſhip of the King of Denmarke toward Iſland: and ſince that time he was neuer heard of.

Inſtructions made by the company of Engliſh merchants for diſcouery of new trades, vnto Richard Gibs, William Biggat, Iohn Backhouſe, William Freeman, Iohn Haly, and Iames Woodcock, &c. maſters of the 9 ſhips, and one barke that we had freighted for a voiage with them to be made (by the grace of God) from hence to S. Nicholas in Ruſſia, and backe againe: which ſhips being now in the riuer of Thames are preſently ready to depart vpon the ſaid voyage, with the next apt winds that may ſerue therunto: and with this Fleet afterwards was ioined M. Chriſtopher Carlile with the Tyger. The 1 of Iune 1582.

Foraſmuch as the number of ſhippes which we purpoſe to ſend in this Fleete together for Saint Nicholas in Ruſſia is greater then at any time heretofore wee haue ſent thither, as alſo for that ſome ſpeeches are giuen out that you ſhall be met withall by ſuch as with force & violence will aſſault you as enemies, to the end that good order may be eſtabliſhed among you for keeping together in company, and vniting your forces, as well for the better direction to be had in your nauigation, as alſo for your more ſafety and ſtrength againſt the enemie, we haue thought good to appoint among you an Admirall and Viceadmirall, and that all of you and euery one particularly ſhall be bound in the ſumme of one hundred pounds to keepe company together.

2 Becauſe the Salomon is the biggeſt ſhip, beſt appointed, and of greateſt force to defend or offend the enemie, we doe therefore appoint that ſhip Admirall, which ſhall weare the flag in the maine top.

3 The Thomas Allen being a good ſhip and well appointed, and for that the maſter of her is the ancienteſt maſter of the Fleete that hath taken charge that way, we doe appoint the ſame ſhip to be Viceadmirall, and to weare the flag in the foretop.

4 And for that the maſter of the Prudence is of great experience, and knowledge in that voyage, we doe appoint that he with the maſter of the Admirall and Viceadmirall ſhall conferre, conſult and agree vpon the courſes and directions that ſhall be vſed in this voyage, and it ſhall be lawfull vnto the maſter of the Admiral, with the conſent of M. Gibs, and M. Biggar, or one of them to make his courſes and directions from time to time during the whole voyage, and all the fleete are to follow and obſerue the ſame without ſtraying or breaking of company at any time vpon the penalty before ſpecified.

5 The appointing of the ſhips for Admiral and Viceadmiral, and thoſe men to conſult and agree vpon the courſes and directions of the voyage, as aforeſaid, hath bene done by the conſents and with the liking of you all, and therefore we doubt not but that you will all carefully and willingly obſerue the premiſſes.

6 Item, we haue thought good to put you in mind, that at ſuch times as you may conueniently from time to time, you do aſſemble and meete together, to conſider, conſult, and determine vpon ſuch articles as you ſhall think neceſſary to be propounded touching your beſt ſafety and defence againſt all forces that may be offered you in this voyage, as well outwards bound, and while you ſhall remaine in the roade and bay of S. Nicholas, as alſo homewardes bound, and that which you ſhall agree vpon, or that which moſt of you ſhal conſent vnto, cauſe it to be ſet down in writing for record, which may ſerue for an acte amongſt your ſelues to binde you all to obſerue the ſame.

7 We haue appointed Iames Woodcock in the ſmal barke to attend vpon you, & to receiue his directions from you. You are therfore to remember well what conference and talke hath bene had with you here before your going touching yͤ ſayd barke, to what purpoſes ſhe may beſt ſerue, and the maner how to imploy her, and thereupon to giue your order and direction vnto him, as the time and place ſhall require.

Berozoua Vſtia.

8 Item, if you ſhall vnderſtand as you are outwards bound, that the enemie is gone before you to S. Nicholas, remember what aduiſe hath bene giuen you for your ſtay at Berozoua Vſtia, till you haue by eſpials viewed and vnderſtood the forces, and the maner of their abode at that place.

9 And if in the ſea either outwards or homewards, or in the time of your abode at anker at Saint Nicholas, you ſhall be aſſaulted by force of any, as enemie whatſoeuer, you are to defend your ſelues with ſuch forces as you may or can: truſt not too farre, neither giue place to inconuenience.

10 You will not forget what conference we had touching your paſſing outwards bound by Wardhouſe, to view and vnderſtand what you can at that place, and to ſhew your ſelues, to ſee if there be any there that haue a mind to ſpeake with you, for that we thinke it better then, & thereabout, then afterwards or els where.

11 While you ſhall remaine in the road at S. Nicholas, be circumſpect and carefull to haue your ſhips in readineſſe, and in good order alwaies, and vpon all ſuddens. The greateſt danger vnto you in that place will be while you ſhall ſhift your ſhips: therefore you are to conſider of it, but the fitteſt time for you to doe the ſame, will bee when the winde is Southerly off the ſhore, or calme, and at ſuch time you may the better doe it without danger. You muſt take ſuch order among you, that your companies may be alwaies willing and ready to helpe one the other, and appoint among your ſelues ſuch ſhips to ſhift firſt, and ſuch after, in ſuch ſort and forme as you ſhall thinke beſt and moſt conuenient. And while they ſhall be in diſcharging, ſhifting, and lading, let the reſt of your companies which haue not then to doe in lading or diſcharging, helpe thoſe ſhips that ſhall haue labour to doe, as well for carying the barkes from ſhips to the ſhore, or from ſhore to the ſhippe with your boates, as alſo for any other helpe that they ſhall haue neede of.

12 Remember what hath bene ſaid vnto you touching the moring of your ſhips, &c. for vſing aduantage againſt the enemie, if you ſhall be aſſaulted in that place.

13 See that you ſerue God, aboliſh ſwearing and gaming, be carefull of fire and candles, &c.

14 You are to conſult and agree among your ſelues vpon ſignes, tokens, and good orders for the better keeping of company together, and alſo the maner how and by what meanes, reſcue, ayde, or helpe may be giuen by one to the other in fight, if you happen to come to it.

Thus we pray God to ſend you a proſperous voyage and ſafe returne.

The opinion of Maſter VVilliam Burrough ſent to a friend, requiring his iudgement for the fitteſt time of the departure of our ſhips towards S. Nicholas in Ruſſia.

WHereas you requeſt me to perſwade the company not to ſend their ſhippes from hence before the fine of May, I do not thinke the ſame ſo good a courſe for them to obſerue: for you know that the ſooner wee ſende them hence, the ſooner we may looke for their returne. If wee ſende them in the beginning of May, then may they be at Saint Nicholas by the fine of the ſame moneth: and by that time the greateſt parte of your lading of neceſſitie muſt bee come downe, eſpecially the flare: but if it ſhould fall out ſo lateward a breaking vp of the riuer of Duyna, that by the ende of May the goods cannot be brought to Saint Nicholas, yet this is alwayes to be accounted for certaine, that before our ſhips can come thither, the goods may be brought downe to that place: and if through ice the ſhippes be kept backe any time, the loſſe and charge of that time toucheth not the companie at all, but the owners of the ſhippes, and yet will the Owners put that in aduenture, rather then tarie longer time before their going hence.

The Ruſſian fleet beſt to be ſet forth in the beginning of May.

Now ſeeing by ſending our ſhippes hence in the beginning of May, their arriuall at S. Nicholas may be at the ende of the ſame moneth, and remaining thirtie dayes there, they may bee laden and come thence by the laſt of Iune, and returne home hither by the 10 of Auguſt with commodities to ſerue the market then, it cannot bee denied but we ſhould reape thereby great commoditie.

But it may be obiected, that if all our ſhippes be ſent then to returne as aforeſaid, you ſhall not be able to ſend vs in ſo much cordage, Waxe and Oyles, as otherwiſe you ſhould doe if they remained a moneth longer, neither could you by that time perfect your accounts to be ſent in them as you would doe.

For anſwere thereunto this is my meaning: though I wiſh the greateſt part of our ſhipping to go as aforeſaid, yet would I haue one good ſhip or two at the moſt well furniſhed in al points that ſhould depart alwaies from hence, betweene the beginning and the 10 day of Iune: and the ſame to be conditioned withall to remaine at S. Nicholas from the firſt arriuall there vntill the middeſt of Auguſt, or to be diſpatched thence ſooner, at the will and liking of our factors for the ſame: by this order theſe commodities following may enſue.

1 You may haue our commodities there timely to ſend vp the riuer before it waxe ſhallow, to be diſperſed in the countrey at your pleaſure.

2 The greateſt part of our goods may be returned hither timely to ſerue the firſt markets.

3 Our late ſhips remaining ſo long here may ſerue to good purpoſe, for returning anſwere of ſuch letters as may be ſent ouer land, and receiued here before their departure.

4 Their remaining ſo late with you ſhal ſatiſfie your deſire for perfecting your accounts, and may bring ſuch cordage, Waxe, Oile, & other commodities, as you can prouide before that time: and chiefly may ſerue vs in ſtead to bring home our goods that may be ſent vs from Perſia.

Now ſeeing it may be ſo many wayes commodious to the company to obſerue this order, without any charge vnto them, I wiſh that you put to your helping hand to further the ſame.

ELIZABETH by the grace of God, Queene of England, France and Ireland, defender of the faith, &c. to al and ſingular, to whom theſe preſents ſhal come to be ſeen and red, greeting. Whereas the moſt excellent prince Iohn Baſiliwich king, and great duke of all Ruſſia, Volodomer, Moſcouie, and Nouogrod, king of Cazan and Aſtracan, lord of Pleſco, and great duke of Smolenſco, of Tuer, Vgor, and Permia, Valca, Bolhar and others, lord great duke of Nouogrod in the low country, of Cherniga, Rezan, Polotſco, Roſtoue, Yeraſlaue, Bealozera, Liefland, Oudor, Obdor and Condenſa, and gouernour of al the land of Siberia, and of the North parts and other, our moſt deare brother and fried did of late ſend vnto vs one Feodor Andrewich Spiſemsky, a noble man of his, to deale with vs in certaine ſpeciall buſineſſes, reſpecting very neerely the honour of either of vs, and being ſuch as without the ſpeeding of ſome Ambaſſadour of ours to the foreſaid moſt excellent prince, cannot be ſufficiently determined and cõcluded: For this cauſe we hauing great cõfidence in the fidelitie, induſtrie, prouident circumſpection and conuenient experience of our welbeloued ſeruant Ierome Bowes knight, a gentleman of qualitie of our houſholde, do by theſe preſents make and conſtitute the foreſaid Ierome Bowes knight our true & vndoubted Ambaſſadour, Orator and ſpecial commiſſioner, giuing and graunting to the ſame Ierome Bowes knight, our Orator, by the vertue of theſe preſents authoritie and commandement, as wel general as ſpecial, ſo that the ſpecial ſhall not preiudice the generall, nor on the other ſide the general the ſpecial, to intreat, conferre, conclude, and appoint in our name, and for vs with the foreſaid moſt excellent prince and his counſellers and deputies whatſoeuer, concerning the foreſaide buſineſſes, and ech of them, according as it ſhall ſeeme good, and for our honour to our foreſaide Orator, as alſo of and vpon ſuch things intreated, concluded and appointed, as in all and ſingular other things, any maner of way concerning the premiſſes, to deliuer in our name and for vs, ſufficient and effectual letters and inſtruments, and to require letters & inſtruments of the like validitie and effect of the other part, and to procure them lawfully to bee made and ſealed, and then to receiue them, and generally to doe, execute, and diſpatch al and ſingular other things concerning the premiſſes, in, and after the ſame maner, as we our ſelues would and might do if we were preſent, although they be ſuch things as may ſeeme of themſelues to require a more ſpeciall commandement: promiſing in good faith and in the word of a prince, that we will hold and obſerue all and ſingular the things which by our Ambaſſador aforeſayd ſhall be appointed, promiſed, agreed, accorded and concluded in this behalfe, as lawfull, gratefull, and firme, and thereupon as need ſhall require, will giue our letters patents, confirmatory and approbatory, in forme effectuall and autenticall. In witneſſe whereof, we haue cauſed our great ſeale of our kingdome of England to be put to theſe preſents, and ſigned them with our owne hand.

The ſame in Engliſh.

ELizabeth by the grace of God, Queene of England, France, and Ireland, defender of the faith, &c. to the moſt excellent Prince and Lord, Iohn Baſiliwich, by the ſame grace of God, King and great Duke of all Ruſsia, Volodomer, Moſcouie, and Nouogrod, King of Cazan and Aſtracan, Lord of Pleſco, and great Duke of Smolenſco, of Tuer, Vgor, and Permie, Viatſca, Bolhar, and others, Lord and great Duke of Nouogrod in the lowe countrey, of Chernigo, Rezan, Polotsko, Roſtoue, Iaroſlaue, Bealozera, Liſland, Oudor, Obdor, and Condenſa, and Gouernour of all the land of Siberia, and of the North parts and others, her deareſt brother and friend, Salutations.

Moſt excellent Prince, moſt deare brother and friend, by thoſe things which the worthy ambaſſador of your excellency declared vnto vs, we haue vnderſtood how kindly it would be taken, if we we ſhould ſend to your excellency an ambaſſador from vs, with commandement and inſtructions. In which matter your honourable requeſt hath ſo much pleaſed vs, that we could not any maner of way ſatiſfie our ſelues, except we performed the ſame. And hauing purpoſed with our ſelfe ſo to doe, we thought of, and remembred Ierome Bowes Knight, a gentleman of qualitie of our houſeholde, a man very much beloued of vs, whom at this preſent we ſend vnto your Maieſty, and to whoſe wiſedome and faithfulneſſe we haue committed all, whatſoeuer we take to appertaine to the aduancement of both our honors indifferently. In the diſcharge of which ſeruice, we doubt not but that all care and diligence ſhall be vſed on his part, ſo that we intreat your Maieſty to giue him credence in the proſecuting of thoſe things which he hath from vs in commandement, no leſſe then to our ſelfe, if we were preſent. And whereas Robert Iacob doctor of phyſicke is a man very deare vnto vs, whom the laſt yere we ſent vnto your excellency, we deſire that he may haue that fauor and eſtimation with you, which good princes thinke a moſt honeſt and vertuous man worthy of: for had we not caried great reſpect to our mutual friendſhip, and indeuour to gratifie your Maieſtie, we ſhould in no caſe haue parted with him. And ſeeing we continue ſtill the ſame good will towards your excellency, we doe euen promiſe to our ſelfe your honourable kindneſſes towards him: and we pray the almightie God to preſerue your Maieſty in good ſafetie and health. Giuen at our pallace of Greenewich the 19 day of Iune, in the yere of our Lord 1583, and of our reigne the fiue and twentieth.

Doctor Iacob.

Your Maieſties good ſiſter.

A briefe diſcourſe of the voyage of Sir Ierome Bowes knight, her Maieſties ambaſſadour to Iuan Vaſiliwich the Emperour of Muſcouia, in the yeere 1583.

The Emperour of Ruſsia that then liued, by name Iuan Vaſiliwich, hauing deliberately conſidered how neceſſary it were for the ſtrengthening of his eſtate, that a ſure commerce and entercourſe of merchants ſhould be againe renued betweene him and her ſacred Maieſty of England, with ſuch further immunities and priuileges for the honor and vtility of both their dominions, and ſubiects of the ſame, as vpon mutuall treatie of perſons interpoſed on both ſides, might be aſſented vnto: ſent ouer into this realme, in the yeere of our Lord 1582, as his ambaſſadour for that purpoſe, an ancient diſcreet gentleman of his houſeholde called Pheodor Andreuich Phiſemsky, accompanied with one of his Secretaries, for his better aſſiſtance in that expedition: and beſides his many other directions, whereof part were to be deliuered by word of mouth, and the reſt ſet downe in a letter vnder the Emperours ſignature, addreſſed to her Maieſty: he had in ſpeciall charge to ſollicit her Maieſty to ſend ouer with him to his maiſter an ambaſſador from her, to treat and contract of ſuch affaires of importance as concerned both the realmes, which was the principall end of his imployments hither. Whereupon her Maieſty very graciouſly inclining to the Emperors motion, and at the humble ſute of the Engliſh merchants trading thoſe countreys being caried with the ſame princely reſpects, to ſatiſfie his demands in that behalfe, made choice of ſir Ierome Bowes, a gentleman of her Court, ordinarily attending vpon her Maieſties perſon, towards whom was apparantly expreſſed her princely opinion and fauor by the credit of this negociation.

Pheodor Andreuich Phiſemsky the Emperors ambaſſadour.

After he had receiued his commiſſion, with other ſpeciall letters to the Emperor, with all other inſtructions apperteining to his charge, and that the ſayd Ruſſe ambaſſadour was licenced to returne home to his maiſter, being honorably entertained and rewarded, the Engliſh ambaſſador being attended vpon with forty perſons at the leaſt, very honourably furniſhed, whereof many were gentlemen, and one M. Humfrey Cole a learned preacher, tooke his leaue of her Maieſty at the Court at Greenwich the eighteenth of Iune, and with the other ambaſſadour, with their ſeuerall companies, embarked themſelues at Harwich the two and twentieth of the ſame, and after a ſtormy voyage at the Sea, they arriued both in ſafety in the road of S. Nicholas the three and twentieth of Iuly next following.

The Ruſſe ambaſſador lodged himſelfe at the abbey of S. Nicholas: and the Engliſh ambaſſador was lodged and well intertained by the Engliſh merchants, at their houſe at S. Nicholas, ſtanding in an Iſland called Roſe Iſland.

The Ruſſe ambaſſador hauing repoſed himſelfe one whole day, tooke his leaue of the Engliſh ambaſſador, and departed towards Moſco.

The Engliſh ambaſſadour abode yet at S. Nicholas foure or fiue dayes, when hauing made prouiſion of boats, and meanes to that purpoſe, he went forward vpon his iourney towards Moſco, to a towne called Colmogro, about foure ſcore miles diſtant from S. Nicholas.

The Hollanders intrude into our trade.

You muſt here vnderſtand that before the Engliſh ambaſſadors going into Ruſſia, there were diuers ſtrangers, but eſpecially certeine Dutch merchants, who had intruded themſelues to trade into thoſe countreys. Notwithſtanding a priuilege of the ſole trade thither was long before granted to the Engliſh merchants. Theſe Dutch men had already ſo handled the matter, as they had by chargeable meanes woonne three of the chiefeſt counſellers to the Emperour to be their aſſured friends, namely, Mekita Romanouich, Bodan Belskoy, and Andrew Shalkan the chancellor: for beſides dayly gifts that they beſtowed vpon them all, they tooke ſo much money of theirs at intereſt at fiue and twenty vpon the hundred, as they payd to ſome one of them fiue thouſand marks yeerely for the vſe of his money, and the Engliſh merchants at that time had not one friend in Court.

The ambaſſador hauing now ſpent fiue weeks at S. Nicholas and at Colmogro, there came to him then a gentleman ſent from the Emperor to entertaine him, and had in charge to conduct him vp the riuers towards Moſco, and to deliuer him prouiſion of all kinde of victuals neceſſary. This gentleman being a follower of Shalkan the chancellor, was by him (as it ſeemed) foiſted into that ſeruice of purpoſe, as afterward appeared by the courſe he tooke, to offer diſcourteſies, and occaſions of miſlike to the ambaſſador: for you muſt vnderſtand that the chancellor and the other two great counſellors (ſpoken of as friends to the Dutchmen) had a purpoſe to oppoſe themſelues directly againſt her Maieſties ambaſſage, eſpecially in that point, for the barring of all ſtrangers from trading into the Emperors countrey.

This gentleman conducted the Engliſh ambaſſador a thouſand miles vp the riuers of Dwina and Soughana, to a citie called Vologda, where receiued him another gentleman ſent from the Emperor, a man of better countenance then the other, who preſented the ambaſſador from the Emperor with two faire geldings well furniſhed after their maner.

At a city called Yeraſlaue vpon the riuer Volga there met the ambaſſador a duke well accompanied, ſent from the Emperor, who preſented him from the Emperor a coach and ten geldings for the more eaſie conueying of him to Moſco, from whence this citie was diſtant fiue hundred miles.

Two miles on this ſide Moſco there met the ambaſſador foure gentlemen of good account, accompanied with two hundred horſe: who after a litle ſalutation, not familiar, without imbracing, tolde him that they had to ſay to him from the Emperor, and would haue had him light on foot to haue heard it, notwithſtanding themſelues would ſtill haue ſit on horſebacke: which the ambaſſador ſoone refuſed to doe, and ſo they ſtood long vpon termes, whether both parties ſhould light or not: which afterwards agreed vpon, there was yet great niceneſſe whoſe foot ſhould not be firſt on ground.

Their meſſage being deliuered, and after hauing imbraced ech other, they conducted the ſayd ambaſſador to his lodging at Moſco, a houſe builded of purpoſe for him, themſelues being placed in the next houſe to it, as appointed to furniſh him of all prouiſions, and to be vſed by him vpon all other occaſions.

The ambaſſador hauing beene ſome dayes in Moſco, and hauing in all that time bene very honorably vſed from the Emperor (for ſuch was his will) though ſome of his chiefeſt counſellors (as is ſayd) had another purpoſe, and did often times cunningly put it in vſe: He was ſent for to Court, and was accompanied thither with about forty gentlemen honorably mounted, and ſumptuouſly araied, & in his paſſage from his lodging to the court, were ſet in a ward fiue or ſixe thouſand ſhot, that were of the Emperors gard. At the entry into the court there met him foure noble men apparelled in cloth of gold, and rich furres, their caps embroidered with pearle and ſtone, who conducted him towards the Emperor, till he was met with foure others of greater degree then they, who guided him yet further towards the Emperor, in which paſſage there ſtood along the walles, and ſate vpon benches and fourmes in row, ſeuen or eight hundred perſons, ſaid to be noblemen and gentlemen, all apparelled in garments of coloured ſatins and cloth of golde.

Theſe foure noblemen accompanied him to the Emperors chamber doore, where met him the Emperors herald, whoſe office is there held great: and with him all the great officers of the Emperors chamber, who all conducted him to the place where the Emperor ſate in his ſtate, hauing three crownes ſtanding by him, viz. of Moſcouia, Cazan, and Aſtrakan, and alſo by him 4. yoong noblemen of about twenty yeres of age, of ech ſide twaine, coſtly apparelled in white, holding vpon their ſhoulders ech of them a brode axe, much like to a Galloglas axe of Ireland, thin and very ſharpe, the ſteale or handle not paſt halfe a yard long, and there ſate about the chamber vpon benches and other low ſeats, about an hundred noblemen richly apparelled in cloth of golde.

The ambaſſador being thus brought to the Emperor to kiſſe his hand, after ſome complements and inquirie of her Maieſties health, he willed him to goe ſit downe in a place prouided for that purpoſe, nigh ten paſes diſtant from him, from whence he would haue had him to haue ſent him her Maieſties letters and preſent, which the ambaſſadour thinking not reaſonable ſtept forward towards the Emperor: in which paſſage the chancellor came to meet him, and would haue taken his letters: to whom the ambaſſador ſayd, that her Maieſty had directed no letters to him; and ſo went on, and deliuered them himſelfe to the Emperors owne hands.

And after, hauing thus deliuered her Maieſties letters and what he had els to ſay at that time, he was conducted to the Councell chamber, where hauing had conference with the councell of matters of his ambaſſage, he was ſoone after ſent for againe to the Emperour, where he dined in his preſence at a ſide table, nere vnto him, and all his company at another boord by, where alſo dined at other tables in the ſame place, all the chiefe noble men that were about the Court, to the number of an hundred. And in the time of this dinner, the Emperor vſed many fauors to the ambaſſadour and about the midſt of dinner (ſtanding vp) dranke a great carouſe to the health of the Queene his good ſiſter, and ſent him a great bowle full of Rheniſh wine and ſugar to pledge him.

The ambaſſadour after this, was often called to Court, where he had conference both with the Emperour and his councell of the matters in queſtion, touching both ambaſſages, which diuers times raiſed many iarres: and in the end, after ſundry meetings, the Emperour finding himſelfe not ſatisfied to his liking, for that the ambaſſadour had not power by his commiſſion to yeeld to euery thing that he thought fit, as a man whoſe will was ſeldome wonted to be gainſayd, let looſe his paſſion, and with a ſterne and angry countenance tolde him that he did not reckon the Queene of England to be his fellow: for there are (quoth he) that are her betters.

The ambaſſadour greatly miſliking theſe ſpeeches, & being very vnwilling (how dangerous ſoeuer it might proue to his owne perſon) to giue way to the Emperor, to derogate ought from the honour and greatneſſe of her Maieſty: and finding alſo that to ſubiect himſelfe to the angrie humour and diſpoſition of the Emperour was not the meanes to winne ought at his hands, with like courage and countenance to anſwere his, tolde him that the Queene his Miſtreſſe was as great a prince as any was in Chriſtendome, equall to him that thought himſelfe the greateſt, well able to defend herſelfe againſt his malice whoſoeuer, and wanted no meanes to offend any that either ſhee had, or ſhould haue cauſe to be enemy vnto. Yea (quoth he) how ſayeſt thou to the French king, and the king of Spaine? Mary (quoth the ambaſſadour) I holde the Queene my Miſtreſſe as great as any of them both. Then what ſayeſt thou (quoth hee) to the Emperour of Germany? Such is the greatneſſe of the Queene my Miſtreſſe (quoth the ambaſſadour) as the King her father had (not long ſince) the Emperor in his pay, in his warres againſt France.

This anſwere miſliked the Emperor yet ſo much more, as that he tolde the ambaſſadour, that were he not an ambaſſador, he would throw him out of the doores, Whereunto he anſwered that he might doe his will, for he was now faſt within his countrey: but he had a Miſtreſſe who (he doubted not) would be reuenged of any iniury that ſhould be done vnto him. Whereupon the Emperour in great ſudden bade him get him home. And he with no more reuerence then ſuch vſage required, ſaluted the Emperor, and went his way.

All this notwithſtanding, the ambaſſadour was not much ſooner out of the chamber, and the Emperours cholar ſomewhat ſetled, but he deliuered to his councell that ſtood about him many commendations in the fauor of the ambaſſador, for that he would not indure one ill word to be ſpoken againſt his Miſtreſſe, and therewithall wiſhed himſelfe to haue ſuch a ſeruant.

The ambaſſadour had not beene much more then one houre in his lodging, but the Emperour imagining (as it ſeemed) by the extraordinary behauior of the ambaſſador (for he wanted not wit to iudge) that he had found what was the Emperors caſe, ſent his principall ſecretary vnto him, to tell him, that notwithſtanding what had paſt, yet for the great loue that he bare to the Queene his ſiſter, he ſhould very ſhortly be called againe to Court, and haue a reſolution of all the matters in queſtion: and this Secretary was now further content to impart, and ſayd to the ambaſſadour that the Emperour was fully reſolued to ſend a greater noble man home with him in ambaſſage to the Queene his ſiſter, then euer he yet at any time ſent out of his countrey: and that he determined alſo to ſend to the Queene a preſent woorth three thouſand pounds, and to gratifie himſelfe at his departure with a gift that ſhould be woorth a thouſand pounds: and tolde him alſo that the next day the Emperour would ſend a great noble man vnto him, to conferre with him of certaine abuſes done him by Shalkan the chancellor, and his miniſters.

And ſo the day following he ſent Bodan Belskoy the chiefeſt counſeller that he had, a man moſt in credit with him: this man examined all matters wherewith the ambaſſador had found himſelfe grieued, and ſupplied him with what hee wanted, and righted him in all things wherein hee had beene wronged.

Not long after the returne of this noble man, the Emperor cauſed to be ſet downe in his owne preſence, a new and much larger allowance of diet for the ambaſſador then he had had before, and ſhortly after ſent the ſame to the ambaſſadour by his principall Secretarie Sauio Frollo. This diet was ſo great, as the ambaſſadour often times ſought to haue it leſſened, but the Emperour would not by any meanes.

The ſcroule of the new diet was this:

One buſhell of fine meale for three dayes.
One buſhell of wheate meale for a day and a halfe.
Two liue geeſe for one day.
Twenty hennes for the day.
Seuen ſheepe for a day.
One oxe for three dayes.
One ſide of porke for a day.
Seuentie egges for a day.
Ten pound of butter.
Seuenty peny white loaues of bread.
Twelue peny loaues of bread.
One veather or gallon of vineger.
Two veathers of ſalt cabiges.
One pecke of onions.
Ten pound of ſalt.
On altine, or ſixe peny woorth of waxe candles.
Two altines of tallow candles.
One fourth part of a veather of cherrie mead.
As much of Mallynouomead.
Halfe a veather of burnt wine.
One veather of ſodden mead called Obarni.
Three veathers of ſweet mead.
Ten veathers of white mead.
Fifteene veathers of ordinary mead.
Foure veathers of ſweet beere.
Fifteene veathers of beere.
Halfe a pound of pepper.
Three ſollitincks or ounces of ſaffron.
One ſollitincke of maſe.
One ſollitincke of nutmegs.
Two ſollitincks of cloues.
Three ſollitincks of ſinamon.

Prouender, One buſhell of oats.
One load of hay.
One load of ſtraw.

Now he began ſo much to diſcouer his purpoſe and affections towards her Maieſty & her countrey, as he ſent to the ambaſſador, intreating him that his || preacher, and doctor Iacob his Engliſh phyſician, might ſet downe the points of the religion in vſe in England, which the ambaſſadour cauſed to be done accordingly, and ſent them vnto him, who ſeemed ſo well to like them, as he cauſed them (with much good allowance) to be publikely read before diuers of his councell, and many others of his nobility. cp.Cole

Now he drew hotly againe in queſtion to marry ſome kinſewoman of her Maieſties, & that he would ſend againe into England, to haue ſome one of them to wife, and if her Maieſtie would not vpon his next ambaſſage ſend him ſuch a one as he required, himſelfe would then goe into England, and cary his treaſure with him, and marry one of them there.

Here you muſt vnderſtand that the yeere before this ambaſſage, he had ſent to her Maieſty by his ambaſſador to haue had the lady Mary Haſtings in marriage, which intreaty by meanes of her inability of body, by occaſion of much ſickneſſe, or perhaps, of no great liking either of herſelfe or friends, or both, tooke no place.

The ambaſſador was now ſo farre growen into the Emperors fauor, & his affection ſo great to England, as thoſe great counſellers that were the ambaſſadors great enemies before, were now deſirous of ſome publike courteſies at his hands for their aduantage to the Emperour: neither durſt they now any more interpoſe themſelues twixt the Emperour and him: for not long before this, the Emperor for abuſing the ambaſſador, had (to ſhew his fauor towards him) beaten Shalkan the chanceller very grieuouſly, and had ſent him word, that he would not leaue one of his race aliue.

Now whileſt the ambaſſador was thus ſtrongly poſſeſt of the Emperours fauor, he imployed himſelfe in all he might, not onely for the ſpeedy diſpatch of the negotiation he had in hand, but laboured alſo by all the good meanes he might, further to benefit his countrey and countreymen, and ſo not long after wanne at the Emperours hands not onely all thoſe things he had in commiſſion to treat for by his inſtructions, but alſo ſome other of good and great importance, for the benefit of the merchants.

Priuate ſutes obteined of the Emperor by the ambaſſador.

Leaue for Richard Franſham an Engliſh man and apothecary to the Emperour, his wife, and children, to come home into England, and to bring with him all ſuch goods as he had gotten there.

He obteined like leaue for Richard Elmes an Engliſhman one of the Emperours ſurgions.

He alſo got leaue for Iane Ricards the widow of Doctor Bomelius a Dutchman, and phyſician to the Emperour, who for treaſon practiſed with the king of Pole againſt the ſayd Emperour, was roſted to death at the city of Moſco, in the yere 1579.

Theſe following he obteined for the behoofe of the merchants.

HE procured for the merchants promiſe of recompenſe for certaine goods taken from their factors by robbery vpon the Volga.

He obtained likewiſe the payment of fiue hundred marks, which was payd for ten yeeres before his going into Ruſſia (into the Emperours receit) for a rent of a houſe that they had at Vologda.

He alſo got granted for them the repayment of fifteene hundred marks, which had bene exacted of them the two laſt yeres before his comming thither.

He got alſo for them order for the repayment of an olde and deſperate debt of three thouſand marks, a debt ſo deſperate, as foure yeeres left out of their accounts, and by the opinion of them all, not thought fit to be dealt with, for too much offending the Emperor, or impeaching his other buſineſſe, which was thought at leaſt otherwiſe ſufficient, and was therefore left out of his inſtructions from her Maieſty.

He obteined that all ſtrangers were forbidden to trade any more into Ruſſia, and that the paſſage and trade to all the Emperors Northren coaſts and countries, from the Wardhouſe to the riuer of Ob ſhould be onely free to the Engliſh nation.

Laſtly, of a great deſire he had to do the merchants good, without motion either of themſelues here, or their Agents there, or any other of them, he obteined of the Emperour the abatement of all their cuſtome which they had long before payd, and agreed ſtill to continue, which cuſtome the Dutchmen and ſtrangers being remooued, as now it was agreed, amounted to two thouſand pounds yerely.

All theſe were granted, ſome already payd before his comming from Moſco, the olde priuilege ratified, newly written, ſigned and ſealed, and was to be deliuered to the ambaſſadour at his next comming to Court, before when the Emperor fell ſicke of a ſurfet, and ſo died.

After whoſe death the caſe was woondrouſly altered with the ambaſſador: for whereas both in his owne conceit, and in all mens opinion els, he was in great forwardnes to haue growen a great man with the Emperor, what for the loue he bare to her Maieſty, and the particular liking he had of himſelfe, he now fell into the hands of his great enemies, Mekita Romanouich and Andre Shalkan the chanceller, who, after the death of the Emperour, tooke the ſpeciall gouernment vpon themſelues, and ſo preſently cauſed the ambaſſadour to be ſhut vp a cloſe priſoner in his owne houſe, for the ſpace of nine weeks, and was ſo ſtraightly guarded and badly vſed by thoſe that attended him, as he dayly ſuſpected ſome further miſchiefe to haue followed: for in this time there grew a great vprore in Moſco of nigh twenty thouſand perſons, which remembring that his enemies reigned, ſomewhat amazed the ambaſſadour, but yet afterwards the matter fell out againſt that great counſellor Bodan Belskoy, whom I noted before to be a ſpecial man in the old Emperors fauor: who was now notwithſtanding ſo outragiouſly aſſaulted, as that he was forced to ſeeke the Emperors chamber for his ſafety, and was afterwards ſent away to Cazan, a place he had in gouernment, fiue hundred miles from Moſco, where he hath remained euer ſince, and neuer as yet called againe to court, at which time the ambaſſador expected ſome ſuch like meaſure, and prepared himſelfe aſwell as he could, for his defence: yet happily after this, was ſent for to court, to haue his diſpatch, and to take his leaue of the Emperor: whither being conducted (not after the woonted maner) and brought to the councell chamber, came to him onely Shalkan the chanceller and a brother of his, who without more adoe, tolde him for the ſumme of his diſpatch, that this Emperour would not treat of further amity with the Queene his miſtreſſe, then ſuch as was betweene his late father and her, before his comming thither: and would not heare any reply to be made by the ambaſſadour, but preſently cauſed both himſelfe and all his company to be diſarmed of their weapons, and go towards the Emperor. In which paſſage there were ſuch outrages offered him, as had he not vſed more patience then his diſpoſition afforded him, or the occaſion required, he had not in likelihood eſcaped with life, but yet at length was brought to the preſence of the Emperour, who ſayd nothing to him, but what the chanceller had already done, but offered him a letter to carry to her Maieſty, which the ambaſſadour (for that he knew it conteined nothing that did concerne his ambaſſage) refuſed till he ſaw his danger grow too great: neither would the Emperour ſuffer the ambaſſadour to reply ought, nor well he could, for they had now of purpoſe taken away his interpretor, being yet vnwilling (as it ſeemed, and ſuſpecting the ambaſſadours purpoſe) that the Emperor and other ſhould know how diſhonorably he had beene handled: for there was at that time, in that preſence a noble braue gentleman, one Boris Pheodorouich Godenoe, brother to the Emperor that now is, who yet after the death of the Emperour did alwayes vſe the ambaſſadour moſt honorably, and would very willingly haue done him much more kindneſſe, but his authority was not yet, till the coronation of the Emperor: but notwithſtanding he ſent often vnto him, not long before his departure, and accompanied his many honorable fauours with a preſent of two faire pieces of cloth of golde, and a tymber of very good ſables: and deſired that as there was kindneſſe and brotherhood twixt the Emperor and her Maieſty, ſo there might be loue and brotherhood twixt him and the ambaſſadour. Sauing from this man, there was now no more fauour nor friendſhip left for the ambaſſadour in Moſcouia: for the chanceller Shalkan had now ſent him word that the Engliſh Emperor was dead: he had now nothing offered him but dangers and diſgraces too many, and a haſty diſpatch from the Moſco, that he might not tary the coronation of the new Emperour: offences many in his preparation for his long iourney, onely one meane gentleman appointed to accompany him to the ſea ſide, expecting daily in his paſſage ſome ſudden reuenge to be done vpon him, for ſo he vnderſtood it was threatned before his comming from the Moſco, & therefore with reſolution prouided by all the meanes he might, by himſelfe and his ſeruants for his defence (for now was his danger knowen ſuch, as the Engliſh merchants did altogether leaue him, although he commanded them in her Maieſties name to accompany him) that if any ſuch thing ſhould happen to be offered him, as many of them as he could that ſhould offer to execute it, ſhould die with him for company: which being perceiued was thought to make his paſſage the ſafer. So afterward being driuen to diſgeſt many iniuries by the way, at length he recouered S. Nicholas, where remembring his vnfortunate loſſe of the old Emperor, and his ill vſage ſince then at the Moſco, he being forced to take a bare letter for the ſumme of his diſpatch, conteyning nothing of that he came for, and the poore and diſgracefull preſent ſent him (in the name of the Emperour) in reſpect of that that was meant him by the old Emperor, knowing all theſe to be done in diſgrace of her Maieſtie and himſelfe, determined now to be diſcharged of ſome part of them in ſuch ſort as he could, and ſo prouiding as he might to preuent his danger, in getting to his ſhippe, furniſhing and placing his men to anſwere any aſſault that ſhould be offered him, after he had bidden farewell to the vncourteous gentleman that brought him thither, by three or foure of the valianteſt and diſcreeteſt men he had, he ſent to be deliuered him or left at his lodging, his maiſters weake letter, and worſſe preſent, and ſo afterwards happily (though hardly) recouered his ſhip in ſafetie, although preſently afterwards, there was great hurly burly after him, to force him to receiue the ſame againe, but failed of their purpoſe. So came the ambaſſadour from S. Nicholas the twelft day of Auguſt, and arriued at Graueſend the twelft of September following, and attended her Maieſtie at the court at Otelands, where, after hauing kiſt her Maieſties hands, and deliuered ſome part of the ſucceſſe of his ambaſſage, he preſented her an Elke or Loſhe, the Red deere of the countrey, and alſo a brace of Raine deare, Buck and Doe, both bearing very huge hornes: they in her Maieſties preſence drew a ſled and a man vpon it, after the maner of the Samoeds, a people that inhabite in the Northeaſt from Ruſſia, and were that yeere come ouer the ſea in the winter ſeaſon vpon the yce, in their ſleds, drawen with theſe deere into Ruſſia, where the ambaſſadour bought of them ſeuenteene, whereof he brought nine aliue into Kent.

Firſt the honourable attempt to diſcouer by ſea Northeaſt and Northweſt named for Cathay, being chiefly procured by priuiledge from king Edward the ſixt, and other his nobilitie, by and at the coſt and ſute of M. Sebaſtian Cabota, then gouernor for diſcoueries with ſir Andrew Iudde, ſir George Barnes, ſir William Garrard, M. Anthony Huſſie, and a companie of merchants, was in the laſt yeere of his Maieſties reigne 1553. The generall charge whereof was committed to one ſir Hugh Willoughbie knight, a goodly Gentleman, accompanied with ſufficient number of Pilots, Maiſters, Merchants and Mariners, hauing three ſhippes well furniſhed, to wit, The Bona Sperança, the Edward Bonaduenture, and the Confidentia. The Edward Bonaduenture, Richard Chanceller being Pilot, and Steuen Burrough Maiſter, hauing diſcouered Wardhouſe vpon the coaſt of Finmark, by ſtorme or fogge departed from the reſt, found the bay of S. Nicholas now the chiefe port for Ruſſia, there wintred in ſafetie, and had ayde of the people at a village called Newnox.

Note.

The other two ſhippes attempting further Northwards (as appeared by pamphlets found after written by ſir Hugh Willoughbie) were in September encountred with ſuch extreame colde, that they put backe to ſeeke a wintring place: and miſſing the ſaide baye fell vpon a deſert coaſt in Lappia, entring into a Riuer immediately frozen vp, ſince diſcouered, named Arzina Reca, diſtant Eaſt from a Ruſſian Monaſtery of Monkes called Pechingho, from whence they neuer returned, but all to the number of 70. perſons periſhed, which was for want of experience to haue made caues and ſtoues. Theſe were found with the ſhippes the next Summer Anno 1554. by Ruſſe fiſhermen: and in Anno 1555. the place ſent vnto by Engliſh Merchants as hereafter appeareth.

Anno 1554.

Anno 1554. the ſayd ſhippe Edward Bonaduenture (although robbed homewardes by Flemings) returned with her company to London, ſhewing and ſetting foorth their entertainments and diſcouery of the countreys euen to the citie of Moſco, from whence they brought a priuilege written in Ruſſe with the Kings or great Dukes ſeale, the other two ſhippes looked for and vnknowen to them where they were.

Anno 1555.

The King and Queenes letters.

An. 1555. the ſaid company of Merchants for diſcouerie vpon a new ſupply, ſent thither againe with two ſhips, to wit, the Edward Bonaduenture, & another bearing the name of the King and Queene, Philip and Marie, whoſe Maieſties by their letters to the ſaid Moſcouite, recommended ſundry their ſubiects then paſſing, wherof certaine, to wit, Richard Chanceller, George Killingworth, Henry Lane, and Arthur Edwards, after their arriuall at the Bay, and paſſing vp Dwina to Vologda, went firſt vp to Moſco, where, vpon knowledge of the ſaid letters, they with their traine had ſpeciall entertainment, with houſes and diet appointed, and ſhortly permitted to the princes preſence, they were with gentlemen brought through the citie of Moſco, to the caſtle and palace, repleniſhed with numbers of people, and ſome gunners. They entred ſundry roomes, furniſhed in ſhew with ancient graue perſonages, all in long garments of ſundry colours, golde, tiſſue, baldekin, and violet, as our veſtments and copes haue bene in England, ſutable with caps, iewels, and chaines. Theſe were found to be no courtiers, but ancient Moſcouites, inhabitants, and other their merchants of credite, as the maner is, furniſhed thus from the Wardrobe and Treaſurie, waiting and wearing this apparell for the time, and ſo to reſtore it.

Then entring into the preſence, being a large roome floored with carpets, were men of more eſtate, and richer ſhew, in number aboue an hundred ſet ſquare: who after the ſaid Engliſh men came in, doing reuerence, they all ſtood vp, the prince onely ſitting, and yet riſing at any occaſion, when our King and Queenes names were read or ſpoken. Then after ſpeeches by interpretation, our men kiſſing his hande, and bidden to dinner, were ſtayed in another roome, and at dinner brought through, where might be ſeene maſſie ſiluer and gilt plate, ſome like and as bigge as kilderkins, and waſhbowles, and entring the dining place, being the greater roome, the prince was ſet bare headed, his crowne and rich cappe ſtanding vpon a pinnacle by. Not farre diſtant ſate his Metropolitane, with diuers other of his kindred, and chiefe Tartarian Captaines: none ſate ouer againſt him, or any, at other tables, their backes towards him: which tables all furniſhed with gheſts ſet, there was for the Engliſhmen, named by the Ruſſes, Ghoſti Carabelski, to wit, ſtrangers or merchants by ſhip, a table in the middeſt of the roome, where they were ſet direct againſt the prince: and then began the ſeruice, brought in by a number of his yoong Lordes and Gentlemen, in ſuch rich attire, as is aboue ſpecified: and ſtill from the Princes table (notwithſtanding their owne furniture) they had his whole meſſes ſet ouer all in maſſie fine golde, deliuered euery time from him by name to them, by their ſeuerall Chriſtian names, as they ſate, viz. Richard, George, Henry, Arthur. Likewiſe bread and ſundry drinkes of purified mead, made of fine white and clarified honie. At their riſing, the prince called them to his table, to receiue each one a cup from his hand to drinke, and tooke into his hand Maſter George Killingworths beard, which reached ouer the table, & pleaſantly deliuered it the Metropolitane, who ſeeming to bleſſe it, ſayd in Ruſſe, this is Gods gift. As in deede at that time it was not onely thicke, broad, and yellow coloured, but in length fiue foot and two inches of aſſize. Then taking leaue, being night, they were accompanied and followed with a number, carying pots of drinke, and diſhes of meat dreſſed, to our lodging.

M. Killingworths beard of a marueilous length.

This yeere the two ſhippes, with the dead bodies of Sir Hugh Willoughbie, and his people, were ſent vnto by Maſter Killingworth, (which remained there in Moſco Agent almoſt two yeeres) and much of the goods and victuals were recouered and ſaued.

Anno 1556.

Anno 1556. The company ſent two ſhips for Ruſſia, with extraordinary maſters and ſaylers to bring home the two ſhips, which were frozen in Lappia, in the riuer of Arzina aforeſaid. The two ſhips ſent this yeere from England ſailing from Lapland to the Bay of S. Nicholas, tooke in lading with paſſengers, to wit, a Ruſſe ambaſſador, named Ioſeph Napea, and ſome of his men ſhipped with Richard Chanceller in the Edward. But ſo it fel out that the two which came from Lappia, with all their new Maſters and Mariners, neuer were heard of, but in foule weather, and wrought ſeas, after their two yeeres wintring in Lapland, became, as is ſuppoſed, vnſtanch, and ſunke, wherein were drowned alſo diuers Ruſſes merchants, and ſeruants of the ambaſſadour. A third ſhippe the Edward aforeſayd, falling on the North part of Scotland, vpon a rocke was alſo loſt, and Maſter Chanceller, with diuers other, drowned. The ſayd Ruſſe ambaſſadour hardly eſcaping, with other his men, mariners, & ſome goods ſaued, were ſent for into Scotland, from the King, Queene, and Merchants (the meſſenger being M. Doctor Laurence Huſſie, and others:) And then, as in the chronicles appeareth, honorably entertained and receiued at London.

This yeere alſo the company furniſhed and ſent out a pinneſſe, named the Serchthrift, to diſcouer the harborowes in the North coaſt from Norway to Wardhouſe, and ſo to the Bay of S. Nicholas. There was in her Maſter and Pilot, Stephen Burrough, with his brother William, and eight other. Their diſcouery was beyond the Bay, towards the Samoeds, people dwelling neare the riuer of Ob, and found a ſound or ſea with an Iland called Vaigats, firſt by them put into the Carde or Mappe. In that place they threw ſnowe out of their ſaid pinneſſe, with ſhouels in Auguſt, by which extremitie, and lacke of time, they came backe to Ruſſia, and wintred at Colmogro.

Boghar voyage.

Anno 1557. The company with foure good ſhips, ſent backe the ſaid Ruſſe ambaſſadour, and in company with him, ſent as an Agent, for further diſcouery, Maſter Anthony Ienkinſon, who afterward anno 1558, with great fauour of the prince of Moſcouia, and his letters paſſed the riuer Volga to Cazan, and meaning to ſeeke Cathay by land, was by many troupes and companies of vnciuil Tartarians encountred, and in danger: but keeping company with merchants of Bactria, or Boghar, and Vrgeme, trauelling with camels, he with his company, went to Boghar, and no further: whoſe entertainment of the king is to be had of maſter Ienkinſon, which returned anno 1559. to Moſcouie. And in anno 1560. he, with Henry Lane, came home into England: which yeere was the firſt ſafe returne, without loſſe or ſhipwracke, or dead fraight, & burnings. And at this time was the firſt traffike to the Narue in Liuonia, which confines with Lituania, & all the dominions of Ruſſia: and the markets, faires, commodities, great townes & riuers, were ſent vnto by diuers ſeruants: the reports were taken by Henry Lane, Agent, and deliuered to the companie, 1561. The trade to Rie, and Reuel, of old time hath bene long ſince frequented by our Engliſh nation, but this trade to the Narue was hitherto concealed from vs by the Danskers and Lubeckers.

Anno 1561. the ſaid Maſter Anthony Ienkinſon went Agent into Ruſſia, who the next yeere after, paſſing all the riuer of Volga to Aſtracan, and ouer the Caſpian ſea, arriued in Perſia, and opened the trade thither.

Alcock ſlaine in Perſia. Banniſter died in Media. Edwards died at Aſtracan.

Alſo betweene the yeeres of 1568, and 1573. ſundry voyages after Maſter Ienkinſons, were made by Thomas Alcock, Arthur Edwards, Maſter Thomas Banniſter, and Maſter Geffrey Ducket, whoſe returne (if ſpoyle neere Volga had not preuented by rouing theeues) had altogether ſalued and recouered the companies (called the olde companies) great loſſe, charges, and damages: but the ſaying is true, By vnitie ſmall things grow great, & by contention great things become ſmall. This may be vnderſtood beſt by the company. The frowardneſſe of ſome few, and euill doing of ſome vniuſt factors, was cauſe of much of the euill ſucceſſe.

Arthur Edwards was ſent againe 1579. and died in the voyage at Aſtracan. About which matters, are to be remembred the voyages of Maſter Thomas Randolph Eſquire, Ambaſſador, anno 1567. And late of Sir Ierome Bowes, anno 1583. both tending and treating for further diſcoueries, freedomes, and priuileges, wherewith I meddle not. But in concluſion, for their paines and aduentures this way (as diuers do now adayes other wayes) as worthy Gentlemen ſent from princes, to doe their countrey good, I put them in your memorie, with my hearty farewell. The moſt ſolemne, and magnificent coronation of ‖ Pheodor Iuanowich, Emperour of Ruſſia &c. the tenth of Iune, in the yeere 1584. ſeene and obſerued by Maſter Ierom Horſey gentleman, and ſeruant to her Maieſty, a man of great trauell, and long experience in thoſe parts: wherwith is alſo ioyned the courſe of his iourney ouer land from Moſco to Emden.

The death of Iuan Vaſiliwich 1584. Apr. 18.

L. Boris adopted as the Emperors third ſonne.

When the old Emperour Iuan Vaſiliwich died, (being about the eighteenth of April, 1584. after our computation) in the citie of Moſco, hauing raigned 54. yeeres, there was ſome tumult and vprore among ſome of the nobilitie, and comminaltie, which notwithſtanding was quickly pacified. Immediately the ſame night, the Prince Boris Pheodorowich Godonoua, Knez Iuan Pheodorowich, Meſthis Slaſsky, Knez Iuan Petrowich Suſky, Mekita Romanowich & Bodan Iacoulewich Belskoy, being all noble men, and chiefeſt in the Emperors Will, eſpecially the Lord Boris, whom he adopted as his third ſonne, & was brother to the Empreſſe, who was a mã very wel liked of al eſtates, as no leſſe worthy for his valure & wiſedome: all theſe were appointed to diſpoſe, & ſettle his ſonne Pheodor Iuanowich, hauing one ſworne another, and all the nobilitie, and officers whoſoeuer. In the morning ẏ dead Emperor was layd into the Church of Michael the Archangel, into a hewen ſepulcre, very richly decked with veſtures fit for ſuch a purpoſe: and preſent Proclamation was made, (Emperor Pheodor Iuanowich of all Ruſſia &c.) Throughout all the citie of Moſco was great watch and ward, with ſouldiers, and gunners, good orders eſtabliſhed, and officers placed to ſubdue the tumulters, and mainteine quietnes: to ſee what ſpeede and policie was in this caſe vſed was a thing worth the beholding. This being done in Moſco, great men of birth and accompt were alſo preſently ſent to the bordering Townes, as Smolensko Vobsko, Kaſan, Nouogorod &c. with freſh garriſon, and the old ſent vp. As vpon the 4. of May a parliament was held, wherein were aſſembled, the Metropolitane, Archbiſhops, Biſhops, Priors, and chiefe clergie men, and all the nobilitie whatſoeuer: where many matters were determined not pertinent to my purpoſe, yet all tended to a new reformation in the gouernment: but eſpecially the terme, and time was agreed vpon for the ſolemnizing of the new Emperors coronation. In the meane time yͤ Empreſſe, wife to the old Emperor, was with her child the Emperors ſonne, Charlewich Demetrie Iuanowich, of one yeres age or there abouts, ſent with her father Pheodor Pheodorowich Nagay, & that kindred, being 5. Brothers, to a towne called Ouglets, which was giuen vnto her, and the young Prince her ſonne, with all the lands belonging to it in the ſhire, with officers of all ſortes appointed, hauing allowance of apparell, iewels, diet, horſe &c. in ample maner belonging to the eſtate of a princeſſe. The time of mourning after their vſe being expired, called Sorachyn, or fortie orderlie dayes, the day of the ſolemnizing of this coronation, with great preparations, was come, being vpon the 10. day of Iune, 1584. and that day then Sunday, he being of the age of 25. yeeres: at which time, Maſter Ierom Horſey was orderly ſent for, and placed in a fit roome to ſee all the ſolemnitie. The Emperor comming out of his Pallace, there went before him, the Metropolitan, Archbiſhops, Biſhops, and chiefeſt Monkes, and Clergie men, with very rich Copes, and Prieſtes garments vpon them, carying pictures of our Ladie &c. with the Emperours Angell, banners, cenſers, and many other ſuch ceremonious things, ſinging all the way. The Emperour with his nobilitie in order entred the Church named Blaueſhina, or Bleſſednes, where prayers, and ſeruice were vſed, according to the maner of their Church: that done, they went thence to the Church, called Michael the Archangell, and there alſo vſed the like prayers, and ſeruice: and from thence to our Lady Church, Prechiſta, being their Cathedrall Church. In the middeſt thereof was a chaire of maieſtie placed, wherein his Aunceſtors vſed to ſit at ſuch extraordinarie times: his robes were then changed, and moſt rich and vnualuable garments put on him: being placed in this Princely ſeate, his nobility ſtanding round about him in their degrees, his imperiall Crowne was ſet vpon his head by the Metropolitane, his Scepter globe in his right hand, his ſword of Iuſtice in his left of great riches: his 6. Crownes alſo, by which he holdeth his kingdomes were ſet before him, and the Lord Boris Pheodorowich was placed at his right hand: then the Metropolitan read openly a booke of a ſmall volume, with exhortations to the Emperour to miniſter true Iuſtice, to inioy with tranquilitie the Crowne of his anceſtors, which God had giuen him, and vſed theſe words following:

Through the will of the almighty & without beginning God, which was before this world, whom we glorifie in the Trinitie, one onely God, the Father, the Sonne, and the holy Ghoſt, maker of all things, worker of all in all euery where, fulfiller of all things, by which will, and working, he both liueth, and giueth life to man: that our only God which enſpireth euery one of vs his only children with his word to diſcerne God through our Lord Ieſus Chriſt, and the holy quickning ſpirit of life, now in theſe perilous times eſtabliſh vs to keep the right Scepter, and ſuffer vs to raigne of our ſelues to the good profit of the land, to the ſubduing of the people, together with the enemies, & the maintenance of vertue. And ſo the Metropolitan bleſſed and layd his croſſe vpon him. After this, he was taken out of his chaire of Maieſtie, hauing vpon him an vpper robe adorned with precious ſtones of all ſorts, orient pearles of great quantitie, but alwayes augmented in riches: it was in waight two hundred pounds, the traine, and parts thereof borne vp by 6. Dukes, his chiefe imperiall Crowne vpon his head very precious: his ſtaffe imperiall in his right hand of an vnicornes horne of three foot and a halfe in length beſet with rich ſtones, bought of Merchants of Ausburge by the old Emperour in An. 1581. and coſt him 7000. Markes ſterling. This Iewel M. Horſey kept ſometimes, before the Emperor had it. His ſcepter globe was caried before him by the prince Boris Pheodorowich, his rich cap beſet with rich ſtones and pearles was caried before him by a Duke: his 6. Crownes alſo were caried by Demetrius Iuanowich Godonoua, the Emperors vncle, Mekita Romanowich the Emperors vncle, Stephan Vaſiliwich, Gregory Vaſiliwich, Iuan Vaſiliwich brothers of the blood royal. Thus at laſt the Emperor came to the great Church doore, and the people cried, God ſaue our Emperour Pheodor Iuanowich of al Ruſſia. His horſe was there ready moſt richly adorned, with a couering of imbrodered pearle and precious ſtones, ſaddle, and all furniture agreeable to it, reported to be worth 300000, markes ſterling.

There was a bridge made of 150. fadome in length, three maner of waies, three foote aboue ground and two fadome broad, for him to goe from one Church to the other with his Princes and nobles from the preſſe of the people, which were in number infinite, and ſome at that time preſſed to death with the throng. As the Emperour returned out of the Churches, they were ſpred vnder foot with cloth of gold, the porches of the Churches with red veluet, the bridges with ſcarlet, and ſtammell cloth from one church to another: and as ſoone as the Emperor was paſſed by, the cloth of gold, veluet and ſcarlet was cut, and taken of thoſe that could come by it, euery man deſirous to haue a piece, to reſerue it for a monument: ſiluer and gold coyne, then mynted of purpoſe was caſt among the people in great quantitie. The lord Boris Pheodorowich was ſumptuouſly, and richly attired, with his garments decked with great orient pearle, beſet with al ſorts of precious ſtones. In like rich maner were apparreled all the family of the Godonouses in their degrees, with the reſt of the princes, and nobilitie, whereof one named Knez Iuan Michalowich Glynsky, whoſe robe, horſe, and furniture, was in regiſter found worth one hundred thouſand markes ſterling, being of great antiquitie. The Empreſſe being in her pallace, was placed in her chaire of Maieſty alſo before a great open window: moſt precious, and rich were her robes, and ſhining to behold, with rich ſtones, and orient pearle beſet, her crowne was placed vpon her head, accompanied with her Princeſſes, and Ladies of eſtate: then cried out the people, God preſerue our noble Empreſſe Irenia. After all this the Emperour came into the Parliament houſe which was richly decked: there he was placed in his royall ſeat adorned as before: his 6. crownes were ſet before him vpon a table: the baſin, and ewer royall of gold held by his knight of gard with his men ſtanding two on each ſide in white apparell of cloth of ſiluer, called Kindry, with ſcepters, and battle axes of gold in their hands: the Princes, and nobilitie were all placed according to their degrees all in their rich roabs.

The Emperour after a ſhort oration, permitted euery man in order to kiſſe his hande: which being done, he remoued to a princely ſeate prepared for him at the table: where he was ſerued by his nobles in very princely order. The three out roomes being very great, and large were beſet with plate of golde, and ſiluer round, from the ground vp to the vauts one vpon the other: among which plate were many barrels of ſiluer and golde: this ſolemnitie, and triumph laſted a whole weeke, wherein many royall paſtimes were ſhewed and vſed: after which the chiefeſt men of the nobilitie were elected to their places of office, & dignitie, as the Prince Boris Pheodorowich was made chiefe Counſeller to the Emperor, Maſter of the horſe, had the charge of his perſon, Liuetenant of the Empire, and Warlike engins, Gouernor or Liuetenant of the Empire of Cazan, and Aſtracan and others: to this dignitie were by Parliament, and gift of the Emperor giuen him many reuenues, and rich lands, as there was giuen him, and his for euer to inherite a prouince called Vaga, of 300. Engliſh miles in length, and 250. in bredth, with many townes and great villages populous and wealthy, his yeerely reuenue out of that prouince, is 35. thouſand markes ſterling, being not the 5. part of his yerely reuenue. Further, he and his houſe be of ſuch authoritie, and power, that in 40. dayes warning they are able to bring into the fielde 100. thouſand Souldiers well furniſhed.

The concluſion of the Emperors Coronation was a peale of ordinance, called a peale royall two miles without the citie, being 170. great pieces of braſſe of all ſorts, as faire as any can be made, theſe pieces were all diſcharged with ſhot againſt bulwarkes made of purpoſe: 20. thouſand hargubuſers ſtanding in 8. rankes two miles in length, appareled all in veluet, coloured ſilke & ſtammels, diſcharged their ſhot alſo twiſe ouer in good order: and ſo the Emperor accompanied with all his princes and nobles, at the leaſt 50. thouſand horſe departed through the City to his pallace. This royall coronation would aſke much time, and many leaues of paper to be deſcribed particularly as it was performed: it ſhal ſuffice, to vnderſtand that the like magnificence was neuer ſeene in Ruſſia.

The coronation, and other triumphes ended, al the nobilitie, officers, and merchants according to an accuſtomed order euery one in his place, and degree brought rich preſents vnto the Emperor, wiſhing him long life, and ioy in his kingdome.

Iohn de Wale.

The ſame time alſo Maſter Ierom Horſey aforeſaid, remayning as ſeruant in Ruſſia for the Queenes moſt excellent Maieſtie, was called for to the Emperor, as he ſate in his imperiall ſeat, and then alſo a famous Merchant of Netherland being newly come to Moſco, (who gaue himſelfe out to be the king of Spaines ſubiect) called Iohn de Wale, was in like ſort called for. Some of the nobilitie would haue preferred this ſubiect of the Spaniard before Maſter Horſey ſeruant to the Queene of England, whereunto Maſter Horſey would in no caſe agree, ſaying, he would haue his legges cut off by the knees, before he would yeeld to ſuch an indignitie offered to his Soueraigne the Queenes Maieſty of England, to bring the Emperor a preſent, in courſe after the King of Spaines ſubiect, or any other whatſoeuer. The Emperor, and the Prince Boris Pheodorowich perceiuing the controuerſie, ſent the Lord Treaſorer Peter Iuanowich Galauyn, and Vaſili Shalkan, both of the Counſell, to them, who deliuered the Emperor backe, Maſter Horſeys ſpeech: whereupon he was firſt in order (as good reaſon) admitted and preſented the Emperor in the behalfe of the Engliſh Merchants trading thither, a preſent wiſhing him ioy, and long to raigne in tranquilitie, and ſo kiſſed the Emperors hand, he accepting the preſent with good liking, and auouching, that for his ſiſters ſake Queene Elizabeth of England, he would be a gracious Lord to her Merchants, in as ample maner as euer his father had ben: and being diſmiſſed, he had the ſame day ſent him 70. diſhes of ſundry kinds of meats, with 3. carts laden with al ſorts of drinks very bountifully. After him was the Flemiſh ſubiect of the Spaniſh king admitted with his preſent, whom the Emperor willed to be no leſſe faithfull and ſeruiceable vnto him, then the Queene of Englands ſubiects were & had bene, and then the king of Spaines ſubiects ſhould receiue fauour accordingly.

All theſe things thus in order performed, praiſes were ſung in all the churches. The Emperor and Empreſſe very deuoutly reſorted on foote to many principall Churches in the Citie, and vpon Trinitie Sunday betooke themſelues to a progreſſe in maner of proceſſion, to a famous monaſterie called Sergius and the Trinitie, 60. miles diſtant from the Citie of Moſco, accompanied with a huge armie of Noblemen, Gentlemen and others, mounted vpon goodly horſes with furniture accordingly.

The Empreſſe of deuotion tooke this iourney on foote all the way, accompanied with her princeſſes and ladies, no ſmall number: her guard and gunners were in number 20000. her chiefe counſeller or attendant, was a noble man of the blood Royal her vncle of great authoritie called Demetri Iuanowich Godonoua. All this progreſſe ended, both the Emperor and Empreſſe returned to Moſco: ſhortly after the Emperor by the direction of the prince Boris Pheodorowich, ſent an armie into the land of Siberia, where all the rich Sables & Furres are gotten. This power conquered in one yeere and a halfe, 1000. miles. In the performance of this warre, there was taken priſoner the Emperor of the countrey called Chare Sibersky, and with him many other dukes and noble men, which were brought to Mosko with a guard of ſouldiers and gunners, who were receiued into the citie in very honorable maner, and do there remaine to this day.

Chare Siberski prince of Siberia taken priſoner and brought to Moſco.

Hereupon the corrupt officers, Iudges, Iuſtices, captaines and lieutenants through the whole kingdom were remoued, and more honeſt men ſubſtituted in their places, with expreſſe commandement, vnder ſeuere puniſhment to ſurceaſe their old bribing & extortion which they had vſed in the old Emperors time, and now to execute true iuſtice without reſpect of perſons: and to the end that this might be the better done, their lands and yeerly ſtipends were augmented: the great taxes, cuſtomes, and duties, which were before layd vpon the people in the old Emperors time, were now abated, and ſome wholy remitted, and no puniſhments commanded to be vſed, without ſufficient and due proofe, although the crime were capitall, deſeruing death: many Dukes and noble men of great houſes, that were vnder diſpleaſure, and impriſoned 20. yeeres by the old Emperor, were now ſet at libertie and reſtored to their lands: all priſoners were ſet at libertie, and their treſpaſſes forgiuen. In ſumme, a great alteration vniuerſally in the gouernment followed, and yet all was done quietly, ciuilly, peaceably, without trouble to the Prince, or offence to the ſubiect: and this bred great aſſurance and honour to the kingdom, and all was accompliſhed by the wiſedom eſpecially of Irenia the Empreſſe.

Theſe things being reported and carried to the eares of the kings and princes that were borderers vpon Ruſſia, they grew ſo fearefull and terrible to them that the Monarch of all the Scythians called the Crimme Tartar or great Can himſelfe, named Sophet Keri Alli, came out of his owne countrey to the Emperor of Ruſſia, accompanied with a great number of his nobilitie well horſed, although to them that were Chriſtians they ſeemed rude, yet they were perſonable men, and valiant: their comming was gratefull to the Emperor, and their entertainment was honourable, the Tartar prince hauing brought with him his wiues alſo, receiued of the Ruſſe Emperor entertainment, and princely welcome according to their eſtates.

Sophet Keri Alli king of the Crimmes arriual at Moſco.

Not long after, 1200. Poliſh gentlemen, valiant ſouldiors, and proper men came to Mosko offring their ſeruice to the Emperor, who were all entertained: and in like ſort many Chirkaſſes, and people of other nations came and offred ſeruice. And aſſoone as the report of this new created Emperor was ſpred into other kingdoms of Europe, there were ſent to him honorable Ambaſſadors to wiſh him ioy and proſperitie in his kingdom: thither came Ambaſſadors from the Turke, from the Perſian, the Bogharian, the Crimme, the Georgian, and many other Tartar princes. There came alſo Ambaſſadors from the Emperor of Almaine, the Pole, the Swethen, the Dane, &c. And ſince this coronation no enemie of his hath preuailed in his attempts.

It fell out not long after, that the Emperor was deſirous to ſend a meſſage to the moſt excellent Queene of England, for which ſeruice he thought no man fitter than M. Ierome Horſey, ſuppoſing that one of the Queenes owne men and ſubiects ſhould be the more acceptable to her. The ſumme of which meſſage was, that the Emperor deſired a continuance of that league, friendſhip, amitie and intercourſe of traffique which was betweene his father and the Queenes maieſtie and her ſubiects, with other priuate affaires beſides, which are not to be made common.

Maſter Horſey hauing receiued the letters and requeſts of the Emperour, prouided for his iourney ouer land, and departed from Moſco the laſt day of September thence vnto Otuer, to

M. Horſeis voyage frõ Moſco to England ouerland.

Torſhock, to great Nouogrod, to Vobsky, and thence to Nyhouſe in Liuonia, to Wenden, and ſo to Riga: (where he was beſet, and brought ſodainely before a Cardinall called Rageuil, but yet ſuffred to paſſe in the end:) From thence to Mito, to Golden, and Libou in Curland, to Memel, to Koningsburgh in Pruſſia, to Elbing, to Dantzike, to Stetine in Pomerland, to Roſtock, to Lubeck, to Hamborough, to Breme, to Emden, and by ſea to London. Being arriued at her maieſties royall court, and hauing deliuered the Emperours letters with good fauour, and gracious acceptance, he was foorthwith againe commaunded to repaſſe into Ruſſia, with other letters from her maieſtie to the Emperour, and prince Boris Pheodorowich, anſwering the Emperours letters, and withall requeſting the fauour and friendſhip, which his father had yeelded to the Engliſh merchants: and hereunto was he earneſtly alſo ſolicited by the merchants of London themſelues of that company, to deale in their behalfe. Being thus diſpatched from London by ſea, he arriued in Moſco, the 20. of April 1586. and was very honorably welcommed. And for þ merchants behoofe, obtained all his requeſts, being therein ſpecially fauoured by þ noble prince Boris Pheodorowich, who alwayes affected M. Horſey with ſpeciall liking. And hauing obtained priuileges for the merchants, he was recommended from the Emperour againe, to the Queene of England his miſtreſſe, by whom the prince Boris, in token of his honorable and good opinion of the Queenes maieſtie, ſent her highneſſe a royall preſent of Sables, Luzarnes, cloth of gold and other rich things. So that the Companie of Engliſh merchants, next to their thankfulnes to her maieſtie, are to account M. Horſeis paines their ſpeciall benefit, who obtained for them thoſe priuileges, which in twentie yeeres before would not be granted.

The maner of M. Horſeis laſt diſpatch from the Emperour, becauſe it was very honorable, I thought good to record. He was freely allowed poſt horſes for him and his ſeruants, victuals and all other neceſſaries for his long iourney: at euery towne that he came vnto from Moſco to Vologda, which is by land fiue hundred miles, he receiued the like free and bountifull allowance, at the Emperors charge. New victuall and prouiſion were giuen him vpon the riuer Dwina at euery towne by the kings officers, being one thouſand miles in length. When he came to the new caſtle called Archangel, he was receiued of the Duke Knez Vaſili Andrewich Iſuenogorodsky by the Emperours commiſſion into the Caſtle, gunners being ſet in rankes after their vſe, where he was ſumptuouſly feaſted: from thence hee was diſpatched with bountifull prouiſion and allowance in the Dukes boat, with one hundred men to rowe him, and one hundred Gunners in other boats to conduct him, with a gentleman captaine of the Gunners. Comming to the road where the Engliſh, Dutch, and French ſhips rode, the gunners diſcharged, and the ſhips ſhot in like maner 46. pieces of their ordinance, & ſo he was brought to his lodging at the Engliſh houſe vpon Roſe Iſland.

And that which was the full and complete concluſion of the fauour of the Emperour and Boris Pheodorowich toward M. Horſey, there were the next day ſent him for his further prouiſion vpon the ſea by a gentleman and a captaine the things following:

70. ſheepe.
600. hens.
25. flitches of Bacon.
80. buſhels of meale.
600. loaues of bread.
2000. egges.
10. geeſe.
2. cranes.
2. ſwannes.
65. gallons of meade.
40. gallons of Aquauitæ.
60. gallons of beere.
3. yong beares.
4. hawkes.
Store of onions and garlike.
10. freſh ſalmons.
A wild boare.

All theſe things were brought him downe by a Gentleman of the Emperours, and another of prince Boris Pheodorowich, & were receiued in order by Iohn Freſe ſeruant to M. Horſey, together with an honorable preſent and reward from the prince Boris, ſent him by M. Francis Cherry an Engliſhman: which preſent was a whole very rich piece of cloth of gold, & a faire paire of Sables. This Gentleman hath obſerued many other rare things concerning thoſe partes, which hereafter (God willing) at more conuenient time and leiſure ſhall come to light.

Pheodor Iuanowich the new Emperors gracious letter of priuilege to the Engliſh Merchants word for word, obtained by M. Ierome Horſey. 1586.

Through the wil of the almightie, and without beginning God, which was before this world, whom we glorifie in þ Trinitie, one onely God the father, the ſonne, and the holy ghoſt, maker of all things, worker of all in all euery where, fulfiller of all things, by which will and working, he both liueth and giueth life to man, That our onely God, which inſpireth euery one of vs his onely children with his word, to diſcerne God through our Lord Ieſus Chriſt, and the holy quickening ſpirit of life now in theſe perillous times, Eſtabliſh vs to keepe the right Scepter, and ſuffer vs of our ſelues to raigne to the good profite of the land, and to the ſubduing of the people, together with the enemies, and to the maintenance of vertue.

We Pheodor the ofſpring of Iohn the great Lord, Emperor, king and great prince of all Ruſſia, of Volodemeria, Moſcouia and Nouogrod, king of Cazan, king of Aſtracan, Lord of Pleſko, and great prince of Smolenſko, of Tuer, Youguria, Permia, Viatsko, of Bolghar and others, lord and great prince of the land of the lower Nouogrod, Chernigo, Rezan, Polotsko, Roſtow, Yeraſlaue, the White lake, Liefland, Oudor, Condenſa, and Ruler of all Siberia, and all the Northſide, and lord of many other countries.

I haue licenſed them to ſaile with their ſhippes into our dominion the land of Dwina, with all kind of commodities to trade freely, and vnto our kingdom and the citie of Moſco, and to all the cities of our empire of Moſcouia.

And the engliſh merchants ſir Rowland Haiward & his ſocietie deſired vs, that we would gratifie them to trade into our kingdom of Moſcouia, and into our heritage of great Nouogrod and Pleſko, and into all parts of our kingdom, to buy and ſell with their wares without cuſtome.

Therefore we for our ſiſters ſake Queene Elizabeth, & alſo becauſe that they allege that they had great loſſe and hinderance by the venture of the ſea, and otherwiſe, haue gratified the ſaid Engliſh merchants ſir Rowland Haiward and his ſocietie, freely to come into our kingdom of Moſcouia, and into al our dominions with all kind of commodities, to trade, & traffique freely, & at their pleaſure with all kind of their commodities: alſo I haue commanded not to take any maner of cuſtome for their goods, nor other cuſtoms whatſoeuer: That is to ſay, neither for paſſing by any place by water, nor for lanching, neither for paſſing through any place by land, neither for the veſſels or boats, nor for their heads, nor for paſſing ouer bridges, nor for ferying ouer at any place, neither for acknowledgement at any place where they ſhall come, nor any maner of cuſtome or dutie, by what name ſoeuer.

Only they ſhal not bring with them into our dominions, neither receiue out of our dominions, or father any other mens goods but their owne, neither ſell them nor barter them away for them.

Alſo our naturall people ſhall not buy and ſell for them, or from them, neither ſhal they retaine or keepe any of our naturall ſubiects goods, or pawnes by them to colour them.

Alſo they ſhall not ſend any of their Ruſſe ſeruants about into any citie to ingroſſe, or buy vp commodities, but into what citie they themſelues ſhal come, they ſhal buy and ſel, and ſhal ſel their owne commodities and not ours.

And when they ſhal come into our inheritance of great Nouogrod and Pleſko, and through all our dominions with their commodities, then our noblemen and captains, and euery one of our officers ſhall ſuffer them to depart according to this our letter, & ſhall take no cuſtom at all of them, for any of their commodities, neither for paſſing through or paſſing by, nor for paſſage ouer any bridges, nor ſhall take of them any other dutie whatſoeuer name they haue.

Alſo into what places of our dominions, or when they ſhal happen to come, and to proceed to buy or ſell, and whereſoeuer they ſhall paſſe through with goods not buying of any commodities, neither will ſell their owne, then in thoſe cities and townes they ſhall take no maner of cuſtome or dutie of them, accordingly as before.

And I haue gratified them and giuen them free leaue to traffique throughout all the dominions of our kingdom in all cities with their goods, to buy and ſell all maner of commodities, without any dutie or cuſtome whatſoeuer.

And the Engliſh merchants where they are deſirous to buy or ſell, or barter their wares with our merchants, whole wares for wares, they ſhal ſell their commodities whole, and not by retaile: That is to ſay, neither by ſmall weight nor by the yard, to ſell or barter in their owne houſes, and they ſhal ſel and barter their wares whole, Cloth by the packe, and by the whole Cloth, and Damaske and veluet by the piece and not by the yard, and al maner of commodities that are to be ſold by weight, not to ſell by the ſmall weights, as by the pound and ounce, but by whole ſale: alſo they ſhall ſel wines by the pipe: and by the gallon, quart or ſtoope they ſhal not ſell.

And they ſhall buy, ſell and exchange their owne commodities themſelues, and the Ruſſe merchants ſhall not make ſales or exchange for them or from them any of their commodities, neither ſhal they themſelues conuey or cary through any other mans goods at no place in ſtead of their owne: and which of the Engliſh merchants will at any time ſell his commodities at Colmogro or Vologda or Yeraſlaue, they may, and of their commodities throughout all our cities and dominions, our noblemen, captains, and euery of our officers ſhall take no maner of cuſtome, according as it is written in this our gracious letter: and throughout all our dominions and cities they ſhal hire carriers and veſſels with men to labour, at their owne charge, to tranſport their goods.

So likewiſe, whenſoeuer the Engliſh merchants are diſpoſed to depart out of our kingdom into any other countrey or into their owne land, if our pleaſure be, they ſhall take our goods with them from our Treaſurie, and ſhall ſell them, and exchange them for ſuch commoditie as is commodious for our kingdom, and ſhall deliuer it into our Treaſurie, and with theſe our commodities, our Noblemen and captains, and euery of our officers ſhall let them paſſe through all our cities alſo without cuſtome according to theſe our letters.

Alſo whenſoeuer the Engliſh merchants ſhall haue ſold their own goods & bought themſelues commodities, & wil depart out of Moſco, then they ſhal manifeſt themſelues to our chiefe Secretarie Andrew Sholkaloue, in the office where the Ambaſſadors are alwayes diſpatched.

And if the Engliſh merchants comming, haue had any miſchance by the ſea, inſomuch that the ſhip be broken, or if that ſhip do come to any part of our countrey: then we will cauſe the goods to be ſought out in true Iuſtice, and to be giuen to the Engliſh people, which at that time ſhall bee here reſident in our countrey: and if ſo be that it ſo fall out that at that time there be no Engliſhmen within our realme: then wil we cauſe theſe goods to be laid vp in a place together, and when the people of England ſhall come into our realme, then we will command all thoſe goods to be deliuered to the ſayd Engliſh people.

Alſo we haue gratified all the Engliſh merchants with the houſe of one Vrie here in the Moſco right ouer againſt S. Maximes church behind the market, and they ſhal dwel in the ſame houſe according as before time, and they ſhall keepe one alwayes in the houſe to keepe it, either a Ruſſe, or one of their owne people.

Alſo the Engliſh merchants ſhal poſſeſſe their houſes, to wit, at Yeraſlaue, Vologda, Colmogro, and the houſe at the hauen of the ſea, & they ſhal dwel in thoſe houſes, according as our goodnes hath bene to them heretofore: and we haue commanded, that there ſhall not be taken of them no yeerely rent, nor no maner of cuſtome, taxe, rent or any other dutie whatſoeuer for thoſe houſes, neither ſhal they pay any dutie or taxe with any of the townſmen of thoſe places, & in euery one of thoſe houſes, to wit, at Yeraſlaue, Vologda, and Colmogro, they ſhall haue men to keepe their houſes, two or three of their owne countrey people, ſtrangers or els Ruſſes, men of the meaneſt ſort, which ſhall be no merchants, that they may lay their goods in thoſe houſes, and they may ſell the commodities out of thoſe their houſes to whom they pleaſe, according to this our gracious letter: and thoſe that keepe their houſes ſhall not ſell or buy no part of their commoditie, except they be there or giue order, whereby they be not deceiued by them.

So likewiſe I haue gratified them with their houſe at the ſea hauen, at the mouth of Podezemsky, & we haue commanded that they ſhal not cary their goods from thence to the new caſtle S. Michael the archangel, but ſhall ariue, and doe as they haue done heretofore with their wares at that their houſe, and ſhall vnlade their commodities out of their ſhips, and ſhal lade them againe with Ruſſe commodities, euen there at that their houſe without interruption: onely they ſhal permit our officers of Colmogro & ſworn men to write vp thoſe commodities, both the commodities of England, and thoſe of Ruſſeland, what the merchants ſhal declare themſelues, & no otherwiſe, but they ſhal not ouerlooke their commodities, neither ſhal they vnbind any of their packs.

And when the Engliſh merchants are diſpoſed to ſend into their owne countrey, to wit, any of their owne people on land through any other kingdom whatſoeuer, they ſhall not ſend their people without our kingly knowledge and commandement, and which of their people ſo euer they do meane to ſend out of our kingdom into their owne countrey, then they ſhal ſend thoſe their people, not without our kingly maieſties knowledge, to wit, thoſe that go of pleaſure without carying any commodities with them, and they ſhall haue a letter of paſſe giuen vnto them, out of the office where the Ambaſſadors haue alwayes their diſpatch.

And whoſoeuer hath any thing to doe with them in matters of controuerſie, either concerning merchandize or iniuries, then they are to be iudged by our treaſurers and Secretarie of the Ambaſſadors office to do iuſtice between both parties, & to ſeek out the trueth of matters in al things, and whatſoeuer cannot be found out by the Law, ſhalbe tried by othe and lots: whoſe lot ſoeuer is taken foorth, him to haue right.

And in what place of all our kingdom, in what citie ſoeuer they or their people ſhall bee, and that there happen any matter of controuerſie, either concerning merchandiſe, iniuries or otherwiſe, that they haue occaſion to ſet vpon any man by lawe, or that any ſeeke vpon them, concerning what matter ſoeuer in all our kingdom and cities, then our lieutenants, captains, and our officers ſhall giue them Iuſtice, and ſhall miniſter all true iuſtice betweene them, ſeeking out the trueth: and what cannot be truly ſought by law, ſhalbe ſought out by othe and lot: whoſe lot ſoeuer is taken out, him to haue right accordingly as before, and the Iudges or Iuſtices ſhall take of them no kind of dutie, for matters of law no where throughout all our realmes. This letter is giuen in our princely palace within the citie of Moſco, in the yeere from the foundation of the world, ſeuen thouſand foureſcore and fifteene in the moneth of February.

The Ambaſſage of M. Giles Fletcher, Doctor of the Ciuil Law, ſent from her Maieſtie to Theodor the Emperor of Ruſſia, Anno 1588.

IN the yeere 1588, was ſent Ambaſſador from her highneſſe into the countrey of Ruſſia, Giles Fletcher Doctor of the Ciuil Lawe, as well to treat with the new Emperor Pheodor Iuanowich, about league and amitie, in like maner as was before with his father Iuan Vaſilowich, as alſo for the reeſtabliſhing and reducing into order the decaied trade of our Engliſhmen there. Who notwithſtanding at his firſt arriuall at the Moſco, found ſome parts of hard entertainment, by meanes of certaine rumors concerning the late nauall victory which was there reported to haue fallen on the Spaniſh ſide, as alſo for ſome diſlike conceiued againſt the priuileged trade of our Engliſh merchãts. Yet in the end he obtained of the Emperour many good & equall conditions, and was curteouſly and honourably diſmiſſed by him. The principall points which he entreated of, and were granted vnto him by the ſaid Emperor, were theſe:

1 A continuation of league and amitie betweene her Highneſſe and the ſayd Emperour Pheodor Iuanowich, in like maner as was before with his father Iuan Vaſilowich.

2 A confirmation and reeſtabliſhment of the former priuileges of the Companie of our Engliſh merchants, which were infringed and annulled in the principal points, with diuers neceſſary additions to the ſame, for the better ordering of their trade in thoſe countreys hereafter, viz. That the ſtate of the priuilege granted before in the names of ſome priuate and particular men, be altered in that point, and the ſame granted by the name and ſtile of their incorporation, viz. To the felowſhip of Engliſh merchants for the diſcouerie of new trades.

3 That vpon euery ſurmiſe and light quarel, the ſaid priuilege be not reuoked and annulled, as before time it hath bene.

4 That iuſtice ſhall be adminiſtred to the ſaid Companie and their Agent without delay, vpon ſuch as ſhal offer them any deſpite or iniurie, or ſhal exact or impoſe vpon them any paiment, taxation or impoſition whatſoeuer, contrary to the freedome of the ſaid grant.

5 That the goods & commodities of the ſaid Companie, be not forcibly taken as before time they had bene by the Emperors officers or people of authoritie, either for the vſe of the ſaid Emperor or of his officers, But in caſe they haue need of the ſaid commodities, the ſame to be taken at reaſonable prices, and for ready money.

6 That the ſaid Companie be not charged hereafter with the anſwering of ſuch debts as are made by any Engliſhman not being of the ſocietie.

7 That the Emperors authorized people ſhall not hereafter repute any Engliſhman reſiant in that countrey, to be any factor, ſeruant, or dealer in the ſaid Companies affaires, but ſuch as the Agent ſhall inregiſter by name, within the offices where cuſtome is entered in all ſuch places of the land where the ſayd Companie haue reſidencies to traffike.

8 That the names of ſuch as ſhall ſo be inregiſtred be no longer continued in record, nor themſelues reputed as factors or dealers for the ſaid Companie, then the Agent ſhall thinke good, But in caſe the ſaid Agent in his diſcretion ſhall thinke meet to ſtrike out of the Regiſter any name of ſuch as haue bene imploied in the Companies ſeruice, the ſaid perſon to be held as priuate, & whoſe acte in bargaining or otherwiſe, ſhall not charge the ſaid Companie.

9 That if any Engliſh man within the countrey of Ruſſia be ſuſpected for any notorious crime, as felony, treaſon, &c. the ſame be not ſtraightwaies ſet vpõ the* Pudkey, nor otherwiſe tormented, till ſuch time as he ſhall be conuicted by plaine and euident proofes: which being done, the whole proceeding to be ſent ouer to the Queene of England.

*It is roſting to death.

10 That the ſaid priuilege with the additions, ſhall be publiſhed in all townes and partes of the Emperors dominions, where the ſaid Companie haue traffike.

11 That the ſaid Companie ſhall be permitted to vſe a ſole trade through the Emperours countries, by the riuer Volga into Media, Perſia, Bogharia, and the other the Eaſt countries.

12 Whereas there was claimed of the ſaid Companie the ſumme of 23553. markes of debt, made by certaine of their factors for the ſaid company, for paiment whereof, their whole ſtocke was in danger of arreſt, by publike authoritie: Further alſo 2140. rubbles for cuſtome and houſerent, he obtained a rebatement of eighteene thouſand, one hundred fiftie and three marks of the ſayd debt.

The ſaid Ambaſſadour M. Giles Fletcher, as I vnderſtand, hath drawen a booke intituled, Of the Ruſſe Common wealth, containing:

Firſt, a Coſmographicall deſcription of the countrey, which hath theſe chapters.

1 Of the length and bredth of the countrey of Ruſſia, with the names of the ſhires.
2 Of the ſoile and climate.
3 Of the natiue commodities of the countrey.

Secondly, a deſcription of their policie contained in theſe Chapters, viz.

1 Of the conſtitution or ſtate of the Ruſſe Common wealth.
2 Of their Parliaments, and maner of holding them.
3 Of the Ruſſe Nobilitie and meanes whereby it is kept in an vnder proportion agreeable to that ſtate.
4 Of the maner of gouerning their prouinces or ſhires.
5 Of the Emperours priuie counſell.
6 Of the Emperors cuſtoms & their reuenues, with the practiſes for the increaſe of them.
7 Of the Ruſſe communaltie and their condition.
8 Of their publike iuſtice and maner of proceeding therein.
9 Of the Emperors forces for his warres, with the chiefe officers, and their ſalarie or pay.
10 Of their maner of muſtering, armour, and prouiſion for victuall.
11 Of their ordering, marching, charging, and their martiall diſcipline.
12 Of their colonies and policie in maintaining their purchaſes by conqueſt.
13 Of their borderers with whom they haue moſt to doe in warre and peace.
14 Of their church offices and degrees.
15 Of their liturgie or forme of Church ſeruice.
16 Of their maner of adminiſtring the Sacraments.
17 Of the doctrine of the Ruſſe church.
18 Of the maner of ſolemnizing their mariages.
19 Of the other ceremonies of the Ruſſe church.

Thirdly, the Oeconomie or priuate behauiour of the Ruſſe containing theſe chapters.

1 Of the Emperors houſhold officers, and order of his houſe.
2 Of the priuate behauiour and maner of the Ruſſe people.

The deſcription of the countrey of Ruſſia, with the bredth, length, and names of the Shires.

The countrey of Ruſſia was ſomtimes called Sarmatia. It changed the name (as ſome do ſuppoſe) for that it was parted into diuers ſmal, and yet abſolute gouernments, not depending, nor being ſubiect the one to the other. For Ruſſe in that tongue doeth ſignifie as much as to part, or deuide. The Ruſſe reporteth that foure brethren, Trubor, Rurico, Sinees, and Variuus deuided among them the North parts of the countey. Likewiſe that the South parts were poſſeſſed by 4. other, Kio, Scieko, Choranus, and their ſiſter Libeda: each calling his territorie after his own name. Of this partition it was called Ruſſia, about the yere from Chriſt 860. As for the coniecture which I find in ſome Coſmographers, that the Ruſſe nation borowed the name of the people called Roxellani, & were the very ſame nation with them, it is without all good probabilitie, both in reſpect of the etymologie of the word (which is very far fet) and eſpecially for the ſeat and dwelling of that people, which was betwixt the two riuers of Tanais and Boriſthenes, (as Strabo reporteth) quite another way from the countrey of Ruſſia.

Strabo in his 7. booke of Geogr.

When it bare the name of Sarmatia, it was deuided into two chiefe parts: the White and the Black. The white Sarmatia was all that part that lieth towards the North, & on the ſide of Liefland: as the prouinces now called Dwina, Vagha, Vſtiug, Vologda, Cargapolia, Nouogrodia, &c whereof Nouogrod velica was the Metropolite or chiefe citie. Black Sarmatia was al that countrey that lieth Southward towards the Euxin or Black ſea: as the dukedome of Volodemer, of Moſco, Rezan, &c. Some haue thought that the name of Sarmatia was firſt taken frō one Sarmates, whom Moſes & Ioſephus cal Aſarmathes ſonne to Ioktan, & nephew to Heber, of the poſteritie of Sem. But this ſeemeth to be nothing but a coniecture takē out of the likenes of the name Aſarmathes. For the dwelling of all Ioktans poſteritie is deſcribed by Moſes to haue bene betwixt Meſcha or Maſius (an hil of the Ammonites) & Sephace, nere to the riuer Euphrates: which maketh keth it very vnlikely that Aſarmathes ſhould plant any colonies ſo far off in yͤ North & northweſt countries. It is bounded northward by the Lappes & the North Ocean. On the Southſide by the Tartars called Crimmes. Eaſtward they haue the Nagaian Tartar, that poſſeſſeth all the countrey on the Eaſt ſide of Volga towards the Caſpian ſea. On the Weſt and Southweſt border lieth Lituania, Liuonia and Polonia.

The Shires of Ruſſia.

The whole Countrey being nowe reduced vnder the gouernment of one, conteineth theſe chiefe Prouinces or Shires. Volodemer, (which beareth the firſt place in the Emperours ſtile, becauſe their houſe came of the Dukes of that Countrey) Moſco, Niſnouogrod, Plesko, Smolensko, Nouogrod velica (or Nouogrod of the low Countrey) Roſtoue, Yaruſlaue, Bealozera, Rezan, Duyna, Cargapolia, Meſchora, Vagha, Vſtuga, Ghaletſa. Theſe are the naturall ſhires perteyning to Ruſſia, but farre greater and larger then the ſhires of England, though not ſo well peopled. The other Countreys or prouinces which the Ruſſe Emperours haue gotten perforce added of late to their other dominion, are theſe which followe, Twerra, Youghoria, Permia, Vadska, Boulghoria, Chernigo, Oudoria, Obdoria, Condora, with a great part of Siberia: where the people though they be not naturall Ruſſes, yet obey the Emperour of Ruſſia, and are ruled by the Lawes of his Countrey, paying cuſtomes and taxes, as his owne people doe. Beſides theſe he hath vnder him the kingdomes of Cazan and Aſtracan, gotten by conqueſt not long ſince. As for all his poſſeſſion in Lituania (to the number of 30. great Townes and more,) with Narue and Dorp in Liuonia, they are quite gone, being ſurpriſed of late yeeres by the Kings of Poland and Sweden. Theſe Shires and Prouinces are reduced all into foure Iuriſdictions, which they call Chetfyrds (that is) Tetrarchies, or Fourthparts.

The Prouinces or Countries got by conqueſt.

The breadth and length of the Countrey.

The whole Countrey is of great length and breadth. From the North to the South (if you meaſure from Cola to Aſtracan which bendeth ſomewhat Eaſtward) it reacheth in length about 4260. verſt, or miles. Notwithſtanding the Emperour of Ruſſia hath more territorie Northward, farre beyond Cola vnto the Riuer of Tromſchua, that runneth a hundred verſt, welnigh beyond Pechinga, neere to Wardhouſe, but not intire nor cleerely limited, by reaſon of the kings of Sweden and Denmarke, that haue diuers Townes there, aſwell as the Ruſſe, plotted together the one with the other: euery one of them clayming the whole of thoſe North parts as his owne right. The breadth (if you go from that part of his territorie that lyeth fartheſt Weſtward on the Narue ſide, to the parts of Siberia Eaſtward, where the Emperour hath his garriſons) is 4400. verſt or thereabouts. A verſt (by their reckoning) is a 1000. paſes, yet leſſe by one quarter then an Engliſh mile. If the whole dominion of the Ruſſe Emperour were all habitable, and peopled in all places, as it is in ſome, he would either hardly holde it all within one regiment, or be ouer mightie for all his neighbour Princes.

Pechinga.

Of the Soile and Climate.

THe ſoyle of the Countrey for the moſt part is of a ſleight ſandie moulde, yet very much different one place from another, for the yeeld of ſuch things as grow out of the earth. The Countrey Northwards towards the parts of S. Nicholas and Cola, and Northeaſt towards Siberia, is all very barren, and full of deſert woods by reaſon of the Climate, and extremitie of the colde in Winter time. So likewiſe along the Riuer Volgha betwixt the Countreys of Cazan, and Aſtracan: where (notwithſtanding the ſoyle is very fruitfull) it is all vnhabited, ſauing that vpon the riuer Volgha on the Weſtſide, the Emperour hath ſome fewe Caſtels with garriſons in them. This happeneth by meanes of the Crimme Tartar, that will neither himſelfe plant Townes to dwel there, (liuing a wild and vagrant life) nor ſuffer the Ruſſe (that is farre off with the ſtrength of his Countrey) to people thoſe parts. From Vologda (which lyeth almoſt 1700. verſt from the port of S. Nicholas) downe towards Moſco, and ſo towards the South part that bordereth vpon the Crimme, (which conteineth the like ſpace of 1700. verſt or there abouts) is a very fruitfull and pleaſant Countrey, yeelding paſture, and corne, with woods and waters in very great plentie. The like is betwixt Rezan (that lyeth Southeaſt from Moſco) to Nouogrod and Vobsko, that reach fartheſt towards the Northweſt. So betwixt Moſco, and Smolensko (that lyeth Southweſt towards Lituania) is a very fruitfull and pleaſant ſoile.

The whole Countrey differeth very much from it ſelfe, by reaſon of the yeere: ſo that a man would marueile to ſee the great alteration and difference betwixt the Winter, and the Summer Ruſſia. The whole Countrey in the Winter lieth vnder ſnow, which falleth continually, and is ſometime of a yard or two thicke, but greater towards the North. The Riuers and other waters are all froſen vp a yard or more thicke, how ſwift or broade ſo euer they bee. And this continueth commonly fiue moneths, viz. from the beginning of Nouember till towardes the ende of March, The colde of Ruſsia.

March, what time the ſnow beginneth to melt. So that it would breede a froſt in a man to looke abroad at that time, and ſee the Winter face of that Countrey. The ſharpeneſſe of the aire you may iudge of by this: for that water dropped downe or caſt vp into the aire congealeth into yce before it come to the ground. In the extremitie of Winter, if you holde a pewter diſh or pot in your hand, or any other mettall (except in ſome chamber where their warme ſtoaues bee) your fingers will frieſe faſt vnto it, and drawe off the ſkinne at the parting. When you paſſe out of a warme roome into a colde, you ſhall ſenſibly feele your breath to waxe ſtarke, and euen ſtifeling with the colde, as you drawe it in and out. Diuers not onely that trauell abroad, but in the very markets, and ſtreetes of their Townes, are mortally pinched and killed withall: ſo that you ſhall ſee many drop downe in the ſtreetes; many trauellers brought into the Townes ſitting dead and ſtiffe in their Sleds. Diuers loſe their noſes, the tips of their eares, and the bals of their cheekes, their toes, feete, &c. Many times (when the Winter is very hard and extreeme) the beares and woolfes iſſue by troupes out of the woods driuen by hunger, and enter the villages, tearing and rauening all they can finde: ſo that the inhabitants are faine to flie for ſafegard of their liues. And yet in the Sommer time you ſhal ſee ſuch a new view and face of a Countrey, the woods (for the moſt part which are all of firre and birch) ſo freſh and ſo ſweete, the paſtures and medowes ſo greene and well growen, (and that vpon the ſudden) ſuch varietie of flowers, ſuch noyſe of birdes (ſpecially of Nightingales, that ſeeme to be more lowde and of a more variable note then in other Countreys) that a man ſhall not lightly trauell in a more pleaſant Countrey.

And this freſh and ſpeedy growth of the Spring there ſeemeth to proceede from the benefite of the ſnow: which all the Winter time being ſpread ouer the whole Countrey as a white robe, and keeping it warme from the rigour of the froſt, in the Spring time (when the Sunne waxeth warme, and diſſolueth it into water) doeth ſo throughly drench and ſoake the ground, that is ſomewhat of a ſleight and ſandie mould, and then ſhineth ſo hotely vpon it againe, that it draweth the hearbes and plants foorth in great plentie and varietie, in a very ſhort time. As the Winter exceedeth in colde, ſo the Sommer inclineth to ouer much heat, ſpecially in the moneths of Iune, Iuly and Auguſt, being much warmer then the Sommer aire in England.

The Countrey throughout is very well watred with ſprings, riuers, and Ozeraes, or lakes. Wherein the prouidence of God is to be noted, for that much of the Countrey being ſo farre inland, as that ſome part lieth a thouſand miles and more euery way from any Sea, yet it is ſerued with faire Riuers, and that in very great number, that emptying themſelues one into another, runne all into the Sea. Their lakes are many and large, ſome of 60,80,100, and 200, miles long, with breadth proportionate.

The chiefe Riuers of Ruſsia.

The chiefe Riuers are theſe, Firſt, Volgha, that hath his head or ſpring at the roote of an Aldertree, about 200. verſt aboue Yaruſlaue, and groweth ſo bigge by the encreaſe of other Riuers by that time it commeth thither, that it is broad an Engliſh mile and more, and ſo runneth into the Caſpian ſea, about 2800. verſt or miles of length.

The next is Boriſthenes (now called Neper) that diuideth the Countrey from Lituania, and falleth into the Euxin ſea.

The third Tanais or Don, (the ancient bounder betwixt Europe and Aſia) that taketh his head out of Rezan Ozera, and ſo running through the Countrey of the Chrim Tartar, falleth into the great Sea, lake, or meare, (called Mæotis) by the Citie of Azou. By this Riuer (as the Ruſſe reporteth) you may paſſe from their Citie Moſco to Conſtantinople, and ſo into all thoſe parts of the world by water, drawing your boate (as their maner is) ouer a little Iſthmus or narrowe ſlip of land, a few verſts ouerthwart. Which was proued not long ſince by an Ambaſſadour ſent to Conſtantinople, who paſſed the Riuer of Moſcua, and ſo into another called Ocka, whence hee drew his boat ouer into Tanais, and thence paſſed the whole way by water.

The fourth is called Duyna, many hundred miles long, that falleth Northward into the bay of S. Nicholas, and hath great Alabaſter rockes on the bankes towards the ſea ſide.

The fifth Duna, that emptieth into the Baltick ſea by the towne Riga.

The ſixt Onega, that falleth into the Bay at Solouetsko 90. verſt from the port of S. Nicholas. This Riuer, below the towne Cargapolia, meeteth with the Riuer Volock, that falleth into the Finland Sea by the towne Yama. So that from the port of S. Nicholas into the Finland ſea, and ſo into the Sound, you may paſſe all by water, as hath bene tried by the Ruſſe.

The ſeuenth Suchana, that floweth into Duyna, and ſo into the North ſea.

The eight Ocka, that fetcheth his head from the borders of the Chrim, and ſtreameth into Volgha.

The ninth Moſcua that runneth thorowe the Citie Moſco, and giueth it the name.

There is Wichida alſo a very large and long riuer that riſeth out of Permia, and falleth into Volgha.

Volghs. All theſe are riuers of very large ſtreames, the leaſt to be compared to the Thames in bigneſſe, and in length farre more, beſides diuers other. The Pole at Moſco is 55. degrees 10. minutes. At the port of S. Nicholas towards the North 63. degrees and 50. minutes.

The natiue commodities of the Countrey.

The fruits and graines of Ruſſia.

For kindes of fruites, they haue Apples, peares, plummes, cherries, red and blacke, (but the blacke wilde) a deene like a muſke millian, but more ſweete and pleaſant, cucumbers and goords (which they call Arbouſe) raſps, ſtrawberies, and hurtilberies, with many other beries in great quantitie in euery wood and hedge. Their kindes of graine are wheat, rie, barley, oates, peaſe, buckway, pſnytha, that in taſte is ſomewhat like to rice. Of all theſe graines the Countrey yeeldeth very ſufficient with an ouerplus quantitie, ſo that wheate is ſolde ſometime for two alteens or ten pence ſtarling the Chetfird, which maketh almoſt three Engliſh buſhels.

Their rie is ſowed before the Winter, all their other graine in the Spring time, and for the moſt part in May. The Permians and ſome other that dwell farre North, and in deſert places, are ſerued from the parts that lye more Southward, and are forced to make bread ſometimes of a kinde of roote (called Vaghnoy) and of the middle rine of the firre tree. If there be any dearth (as they accompted this laſt yeere Anno 1588. wheat and rie being at 13. alteens, or 5. ſhillings fiue pence ſtarling the Chetfird) the fault is rather in the practiſe of their Nobilitie that vſe to engroſſe it, then in the Countrey it ſelfe.

The chiefe commodities of the Countrey.
1. Furres.

The natiue commodities of the Countrey (wherewith they ſerue both their owne turnes, and ſend much abroad to the great enriching of the Emperor, and his people) are many & ſubſtantiall. Firſt, furres of all ſorts. Wherein the prouidence of God is to be noted, that prouideth a naturall remedie for them, to helpe the naturall inconuenience of their Countrey by the cold of the Climat. Their chiefe furres are theſe, Blacke fox, Sables, Luſernes, dun fox, Martrones, Gurneſtalles or Armins, Laſets or Miniuer, Beuer, Wuluerins, the skin of a great water Rat that ſmelleth naturally like muske, Calaber or gray ſquirrel, red ſquirrel, red & white fox. Beſides the great quantitie ſpent within ẏ Countrey (the people being clad al in furres the whole winter) there are tranſported out of the Countrey ſome yeeres by the merchants of Turkie, Perſia, Bougharia, Georgia, Armenia, and ſome other of Chriſtendom, to the value of foure or fiue hundred thouſand rubbles, as I haue heard of the merchants. The beſt Sable furre groweth in the countrey of Pechora, Momgoſorskoy and Obdorskoy, the worſer ſort in Siberia, Perm, & other places. The blacke foxe and red come out of Siberia, white and dunne from Pechora, whence alſo come the white wolfe, and white Beare skin. The beſt Wuluerin alſo thence and from Perm. The beſt Martrons are from Siberia, Cadam, Morum, Perm, and Cazan. Lyſerns, Mineuer, and Armins, the beſt are out of Gallets, and Ouglits, many from Nouogrod and Perm. The Beauer of the beſt ſort breedeth in Murmonskey by Cola. Other common furres, and moſt of theſe kindes grow in many, and ſome in all parts of the Countrey.

These Rats are in Canada.

2. Waxe.

The ſecond commoditie is of Waxe, whereof hath bene ſhipped into forreigne countreys (as I haue heard it reported by thoſe that beſt know it) the ſumme of 50000. pood yeerely, euery pood conteyneth 40. pound, but now about 10000. pood a yeere.

3. Hony.

The third is their Honie, whereof beſides an exceeding great quantitie ſpent in their ordinary drinkes (which is Mead of all ſorts) and their other vſes, ſome good quantitie is caried out of the countrey. The chiefe encreaſe of hony is in Mordua and Cadam neere to the Cheremiſſen Tartar: much out of Seuerskoy, Rezan, Morum, Cazan, Dorogoboſe, and Vaſma.

4. Tallow.

Fourthly, of Tallow they afoord a great waight for tranſportation: not onely for that their countrey hath very much good ground apt for paſturage of cattell, but alſo by reaſon of their many Lents and other faſtes: and partly becauſe their greater men vſe much waxe for their lights, the poorer and meaner ſort birch dried in their ſtoaues, and cut into long ſhiuers, which they call Luchineos. Of tallow there hath bene ſhipped out of the Realme a few yeeres ſince about 100000. pood yeerely, now not paſt 30000. or thereabouts. The beſt yeeld of tallow is in the parts and territories of Smolensko, Yaruſlaue, Ouglits, Nouogrod, and Vologda, Otfer, and Gorodetskey.

5. Hide.

An other principall commoditie is their Loſh and Cow hide. Their Loſh or Buffe hide is very faire and large. Their bull and cowe hide (for oxen they make none, neither yet weather) is of a ſmall ſiſe. There hath bene tranſported by merchants ſtrangers ſome yeres 100000. hides. Now it is decreaſed to 30000. or thereabouts. Beſides great ſtore of goates ſkinnes, whereof great numbers are ſhipped out of the countrey. The largeſt kinde of Loſh or Buffe breedeth about Roſtoue, Wichida, Nouogrod, Morum, and Perm. The leſſer ſort within the kingdome of Cazan.

6. Trane oyle.

An other very great and principall commoditie is their Trane oyle, drawen out of the Seale fiſh.

The maner of hunting the Seale fiſh.

fiſh. Where it will not be impertinent to ſhew the maner of their hunting the Seal, which they make this oyle of: which is in this ſort. Towards the ende of Sommer (before the froſt beginne) they goe downe with their boates into the Bay of S. Nicholas, to a cape called Cuſconeſſe or Foxnoſe, where they leaue their boats till the next ſpring tide. When the Sunne wareth warme toward the ſpring, and yet the yce not melted within the Bay, they returne thither againe. Then drawing their boates ouer the ſea yce, they vſe them for houſes to reſt and lodge in. There are commonly about 17. or 18. fleete of them, of great large boates, which diuide themſelues into diuers companies, fiue or ſixe boats in a conſort.

They that firſt finde the haunt, fire a beacon, which they carry with them for the nonce. Which being eſpied by the other companies, by ſuch among them as are appointed of purpoſe, they come altogether and compaſſe the Seales round about in a ring, that lie ſunning themſelues together vpon the yce, commonly foure or fiue thouſand in a ſhoale, and ſo they inuade them euery man with his club in his hand. If they hit them on the noſe, they are ſoone killed. If on the ſides or backe they beare out the blow, and many times ſo catch and holde downe the clubbe with their teeth by maine force, that the partie is forced to call for helpe to his fellowes.

The maner of the Seals is when they ſee themſelues beſet, to gather all cloſe together in a throng or plumpe, to ſway downe the yce, and to breake it (if they can) which ſo bendeth the yce that many times it taketh the ſea water vpon it, and maketh the hunters to wade a foote or more deepe. After the ſlaughter when they haue killed what they can, they fall to ſharing euery boate his part in equall portions: and ſo they flay them, taking from the body the ſkin, and the lard or fat with all that cleaueth to the ſkin. This they take with them, leauing the bodies behind, and ſo go to ſhore. Where they digge pits in the ground of a fadome and an halfe deepe, or thereabout, and ſo taking the fat or lard off from the ſkinne, they throw it into the pit, and caſt in among it hoat burning ſtones to melt it withall. The vppermoſt and pureſt is ſold, and vſed to oile wool for cloth, the groſſer (that is of a red colour) they ſell to make ſope.

7. Ickary.

Likewiſe of Ickary or Cauery, a great quantitie is made vpon the riuer of Volgha out of the fiſh called Bellougina, the Sturgeon, the Seueriga and the Sterledey. Whereof the moſt part is ſhipped by French and Netherlandiſh merchants for Italy and Spaine, ſome by Engliſh merchants.

8. Hempe and Flaxe.

The next is of Flax and Hempe, whereof there hath bene ſhipped (as I haue heard merchants ſay) at the port of Narue a great part of 100. ſhips ſmall and great yeerely. Now, not paſt fiue. The reaſon of this abating and decreaſe of this & other commodities, that were wont to be tranſported in a greater quantitie, is the ſhutting vp of the port of yͤ Narue towards the Finland ſea, which now is in the handes and poſſeſſion of the Sweden. Likewiſe the ſtopping of the paſſage ouerland by the way of Smolensko, & Plotsko, by reaſon of their warres with the Polonian, which cauſeth the people to be leſſe prouident in mainteining and gathering theſe and like commodities, for that they lacke ſales. For the growth of flaxe the prouince of Vobsko, and the countrey about is the chiefe and onely place. For Hempe Smolensko, Dorogoboſe and Vaſma.

9. Salt.

The countrey beſides maketh great ſtore of ſalt. Their beſt ſalt is made at Stararouſe in very great quantitie, where they haue great ſtore of ſalt wels, about 250. verſt from the ſea. At Aſtracan ſalt is made naturally by the ſea water, that caſteth it vp into great hils, and ſo it is digged downe, and caried away by the merchants and other that wil fetch it from thence. They pay to the Emperor for acknowledgement or cuſtome 3. d. Ruſſe vpon euery hundred weight. Beſides theſe two, they make ſalt in many other places of the Realme, as in Perm, Wichida, Totma, Kenitſma, Solouetsky, Ocona, Bombaſey, and Nonocks, all out of ſalt pits, ſaue at Solouetsky, which lieth neere to the ſea.

Nonocks.

10. Tarre.

Likewiſe of Tarre they make a great quantitie out of their firre trees in the countrey of Duyna and Smolensko, whereof much is ſent abroad. Beſides theſe (which are all good and ſubſtantiall commodities) they haue diuers other of ſmaller account, that are naturall and proper to that countrey: as the fiſh tooth (which they call Ribazuba) which is vſed both among themſelues, and the Perſians and Bougharians that fetch it from thence for beads, kniues, and ſword hafts of Noblemen and gentlemen, and for diuers other vſes. Some vſe the powder of it againſt poiſon, as the Vnicornes horne. The fiſh that weareth it is called a Morſe, and is caught about Pechora. Theſe fiſh teeth ſome of them are almoſt 2. foote of length, and weigh 11. or 12. pound apiece.

11. Ribazuba.

12. Slude.

In the prouince of Corelia, and about the riuer Duyna towards the North ſea, there groweth a ſoft rocke which they call Slude. This they cut into pieces, and ſo teare it into thin flakes, which naturally it is apt for, and ſo vſe it for glaſſe-lanthornes and ſuch like. It giueth both inwards and outwards a clearer light then glaſſe, and for this reſpect is better then either glaſſe or horne: for that it neither breaketh like glaſſe, nor yet will burne like the lanthorne. Saltpeter they make in many places, as at Ouglits, Yaruſlaue & Vſting, and ſome ſmal ſtore of brimſtone vpon the riuer

13. Saltpeter and brimſtone.

Volgha, but want skil to refine it. Their iron is ſomewhat brittle, but a great weight of it is made in Corelia, Cargapolis, & Vſtiug Theleſna. Other mine they haue none growing within ẏ realme. 14. Iron.

The ſtrange beaſtes, fiſh, foule, &c. that breed in Ruſsia.

Their beaſts of ſtrange kinds are the Loſh, the Ollen, the wild horſe, the beare, the woluering, or wood dog, the Lyſerne, the Beauer, the Sable, the Martron, the black and dunne fox, the white Beare towards the ſea coaſt of Pechora, the Gurnſtale, the Laſet or Mineuer. They haue a kinde of Squirrell that hath growing on the pinion of the ſhoulder bone a long tuft of haire, much like vnto feathers with a far broader taile then haue any other ſquirrels, which they moue and ſhake as they leape from tree to tree, much like vnto a wing. They skiſe a large ſpace, & ſeeme for to flie withal, and therefore they cal them Letach Vechſhe, that is, the flying ſquirrels. Their hares and ſquirrels in Sommer are of the ſame colour with ours, in Winter the hare changeth her coate into milke white, the ſquirrel into gray, whereof commeth the Calaber.

They haue fallow deere, the roe bucke, & goats very great ſtore. Their horſes are but ſmal, but very ſwift & hard, they trauell them vnſhod both winter and Sommer, without all regard of pace. Their ſheepe are but ſmal & beare courſe & harſh wool. Of foule they haue diuers of the principal kinds: Firſt, great ſtore of hawks, the eagle, the gerfaulcon, the ſlightfaulcon, the goſhawk, the taſſel, the ſparhawk, &c. But the principal hawke ẏ breedeth in the country, is counted ẏ gerfaulcon. Of other foules their principal kinds are the ſwan tame & wilde, (whereof they haue great ſtore) the ſtorke, the crane, the tedder of the colour of a feaſant, but far bigger & liueth in the firre woods. Of feaſant and partridge they haue very great plentie. An owle there is of a very great bigneſſe, more ugly to behold then ẏ owles of this country, with a broad face, & eares much like vnto a man.

For freſh water fiſh, beſides the cōmon ſorts (as carpe, pikes, pearch, tench, roach, &c.) they haue diuers kinds very good and delicate: as the Bellouga or Bellougina of 4. or 5. elnes long, the Oſitrina or Sturgion, the Seueriga and Sterledy ſomewhat in faſhion and taſte like to the Sturgion, but not ſo thicke nor long. Theſe 4. kinds of fiſh breed in the Volgha, and are catched in great plenty, and ſerued thence into the whole Realme for a great food. Of the Roes of theſe foure kinds they make very great ſtore of Icary or Caueary as was ſaid before.

They haue beſides theſe that breed in the Volgha a fiſh called the Ribe bela, or white ſalmon, which they account more delicate then they do the red ſalmon, whereof alſo they haue exceeding great plentie in the Riuers Northward, as in Duyna, the riuer of Cola, &c. In the Ozera or lake neere a towne called Periſlaue, not far frō the Moſco, they haue a ſmal fiſh which they cal the freſh herring, of the faſhion, and ſomewhat of the taſte of a ſea-herring. Their chiefe townes for fiſh are, Iaruſlaue, Bealozera, Nouogrod, Aſtracan, and Cazan: which all yeeld a large cuſtome to the Emperour euery yeere for their trades of fiſhing, which they practiſe in Sommer, but ſende it frozen in the Winter time into all parts of the Realme.

The chiefe Cities of Ruſsia.

The chiefe cities of Ruſsia are Moſco, Nouogrod, Roſtoue, Volodomer, Pleſko, Smolensko, Iaruſlaue, Periſlaue, Niſnouogrod, Vologda, Vſtiug, Colmogro, Cazan, Aſtracan, Cargapolis, Columna. The city of Moſco is ſuppoſed to be of great antiquitie, though the firſt founder be vnknowen to the Ruſſe. It ſeemeth to haue taken the name frō the riuer that runneth on the one ſide of the towne. Beroſus the Chaldean in his 5. booke telleth that Nimrod (whō other prophane ſtories cal Saturne) ſent Aſſyrius, Medus, Moſcus, & Magog into Aſia to plant colonies there, and that Moſcus planted both in Aſia and Europe. Which may make ſome probabilitie, that the citie, or rather the riuer whereon it is built, tooke the denomination frō this Moſcus: the rather becauſe of the climate or ſituation, which is in the very fartheſt part & liſt of Europe, bordering vpon Aſia. The Citie was much enlarged by one Iuan or Iohn, ſonne to Daniel, that firſt changed his title of duke into King: though that honor continued not to his poſterity: the rather becauſe he was inueſted into it by the Popes Legate, who at that time was Innocentius the 4. about the yere 1246. which was very much miſliked by the Ruſſe people, being then a part of the Eaſterne or Greeke Church. Since that time the name of this city hath growen more famous, & better knowen to the world: inſomuch that not only the prouince, but the whole Countrey of Ruſsia is termed by ſome by the name of Moſcouia the Metropolite city. The forme of this City is in maner round with 3. ſtrong wals, circuling the one within the other, & ſtreets lying betweene, whereof the inmoſt wall, and the buildings cloſed within it (lying ſafeſt as the heart within the body, fenced and watred with the riuer Moſcua, that runneth cloſe by it) is all accompted the Emperors caſtle. The number of houſes (as I haue heard) through the whole Citie (being reckoned by the Emperor a litle before it was fired by the Crim) was 41500. in all. Since the Tartar beſieged and fired the towne (which was in the yere 1571.) there lieth waſte of it a great breadth of ground, which before was wel ſet and planted with buildings, ſpecially that part on the South ſide of Moſcua, built not long before Moſco.

by Baſilius the Emperor for his gariſon of ſouldiers, to whom he gaue priuiledge to drinke Mead, and beere at the dry or prohibited times, when other Ruſſes may drinke nothing but water, and for that cauſe called this new city by the name of Naloi, that is skinck or poure in. So that now the city of Moſco is not much bigger then the city of London. The next in greatnes, & in a maner as large, is the citie Nouograd: where was committed (as the Ruſſe ſaith) the memorable warre ſo much ſpoke of in ſtories of the Scythians ſeruants, that tooke armes againſt their maſters: which they report in this ſort: viz. That the Boiarens or gentlemen of Nouograd & the territory about (which only are ſouldiers after the diſcipline of thoſe countreis) had war with the Tartars. Which being wel performed & ended by them, they returned homewards. Where they vnderſtood by the way that their Cholopey or bondſlaues whom they left at home, had in their abſence poſſeſſed their townes, lands, houſes, wiues and all. At which newes being ſomewhat amaſed, and yet diſdeining the villany of their ſeruants, they made the more ſpeed home: and ſo not far from Nouograd met them in warlike maner marching againſt them. Whereupon aduiſing what was beſt to be done, they agreed all to ſet vpon them with no other ſhew of weapon but with their horſe whips (which as their maner is euery man rideth withal) to put them in remembrance of their ſeruile condition, thereby to terrifie them, & abate their courage. And ſo marching on & laſhing al together with their whips in their hands they gaue the onſet. Which ſeemed ſo terrible in the eares of their villaines, and ſtrake ſuch a ſenſe into them of the ſmart of the whip which they had felt before, that they fled altogether like ſheepe before the driuers. In memory of this victory the Nouogradians euer ſince haue ſtamped their coine (which they cal a dingoe Nouogrodskoy currant through al Ruſſia) with the figure of a horſman ſhaking a whip aloft in his hand. These 2. cities exceed ẏ reſt in greatnes. For ſtrength their chiefe townes are Vobsko, Smolensko, Cazan & Aſtracan, as lying vpon the borders. But for ſituation Iaruſlaue far exceedeth the reſt. For beſides the commodities that the ſoile yeeldeth of paſture and corne, it lieth vpon the famous riuer of Volgha, & looketh ouer it from a high banke very faire & ſtately to behold: whereof the towne taketh the name. For Iaruſlaue in that tongue ſignifieth as much as a faire or famous banke. In this towne (as may be gheſſed by the name) dwelt the Ruſſe king Vladimer ſurnamed Iaruſlaue, that maried the daughter of Harald king of England, by mediation of Sueno the Dane, as is noted in the Daniſh ſtory about the yere 1067.

Saxo Grammaticus lib. 11. pag. 187.

The other townes haue nothing ẏ is greatly memorable, ſaue many ruines within their wals. The ſtreets of their cities and townes in ſtead of pauing are planked with fir trees, plained & layd euen cloſe the one to the other. Their houſes are of wood without any lime or ſtone, built very cloſe and warme with firre trees plained and piled one vpon another. They are faſtened together with dents or notches at euery corner, & ſo claſped faſt together. Betwixt the trees or timber they thruſt in moſſe (whereof they gather plenty in their woods) to keep out the aire. Euery houſe hath a paire of ſtaires that lead vp into the chambers out of the yard or ſtreat after the Scottiſh maner. This building ſeemeth far better for their countrey, then that of ſtone or bricke; as being colder & more dampiſh then their wooden houſes, ſpecially of firre, that is a dry & warme wood. Whereof the prouidēce of God hath giuen them ſuch ſtore, as that you may build a faire houſe for 20. or 30. rubbles or litle more, where wood is moſt ſcant. The greateſt inconuenience of their wooden building is the aptneſſe for firing, which happeneth very oft & in very fearful ſort, by reaſon of the drineſſe and fatnes of the fir, that being once fired, burneth like a torch, & is hardly quenched til all be burnt vp.

The maner of Ruſſe building.

Of the maner of Crowning or Inauguration of the Ruſſe Emperours.

The ſolemnities vſed at ẏ Ruſſe Emperors coronation, are on this maner. In the great church of Precheſte (or our Lady) within the Emperors caſtle is erected a ſtage whereon ſtandeth a ſcrine that beareth vpon it the Imperial cap & robe of very rich ſtuffe. When the day of the Inauguratiō is come, there reſort thither, firſt the Patriarch wt the Metropolitanes, archbiſhops, biſhops, abbots and priors, al richly clad in their pontificalibus. Then enter the Deacons with the quire of ſingers. Who ſo ſoone as the Emperor ſetteth foot into ẏ church, begin to ſing: Many yeres may liue noble Theodore Iuanowich, &c: Whereunto the patriarch and Metropolite with the reſt of the cleargy, anſwere with a certaine hymne, in forme of a praier, ſinging it altogether with a great noiſe. The hymne being ended, the patriarch with the Emperor mount vp the ſtage, where ſtandeth a ſeat ready for the Emperor. Whereupon the patriarch willeth him to ſit downe, & then placing himſelf by him vpō another ſeat prouided for ẏ purpoſe, boweth downe his head towards ẏ ground, and ſaith this prayer: Oh Lord God king of kings, Lord of lords, which by thy prophet Samuel didſt choſe thy ſeruant Dauid, & annoynt him for King ouer thy people Iſrael, heare now our prayer, & looke frō thy ſanctuary vpon this thy ſeruant Theodore, whom thou haſt choſen and exalted for king ouer theſe thy holy natiōs, anoint him with the oile of gladnes, protect by thy power, put vpon his head a crowne of gold & precious ſtones, giue him length of dayes, place him in the ſeat of Iuſtice, ſtrēgthen his arme, make ſubiect vnto him all the barbarous nations, Let thy feare be in his whole heart, turne him from an euill faith, and all errour, and ſhewe him the ſaluation of thy holy and vniuerſal Church, that he may iudge thy people with Iuſtice, & protect the children of the poore, & finally atteine euerlaſting life. This prayer he ſpeaketh with a low voice, & then pronounceth aloud: Al praiſe and power to God the Father, the Sonne, and the holy Ghoſt. The prayer being ended, he commandeth certaine Abbots to reach the imperiall roabe & cap: which is done very decently, and with great ſolemnitie, the Patriarch withal pronouncing aloud: Peace be vnto all. And ſo he beginneth another prayer to this effect: Bow your ſelues together with vs, and pray to him that reigneth ouer all. Preſerue him (oh Lord) vnder thy holy protection, keepe him that hee may doe good and holy things, let Iuſtice ſhine forth in his dayes, that we may liue quietly without ſtrife and malice. This is pronounced ſomewhat ſoftly by the Patriarch, whereto hee addeth againe aloud: Thou art the king of the whole world, and the ſauiour of our ſoules, to thee the Father, Sonne and Holy ghoſt be al praiſe for euer and euer. Amen. Then putting on the roabe and the cap, he bleſſeth the Emperour with the ſigne of the croſſe, ſaying withall: In the name of the Father, the Sonne, and the Holy ghoſt. The like is done by the Metropolites, Archbiſhops, and Biſhops: who all in their order come to the chaire, and one after another bleſſe the Emperour with their two forefingers. Then is ſayd by the Patriarch another prayer, that beginneth: O moſt holy virgin, mother of God &c. After which a Deacon pronounceth with a loude voice: Many yeres to noble Theodore, good, honourable, beloued of God, great Duke of Volodemer, of Moſco, Emperour, and Monarch of all Ruſſia, &c. Whereto the other Prieſts and Deacons that ſtand ſomewhat farre of by the altar or table, anſwere ſinging: Many yeres, many yeres to the noble Theodore. The ſame note is taken vp by the Prieſts and Deacons, that are placed at the right and left ſide of the Church, and then altogether, they chaunt and thunder out, ſinging: Many yeares to the noble Theodore, good, honourable, beloued of God, great Duke of Volodomer, Moſco, Emperour of all Ruſſia, &c. Theſe ſolemnities being ended, firſt commeth the Patriarch with the Metropolites, Archbiſhops, and Biſhops, then the Nobility, and the whole company in their order, to doe homage to the Emperour, bending downe their heads, and knocking them at his feete to the very ground.

The ſtile wherewith he is inueſted at his Coronation, runneth after this maner.

THeodore Iuanowich, by the grace of God great Lord and Emperour of all Ruſſia, great Duke of Volodemer, Moſco, and Nouogrod, King of Cazan, King of Aſtracan, Lord of Pleſco, and great duke of Smolenſco, of Twerria, Ioughoria, Permia, Vadska, Bulghoria, and others, Lord and great Duke of Nouogrod of the Low countrey, of Chernigo, Rezan, Polotſkoy, Roſtoue, Yaruſlaueley, Bealozera, Liefland, Oudoria, Obdoria, and Condenſa, Commander of all Siberia, and of the North parts, and Lord of many other Countries, &c.

This ſtile conteineth in it all the Emperours Prouinces, and ſetteth foorth his greatneſſe. And therefore they haue a great delight and pride in it, forcing not onely their owne people but alſo ſtrangers (that haue any matter to deliuer to the Emperour by ſpeech or writing) to repeate the whole forme from the beginning to the end. Which breedeth much cauill, and ſometimes quarell betwixt them and the Tartar, and Poland Ambaſſadours: who refuſe to call him Czar, that is Emperor, and to repeate the other parts of his long ſtile. My ſelfe when I had audience of the Emperour, thought good to ſalute him only with thus much vz. Emperour of all Ruſſia, great Duke of Volodomer, Moſco and Nouogrod, King of Cazan, King of Aſtracan. The reſt I omitted of purpoſe, becauſe I knew they gloried, to haue their ſtile appeare to be of a larger volume then the Queenes of England. But this was taken in ſo ill part, that the Chancelour (who then attended the Emperour, with the reſt of the nobility) with a loude chaſing voice, called ſtill vpon me to ſay out the reſt. Whereto I anſwered, that the Emperors ſtile was very long, and could not ſo well be remembred by ſtrangers, that I had repeated ſo much of it, as might ſhew that I gaue honour to the reſt &c. But all would not ſerue till I commanded my interpreter to ſay it all out.

Their forces for the wars, with the chief officers and their ſalaries.

THe ſouldiers of Ruſia are called Sinaboyarskey, or the ſons of Gentlemen: becauſe they are all of that degree, by vertue of their military profeſſion. For euery ſouldier in Ruſia is a gentleman, and none are gentlemen, but only the ſouldiers, that take it by diſcent from their anceſtors: ſo that the ſonne of a gentleman (which is borne a ſouldier) is euer a gentleman, and a ſouldier withall, & profeſſeth nothing els but military matters. When they are of yeres able to beare armes, they come to the office of Roſerade, or great Conſtable, and there preſent themſelues: who entreth their names, and allotteth them certaine lands to maintaine their charges, for the moſt part the ſame that their fathers enioyed. For the lands aſſigned to maintaine the army, are euer certain, annexed to this office without improouing, or detracting one foot. But that if the Emperor haue ſufficient in wages, the roomes being full ſo farre as the land doeth extend already, they are many times deferred, and haue nothing allowed them, except ſome one portion of the land be deuided into two. The whole number of his ſouldiers in continuall pay, is this. Firſt he hath his Dworaney, that is, Penſioners, or Gard of his perſon, to the number of 15000 horſemen, with their captaines and other officers, that are alwaies in a readines.

Degrees of horſemen. 1. Prætoriani or ſuch as attend the Emperors perſon 15000.

Of theſe 15000 horſemen, there are three ſorts or degrees, which differ as well in eſtimation as in wages, one degree from another. The firſt ſort of them is called Dworaney Bulſhey, or the company of head Penſioners, that haue ſome an hundred, ſome fourescore rubbles a yeare, and none vnder 70. The ſecond ſort are called Seredney Dworaney, or the middle ranke of Penſioners. Theſe haue ſixty or fifty rubbles by the yeare, none vnder fortie. The third and loweſt ſort, are the Dyta Boiarskey, that is, the low Penſioners. Their ſalary is thirty rubbles a yere for him that hath moſt, ſome haue but 25, ſome 20, none vnder 12. Wherof the halfe part is paid them at the Moſco, the other halfe in the field by the general, when they haue any wars, & are imploied in ſeruice. When they receiue their whole pay, it amounteth to 55000 rubbles by the yere.

Two other troupes to the number of 65000.

And this is their wages, beſides lands allotted to euery one of them, both to the greater and the leſſe, according to their degrees. Whereof he that hath leaſt, hath to yeelde him twentie rubbles or markes by the yeare. Beſides theſe 15000 horſemen, that are of better choyce (as being the Emperors owne gard when himſelfe goeth to the wars, not vnlike the Romane ſouldiers called Prætoriani) are a hundred and ten men of ſpeciall account for their Nobilitie, and truſt, which are choſen by the Emperor, and haue their names regiſtred, that find among them for the Emperors wars, to the number of 65000. horſemen, with all neceſſaries meet for the wars after the Ruſſe maner.

To this end they haue yerely allowance made by the Emperor for themſelues, and their companies, to the ſumme of 40000 rubbles. And theſe 65000 are to repayre to the field euery yeare on the borders towards the Crim Tartar, (except they be appointed for ſome other ſeruice) whether there be wars with the Tartars, or not. This might ſeeme peraduenture ſomewhat dangerous for ſome ſtate, to haue ſo great forces vnder the cōmand of Noblemen to aſſemble euery yere to one certain place. But the matter is ſo vſed, as that no danger can growe to the Emperor, or his ſtate by this means. Firſt, becauſe theſe noblemen are many, to wit, an 110. in al, & changed by the Emperor ſo oft as he thinketh good. Secōdly, becauſe they haue their liuings of the Emperor, being otherwiſe but of very ſmall reuenue, and receiue this yerely pay of 40000 rubbles, when it is preſently to be payd forth againe to the ſouldiers that are vnder them. Thirdly, becauſe for the moſt part they are about the Emperors perſon being of his Counſel, either ſpeciall, or at large. Fourthly, they are rather as paymaſters, then Captaines to their companies, themſelues not going forth ordinarily to the wars, ſaue when ſome of them are appointed by ſpeciall order from the Emperor himſelfe. So the whole number of horſemen that are euer in a readineſſe, and in continuall pay, are 80000, a few more or leſſe.

Horſemen in continuall pay 80000.

If he haue neede of a greater number (which ſeldome falleth out) then he entertaineth of thoſe Sinaboiarskey, that are out of pay, ſo many as he needeth: and if yet he want of his number, he giueth charge to his Noblemen, that hold lands of him to bring into the field euery man a proportionable number of his ſeruants (called Kolophey, ſuch as till his lands) with their furniture, according to the iuſt number that he intendeth to make. Which the ſeruice being done, preſently lay in their weapons, and returne to their ſeruile occupations againe.

Footmen in continual pay 12000.

Of footemen that are in continuall pay, he hath to the number of 12000 all gunners, called Strelſey: Whereof 5000 are to attend about the citie of Moſco, or any other place where the Emperor ſhall abide, and 2000 (which are called Stremaney Strelſey, or gunners at the ſtirrop) about his owne perſon at the very Court or houſe where himſelfe lodgeth. The reſt are placed in his gariſon townes, till there be occaſion to haue them in the field, and receiue for their ſalarie or ſtipend euery man ſeuen rubbles a yeare, beſides twelue meaſures a piece of Rye, and Oates. Of mercenary Souldiers, that are ſtrangers (whom they call Nimſchoy) they haue at this time 4300 of Polonians: of Chirchaſſes (that are vnder the Polonians) about 4000, whereof 3500 are abroad in his gariſons: of Doutches & Scots about 150: of Greekes, Turks, Danes and Sweadens, all in one band, an 100 or thereabouts. But theſe they vſe onely vpon the Tartar ſide, and againſt the Siberians: as they doe the Tartar ſouldiers (whom they hire ſometimes, but only for the preſent) on the other ſide againſt the Polonian and Sweden: thinking it beſt pollicie to vſe their ſeruice vpon the contrary border.

The chiefe Captaines or leaders of theſe forces, according to their names and degrees, are theſe which follow. Firſt, the Voyauoda Bulſhaia, that is, the Great Captaine, or Lieutenant generall vnder the Emperor. This commonly is one of the foure houſes of the chiefe Nobility of the land. Their great Voiauod or generall at this preſent in their warrs, is commonly one of theſe foure: Knez Feodor Iuanowich Methiſloskey, Knez Iuan Michalowich Glinskoy, Cherechiſkoy, and Trowbetskoy, all of great nobilitie. Next vnto the Voiauod or generall there is ſome other placed as Lieutenant generall, being a man of great valour and experience in the warrs, who ordereth all things that the other countenanceth. At this time their principall man, & moſt vſed in their warrs, is one Knez Demetrie Iuanowich Foreſtine, an ancient and expert captaine, and one that hath done great ſeruice (as they ſay) againſt the Tartar and Polonian. Next vnder the Voiauod and his Lieutenant generall are foure other that haue the marſhalling of the whole army deuided among them, and may be called the marſhals of the field.

The chief captains or leaders.

1. The Voiuod or General.

2. Lieutenant general.

3. Marſhals of the field foure.

Euery man hath his quarter, or fourth part vnder him. Whereof the firſt is called the Praua Polskoy, or right wing. The ſecond is the Leuoy Polskoy, or left wing. The third is Ruſnoy Polskoy, or the broken band, becauſe out of this there are choſen to ſend abroad vpon any ſodaine exploit, or to make a reſcue or ſupplie, as occaſion doth require. The fourth Storoſhouoy Polskoy, or the warding band. Euery one of theſe foure Marſhals haue two other vnder them (eight in all) that twiſe euery weeke at the leaſt muſt muſter and traine their ſeuerall wings or bands, and hold and giue iuſtice for all faults, and diſorders committed in the campe.

Foure marſhals deputies eight.

And theſe eight are commonly choſen out of the 110. (which I ſpake of before) that receiue & deliuer the pay to the ſouldiers. Vnder theſe eight are diuers other Captaines, as the Gulauoy, Captaines of thouſands fiue hundreds and 100. The Peryde Setskoy or Captains of fifties, and the Decetskies or Captains of tennes.

Fiue Coronels vnder Captains.

Beſides the Voiauoda or generall of the armie (ſpoke of before) they haue two other that beare the name of Voiauoda, whereof one is the maſter of the great Ordinance (called Naradna voiauoda) who hath diuers vnder officers neceſſary for that ſeruice. The other is called the Voiauoda gulauoy, or the walking Captaine, that hath allowed him 1000 good horſemen of principall choyce, to range & ſpie abroad, & hath the charge of the running Caſtle, which we are to ſpeake of in the Chapter following. Al theſe Captains, & men of charge muſt once euery day reſort to the Bulſha voiauoda, or General of the armie, to know his pleaſure, & to informe him, if there be any requiſite matter pertaining to their office.

The Maſter of the Artillery.

The walking Captaine.

Of their muſtering, and leuying of forces, maner of armour, and prouiſion of victuall for the warres.

When warrs are towards (which they faile not of lightly euery yere with the Tartar, & many times with the Polonian & Sweden) the foure Lords of the Chetfirds ſend forth their ſummons in the Emperors name, to all the Dukes and Dyacks of the Prouinces, to be proclaimed in the head townes of euery Shire: that al the Sinaboiarskey, or ſonnes of gentlemen make their repaire to ſuch a border where the ſeruice is to be done, at ſuch a place, & by ſuch a day, and there preſent themſelues to ſuch, & ſuch Captaines. When they come to the place aſſigned them in the ſummons or proclamation, their names are taken by certaine officers that haue commiſſion for that purpoſe from the Roſerade, or high Conſtable, as Clarkes of the bands. If any make default & faile at the day, he is mulcted, & puniſhed very ſeuerely. As for the General & other chief Captaines, they are ſent thither from the Emperors owne hand, with ſuch Commiſſion & charge as he thinketh behoouefull for the preſent ſeruice. When the ſouldiers are aſſembled, they are reduced into their bands, & companies, vnder their ſeueral Captaines of tennes, fifties, hundreds, thouſands, &c. and theſe Bands into 4 Polskeis, or Legions (but of farre greater numbers then the Romane Legions were) vnder their foure great Leaders, which alſo haue the authoritie of Marſhals of the field (as was ſayd before.)

Their order of muſtering.

Concerning their armour they are but ſlightly appointed. The common horſeman hath nothing els but his bow in his caſe vnder his right arme, & his quiuer & ſword hanging on the left ſide: except ſome fewe that beare a caſe of dagges, or a Iauelin, or ſhort ſtaffe along their horſe ſide. The vnder captaines wil haue commonly ſome piece of armour beſides, as a ſhirt of maile, or ſuch like. The General with the other chiefe captaines & men of Nobilitie wil haue their horſe very richly furniſhed, their ſadles of cloth of gold, their bridles faire boſſed & taſſelled with gold, & ſilk fringe, beſtudded with pearle & precious ſtones, themſelues in very faire armour, which they call Bullatnoy, made of faire ſhining ſteele, yet couered commonly with cloth of golde, and edged round with ermin furre, his ſteele helmet on his head of a very great price, his ſword bow and arrowes at his ſide, his ſpeare in his hand, with another faire helmet, and Sheſta pera, or horſemans ſcepter caried before him. Their ſwords, bowes, and arrowes are of the Turkiſh faſhion. They practiſe like the Tartar to ſhoote forwards and backwards, as they flie and retire.

The footmans furniture. The Strelſey or footeman hath nothing but his piece in his hand, his ſtriking hatchet at his back, & his ſword by his ſide. The ſtock of his piece is not made caliuerwiſe, but with a plaine & ſtraite ſtocke (ſomewhat like a fouling piece) the barrel is rudely & vnartificially made, very heauie, yet ſhooteth but a very ſmall bullet. Prouiſion of victual. As for their prouiſion of victual, the Emperour alloweth none, either for Captaine or ſouldiour, neither prouideth any for them except peraduenture ſome corne for their money. Euery man is to bring ſufficient for himſelfe, to ſerue his turne for foure moneths, & if neede require to giue order for more to be brought vnto him to the Campe from his tenant that tilleth his land, or ſome other place. One great helpe they haue, that for lodging and diet euery Ruſſe is prepared to be a ſouldier beforehand. Though the chiefe Captaines & other of account cary tents with them after the faſhion of ours, with ſome better prouiſion of victual then the reſt. They bring with them commonly into the Campe for victuall a kinde of dried bread, (which they call Suchary) with ſome ſtore of meale, which they temper with water, and ſo make it into a ball, or ſmall lumpe of dowe, called Tollockno. And this they eate rawe in ſteed of bread. Their meat is bacon, or ſome other fleſh or fiſh dryed, after the Dutch maner. If the Ruſſe ſouldier were as hardy to execute an enterpriſe, as he is hard to beare out toyle and trauell, or were otherwiſe as apt and well trained for the warres, as he is indifferent for his lodging and diet, hee would farre exceede the ſouldiers of our parts.

Of their marching, charging, and other Martial diſcipline.

The Ruſſe truſteth rather to his number, then to the valure of his ſouldiers, or good ordering of his forces. Their marching or leading is without al order, ſaue that the foure Polkey or Legions, (whereinto their armie is deuided) keepe themſelues ſeuerall vnder their enſignes, & ſo thruſt all on together in a hurrey, as they are directed by their Generall. Their Enſigne is the image of S. George. Horſemens drummes. The Bulſha Dworaney or chiefe horſemen, haue euery man a ſmall drumme of braſſe at his ſaddle bowe, which he ſtriketh when he giueth the charge, or onſet.

The horſemans maner of charging. They haue drummes beſides of a huge bignes, which they cary with them vpon a boord layed on foure horſes, that are ſparred together with chaines, euery drumme hauing eight ſtrikers, or drummers, beſides trumpets and ſhawmes, which they ſound after a wilde maner, much different from ours. When they giue any charge, or make any inuaſion, they make a great hallow or ſhoute altogether, as lowd as they can, which with the ſound of their trumpets, ſhawmes, and drummes, maketh a confuſed and horrible noyſe. So they ſet on firſt diſcharging their arrowes, then dealing with their ſwordes, which they vſe in a brauerie to ſhake, and brandiſh ouer their heads, before they come to ſtrokes.

The footmans charge. Their footmen (becauſe otherwiſe they want order in leading) are commonly placed in ſome ambuſh or place of aduantage, where they may moſt annoy the enemie, with leaſt hurt to themſelues. If it be a ſet battell, or if any great inuaſion be made vpon the Ruſſe borders by the Tartar, they are ſet within yͤ running or mouing Caſtle (called Beza, or Gulaygorod) which is caried about with them by the Voiauoda gulauoy (or the walking General) whom I ſpake of before. The walking Caſtle. This walking or mouing Caſtle is ſo framed, that it may be ſet vp in length (as occaſion doth require) the ſpace of one, two, three, foure, fiue, ſixe, or ſeuen miles: for ſo long it will reach. It is nothing els but a double wall of wood to defend them on both ſides behinde and before, with a ſpace of three yardes or thereabouts, betwixt the two ſides: ſo that they may ſtand within it, and haue roome ynough to charge and diſcharge their pieces, and to vſe their other weapons. It is cloſed at both endes, and made with loope holes on either ſide, to lay out the noſe of their piece, or to puſh foorth any other weapon. It is caried with the armie whereſoeuer it goeth, being taken into pieces, and ſo layde on cartes ſparred together, and drawen by horſe that are not ſeene, by reaſon that they are couered with their cariage as with a ſhelfe or penthouſe. When it is brought to the place where it is to be vſed (which is deuiſed and choſen out before by the walking Voiauod) it is planted ſo much as the preſent vſe requireth, ſometime a mile long, ſometimes two, ſometimes three or more: Which is ſoone done without the helpe of any Carpenter, or inſtrument: becauſe the timber is ſo framed to claſpe together one piece within another: as is eaſily vnderſtood by thoſe that know the maner of the Ruſſe building.

In this Caſtle ſtandeth their ſhot wel fenced for aduantage, ſpecially againſt the Tartar, that bringeth no ordinance, nor other weapon into the field with him, ſaue his ſword, and bow, and arrowes. They haue alſo within their diuers field pieces, which they vſe as occaſion doth require. Of pieces for the field they carie no great ſtore, when they warre againſt the Tartar: but when they deale with the Polonian (of whoſe forces they make more account) they go better furniſhed with all kind of munition, and other neceſſarie prouiſions. It is thought that no Prince of Chriſtendome hath better ſtore of munition, then the Ruſſe Emperour. And it may partly appeare by the Armorie houſe at Moſco, where are of all ſortes of great Ordinance, all braſſe pieces, very faire, to an exceeding great number.

The Ruſſe ſouldier is thought to be better at his defence within ſome caſtle or towne, then he is abroad at a ſet pitched field. Which is euer noted in the practiſe of his warres, and namely at the ſiege of Vobſko, about eight yeres ſince: where he repulſed the Polonian king Stepan Batore, with his whole armie of 100000 men, and forced him in the end to giue ouer his ſiege, with the loſſe of many of his beſt Captaines and ſouldiers. But in a ſet field the Ruſſe is noted to haue euer the worſe of the Polonian and Sweden. 1580.

If any behaue himſelfe more valiantly then the reſt, or do any ſpeciall piece of ſeruice, the Emperour ſendeth him a piece of golde, ſtamped with the Image of Saint George on horſebacke. Which they hang on their ſleeues, and ſet in their caps. And this is accounted the greateſt honour they can receiue, for any ſeruice they doe. Reward for valure.

Of their Colonies, and maintaining of their conqueſts, or purchaſes by force.

The Ruſſe Emperours of late yeres haue very much enlarged their dominions, and territories. Their firſt conqueſt after the Dukedome of Moſco (for before that time they were but Dukes of Volodomer, as before was ſaid) was the citie, and Dukedome of Nouogrod on the Weſt, and Northweſt ſide: which was no ſmal enlargement of their dominion, and ſtrengthening to them for the winning of the reſt. This was done by Iuan great grandfather to Theodor now Emperour, about the yere 1480. The ſame began likewiſe to encroch vpon the countries of Lituania and Liuonia, but the conqueſt only intended, and attempted by him, vpon ſome part of thoſe countries, was purſued and performed by his ſonne Baſileus, who firſt wan the citie and dukedome of Pleſko, afterwards the citie and dukedome of Smolenſco, and many other faire townes, with a large territory belonging vnto them, about the yere 1514. Theſe victories againſt the Letoes or Lituanians, in the time of Alexander their duke, he atchieued rather by aduantage of ciuil diſſentions, and treaſons among themſelues, then by any great policie, or force of his owne. But al this was loſt againe by his ſon Iuan Vaſiliwich, about 8 or 9 yeres paſt, vpon compoſition with the Polonian king Stephan Batore: wherunto he was forced by the aduantages which the Pole had then of him, by reaſon of the foile he had giuen him before, and the diſquietnes of his own ſtate at home. Onely the Ruſſe Emperour at this time hath left him on that ſide his countrey, the cities of Smolenſco, Vobſco, Chernigo, and Bealagorod in Lituania. In Liuonia, not a towne nor one foot of ground. 1580.

When Baſilius firſt conquered thoſe countries, he ſuffered then the natiues to keepe their poſſeſſions, and to inhabite all their townes, onely paying him a tribute, vnder the gouernement of his Ruſſe Captaines. But by their conſpiracies and attempts not long after, he was taught to deale more ſurely with them. And ſo comming vpon them the ſecond time, he killed and caried away with him, three parts of foure, which he gaue or ſold to the Tartars that ſerued him in thoſe warres, and in ſtead of them placed there his Ruſſes, ſo many as might ouermatch the reſt, with certaine gariſons of ſtrength beſides. Wherein notwithſtanding this ouerſight was committed, for that (taking away with him the vpland, or countrey people that ſhould haue tilled the ground, and might eaſily haue bene kept in order without any danger, by other good policies) he was driuen afterwards many yeres together, to victuall the countrey (ſpecially the great townes) out of his owne countrey of Ruſſia, the ſoile lying there in the meane while waſt, and vntilled. Lituania.

The like fell out at the port of Narue in Liefland, where his ſonne Iuan Vaſiliwich deuiſed to build a towne, and a caſtle on the other ſide the riuer, (called Iuangorod) to keepe the towne and countrey in ſubiection. The caſtle he cauſed to be ſo built and fortified, that it was thought to be inuincible. And when it was finiſhed, for reward to the Architect (that was a Polonian) he put out both his eyes, to make him vnable to build the like againe. But hauing left the natiues all within their owne countrey, without abating their number or ſtrength, the towne and caſtle not long after was betraied, and ſurrendred againe to the king of Sweden. Narue.

On the Southeaſt ſide, they haue got the kingdomes of Cazan, and Aſtracan. Theſe were wonne from the Tartar, by the late Emperour Iuan Vaſiliwich, the one about thirtie fiue, the other about thirtie and three yeares agoe. Northward out of the countrey of Siberia, he hath Siberia and Ob.

Conqueſt of a 1000 miles.

Permia and Pechora.

layed vnto his realme a great breadth and length of ground, from Wichida to the riuer of Obba, about a 1000 miles ſpace: ſo that he is bolde to write himſelfe now, The great Commander of Siberia. The countries likewiſe of Permia and Pechora are a diuers people and language from the Ruſſe, ouercome not long ſince, and that rather by threatning, and ſhaking of the ſword, then by any actuall force: as being a weake and naked people, without meanes to reſiſt.

Meanes of holding chiefe townes.

That which the Ruſſe hath in his preſent poſſeſſion, he keepeth on this ſort. In his foure chiefe border townes of Vobsko, Smolensko, Aſtracan, and Cazan, he hath certaine of his counſel not of greateſt nobility, but of greateſt truſt, which haue more authoritie within their precincts, (for the countenancing and ſtrengthening of their gouernment there) then the other Dukes that are ſet to gouerne in other places, as was noted before, in the maner of ordering their Prouinces. Theſe he changeth ſometime euery yere, ſometime euery ſecond or third yere, but exceedeth not that time, except vpon very ſpeciall truſt, and good liking of the party, and his ſeruice: leaſt by enlarging of their time, they might growe into ſome familiaritie with the enemie (as ſome haue done) being ſo farre out of ſight.

The townes beſides are very ſtrongly fenced with trenches, caſtles, & ſtore of munition, and haue gariſons within them, to the number of two or three thouſand a piece. They are ſtored with victual if any ſiege ſhould come vpon them, for the ſpace of two or three yeres before hand. The foure caſtles of Smolensko, Vobsko, Cazan and Aſtracan, he hath made very ſtrong to beare out any ſiege: ſo that it is thought that thoſe townes are impregnable.

Meanes of holding the countries of Pechora, Permia, and Siberia.

As for the countries of Pechora and Permia, and that part of Siberia, which he hath now vnder him, they are kept by as eaſie meanes, as they were firſt got. vz., rather by ſhewing, then by vſing of armes. Firſt, he hath ſtored the countrie with as many Ruſſes as there are natiues, & hath there ſome few ſouldiers in gariſon, inough to keepe them vnder. Secondly, his officers & Magiſtrates there are of his owne Ruſſe people, and he changeth them very often, vz. euery yere twiſe or thriſe: notwithſtanding there be no great feare of any innouation. Thirdly, he deuideth them into many ſmal gouernments, like a ſtaffe broke in many ſmall pieces: ſo yͭ they haue no ſtrength being ſeuered, which was but litle neither when they were al in one. Fourthly, he prouideth that the people of the countrie haue neither armor, nor money, being taxed & pilled ſo often as he thinketh good: without any meanes to ſhake off that yoke, or to relieue themſelues.

Siberia.

In Siberia (where he goeth on in purſuing his conqueſt) he hath diuers caſtles & gariſons, to the number of 6000 ſouldiers of Ruſſes & Polonians, & ſendeth many new ſupplies thither, to plant and to inhabite, as he winneth ground. At this time beſides he hath gotten the kings brother of Siberia, allured by certaine of his captaines, to leaue his owne country by offers of great entertainment, and pleſanter life with the Ruſſe Emperour, then he had in Siberia. He was brought in this laſt yere, and is now with the Emperour at Moſco well entertained.

The kings brother of Siberia. 1588.

Of the Tartars, and other borderers to the country of Ruſſia, with whom they haue moſt to doe in warre, and peace.

The Polonians called Laches by the Ruſſe.

Their neighbours with whom they haue greateſt dealings & intercourſe, both in peace & war, are firſt the Tartar. Secondly the Polonian whom the Ruſſe calleth Laches, noting the firſt author or founder of the nation, who was called Laches or Leches, whereunto is added Po, which ſignifieth People, and ſo is made Polaches, that is, the People or poſterity of Laches: which the Latins after their maner of writing cal Polonos. The third are the Sweden. The Polonians & Swedens are better knowen to theſe parts of Europe then are the Tartars, that are farther off from vs (as being of Aſia) and diuided into many tribes, different in name, and gouernment one from another. The greateſt and mightieſt of them is the Chrim Tartar, (whom ſome call the Great Can) that lieth South, & Southeaſtward from Ruſſia, and doth moſt annoy the country by often inuaſions, commonly once euery yere, ſometimes entring very farre within the inland parts. In the yere 1571 he came as farre as the citie of Moſco, with an armie of 200000 men, without any battel, or reſiſtance at al, for that the Ruſſe Emperour (then Iuan Vaſiliwich) leading forth his armie to encounter with him, marched a wrong way. The citie he tooke not, but fired the ſuburbs, which by reaſon of the buildings (which are all of wood without any ſtone, brick, or lime, ſaue certeine out roomes) kindled ſo quickly, and went on with ſuch rage, as that it conſumed the greateſt part of the citie almoſt within the ſpace of foure houres, being of 30 miles or more of compaſſe. Then might you haue ſeene a lamentable ſpectacle: beſides the huge & mighty flame of the citie all on light fire, the people burning in their houſes and ſtreetes, but moſt of all of ſuch as laboured to paſſe out of the gates fartheſt from the enemie, where meeting together in a mighty throng, & ſo preſſing euery man to preuent another, wedged themſelues ſo faſt within the the gate, and ſtreetes neere vnto it, as that three rankes walked one vpon the others head, the vppermoſt treading downe thoſe that were lower: ſo that there periſhed at that time (as was ſaid) by the fire & the preſſe, the number of 800000 people or more.

The principall cauſe of this continuall quarell betwixt the Ruſſe & the Chrim is for the right of certaine border partes claimed by the Tartar, but poſſeſſed by the Ruſſe. The Tartar allageth that beſides Aſtracan and Cazan (that are the ancient poſſeſſion of the Eaſt Tartar) the whole countrey from his bounds North and Weſtward ſo farre as the citie of Moſko, and Moſko it ſelfe perteineth to his right. Which ſeemeth to haue bene true by the report of the Ruſſes them ſelues, that tell of a certaine homage that was done by the Ruſſe Emperour euery yeere to the great Chrim or Can, the Ruſſe Emperour ſtanding on foot and feeding the Chrims horſe, (him ſelfe ſitting on his backe) with oates out of his owne cappe, in ſtead of a bowle or manger, and that within the caſtle of Moſko. And this homage (they ſay) was done till the time of Baſileus grandfather to this man. Who ſurpriſing the Chrim Emperour by a ſtratageme done by one of his nobilitie (called Iuan Demetrowich Belſchey) was content with this raunſome, viz. with the changing of this homage into a tribute of furres: which afterwards alſo was denied to be paide by this Emperors father.

Homage done by the Ruſſe to the Chrim Tartar.

Hereupon they continue ẏ quarrel, the Ruſſe defending his countrey, & that which he hath won, ẏ Chrim Tartar inuading him once or twiſe euery yere, ſomtime about Whitſontide, but ofter in harueſt. What time if the great Can or Chrim come in his owne perſon, he bringeth with him a great armie of 100000. or 200000. men. Otherwiſe they make ſhort & ſudden rodes into the countrey with leſſer numbers, running about the liſt of the border as wild geeſe flie, inuading and retiring where they ſee aduantage.

Their common practiſe (being very populous) is to make diuers armies, and ſo drawing the Ruſſe to one or two places of the frontiers, to inuade at ſome other place, that is left without defence. Their manner of fight, or ordering of their forces is much after the Ruſſe maner (ſpoken of before) ſaue that they are all horſemen, and carie nothing els but a bowe, a ſheafe of arrowes, and a falcon ſword after the Turkiſh faſhion. They are very expert horſemen, and vſe to ſhoote as readily backward, as forward. Some wil haue a horſmans ſtaffe like to a bore ſpeare, beſides their other weapons. The common ſouldier hath no other armour then his ordinary apparell, viz. a blacke ſheeps skin with the wool ſide outward in the day time, and inward in the night time, with a cap of the ſame. But their Morſeys or noblemen imitate the Turk both in apparel and armour. When they are to paſſe ouer a riuer with their armie, they tie three or foure horſes together, and taking long poles or pieces of wood, bind them faſt to the tailes of their horſe: ſo ſitting on the poles they driue their horſe ouer. At hand ſtrokes (when they ioyne battell) they are accounted farre better men then the Ruſſe people, fierce by nature, but more hardy and bloody by continuall practiſe of warre: as men knowing no artes of peace, nor any ciuill practiſe.

The maner of the Tartars fight, and armour.

Yet their ſubtiltie is more then may ſeeme to agree with their barbarous condition. By reaſon they are practiſed to inuade continually, and to robbe their neighbours that border about them, they are very pregnant, and ready witted to deuiſe ſtratagems vpon the ſudden for their better aduantage. As in their warre againſt Beala the fourth, king of Hungarie, whome they inuaded with 500000. men, and obtained againſt him a great victorie. Where, amongother, hauing ſlaine his Chancelor called Nicholas Schinick, they found about him the kings priuy ſeale. Whereupon they deuiſed preſently to counterfeit letters in the kings name, to the cities and townes next about the place, where the field was fought: with charge that in no caſe they ſhould conuey themſelues, and their goods out of their dwellings, where they might abide ſafely without all feare of danger, and not leaue the countrey deſolate to the poſſeſſion of ſo vile and barbarous an enemie, as was the Tartar nation, ſeruing themſelues in all beaſtly maner. For notwithſtanding he had loſt his carriages, with ſome few ſtraglers that had marched diſorderly, yet he doubted not but to recouer that loſſe, with the acceſſe of a notable victorie, if the ſauage Tartar durſt abide him in the field. To this purpoſe hauing written their letters in the poliſh character, by certaine yong men whom they tooke in the field, and ſigned them with the Kings ſeale, they diſpatched them foorth to all the quarters of Hungaria, that lay neere about the place. Whereupon the Vngarians that were now flying away with their goods, wiues, and children, vpon the rumour of the kings ouerthrow, taking comfort of theſe counterfeit letters, ſtaied at home. And ſo were made a pray, being ſurpriſed on the ſudden by this huge number of theſe Tartars, that had compaſſed them about before they were aware.

The ſubtiltie of the Tartar.

When they beſiege a towne or fort, they offer much parle, and ſend many flattering meſſages to perſwade a ſurrendry: promiſing all things that the inhabitants will require: but being once poſſeſſed of the place, they vſe all maner of hoſtilitie, and crueltie. This they doe vpon a rule they haue, vz. that iuſtice is to bee practiſed but towards their owne. They encounter not lightly, but they haue ſome ambuſh, whereunto (hauing once ſhewed themſelues, and made ſome ſhort conflict) they retire as repulſed for feare, and ſo draw the enemie into it if they can. But the Ruſſe being well acquainted with their practiſe is more warie of them. When they come a rouing with ſome ſmall number, they ſet on horſebacke counterfaite ſhapes of men, that their number may ſeeme greater.

When they make any onſet, their maner is to make a great ſhoute, crying all out together Olla Billa, Olla Billa, God helpe vs, God help vs. They contemne death ſo much, as that they chuſe rather to die, then to yeeld to their enemie, and are ſeene when they are ſlaine to bite the very weapon, when they are paſt ſtriking or helping of themſelues. Wherein appeareth how different the Tartar is in his deſperate courage from the Ruſſe and Turke. For the Ruſſe ſouldier, if he begin once to retire, putteth all his ſafetie in his ſpeedy flight. And if once he be taken by his enemy, he neither defendeth himſelfe, nor intreateth for his life, as reckoning ſtraight to die. The Turke commonly, when he is paſt hope of eſcaping, falleth to intreatie, and caſteth away his weapon, offereth both his hands, and holdeth them, as it were to be tied: hoping to ſaue his life, by offering himſelfe bondſlaue.

The chiefe bootie the Tartars ſeeke for in all their warres, is to get ſtore of captiues, ſpecially young boyes, and girles, whome they ſell to the Turkes, or other their neighbours. To this purpoſe they take with them great baſkets made like bakers panniers to carry them tenderly, and if any of them happen to tire, or to be ſicke by the way, they daſh him againſt the ground, or ſome tree, and ſo leaue him dead. The Souldiers are not troubled with keeping the captiues and the other bootie, for hindering the execution of their warres, but they haue certaine bandes that intend nothing elſe, appoynted of purpoſe to receiue and keepe the captiues and the other praye.

The Tartar religion.

The Ruſſe borderers (being vſed to their inuaſions lightly euery yeere in the Sommer) keepe fewe other cattell on the border partes, ſaue ſwine onely which the Tartar will not touch, nor driue away with him: for that he is of the Turkiſh religion, and will eate no ſwines fleſh. Of Chriſt our Sauiour they confeſſe as much as doth the Turke in his Alkaron, viz. that he came of the Angel Gabriel and the Virgin Marie, that he was a great Prophet, and ſhall be the Iudge of the worlde at the laſt day. In other matter likewiſe, they are much ordered after the manner and direction of the Turke: hauing felt the Turkiſh forces when hee wonne from them Azou and Caffa, with ſome other townes about the Euxine or blacke Sea, that were before tributaries to the Crim Tartar. So that now the Emperor of the Crims for the moſt part is choſen one of the Nobility whom the Turke doth commend: whereby it is brought nowe to paſſe, that the Crim Tartar giueth to the Turke the tenth part of the ſpoyle which hee getteth in his warres againſt the Chriſtians.

Herein they differ from the Turkiſh religion, for that they haue certaine idole puppets made of ſilke, or like ſtuffe, of the faſhion of a man, which they faſten to the doore of their walking houſes, to be as Ianuſſes or keepers of their houſe. And theſe idoles are made not by all, but by certaine religious women which they haue among them for that and like vſes. They haue beſides the image of their King or great Can, of an huge bigneſſe, which they erect at euery ſtage when the army marcheth: and this euery one muſt bend and bowe vnto as he paſſeth by it, be he Tartar or ſtranger. They are much giuen to witchcraft, and ominous coniectures vpon euery accident which they heare or ſee.

In making of mariages they haue no regard of alliance or conſanguinitie. Onely with his mother, ſiſter, and daughter a man may not marrie, and though he take the woman into his houſe, and accompany with her, yet he accounteth her not for his wife till he haue a childe by her. Then hee beginneth to take a dowry of her friends of horſe, ſheepe, kine, &c. If ſhe be barren after a certaine time, he turneth her home againe.

The Tartar nobilitie.

Vnder the Emperour they haue certaine Dukes, whome they call Morſeis or Diuoymorſeis, that rule ouer a certaine number of 10000, 20000, or 40000, a piece, which they call Hoords. When the Emperour hath any vſe of them to ſerue in his warres, they are bound to come, and to bring with them their Souldiers to a certaine number, euery man with his two horſe at the leaſt, the one to ride on, the other to kill, when it commeth to his turne to haue his horſe eaten. For their chiefe vittaile is horſe fleſh, which they eate without bread, or any other thing with it. So that if a Tartar be taken by a Ruſſe, he ſhall be ſure lightly to finde a horſe-legge, or ſome other part of him at his ſaddle bowe.

This laſt yeere when I was at the Moſco, came in one Kiriach Morſey, nephew to the Emperour of the Crims that nowe is (whoſe father was Emperour before) accompanied with 300. Tartars, Tartars, and his two wiues, whereof one was his brothers widow. Where being intertained in very good ſort after the Ruſſe maner, hee had ſent vnto his lodging for his welcome, to bee made ready for his ſupper and his companies, two very large and fat horſes, ready flayed in a ſled. They prefer it before other fleſh, becauſe the meate is ſtronger (as they ſay) then Beefe, Mutton, and ſuch like. And yet (which is marueile) though they ſerue all as horſemen in the warres, and eate all of horſe fleſh, there are brought yeerely to the Moſco to bee exchanged for other commodities 30. or 40. thouſand Tartar horſe, which they call Cones. They keepe alſo great heards of kine, and flocks of blacke ſheepe, rather for the ſkins and milke (which they carie with them in great bottels) then for the vſe of the fleſh, though ſometimes they eate of it. Some vſe they haue of ryſe, figs, and other fruits. They drinke milke or warme blood, and for the moſt part card them both together. They vſe ſometime as they trauel by the way, to let their horſe blood in a vaine, and to drinke it warme, as it commeth from his bodie.

Townes they plant none, nor other ſtanding buildings, but haue walking houſes, which the latines call Veij, built vpon wheeles like a ſhepherds cottage. These they drawe with them whitherſoeuer they goe, driuing their cattell with them. And when they come to their ſtage, or ſtanding place, they plant their carte houſes verie orderly in a ranke: and ſo make the forme of ſtreetes, and of a large towne. And this is the manner of the Emperor himſelfe, who hath no other ſeat of Empire but an Agora, or towne of wood, that moueth with him whitherſoeuer hee goeth. As for the fixed and ſtanding building vſed in other countreyes, they ſay they are vnwholeſome and vnpleaſant.

They begin to moue their houſes and cattell in the ſpring time from the South part of their Countrey towards the North partes. And ſo driuing on till they haue graſed all vp to the fartheſt part Northward, they returne backe againe towards their South countrey (where they continue all the Winter) by 10. or 12. miles a ſtage: in the meane while the graſſe being ſprung vp againe, to ſerue for their cattell as they returne. From the border of the Shalcan towards the Caſpian ſea, to the Ruſſe frontiers, they haue a goodly Countrey, ſpecially on the South and Southeaſt parts, but loſt for lacke of tillage.

Of money they haue no vſe at all, and therefore prefer braſſe and ſteele before other mettals, ſpecially bullate, which they vſe for ſwordes, kniues, and other neceſſaries. As for golde and ſiluer they neglect it of very purpoſe, (as they doe all tillage of their ground) to bee more free for their wandring kinde of life, and to keepe their Countrey leſſe ſubiect to inuaſions. Which giueth them great aduantage againſt all their neighbours, euer inuading, and neuer beeing inuaded. Such as haue taken vpon them to inuade their Countrey (as of olde time Cyrus and Darius Hyſtaſpis, on the Eaſt and Southeaſt ſide) haue done it with very ill ſucceſſe: as wee finde in the ſtories written of thoſe times. For their manner is when any will inuade them, to allure and drawe them on by flying and reculing (as if they were afraide) till they haue drawen them ſome good way within their countrey. Then when they begin to want victuall and other neceſſaries (as needes they muſt where nothing is to be had) to ſtoppe vp the paſſages, and incloſe them with multitudes. By which ſtratagem (as wee reade in Laonicus Chalcacondylas in his Turkiſh ſtorie) they had welnigh ſurpriſed the great and huge armie of Tamerlan, but that hee retired with all ſpeede hee could towards the riuer Tanais or Don, not without great loſſe of his men, and carriages.

In the ſtorie of Pachymerius the Greeke (which hee wrote of the Emperours of Conſtantinople from the beginning of the reigne of Michael Palæologus to the time of Andronicus the elder) I remember hee telleth to the ſame purpoſe of one Nogas a Tartarian captaine vnder Cazan the Emperour of the Eaſt Tartars (of whom the citie and kingdome of Cazan may ſeeme to haue taken the denomination) who refuſed a preſent of Pearle and other iewels ſent vnto him from Michael Palæologus: asking withall, for what vſe they ſerued, and whether they were good to keepe away ſickneſſe, death, or other miſfortunes of this life, or no. So that it ſeemeth they haue euer, or long time bene of the minde to value things no further, then by the vſe and neceſſitie for which they ſerue.

For perſon and complexion they haue broade and flatte viſages, of a tanned colour into yellowe and blacke, fierce and cruell lookes, thinne haired vpon the vpper lippe, and pitte of the chinne, light and nimble bodied, with ſhort legges, as if they were made naturally for horſemen: whereto they practiſe themſelues from their childhood, ſeldome going afoot about anie buſineſſe. Their ſpeech is verie ſudden and loude, ſpeaking as it were out of a deepe hollowe throate. When they ſing you would thinke a kowe lowed, or ſome great bandogge howled. Their greateſt exerciſe is ſhooting, wherein they traine vp their children from their verie infancie, not ſuffering them to eate, till they haue ſhot neere the marke within a certaine ſcatting. They are the very ſame that ſometimes were called Scythæ Nomades, or the Scythian ſhepheards, by the Greekes and Latines. Some thinke that the Turks tooke their beginning from the nation of the Crim Tartars. Of which opinion is Laonicus Calcocondylas the Greek Laonicus Calcocondylas. Hiſtoriographer, in his firſt booke of his Turkiſh ſtorie. Wherein hee followeth diuers verie

1 probable coniectures. The firſt taken from the verie name it ſelfe, for that the worde Turk ſignifieth a Shepheard, or one that followeth a vagarant and wilde kinde of life. By which name theſe Scythian Tartars haue euer beene noted, being called by the Greekes [illegible]
2 or the Scythian ſhepheards. His ſecond reaſon, becauſe the Turkes (in his time) that dwelt in Aſia the leſſe, to wit, in Lydia, Caria, Phrygia and Cappadocia, ſpake the very ſame language that theſe Tartars did, that dwelt betwixt the riuer Tanais or Don, and the countrey of Sarmatia, which (as is well knowen) are theſe Tartars called Crims. At this time alſo the whole nation of the Turkes differ not much in their common ſpeech from the Tartar language. Thirdly 3 becauſe the Turke and the Crim Tartar agree ſo well together, as well in religion, as in matter of traffique neuer inuading, or iniurying one another: ſaue that the Turke (ſince Laonicus his time) hath encroched vpon ſome Townes vpon the Euxin Sea, that before perteined to the 4 Crim Tartar. Fourthly, becauſe Ortogules ſonne to Oguzalpes, and father to Otoman the firſt of name of the Turkiſh nation made his firſt roades out of thoſe partes of Aſia, vpon the next borderers, till hee came towardes the countreys about the hill Taurus, where hee ouercame the Greekes that inhabited there: and ſo enlarged the name and territorie of the Turkiſh nation, till hee came to Eubœa and Attica, and other partes of Greece. This is the opinion of Laonicus, who liued among the Turkes in the time of Amurat the ſixt Turkiſh Emperour, about 1400 the yeere 1400. when the memorie of their originall was more freſh: and therefore the likelier hee was to hit the trueth.

The Nagay Tartar the cruelleſt. The Chircaſſe the ciuilleſt Tartar.

The Cheremiſſen Tartar of two ſorts: the Lugauoy and the Nagornay.

There are diuers other Tartars that border vpon Ruſſia, as the Nagayes, the Cheremiſſens, the Mordwites, the Chircaſſes, and the Shalcans, which all differ in name more then in regiment, or other condition, from the Crim Tartar, except the Chircaſſes that border Southweſt, towardes Lituania, and are farre more ciuill then the reſt of the Tartars, of a comely perſon, and of a ſtately behauiour, as applying themſelues to the faſhion of the Polonian. Some of them haue ſubiected themſelues to the Kings of Poland, and profeſſe Chriſtianitie. The Nagay lieth Eaſtwarde, and is reckoned for the beſt man of warre among all the Tartars, but verie ſauage, and cruell aboue all the reſt. The Cheremeſſen Tartar, that lieth betwixt the Ruſſe and the Nagay, are of two ſorts, the Lugauoy (that is of the valley) and the Nagornay, or of the hilly countrey. Theſe haue much troubled the Emperours of Ruſſia. And therefore they are content now to buy peace of thẽ, vnder pretence of giuing a yeerely penſion of Ruſſe commodities to their Morſeys, or Diuoymorſeis, that are chiefe of their tribes. For which alſo they are bound to ſerue them in their wars, vnder certaine conditions. They are ſaid to be iuſt and true in their dealings: and for that cauſe they hate the Ruſſe people, whom they account to be double, and falſe in al their dealing. And therefore the common ſort are very vnwilling to keepe agreement with them, but that they are kept in by their Morſeis, or Dukes for their penſions ſake.

The Mordwit Tartar ẏ moſt barbarous of the reſt.

The moſt rude & barbarous is counted the Mordwit Tartar, that hath many ſelfe-faſhions and ſtrange kindes of behauiour, differing from the reſt. For his religion, though he acknowledge one God, yet his maner is to worſhip for God, that liuing thing ẏ he firſt meeteth in the morning, and to ſweare by it all that whole day, whether it be horſe, dog, cat, or whatſoeuer els it bee. When his friend dieth, he killeth his beſt horſe, and hauing flayed off the ſkinne hee carieth it on high vpon a long pole before the corpes to the place of buriall. This hee doeth (as the Ruſſe ſaieth) that his friend may haue a good horſe to carie him to heauen: but it is likelier to declare his loue towards his dead friend, in that he will haue to die with him the beſt thing that he hath.

The reuiuing of ſilkwormes.

Chriniſin a kinde of ſilkworme.

Liberty to trade downe the Caſpian ſea.

Next to the kingdome of Aſtracan, that is the fartheſt part Southeaſtward of the Ruſſe dominion, lyeth the Shalcan, and the countrey of Media: whither the Ruſſe merchants trade for rawe ſilkes, ſyndon, ſaphion, ſkinnes, and other commodities. The chiefe Townes of Media where the Ruſſe tradeth, are Derbent (built by Alexander the great, as the inhabitants ſay) and Zamachi where the ſtaple is kept for rawe ſilkes. Their manner is in the ſpring time to reuiue the ſilke-wormes (that lie dead all the Winter) by laying them in the warme ſunne, and (to haſten their quickening that they may ſooner goe to worke) to put them into bagges, and ſo to hang them vnder their childrens armes. As for the worme called Chriniſin (as wee call it Chrymſon) that maketh coloured ſilke, it is bred not in Media, but in Aſſyria. This trade to Derbent and Samachi for rawe ſilkes, and other commodities of that Countrey, as alſo into Perſia, and Bougharia downe the riuer of Volga, and through the Caſpian ſea, is permitted aſwell to the Engliſh as to the Ruſſe merchants, by the Emperours laſt graunt at my being there.

Which he accounteth for a very ſpeciall fauour, and might proue indeede very beneficiall to our English merchants, if the trade were wel and orderly vſed.

The whole nation of the Tartars are vtterly voide of all learning, and without written Law:
yet certaine rules they haue which they hold by tradition, common to all the Hoords for the practiſe of their life. Which are of this ſort. Firſt, To obey their Emperour and other Magiſtrates, 1 whatſoeuer they commaund about the publike ſeruice. 2 Except for the publike behoofe, e- 2
uery man to be free and out of controlment. 3 No priuate man to poſſeſſe any lands, but the 3 whole countrey to be as common. 4 To neglect all daintineſſe and varietie of meates, and 4 to content themſelues with that which commeth next to hand, for more hardneſſe, and rea-dines in the executing of their affaires. 5 To weare any baſe attire, and to patch their clothes 5 whether there be any neede or not: that when there is neede, it be no ſhame to weare a patcht coate. 6 To take or ſteale from any ſtranger whatſoeuer they can get, as beeing enemies to 6
all men, ſaue to ſuch as will ſubiect themſelues to them. 7 Towards their owne hoorde and 7 nation to be true in worde and deede. 8 To ſuffer no ſtranger to come within the Realme, If 8 any doe, the ſame to be bondſlaue to him that firſt taketh him, except ſuch merchants and other as haue the Tartar Bull, or paſport about them.

No ſtranger without paſport admitted.

Of the Permians, Samoites, and Lappes.

The Permians. The Samoits.

The Permians and Samoites that lye from Ruſſia, North and Northeaſt, are thought likewiſe to haue taken their beginning from the Tartar kinde. And it may partly bee geſſed by the faſhion of their countenance, as hauing all broade and flat faces as the Tartars haue, except the Chircaſſes. The Permians are accounted for a very ancient people. They are nowe ſubiect to the Ruſſe. They liue by hunting, and trading with their furres, as alſo doeth the Samoit, that dwelleth more towardes the North Sea. The Samoit hath his name (as the Ruſſe ſaith) of eating himſelfe: as if in times paſt, they liued as þ Cannibals, eating one another. Which they make more probable, becauſe at this time they eate all kind of raw fleſh, whatſoeuer it be, euen the very carion that lieth in the ditch. But as the Samoits themſelues will ſay, they were called Samoie, that is, of themſelues, as though they were Indigenæ, or people bred vpon that very ſoyle, that neuer changed their ſeate from one place to another, as moſt nations haue done. They are ſubiect at this time to the Emperour of Ruſſia.

The Samoits religion. Slata Baba or the golde hag. A fable. The Sea. Fiſhing or ſea.

I talked with certaine of them, and finde that they acknowledge one God: but repreſent him by ſuch things as they haue moſt vſe and good by. And therefore they worſhip the Sunne, the Ollen, the Loſh, and ſuch like. As for the ſtory of Slata Baba, or the Golden hagge, (which I haue read in ſome mappes, and deſcriptions of theſe countries, to be an idole after the forme of an olde woman) that being demanded by the Prieſt, giueth them certaine Oracles, concerning the ſucceſſe, and euent of things, I found it to be a very fable. Onely in the Prouince of Obdoria vpon the ſea ſide, neare to the mouth of the great riuer Obba, there is a rocke, which naturally (being ſomewhat helped by imagination) may ſeeme to beare the ſhape of a ragged woman, with a child in her armes (as the rocke by the North Cape the ſhape of a Frier) where the Obdorian Samoites vſe much to reſort, by reaſon of the commoditie of the place for fiſhing: and there ſometime (as their manner is) conceiue, and practiſe their ſorceries, and ominous coniecturings about the good or bad ſpeede of their iourneies, fiſhings, huntings, and ſuch like.

The Samoits habit and behauiour. The people of Meta Incognita such.

They are clad in Seale ſkins, with the hairie ſide outwards downe as low as the knees, with their breeches and netherſtockes of the ſame, both men and women. They are all blacke haired, naturally beardleſſe. And therefore the men are hardly diſcerned from the women by their lookes: ſaue that the women weare a locke of haire downe along both their eares. They liue in a manner a wilde and ſauage life, roving ſtill from one place of the countrey to another, without any property of houſe or land more to one then to another. Their leader or directer in euery companie, is their Papa or Prieſt.

The Lappes.

On the North ſide of Ruſſia next to Corelia, lieth the countrey of Lappia, which reacheth in length from the fartheſt point Northward, (towards the Northcape) to the fartheſt part Southeaſt (which the Ruſſe calleth Sweetneſſe or Holy noſe, the English men Capegrace) about 345. verſts or miles. From Sweetneſſe to Candelox by the way of Verſega (which meaſureth the breadth of that countrey) is 90. miles or thereabouts. The whole countrey in a maner is either lakes, or mountaines, which towardes the Sea ſide are called Tondro, becauſe they are all of hard and craggy rocke, but the inland partes are well furniſhed with woods that growe on the hilles ſides, the lakes lying betweene. Their diet is very bare and ſimple. Bread they haue none, but feede onely vpon fiſh and foule. They are ſubiect to the Emperor of Ruſſia, and the two kings of Sweden and Denmarke: which all exact tribute and cuſtome of them (as was ſaide before) but the Emperor of Ruſſia beareth the greateſt hand ouer them, and exacteth of them farre more then the reſt. The opinion is that they were firſt termed Lappes of their briefe and short ſpeech. The Ruſſe diuideth the whole nation of the Lappes into two ſortes. The one they call Nowremanskoy Lapary, that is, the Noruegian Lappes becauſe they be of the Daniſh religion. For the Danes and Noruegians they account for one people. The other that haue no religion at all but liue as bruite and heathenish people, without God in the worlde, they cal Dikoy Lapary, or the wilde Lappes.

The whole nation is vtterly vnlearned, hauing not ſo much as the vſe of any Alphabet, or letter among them. For practiſe of witchcraft and ſorcerie they paſſe all nations in the worlde. Though for enchanting of ſhips that ſaile along their coaſt, (as I haue heard it reported) and their giuing of winds good to their friends, and contrary to other, whom they meane to hurt by tying of certaine knots vpon a rope (ſomewhat like to the tale of Æolus his windbag) is a very fable, deuiſed (as may ſeeme) by themſelues, to terrifie ſailers for comming neere their coaſt. Their weapons are the long bow, and handgunne, wherein they excell, aſwell for quickneſſe to charge and diſcharge, as for neereneſſe at the marke by reaſon of their continual practiſe (whereto they are forced) of ſhooting at wild fowle. Their maner is in Sommer time to come downe in great companies to the ſea ſide, to Wardhuyſe, Cola, Kegor, and the bay of Vedagoba, and there to fiſh for Codde, Salmon, & Butt-fiſh, which they ſel to the Ruſſes, Danes, & Noruegians, and now of late to the Engliſh men that trade thither with cloth, which they exchange with the Laps & Corelians for their fiſh, oyle, and furres, whereof alſo they haue ſome ſtore. They holde their mart at Cola on S. Peters day: what time the captaine of Wardhuyſe (that is reſiant there for the king of Denmark) muſt be preſent, or at leaſt ſend his deputie to ſet prices vpon their ſtockfiſh, train oile, furres, and other commodities: as alſo the Ruſſe Emperors cuſtomer, or tribute taker, to receiue his cuſtome, which is euer paide before any thing can bee bought or ſolde. When their fiſhing is done, their manner is to drawe their carbaſſes or boates on ſhore, and there to leaue them with the keele turned vpwardes, till the next ſpring tide. Their trauaile to and fro is vpon ſleddes drawen by the Olen Deere: which they vſe to turne a graſing all the Sommer time in an Iland called Kildyn, (of a verie good ſoyle compared with other partes of that Countrey) and towards the Winter time, when the ſnowe beginneth to fall, they fetch them home againe for the vſe of their ſledde.

The deſcription of the regions, people, and riuers, lying North and Eaſt from Moſcouia: as the way from Moſcouia to the riuer Petzora, and the Prouince Iugaria or Iubra, and from thence to the riuer Obi. Vſtiug.

THE dominion of the Prince of Moſcouia, reacheth farre toward the Eaſt and North, vnto the places which we will now deſcribe. As concerning which thing, I tranſlated a booke ŷ was preſented vnto me in the Moſcouites tongue, and haue here made a briefe rehearſall of the ſame. I will firſt therefore deſcribe the iourney from Moſcouia to Petzora, and ſo to Iugaria and Obi. From Moſcouia to the citie of Vologda, are numbred fiue hundred verſts, one verſt conteyning almoſt the ſpace of an Italian myle. From Vologda to Vſtiug toward the right hand, deſcending with the courſe of the riuer of Vologda and Suchana with whom it ioyneth, are counted fiue hundred verſtes, where within two verſts of the towne called Strelze, and hard by the citie of Vſtiug, Suchana ioyneth vnto Iug, which runneth from the South: from whoſe mouth vnto the ſprings of the ſame, are numbred fiue hundred verſts.

Suchana, Iug. So called of his ſwift and pleaſant ſtreame.

But Suchana and Iug, after they ioyne together, loſe their firſt names, and make but one riuer named Dwina, by the which the paſſage to the citie of Colmogro conteineth fiue hundred verſts, from whence, in the ſpace of ſixe dayes iourney, Dwina entreth into the North Ocean at ſixe mouthes. And the greateſt part of this iourney conſiſteth by Nauigation. For by lande from Vologda vnto Colmogro, paſſing ouer the riuer Vuaga, are a thouſand verſtes. Not farre from Colmogro, the riuer Pienega running from the Eaſt on the right hand for the ſpace of ſeuen hundred verſts, falleth into Dwina. From Dwina by the riuer Pienega, by the ſpace of two hundred verſts, they come to a place called Nicholai, from whence within halfe a verſt ſhips haue paſſage into the riuer Kuluio, which hath his originall from a lake of the ſame name towarde the North, from whoſe ſprings is eight daies viage to the mouth of the ſame, where it entreth into the Ocean.

Sayling by the coaſts of the right hand of the ſea, they paſſe by the regions of Stanuwiſche, Calunczſcho, and Apnu: And ſayling about the promontorie or cape of ChorogoskiNoſz, Stanuwiſche, Camenckh, and Tolſtickh, they come at length into the riuer Mezen, and from thence in the ſpace of ſixe dayes, to a village of the ſame name, ſtanding in the mouth of the riuer Pieza, by the which againe aſcending toward the left hand & ſommer Eaſt, they come to the riuer Pieſcoia: from whence ſayling for the ſpace of fiue verſts, they come into two lakes, in the which are ſeene two wayes: whereof one on the right ſide, goeth to the riuer Rubicho, by the which they paſſe to the riuer Czircho. Other, by an other and ſhorter way, bring their ſhips from the lake directly into Czircho: from whence, except they be hindered by tempeſt, they come in the ſpace of three weekes to the riuer and mouth of Czilma, flowing into the great riuer Petzora, which in that place is two verſts in breadth. Sayling from thence, they come in the ſpace of ſixe dayes to the Towne and caſtle of Puſtoſero, neare vnto the which, Petzora entreth into the North Ocean at ſixe mouthes. The inhabitants of this place, are men of ſimple wit: they receiued the faith of Chriſt, and were baptiſed in the yeare M.D.xviii.

From the mouth of Czilma vnto the mouth of the riuer Vſſa, going by Petzora, is one moneths viage. Vſſa hath his ſprings in the mountaine *Poyas Semnoi, being on the left hand toward the ſommer Eaſt, and ſpringeth out of a great ſtone of the ſame mountaine, called Camen Bolſchoi. From the ſprings of Vſſa to the mouthes of the ſame, are numbered more then a thouſand verſts. Furthermore, Petzora runneth from this ſouth winter part, from whence aſcending from the mouthes of Vſſa, vnto the mouthes of the riuer Stzuchogora, is three weekes viage. They that deſcribed this voyage ſay that they reſted betweene the mouthes of the riuers of Stzuchogora and Potzſcheriema, and left their victuals there which they brought with them from Ruſſia. Beyond the riuers of Petzora and Stzuchogora toward the mountaine Camenipoias, and the ſea with the Ilands thereabout, and the Caſtle of Puſtoſero, are diuers and innumerable nations, which by one common name are called Samoged (that is) ſuch as eate themſelues. They haue great increaſe of foules, birdes, and diuers kindes of beaſts: as Sables, Marternes, Beuers, Otters, Hermelines, Squirrels: and in the Ocean the beaſt called a Mors: Alſo Veſſe, white Beares, Wolues, Hares, Equiwoduani, great Whales, and a fiſh called Semſi, with diuers other. The people of theſe nations come not to Moſcouia: For they are wilde, and flee the company and ſociety of other men.

From the mouthes of Stzuchogora, ſayling by the riuer vnto Poiaſſa, Artawiſche, Cameni, and Poiaſſa the greater, is three weekes voyage. Furthermore, the aſcending to the mount Camen, is three dayes iourney: from the which deſcending they come to the riuer Artawiſcha, and from thence to the riuer Sibut, from whence they paſſe to the Caſtle of Lepin, and from Lepin to the riuer Soſſa. The people that inhabite the region by this riuer, are called Vuogolici. Leauing Soſſa on the right hande, they come to the great riuer Obi, that ſpringeth out of the lake Kitaisko, the which, with all the haſte they could make, they could ſcarcely paſſe ouer in one day, the riuer being of ſuch breadth that it reacheth fourescore verſts. The people alſo that dwell about the riuer, are called Vuogolici and Vgritzſchi. From the Caſtle of Obea, aſcending by the riuer of Oby, vnto the riuer Irtiſche, into the which Soſſa entreth, is three moneths iourney. In theſe places are two Caſtles named Ierom and Tumen, kept by certaine Lords called Kneſi Iuhorski, being tributaries to the great Duke of Moſcouia, as they ſay. Here are diuers kinds of beaſts and furres.

From the mouth of the riuer Irtiſche to the Caſtle of Gruſtina, is two moneths iourney: from whence to the lake Kitai, by the riuer Oby (which I ſaid to haue his ſprings in this lake) is more then three moneths iourney. From this lake come many blacke men, lacking the vſe of common ſpeech. They bring with them diuers wares, and eſpecially pearles, and precious ſtones, which they ſell to the people called Gruſtinczi and Serponowtzi. Theſe haue their name of the Caſtle Serponow, ſituate in the mountaines of Lucomoria, beyond the riuer Obi. They ſay that to the men of Lucomoria chanceth a maruellous thing and incredible: For they affirme, that they die yeerely at the xxvii. day of Nouember, being the feaſt of S. George among the Moſcouites: and that at the next ſpring about the xxiiii. day of Aprill, they reuiue againe as doe Frogges.

With theſe alſo, the people of Gruſtinczi and Serponowtzi exerciſe a new and ſtrange kinde of trade: For when the accuſtomed time of their dying, or rather of ſleeping, approcheth, they leaue their wares in certaine places appointed, which the Gruſtinczi and Serponowtzi carry away, leauing other wares of equall value in their places: which if the dead men at the time of their reuiuing perceiue to be of vnequall price, they require their owne againe: by reaſon whereof, much ſtrife and fighting is betweene them.

Obi.
Calami.
Riuers.

From the riuer of Obi deſcending toward the left hand, are the people called Calami, which came thither from Obiowa and Pogoſa. Beneath Obi, about Aurea Anus (that is, the golden old wife) are the riuers Soſſa, Berezuua, and Danadim, all which ſpring out of the mountaines Camen, Bolſchega, Poiaſſa, and the rockes ioyning to the ſame. All the nations that inhabite from theſe riuers to Aurea Anus, are ſubiect to the prince of Moſcouia.

Aurea Anus, Obdora.

Aurea Anus, called in the Moſcouites tongue, Slata Baba, is an idol, at the mouthe of Obi in the prouince of Obdora, ſtanding on the furtheſt banke toward the ſea. Along by the bankes of Obi, & the riuers neare there about, are here and there many caſtles and fortreſſes: all the lords whereof, are ſubiect to the prince of Moſcouia, as they ſay. They ſay alſo, or rather fable, that the idol called Aurea Anus, is an image like vnto an old wife, hauing a child in her lap, and that there is now ſeene another infant, which they ſay to be her nephew: Alſo, that there are certaine inſtruments that make a continuall ſound like the noyſe of Trumpets, the which, if it ſo be, I thinke it to be by reaſon of the winde, blowing continually into the holow places of thoſe inſtruments.

Coſſin.
Caſſima.
Tachnin a great riuer.
People of monſtrous ſhape.
A fiſh like a man.
Plinie writeth of the like fiſh.

The riuer Coſſin falleth out of the mountaines of Lucomoria: In the mouth of this is a caſtle, whither from the ſprings of the great riuer Coſſin, is two monethes viage. Furthermore, from the ſprings of the ſame riuer, the riuer Caſſima hath his originall, which running through Lucomoria, falleth into the great riuer Tachnin, beyond the which (as is ſaid) dwell men of prodigious ſhape, of whom, ſome are ouergrowen with haire like wilde beaſtes, other haue heads like dogges, and their faces in their breaſts, without neckes, and with long hands alſo, and without feete. There is likewiſe in the riuer Tachnin a certaine fiſh, with head, eyes, noſe, mouth, hands, feete, and other members vtterly of humane ſhape, and yet without any voyce, and pleaſant to be eaten, as are other fiſhes.

The end of the iournall.

All that I haue hitherto rehearſed, I haue tranſlated out of the ſaide iourney which was deliuered me in the Moſcouites tongue: In the which, perhaps ſome things may ſeeme fabulous, and in maner incredible, as of the dombe men, and the dead reuiuing, the Aurea Anus alſo, and the monſtrous ſhapes of men, with the fiſh of humane fourme: whereof, although I haue made diligent inquiſition, yet could I knowe nothing certaine of any that had ſeene the ſame with their eyes: neuertheleſſe, to giue further occaſion to other to ſearch the trueth of theſe things, I haue thought good to make mention hereof.

Noſſ in the Moſcouites tongue ſignifieth a noſe, and therefore they call all capes or points, that reach into the ſea, by the ſame name.

Mountaines.

The mountaines about the riuer of Petzora are called Semnoi Poyas, or Cingulus mundi, that is, the girdle of the world, or of the earth.

The great Can of Cathay.

Kithai is a lake, of which the great Can of Cathay, whom the Moſcouians cal Czar Kithaiski, hath his name: For Can in the Tartars language ſignifieth, A King.

Moria is the ſea.
Lucomoria.
Tumen.

The places of Lucomoria, neare vnto the ſea, are ſaluage, full of woods, and inhabited without any houſes. And albeit, that the author of this iourney, ſaid, that many nations of Lucomoria are ſubiect to the prince of Moſcouia, yet for as much as the kingdome of Tumen is neare thervnto, whoſe prince is a Tartar, and named in their tongue, Tumenski Czar, that is, a king in Tumen, and hath of late done great domage to the prince of Moſcouia: it is moſt like that theſe nations ſhould rather be ſubiect vnto him.

Petzora.
Papin.
High mountaines, ſuppoſed to be Hyperborei, and Rhiphei.

Neare vnto the riuer Petzora (whereof mention is made in this iourney) is the citie and caſtle of Papin, or Papinowgorod, whoſe inhabitants are named Papini, and haue a priuate language, differing from the Moſcouites. Beyond this riuer are exceeding high mountaines, reaching euen vnto the bankes, whoſe ridges or tops, by reaſon of continuall windes, are in maner vtterly barren without graſſe or fruits. And although in diuers places they haue diuers names, yet are they commonly called Cingulus mundi, that is, the girdle of the world. In theſe mountaines doe Ierfalcons breede, whereof I haue ſpoken before. There growe alſo Cedar trees, among the which are found the beſt and blackeſt kinde of Sables: and onely theſe mountaines are ſeene in all the dominions of the prince of Moſcouia, which perhaps are the ſame that the old writers call Rhipheos, or Hyperboreos, ſo named of the Greeke word, Hyper, that is, Aboue, and Boreas, that is, the North: for by reaſon they are couered with continuall ſnow and froſt, they can not without great difficultie be trauayled, and reach ſo farre into the North, that they make the vnknowen land of Engronland. The Duke of Moſcouia, Baſilius the ſonne of Iohn, ſent on a time two of his Captaines, named Simeon Pheodorowich Kurbski, & Knes Peter Vſchatoi, to ſearch the places beyond theſe mountaines, and to ſubdue the nations thereabout. Kurbski was yet aliue at my being in Moſcouia, & declared vnto me that he ſpent xvii. daies in aſcending the mountaine, & yet could not come to the top therof, which in their tongue is called Scolp, that is, a piller. This mountaine is extended into the Ocean vnto the mouthes of the riuers of Dwina and Petzora.

But now hauing ſpoken thus much of the ſaid iourney, I will returne to the dominions of Moſcouia, with other regions lying Eaſtward & South from the ſame, toward the mightie Empire of Cathay. But I will firſt ſpeake ſomewhat briefly of the prouince of Rezan, and the famous riuer of Tanais.

Cathay.

The prouince of Rezan, ſituate betweene the riuers of Occa and Tanais, hath a citie builded of wood, not from the banke of Occa: there was in it a Caſtle named Iaroſlaue, whereof there now remaineth nothing but tokens of the old ruine. Not farre from that citie, the riuer Occa maketh an Iland named Strub, which was ſometime a great Dukedome, whoſe prince was ſubiect to none other. This prouince of Rezan is more fruitful then any other of the prouinces of Moſcouia: Inſomuch that in this (as they ſay) euery graine of wheat bringeth forth two, and ſometimes more eares: whoſe ſtalkes or ſtrawes grow ſo thicke that horſes can ſcarſely go through them, or Quayles flie out of them. There is great plenty of hony, fiſhes, foules, birdes, and wilde beaſts. The fruits alſo doe farre exceede the fruits of Moſcouia. The people are bolde and warlike men.

The Ocean ſea turneth from the Eaſt toward the Countrey of the Chinaes, and ſtretcheth toward the North, and at length hauing paſſed the ſayd Countrey, it reacheth vnto the Gogi and Magogi, that is, to the confines of The vttermoſt Tartars, and from thence, vnto certaine vnknowen Countreys: and running ſtill Weſtward it paſſeth vpon the Northerne coaſts of Ruſſia, and from thence it runneth toward the Northweſt. (which it doth indeede vpon the coaſt of Lappia.) By this moſt notable teſtimony it appeareth, that the Ocean ſea compaſſeth and enuironeth all the Eaſt, Northeaſt, and North parts of Aſia and Europe.

The Emperors priuate or houſhold Officers.

The chiefe Officers of the Emperors houſhold are theſe which follow. The firſt is the office of the Boiaren Coneſheua, or maſter of the Horſe. Which conteineth no more then is expreſſed by the name, that is, to be ouerſeer of the Horſe, and not Magiſter equitum, or Maſter of the Horſemen. For he appointeth other for that ſeruice, as occaſion doth require, as before was ſayd. He that beareth that office at this time, is Boris Pheodorowich Godonoe, brother to the Empreſſe. Of Horſe for ſeruice in his warres (beſides other for his ordinary vſes) he hath to the number of ten thouſand which are kept about Moſco.

Maſter of the Horſe.

The next is the Lord Steward of his houſhold at this time, one Gregory Vaſilowich Godonoe. The third is his Treaſurer, that keepeth all his moneis, iewels, plate, &c. now called Stephan Vaſilowich Godonoe. The fourth his Controller, now Andreas Petrowich Cleſinine. The fift his Chamberlaine. He that attendeth that office at this time, is called Eſtoma Biſabroza Paſtelniſchay. The ſixt his Taſters, now Theodor Alexandrowich, and Iuan Vaſilowich Godonoe. The ſeuenth his Harbengers, which are three Noble men, and diuers other Gentlemen that doe the office vnder them. Theſe are his ordinary officers, and offices of the chiefeſt account.

continually day and night: which come not within the houſe, but waite without in the court or yard, where the Emperour is abiding. In the night time there lodgeth next to his bedchamber the chiefe Chamberlaine, with one or two more of beſt truſt about him. A ſecond chamber off, there lodge ſixe other of like account for their truſt and faithfulneſſe. In the thirde chamber lie certaine young Gentlemen, of theſe two hundred, called Shilſey Straſpſey, that take their turnes by forties euery night. There are Groomes beſides that watch in their courſe, and lie at euery gate and doore of the Court, called Eſtopnick.

Groomes.

The Hagbutters or Gunners, whereof there are two thouſand (as was ſaid before) watch about the Emperours lodging, or bed chamber by courſe 250. euery night, and 250. more in the Court yarde, and about the Treaſure houſe. His Court or houſe at the Moſco is made Caſtle wiſe, walled about, with great ſtore of faire ordinance planted vpon the wall, and conteyneth a great breadth of ground within it, with many dwelling houſes: Which are appointed for ſuch as are knowen to be ſure, and truſtie to the Emperor.

Of the priuate behauiour, or qualitie of the Ruſſe people.

THE priuate behauiour and qualitie of the Ruſſe people, may partly be vnderſtood by that which hath beene ſayd concerning the publique ſtate and vſage of the Countrey. As touching the naturall habite of their bodies, they are for the moſt part of a large ſize, and of very fleſhly bodies: accounting it a grace to be ſomewhat groſſe and burley, and therefore they nouriſh and ſpread their beards, to haue them long and broad. But for the moſt part they are very vnwieldy and vnactiue withall. Which may be thought to come partly of the climate, and the numbneſſe which they get by the cold in winter, and partly of their diet that ſtandeth moſt of rootes, onions, garlike, cabbage, and ſuch like things that breede groſſe humors, which they vſe to eate alone, and with their other meates.

Conſtitution of their bodies.

Their diet is rather much then curious. At their meales they beginne commonly with a Charke or ſmall cuppe of Aqua vitæ, (which they call Ruſſe wine) and then drinke not till towardes the end of their meales, taking it in largely, and all together, with kiſſing one another at euery pledge. And therefore after dinner there is no talking with them, but euery man goeth to his bench to take his afternoones ſleepe, which is as ordinary with them as their nights reſt. When they exceede, and haue varietie of diſhes, the firſt are their baked meates (for roſte meates they vſe litle) and then their brothes or pottage. Their common drinke is Mead, the poorer ſort vſe water, and a third drinke called Quaſſe, which is nothing elſe (as we ſay) but water turned out of his wits, with a litle branne meaſhed with it.

Their diet.

This diet would breede in them many diſeaſes, but that they vſe bathſtoues, or hote houſes in ſteade of all Phiſicke, commonly twiſe or thriſe euery weeke. All the winter time, and almoſt the whole Sommer, they heat their Peaches, which are made like the Germane bathſtoues, and their Poclads like ouens, that ſo warme the houſe that a ſtranger at the firſt ſhall hardly like of it. Theſe two extremities, ſpecially in the winter of heat within their houſes, and of extreame colde without, together with their diet, make them of a darke, and ſallow complexion, their ſkinnes being tanned and parched both with cold and with heate: ſpecially the women, that for the greater part are of farre worſe complexions, then the men. Whereof the cauſe I take to be their keeping within the hote houſes, and buſying themſelues about the heating, and vſing of their bathſtoues, and peaches.

The Ruſſe becauſe that he is vſed to both theſe extremities of heat and of cold, can beare them both a great deale more patiently, then ſtrangers can doe. You ſhall ſee them ſometimes (to ſeaſon their bodies) come out of their bathſtoues all on a froth, and fuming as hoat almoſt as a pigge at a ſpit, and preſently to leape into the riuer ſtarke naked, or to powre cold water all ouer their bodies, and that in the coldeſt of all the winter time. The women to mende the bad hue of their ſkinnes, vſe to paint their faces with white and red colours, ſo viſibly, that euery man may perceiue it. Which is made no matter, becauſe it is common, and liked well by their huſbands: who make their wiues and daughters an ordinarie allowance to buy them colours to paint their faces withall, and delight themſelues much to ſee them of fowle women to become ſuch faire images. This parcheth the ſkinne, and helpeth to deforme them when their painting is of.

An admirable induring of extreme heat, and colde at one and the ſame time.

They apparell themſelues after the Greeke manner. The Noblemans attire is on this faſhion. Firſt a Taffia, or little night cappe on his head, that couereth litle more then his crowne, commonly verie rich wrought of ſilke and golde threede, and ſet with pearle and precious ſtone. His head he keepeth ſhauen cloſe to the very ſkinne, except he be in ſome diſpleaſure with the Emperour. Then hee ſuffereth his haire to growe and hang downe vpon his ſhoulders, cou-ring his face as vgly and deformedly as he can. Ouer the Taffia hee weareth a wide cappe of blacke Foxe (which they account for the beſt furre) with a Tiara or long bonnet put within it, ſtanding vp like a Perſian or Babilonian hatte. About his necke (which is ſeene all bare) is a coller ſet with pearle and precious ſtone, about three or foure fingers broad. Next ouer his ſhirt, (which is curiouſly wrought, becauſe hee ſtrippeth himſelfe into it in the Sommer time, while he is within the houſe) is a Shepon, or light garment of ſilke, made downe to the knees, buttoned before: and then a Caftan or a cloſe coat buttoned, and girt to him with a Perſian girdle, whereat he hangs his kniues and ſpoone. This commonly is of cloth of gold, and hangeth downe as low as his ancles. Ouer that hee weareth a loſe garment of ſome rich ſilke, furred and faced about with ſome golde lace, called a Ferris. Another ouer that of chamlet, or like ſtuffe called an Alkaben, ſleeued and hanging lowe, and the cape commonly brodered, and ſet all with pearle. When hee goeth abroad, he caſteth ouer all theſe (which are but ſleight, though they ſeeme to be many) an other garment called an Honoratkey, like to the Alkaben, ſaue that it is made without a coller for the necke. And this is commonly of fine cloth, or Camels haire. His buſkins (which he weareth in ſtead of hoſe, with linnen folles vnder them in ſtead of boot hoſe) are made of a Perſian leather called Saphian, embrodered with pearle. His vpper ſtockes commonly are of cloth of golde. When he goeth abroad, hee mounteth on horſebacke, though it be but to the next doore: which is the maner alſo of the Boiarskey, or Gentlemen.

The Gentlemans apparel.

The Boiarskey or Gentlemans attire is of the ſame faſhion, but differeth in ſtuffe: and yet he will haue his Caftan or vndercoat ſometimes of cloth of golde, the reſt of cloth, or ſilke.

The Noble womans attire.

The Noble woman (called Chyna Boiarſhena) weareth on her head, firſt a caull of ſome ſoft ſilke (which is commonly redde) and ouer it a frontlet called Obroſa, of white colour. Ouer that her cappe (made after the coife faſhion of cloth of gold) called Shapka Zempska, edged with ſome rich furre, and ſet with pearle and ſtone. Though they haue of late begunne to diſdaine embrodering with pearle aboue their cappes, becauſe the Diacks, and ſome Marchants wiues haue taken vp the faſhion. In their eares they weare earerings (which they call Sargee) of two inches or more compaſſe, the matter of gold ſet with Rubies, or Saphires, or ſome like precious ſtone. In Sommer they goe often with kerchieffes of fine white lawne, or cambricke, faſtned vnder the chinne, with two long taſſels pendent. The kerchiefe ſpotted and ſet thicke with rich pearle. When they ride or goe abroad in raynie weather, they weare white hattes with coloured bandes, called Stapa Zemskoy. About their neckes they weare collers of three or foure fingers broad, ſet with rich pearle and precious ſtone. Their vpper garment is a looſe gowne called Opoſhen commonly of ſcarlet, with wide looſe ſleeues, hanging downe to the ground buttened before with great golde buttons, or at leaſt ſiluer and guilt nigh as bigge as a walnut. Which hath hanging ouer it faſtned vnder the cappe, a large broad cape of ſome rich furre, that hangeth downe almoſt to the middes of their backes. Next vnder the Opoſken or vpper garment, they weare another called a Leitnick that is made cloſe before with great wide ſleeues, the cuffe or halfe ſleeue vp to the elbowes, commonly of cloth of golde: and vnder that a Ferris Zemskoy, which hangeth looſe buttoned throughout to the very foote. On the hande wreſts they weare very faire braſelets, about two fingers broad of pearle and precious ſtone. They goe all in buſkins of white, yellow, blew, or ſome other coloured leather, embrodered with pearle. This is the attire of the Noblewoman of Ruſſia, when ſhe maketh the beſt ſhewe of her ſelfe. The Gentlewomans apparell may differ in the ſtuffe, but is all one for the making or faſhion.

The Mouſick or common mans attire.

As for the poore Mouſick and his wife they goe poorely cladde. The man with his Honoratkey, or looſe gowne to the ſmall of the legge, tyed together with a lace before, of courſe white or blew cloth, with ſome Shube or long waſtcoate of furre, or of ſheepeſkinne vnder it, and his furred cappe, and buſkins. The poorer ſort of them haue their Honoratkey, or vpper garment, made of Kowes haire. This is their winter habite. In the ſommer time, commonly they weare nothing but their ſhirts on their backes, and buſkins on their legges. The woman goeth in a red or blew gowne, when ſhe maketh the beſt ſhewe, and with ſome warme Shube of furre vnder it in the winter time. But in the ſommer, nothing but her two ſhirts (for ſo they call them) one ouer the other, whether they be within doores, or without. On their heads, they weare caps of ſome coloured ſtuffe, many of veluet, or of cloth of gold: but for the moſt part kerchiefs. Without earings of ſiluer or ſome other mettall, and her croſſe about her necke, you ſhall ſee no Ruſſe woman, be ſhe wife, or maide.

The Lord Boris Pheodorowich his letter to the Right Honorable William Burghley Lord high Treaſurer of England, &c.

By the grace of God the great Lord Emperor, and great Duke Theodore Iuanowich, great Lord, King, and great Duke of all Ruſſia, of Volodemer, Moſco, and Nouogorod, king of Cazan, and Aſtracan, Lord of Vobsko, and great Duke of Smolenſco, Tuer, Vghori, Permi, Viatsko, Bolgorie, and other places, Lorde and great Duke of Nouogrod in the Lowe Countrey, of Chernigo, Rezan, Polotsky, Roſtoue, Yeroſlaue, Bealozera, and Liefland, of Oudorski, Obdorski, Condinski, and commander of all Sibierland, and the North coaſts, great Lorde ouer the Countrey of Iuerski, Griſinski, Emperor of Kabardinski, and of the Countrey Charchaski, and the Countrey of Gorsky, and Lord of many other regions.

The Emperors ſtile increaſed.

From Boris Pheodorowich his Maieſties brother in law, maſter of his horſes, gouernour of the territories of Cazan and Aſtracan, to William Lord Burghley, Lord high Treaſurer to the moſt vertuous Ladie Elizabeth, Queene of England, France, and Ireland, and other dominions: I receiued your Lordſhips letters, wherein you write that you haue receiued very ioyfully my letters ſent vnto you, and aduiſedly read them, and imparted the ſame vnto her Maieſtie: and that your Merchants finde themſelues agreeued, that when they approch theſe parts, and are arriued here, they are not permitted to enter into a free and liberall courſe of barter, traffike, and exchange of their commodities, as heretofore they haue done, but are compelled before they can enter into any traffike to accept the Emperours ware, and other goods, at high rates farre aboue their value, to their great loſſe: and that they are by reaſon of this reſtraint long holden vpon theſe coaſts to the danger of wintering by the way. Hereafter there ſhalbe no cauſe of offence giuen to the Marchants of the Queenes Maieſtie Queene Elizabeth: they ſhall not be forced to any thing, neither are there or ſhall be any demands made of cuſtome or debts. Such things as haue beene heretofore demaunded, all ſuch things haue beene already vpon their petition and ſupplication commaunded to be diſcharged. I haue ſollicited his Maieſtie for them, that they be not troubled hereafter for thoſe matters, and that a fauourable hand be caried ouer them. And according to your requeſt I will be a meane to the Emperour for them in all their occaſions, and will my ſelfe ſhew them my fauorable countenance. And I pray you (William Burghley) to ſignifie to her Maieſties Merchants that I promiſe to haue a care of them, and for the Queenes Maieſtie of Englands ſake, I will take her Merchants into my protection, and will defend them as the Emperours ſelected people vnder the Emperors commiſſion: and by mine appointment all his Maieſties officers and authorized people ſhall be carefull ouer them. The Emperors gracious fauour towards them was neuer ſuch as it is now. And where you write that at the port the Emperors Officers ſell their ware by commiſſion at a ſet rate giuen them, farre aboue the value, and that they enforce your Marchants to accept it, they deny that they take any ſuch courſe, but ſay they barter their ware for other wares, and alſo put their ware to ſale for readie money to your Merchants, according to the worth thereof, and as the price goeth in the cuſtome houſe here. It hath beene heretofore deare, and now is ſold as good cheape as in any other place, and as they can beſt agree: they enforce no man to buy it, but rather kepe it: therefore your Marchants haue no iuſt cauſe to make any ſuch report. I haue expreſſely giuen order, that there ſhall be no ſuch courſe vſed to enforce them, but to buy according to their owne willes, and to tarrie at the port or to depart at their pleaſure. And as touching the cuſtomes alreadie paſt, and debts demanded at your Merchants hands, whereof you write: Our Lord great Emperour and great Duke Theodore Iuanowich of all Ruſſia of famous memory hath ſhewed his Maieſties eſpecial fauour and loue, for the great loue of his welbeloued ſiſter Queene of England, and by my petition and mediation, whereas there was commandement giuen to take Marſhes whole debt of your Merchants and factors, it is moderated to the halfe, and for the other halfe, commandement giuen it ſhould not be taken, and the Merchants billes to be deliuered them. And to the end hereafter that her Maieſties Marchants moue no contention betwixt our Lord the Emperor and great Duke of Ruſſia, and his welbeloued ſiſter Queene Elizabeth, his Maieſtie deſireth order to be giuen, that your Marchants doe deale iuſtly in their traffike, and plainely without fraud or guile. And I will be a fauourer of them aboue all others, vnder his Maieſties authoritie: themſelues ſhall ſee it. Written in our great Lorde the Emperours citie of Moſco in the moneth of Iuly, 7099.

The Queenes Maieſties letter to Theodore Iuanouich Emperour of Ruſsia, 1591.

Elizabeth by the grace of God Queene of England, France, and Ireland, defender of the faith, &c. to the right high, mighty, and right noble prince Theodore Iuanouich great Lord, King, and great Duke of all Ruſſia, Volodemer, Moſco, Nouogrod, King of Cazan, and Aſtracan, Lord of Vobsko, and great Duke of Smolenſko, Otuer, Vghory, Perme, Viatski, Bolgory, and other places: Lord and great Duke of Nouogrod in the low countrey, of Chernigo, Rezan, Polotsky, Roſtoue, Yeraſlaue, Bealozero, and Liefland, of Oudorsky, Obdorsky, Condinsky, and commander of all Sibierland and the North coaſts, great Lord ouer the countrey of Iuersky, Griſinsky, Emperor of Kabardinsky, and of the countrey of Charkasky, and of the countrey of Gorsky, and Lord of many other countreys, our moſt deare and louing brother, greeting. Right noble and excellent prince, we haue receiued your Maieſties letters brought ouer by our merchants in their returne of their ‖ laſt voyage from your port of S. Nicholas; which letters we haue aduiſedly read and conſidered, and thereby perceiue that your Maieſty doth greatly miſlike of our late imployment of Ierome Horſey into your dominions as our meſſenger with our Highneſſe letters, and alſo that your Maieſty doth thinke that we in our letters ſent by the ſayd meſſenger haue not obſerued that due order or reſpect which apperteined to your princely maieſty, in the forme of the ſame letter, aſwel touching the inlargement of your Maieſties ſtile and titles of honor which your Maieſty expected to haue bene therein more particularly expreſſed, as alſo in the adding of our greateſt ſeale or ſignet of armes to the letters which we ſend to ſo great a Prince as your Maieſty is: in any of which points we would haue bene very loth willingly to haue giuen iuſt cauſe of offence thereby to our moſt deare and louing brother. And as touching the ſayd meſſenger Ierome Horſey we are ſory that contrary to our expectation he is fallen into your Maieſties diſpleaſure, whom we minde not to mainteine in any his actions by which he hath ſo incurred your Maieſties miſlike: yet that we had reaſon at ſuch time as we ſent him to your Maieſty to vſe his ſeruice as our meſſenger, we referre our ſelues to your princely iudgement, praying your Maieſty to reduce into your minde the eſpeciall commendation, which in your letters written vnto vs in the yeere 1585, you made of the ſayd Ierome Horſey his behauiour in your dominions: at which time your Maieſty was pleaſed to vſe his ſeruice as your meſſenger to vs, requiring our anſwere of your letters to be returned by him and by none other. That imployment, with other occaſions taken by your Maieſty to vſe the ſeruice of the ſayd Ierome Horſey (as namely in the yeere 1587) when your Maieſty ſent him to vs againe with your letters, and your liberall and princely priuiledge at our requeſt granted to our merchants (for which we haue heretofore giuen thanks to your Maieſty, ſo doe we hereby reiterate our thankefulneſſe for the ſame) mooued vs to be of minde, that we could not make choiſe of any of our ſubiects ſo fit a meſſenger to your Maieſty as he, whom your Maieſty had at ſeuerall times vſed vpon your owne occaſions into this our Realme. But leaſt your Highneſſe ſhould continue of the minde that the letters which you ſent by our ambaſſador Giles Fletcher (wherein ſome mention was made of your conceiued diſpleaſure againſt the ſayd Horſey) came not to our hands, and that wee were kept ignorant of the complaint which your Maieſty made therein againſt the ſayd Horſey, we do not deny but that we were acquainted aſwell by our ambaſſadour as by thoſe letters of ſome diſpleaſure conceiued againſt him by your Maieſty: but your ſayd letters giuing onely a ſhort generall mention of ſome miſdemeanour committed by him, expreſſing no particulars, we were of opinion that this offence was not ſo hainous, as that it might vtterly extinguiſh all your former princely fauour towards him, but that vpon his humble ſubmiſſion to your Maieſty, or vpon better examination of the matter of the diſpleaſure conceiued againſt him, the offence might haue beene either remitted, or he thereof might haue cleared himſelfe. And to that end we were not onely by his great importunity long ſollicited, but by the interceſſion of ſome of our Nobility giuing credit to his owne defence, we were intreated on his behalfe to vſe his ſeruice once againe into Ruſſia as our meſſenger to your Maieſty, whereby he might haue opportunity to cleare himſelfe, and either by his anſwere or by his ſubmiſſion recouer your Maieſties former fauour: whereunto our princely nature was mooued to yeeld, wiſhing the good of our ſubiect ſo farre foorth as his deſert might carry him, or his innocencie cleare him.

Thus noble Prince, our moſt louing and deareſt brother, it may appeare vnto your Maieſty how we were induced to vſe the ſeruice of the ſayd meſſenger, aſwell for the recouery of your Maieſties fauor towards him (if he had bene found worthy of it) as for experience of the maners and faſhions of your countrey, where he hath bene much conuerſant. But ſith by your Maieſties letters it appeareth that he hath not cleared himſelfe in your Maieſties ſight, we meane not to vſe him in any ſuch price hereafter.

And as touching your Maieſties conceit of the breuitie which we vſed in the ſetting downe of your Maieſties ſtile and titles of honour: as nothing is further from vs, then to abridge ſo great and mighty a Prince of the honour due vnto him (whom we holde for his greatneſſe to deſerue more honour then we are able to giue him) ſo ſhall we need no further nor ſurer argument to cleare vs of the ſuſpition of the detracting from your Maieſty any part of your iuſt and princely honor and greatneſſe, then the conſideration of our owne ſtile, which is thus contracted, videlicet, Elizabeth by the grace of God Queene of England, France, and Ireland, defender of the faith &c. which kingdomes and dominions of ours are expreſſed by theſe generall words, videlicet, England, France, and Ireland: in euery of which there are ſeuerall principalities, dukedomes, earledomes, prouinces and countreys: which being ſeuerally expreſſed would enlarge much our ſtile, and make it of great length; which by our progenitours hath not bene vſed: notwithſtanding, we thinke it no diſhonour to vs, compendiouſly to abridge the ſame in all our writings and letters written to what Prince, King, or Potentate ſoeuer. Whereupon we inferre, that holding your Maieſties generall ſtile, we offer your Highneſſe no diſhonour in not expreſſing all the particular prouinces: albeit we can willingly content our ſelfe, vpon the knowledge of your vſages and cuſtomes, to obſerue that courſe, which your ſelfe ſhall thinke moſt honourable. And for the ſealing vp of our letters which we write to all our allies, kinſemen, and friends, Kings and Princes, we haue in vſe two ſeuerall ſeales; both which we eſteeme alike honourable, being our princely ſeales. And as the volume of our letters falleth out to be great or ſmall, ſo accordingly is our greater or leſſer ſeale annexed to the ſayd letters, without eſteeming either of them more or leſſe honourable then the other. So as, our moſt louing and deareſt brother, in the ſaid letters there was nothing done of purpoſe to detract from your Maieſty any thing of the vſuall regard, which our Highneſſe was woont to yeeld vnto your moſt noble father of famous memory Iuan Baſiliuich Emperor of al Ruſſia, or to your ſelfe, our deareſt brother. For the reſidue of the points of your Maieſties letters concerning the entertainement of our ambaſſadour, and proceeding in the cauſe of Anthonie Marſh we holde our ſelfe ſatiſfied with your princely anſwere, and doe therein note an honourable and princely care in your Maieſtie to preuent the like troubles, controuerſies and ſutes, that Marſhes cauſe ſtirred vp betweene our merchants and your ſubiects, which is, that your Maieſtie doeth purpoſe from time to time to purge your Countrey of ſuch ſtraglers of our ſubiects, as doe or ſhall hereafter abide there, and are not of the Company of our merchants, but contemptuouſly depart out of our land without our Highneſſe licence: of which ſort there are preſented vnto vs from our merchants the names of theſe ſeuerall perſons, videlicet, Richard Cocks, Bennet Iackman, Rainold Kitchin, Simon Rogers, Michael Lane, Thomas Worſenham: whom it may pleaſe your Maieſty by your princely order to diſmiſſe out of your land, that they may be ſent home in the next ſhippes, to auoid the miſlike which their reſidence in thoſe parts might breed to the diſturbance of our brotherly league, and the impeaching of the entercourſe.

And whereas, moſt louing and deareſt brother, one William Turnebull a ſubiect of ours is lately deceaſed in your kingdome, one with whom our merchants haue had much controuerſie for great ſummes of money due vnto them by him while he was their Agent in their affayres of merchandiſes: which differences by arbitrable order were reduced to the ſumme of 3000 rubbles, and ſo much ſhould haue beene payed by him as may appeare by your Maieſties councell or magiſtrates of iuſtice by very credible information and teſtimony: and whereas alſo the ſayd Turnbull was further indebted by billes of his own hand to diuers of our ſubiects, amounting in the whole, to the ſumme of 1326 pounds, which billes are exemplified vnder our great ſeale of England, and to be ſent ouer with this bearer: of which ſummes he hath often promiſed payment: it may pleaſe your moſt excellent Maieſtie in your approoued loue to iuſtice, to giue order to your fauourable councell and magiſtrates, that thoſe ſeuerall debts may be ſatiſfied to our merchants and ſubiects out of the goods, merchandiſe, and debts which are due to the ſtate of the ſayd Turnbull: whereof your Maieſties councell ſhalbe informed by the Agent of our merchants.

The Emperor ſeiſed our merchants goods.

We truſt we ſhall not need to make any new requeſt by motion to your Maieſty that ſome order might be taken for the finding out of the reſt of our merchants goods ſeiſed to your maieſties vſe in the hands and poſſeſſion of Iohn Chappel their ſeruant, being a thing granted, and no doubt already performed by your Maieſties order. We therfore intreat your Maieſty, that as conueniently as may be, ſatiſfaction or recompenſe be giuen to our ſaid merchants towards the repairing of their ſundry great loſſes, aſwell therein as otherwiſe by them of late ſundry wayes ſuſtained. And laſtly, our moſt deare and louing brother, as nothing in all theſe our occaſions is to be preferred before our entire league and amitie, deſcending vpon vs as an inheritance, in ſucceſſion from both our anceſtours and noble progenitours: ſo let vs be carefull on both ſides by all good meanes to holde and continue the ſame to our poſterity for euer. And if any miſtaking or errour of either ſide do riſe, in not accõpliſhing of circumſtances agreeable to the faſhion of either of our countreys and kingdomes, let the ſame vpon our enterchangeable letters be reconciled, that our league and amitie be no way impeached for any particular occaſion whatſoeuer. And thus we recommend your Maieſty to the tuition of the moſt High. From our royall Palace of Whitehall the 14 of January, anno Domini 1591. 1591

The Queenes Maieſties letters to the Lord Boris Pheodorowich.

Elizabeth by the grace of God Queene of England, France, and Ireland, defendour of the faith, &c. to the right honourable and noble Prince Lord Boris Pheodorowich Godonoua, Maſter of the horſes to the great and mightie Emperour of Ruſſia, his Highneſſe lieutenant of Cazan and Aſtracan, our moſt deare and louing couſin, greeting. Right honourable, it hath appeared vnto vs vpon the reading and peruſing of the Letters lately ſent vnto our Highneſſe from our deare and louing brother the Emperour, in what part his Maieſtie tooke the late imployment of our meſſenger Ierome Horſey in our affaires into Ruſſia: wherein we doe alſo finde the honourable endeuour vſed by your Lordſhip to appeaſe his Highneſſe miſlike and exception taken aſwell to the perſon of our Meſſenger, as to our princely letters ſent by him: both of which points we haue anſwered in our letters ſent by this bearer directed to our ſayd louing brother the Emperour: vpon peruſing whereof we doubt not but his Maieſtie will be well ſatiſfied touching our ſayd Meſſenger and former letters. And for the honourable courſe holden by your Lordſhip in the interpoſing of your opinion and fauourable conſtruction in a thing which might grow to the offence of the league and amitie ſtanding betweene your Soueraigne Lord and vs (wherein your Lordſhip performed the office of an honourable and graue Counſellour) we take our ſelfe beholding to your Lordſhip for your readineſſe in that behalfe, and doe aſſure our ſelfe that the ſame did proceed of the eſpeciall loue and kinde affection that your Lordſhip hath euer borne and continued towards vs, whereof our princely nature will neuer be vnmindfull. We haue bene alſo from time to time made acquainted by our chiefe and principall Counſellour William Lord Burghley, Lord high Treaſurour of our Highneſſe Realme of England, of your letters which haue paſſed betweene your Lordſhip and him, concerning the entercourſe of our Merchants trafficke in your Countreys, and of the honourable offices done by your Lordſhip with the Emperour in fauour of our ſayd Marchants. And laſtly (which wee take a moſt aſſured argument of your vndoubted loue and affection towards vs) that your Lordſhip hath vouchſafed, and of purpoſe taken into your hands the protection of our ſayd Merchants, and the hearing and determining of all their cauſes and occaſions whatſoeuer, which ſhall concerne them or their trade. All which wee conceiue to be done for our ſake, and therefore do acknowledge our ſelues to be, and ſtill will continue beholding vnto you for the ſame.

And whereas we haue made mention in our ſayd letters written to our louing brother the Emperour of certeine debts due aſwell to our merchants, as to other of our ſubiects by one William Turnebull a ſubiect of ours late deceaſed in Ruſſia, wee pray you to be referred to the ſayd letter. And foraſmuch as the ſayd cauſe will fall vnder your Lordſhips iuriſdiction by reaſon of your acceptation of all their cauſes into your patronage and protection: we are ſo well aſſured of your honourable inclination to iuſtice, and your good affection towards our merchants for our ſake, that we ſhall not need to intreat your honourable furtherance either of iuſtice or expedition in the ſayd cauſe. And laſtly conſidering that your noble linage together with your great wiſedome and deſert hath made you a principall Counſellour and directour of the ſtate of ſo great a Monarchie, whereby your aduice and direction is followed in all things that doe concerne the ſame, we haue giuen order to our ſayd principall Counſellour William Lord Burghley, treaſurour of our Realme of England, that as any occaſion ſhall ariſe to the hinderance of the entercourſe betweene theſe Countreyes, or of the priuiledges graunted by his Maieſtie to our merchants, that he may by aduertiſement treat with your Lordſhippe thereupon: which we by reaſon of our great princely affayres can not ſo conueniently at all times doe with ſuch expedition as the cauſe may require. And thus with our princely commendations we bidde you farewell. From our royall Pallace of Whitehall the fourteenth day of Ianuarie, Anno Domini 1591.

To the right honourable my very good Lord, the Lord Boris Pheodorowich, Maſter of the horſes to the great and mighty Emperour of Ruſſia, his Highneſſe Lieutenant of Cazan and Aſtracan, William Cecill Lord Burghley, Knight of the noble Order of the Garter, and Lord high Treaſurer of England, ſendeth greeting.

Right honourable my very good Lord, vpon the laſt returne of our merchants ſhippes out of Ruſſia, there was brought vnto my handes, by one Francis Cherrie an Engliſh merchant, a letter directed to the Queenes Maieſtie, from the great and mightie Emperour of Ruſſia, and another letter from your Lordſhip directed to me: which ſayd letter written from the Emperor to her Maieſty hath beene conſiderately and aduiſedly by her Highneſſe read and peruſed, and the matter of complaint againſt Ierome Horſey therein compriſed thorowly examined: which hath turned the ſame Horſey to ſome great diſpleaſure. I did alſo acquaint our Maieſty with the contents of your Lordſhips letters written to mee, and enformed her of your Lordſhips honourable fauour ſhewed to her Highneſſe merchants from time to time: who tooke the ſame in moſt gracious part, and confeſſed her ſelfe infinitly beholding vnto your Lordſhip for many honourable offices done for her ſake, the which ſhe meant to acknowledge by her letters to be written to your Lordſhip vnder her princely hand and ſeale. And foraſmuch as it hath pleaſed your good Lordſhippe to take into your handes the protection of her Maieſties merchants, and the redreſſe of ſuch iniuries as are, or ſhall be offered vnto them contrary to the meaning of the priuiledges and the free liberty of the entercourſe, wherein in ſome points your Lordſhip hath already vſed a reformation, as appeareth by your ſayd letters: yet the continuance of traffique mouing new occaſions and other accidents tending to the loſſe of the ſayd merchants, whereof ſome particulars haue beene offered vnto me to treat with your Lordſhip vpon: I thought it good to referre them to your honourable conſideration, that order might be taken in the ſame, for that they are apparantly repugnant to the Emperours letters written to her Maieſtie, and doe much reſtraine the liberty of the trade: one is, that at the laſt comming of our merchants to the port of Saint Michael the Archangel, where the mart is holden, their goods were taken by the Emperours officers for his Highneſſe ſeruice at ſuch rates, as the ſayd officers were diſpoſed to ſet vpon them, ſo farre vnder their value, that the merchants could not aſſent to accept of thoſe prices: which being denied, the ſayd officers reſtrained them of all further traffique for the ſpace of three weekes, by which meanes they were compelled to yeeld vnto their demaund how vnwillingly ſoeuer. Another is, that our ſayd merchants are driuen to pay the Emperours officers cuſtome for all ſuch Ruſſe money as they bring downe from the Moſco to the Sea ſide to employ there at the Mart within the Emperours owne land; which ſeemeth ſtrange vnto me, conſidering the ſame money is brought from one place of the Countrey to another, and there imployed without any tranſport ouer of the ſayd money. Theſe interruptions and impoſitions ſeeme not to ſtand with the liberties of the Emperours priuileges and freedome of the entercourſe, which ſhould be reſtrained neither to times or conditions, but to be free and abſolute: whereof it may pleaſe your Lordſhip to be aduiſed, and to continue your honourable courſe holden betweene the Emperour and her Maieſty, to reconcile ſuch differences as any occaſion doth offer to their league or trafficke. Thus not doubting of your Lordſhips furtherance herein, I humbly take my leaue of your good Lordſhip. From her Maieſties royall palace of Whitehall this 15 of Ianuary, 1591. 1591

A Letter from the Emperour of Ruſsia, Theodore Iuanouich to the Queenes Maieſtie.

1592 Through the tender mercie of our God, whereby the day-ſpring from on high hath viſited vs, thereby to guide our feet into the way of peace. Euen this our God by mercy we glorifie in Trinitie.

We the great Lord, King and great Duke Theodore Iuanowich, gouernour of all Ruſſia, of Volodimer, Moſco, and Nouogrod, King of Cazan and Aſtracan, Lord of Vobſco, and great Duke of Smolenſco, Otuer, Vghori, Perme, Viatsky, Bulgary, and other regions, Lord and great Duke alſo of Nouogrod in the low countrey, of Chernigo, of Rezan, Polotsko, Roſtoue, Yeroſlaue, Bealozera, and of Liſland, of Vdorsky, Obdorsky, Condinsky, and all the countrey of Siberia, and commander of all the North parts, and Lord ouer the countrey of Iuersky, and King of Gruſinsky, and of the countrey of Kabardinsky, Cherchasky, and Duke of Igorsky, Lord and ruler of many countreys more &c. To our louing ſiſter Elizabeth Queene of England, France, and Ireland, &c. Louing ſiſter, your letters ſent by your ſeruant Thomas Lind, we haue receiued, and read what you haue written in the ſame touching our title, and touching your order holden in your letters heretofore ſent vs by your ſeruant Ierome Horſey: wherein you haue anſwered vs ſufficiently and moſt graciouſly.

The Emperors ſtile lately enlarged.

And whereas your Maieſtie hath written in your letter concerning the goods of William Turnebull late deceaſed in our kingdome, that your ſubiects, for whom he was factour, ſhould haue debts growing vnto them from him by account; we at your Maieſties requeſt haue cauſed not onely order to be taken, but for your Highneſſe ſake, louing ſiſter, we haue cauſed the goods to be ſought out and deliuered to your merchants Agent and his company, together with his ſtuffe, bookes, billes and writings, as alſo money to the value of ſixe hundred rubbles, which Chriſtopher Holmes and Francis Cherry are to pay for Ikarie: and we haue ſet at libertie the ſayd Turnebulles kinſeman Raynold Kitchin and his fellowes, and deliuered them to your merchants Agent.

This is a dainty meat made of the roes of Sturgeons.

And further, where you write vnto vs for ſuch your ſubiects as haue departed out of your maieſties Realme ſecretly without licence, that we ſhould giue order to ſend them home: concerning ſuch your ſubiects for which you haue written vnto our Maieſtie by letters, we will cauſe ſearch to be made, and ſuch as are willing to goe home into your kingdome, we will command forthwith to be deliuered vnto your merchants Agent, and ſo to paſſe. And ſuch of your Maieſties people as haue giuen themſelues vnder our gouernment as ſubiects, we thinke it not requiſite to grant to let them paſſe.

And further, where you haue written vnto vs concerning the goods of Iohn Chappell, we haue written heretofore the whole diſcourſe thereof, not once, but ſundry times, and therefore it is not needfull to write any more thereof. And ſuch goods as were found out of the goods of the ſayd Chappell, the money thereof was reſtored to your Maieſties people William Turnbull and his fellowes. Your Maieſties ſeruant Thomas Lind we haue ſent with our letters the ſame way whereby he came into our kingdome. The long abiding heere of your Maieſties ſeruant in our kingdome, was for the comming of your people from the Sea port. Written in our princely court and royall ſeat in the city of Moſco in the yeere from the beginning of the world 7101, in the moneth of Ianuary.

BY the grace of God great Lord and great Duke Theodore Iuanouich gouernour of Ruſſia, Volodimer, Moſco, and Nouogrod, King of Cazan and Aſtracan, Lord of Vobsko, and great Duke of Smolenſco, Otuer, Vghori, Perme, Viatsky, Bulgary, and other regions, Lord and great Duke of Nouogrod in the low countrey, of Chernigo, of Rezan, Polotsko, Roſtoue, Ieroſlaue, Bealozera, and of Liſland, of Vdorsky, Obdorsky, Condinsky, and all the countrey of Sibery, and commander of all the North parts, and Lord ouer the countrey of Iuersky, and King of Gruſinsky, and of the countrey of Kabardinsky, Cherchasky, and duke of Igorsky, Lord and ruler of many countreys more, &c.

Moſt reſplendent Queene Elizabeth of England, France, and Ireland, &c. his princely Maieſties ſeruant, Lord and Maſter of his horſes, and high Steward of his houſe, and Preſident of the territories of Cazan and Aſtracan, Boris Pheodorouich Godonoua, vnto your moſt excellent Maieſty, great Ladie Queene Elizabeth, ſend my humble commendations. It hath pleaſed your Maieſtie to write vnto me your gracious and princely letter by your ſeruant Thomas Lind; which letter I receiued with all humbleneſſe. During the time of the abode of your Meſſenger Thomas Lind here in the Moſco, it pleaſed God of his mercifulneſſe, and our Lady the mother of God, and holy Saints, by the prayers of our lord and king his Maieſtie Theodore Iuanouich ouer all Ruſſia gouernour, the right beleeuer and louer of Chriſt, to ſend our Queene and gracious Lady Irene a yoong Princeſſe, to the great ioy and comfort of our kingdome, named Pheodocine. Wherefore we giue all honour and glory to the almightie God vnſpeakeable, whoſe giftes had beene manifolde with mercie vnto vs; for which all wee Chriſtians laud and praiſe God.

The Empreſſe Irene deliuered of a daughter.

After all this your ſeruant was occaſioned to ſtay vntill the comming of your merchants from the ſea port.

Touching the letters which you haue receiued from your louing brother our Lord and Maſter by your ambaſſadour, therein you perceiue ſufficiently my good meaning, in trauailing for the continuance of amitie and friendſhip betwixt you mighty great princes, in the which I will continue mine endeuour. Alſo your merchants I haue taken into my protection for to defend them for the loue I beare to your Maieſtie. As heeretofore I haue done it willingly, and with great care of their good, ſo I meane to continue ſo farre as God will giue me leaue; to the end that brotherly loue be holden betweene you Princes without diſturbance.

As I haue beene to your merchants in times paſt, ſo now by the permiſſion and commandement of our Lord and Maſter, I will be their defendour in all cauſes: and will cauſe all our authoriſed people to fauour them and to defend them, and to giue them free liberty to buy and ſell at their pleaſure. The merchants doe not certifie your princely Maieſtie of all our friendſhip and fauour ſhewed vnto them from time to time. And whereas your Maieſtie hath now written to our Lord and Maſter for the debts which your merchants ought to haue of William Turnebull lately diſceaſed, I hauing peruſed your Maieſties letter, whereby I am requeſted to be a meane for the recouerie and obtaining of their ſayd debts, I haue moued it to our Lord and King his Maieſtie, that order may be giuen therein: and that his kinſeman Rainold Kitchin with three perſons more may be ſent ouer together with the ſayd Turnebulles ſtuffe and other things, as billes, books and writings. All which ſhall be deliuered to your merchants Agent and his fellowes, and in money 600 rubbles of the ſayd Turnebulles.

And touching your merchants, I will haue a great care ouer them, and protect them, whereby they ſhall ſuffer no damages in their trade: and all kinde of trafficke in merchandiſe ſhall be at their libertie.

Written in our Lord and Kings Maieſties royall citie of Moſco, in the yeere from the beginning of the world 7101, in the moneth of Ianuarie.

A letter from the Lord Boris Pheodorowich to the right honourable Lord William Burghley, Lord high Treaſurer of England.

BY the grace of God great Lord, King, and great Duke Theodor Iuanouich, gouernour of Ruſſia, Volodimer, Moſco, and Nouogrod, King of Cazan and Aſtracan, Lord of Vobſco, and great Duke of Smolenſco, Otuer, Vghory, Perme, Viatsky, Bulgary, and other regions, Lord and great Duke of all Nouogrod in the low countreys, of Chernigo, of Liffeland, of Vdorsky, Obdorsky, Condinsky, and all the countrey of Sibery, and commaunder of all the North parts, and Lord ouer the countrey of Iuersky, and King of Gruſinsky, and of the countreys of Kabardinsky, Cherchasky, and Duke of Igorsky, Lord and ruler of many Countreys more &c. His princely Maieſties ſeruant, Lord and Maſter of his horſes, and high Steward of his houſe, Preſident of the territories of Cazan and Aſtracan, Boris Pheodorowich Godonoua, to the moſt honourable Counſeller of the moſt reſplendent mightie great Lady Elizabeth Queene of England, France, and Ireland, William Burghley, Lord, and Knight of the Garter, high Treaſurour of England, ſendeth greeting.

M. Francis Cherie.

I perceiue by your letter that your merchants laſt ſhippes came home in ſafetie, and that you haue receiued the letters ſent by them, by the hands of Francis Cherie, one from our Lord and great King of all Ruſſia his Maieſty, vnto your Queenes moſt excellent Maieſty, and one from me to her Highneſſe, and one from my ſelfe to you; and the contents thereof you haue cauſed to be read and well vnderſtood at large. And whatſoeuer is therein written concerning Ierome Horſey, you haue ſought out the ground thereof, and that he is in great diſpleaſure. And her Highneſſe hath written in her letter concerning her Maieſties merchants, that whereas I haue taken them into protection, ſhe taketh it very louingly and kindely, that for her ſake they haue receiued ſo great kindneſſe.

And touching the damages and hinderances which your merchaunts haue ſuſtained by meanes of the Emperours authoriſed people and officers, and that they were not permitted to trafficke at libertie at the Sea port in the yeere 1589, for the ſpace of three weekes, it hath beene againſt the Emperours Maieſties will and pleaſure, as alſo againſt mine. Where you deſire and wiſh that betweene our Emperours Maieſtie, and your Queenes Maieſtie, their loue and amitie may not bee ſeperated at any time, but to continue: and you requeſt mee that I ſhould be good vnto the Engliſh merchants, and to defend them from all ſuch domages hereafter: your honours louing letter I haue therein throughly conſidered: and as I haue bene heretofore, ſo I will ſtill continue to be a meane betwixt our Lorde and kings Maieſtie, and your great Lady the Queene her highneſſe, for the mainteyning of brotherly loue and amitie, moſt ioyfully and willingly, as God knoweth, aſwel hereafter as I haue bene heretofore: praying you to doe the like alſo. Mine onely deſire is for your moſt excellent Princeſſe ſake, to do all that lyeth in mee for the ayding, helping and protecting of her Maieſties merchants, by the order and commaundement of our Lord and king his Maieſtie.

And to that ende, I haue giuen order to all our authoriſed people to bee carefull ouer them, and to defende them in all cauſes, and to giue them free libertie to trafficke at their owne willes and pleaſures. It may bee that your merchants doe not certifie you the trueth of all things, nor make knowen vnto your honour my readineſſe to protect them: And howe my Letters and Commiſſions are ſent to all authoriſed people for them, that they ſhoulde ayde and aſſiſt them according to the tenour of my Letters, to all others that bee in authoritie vnder the ſaid Officers or otherwiſe.

Alſo your honour writeth of the debarring of your merchants at the Sea port from their accuſtomed libertie of enterchangeable trafficke and bartar. Touching which complaint ſearch and inquiſition hath bene made, and commaundement giuen, that your Queenes Maieſties merchants at the Seaſide, and in all places where the trade is, doe not ſuſtaine any domage or hinderance hereafter, but that they ſhalbe at libertie without any hindering or letting, either in the Moſco, the Treaſurehouſe, or elſe where by any of our authoriſed people, but abſolutely to bee at free libertie at their owne will and pleaſure. And alſo I will continue to be their protectour and defendour in all cauſes, by our Lorde and kings Maieſties order and commaundement: as it ſhalbe knowen and certified you by your people reſident here in the Moſco.

Written in our Kings Maieſties royall citie of Moſco from the beginning of the world 7101. yeere, in the moneth of Ianuary.

Anno Domini 1592.

A moſt gracious Letter giuen to the Engliſh Merchants Sir Iohn Hart and his company, by Theodore Iuanowich, the King, Lord, and great duke of all Ruſſia, the onely vpholder thereof.

THe onely God omnipotent before all eternitie, his will be done without ende: the Father, Sonne, and holy Ghoſt we glorifie in Trinitie. Our onely God the maker of all things and worker of all in all euery where with plentifull increaſe: for which cauſe he hath giuen life to man to loue him, and to truſt in him: Our onely God which inſpireth euery one of vs his holy children with his word to diſcerne good through our Lord Ieſus Chriſt, and the holy quickning ſpirit of life now in theſe perillous times eſtabliſh vs to keepe the right ſcepter, and ſuffer vs to reigne of our ſelues to the good profit of the land, and to the ſubduing of the people together with the enemies, and to the mainteinance of vertue.

We the great Lord, king, and great duke Theodore Iuanouich, of all Ruſſia the onely vpholder, of Volodimer, Moſco, and Nouogrod, King of Caſan, and king of Aſtracan, Lord of Vobſco, and great duke of Smolenſko, of Otuer, Vghorie, Permia, Viatski, Bulgari, and other regions, great duke alſo of Nouogrod in the lowe Countrey, of Chernigo, of Rezan, Polotski, Roſtoue, Yaruſlaue, Bealozero, and of Liefland, of Vdorski, Obdorski, Condenski, and commaunder of all the Countrey of Siberi and of the North partes, and Lord ouer the Countrey of Iuerski, Gruſinski, and King ouer the Countrey of Igorski, and ruler ouer many other kingdomes and Lordſhips more.

Our princely Maieſtie at the requeſt of our brother in lawe Boris Feodorowich Godenoua our ſeruant, and Maſter of our horſes, generall Comptroller of our houſe, and gouernour of the Lordſhips and kingdomes of Caſan and Aſtracan; vnto the Engliſh merchants Sir Iohn Hart knight, ſir William Webbe knight, Richard Salkenſtow Alderman, Nicholas Moſeley alderman, Robert Doue, Wil. Garrowe, Iohn Harbey, Robert Chamberlaine, Henry Anderſon, Iohn Woodworth, Frãcis Cherry, Iohn Merrick, & Chriſtopher Holmes; hath graciouſly giuen leaue to come & go with their ſhips into our kingdome & territories of Duina with all kind of commodities at their pleaſures to trafficke frõ the ſeaſide to our roial city of Moſco, & in al other cities, townes, countries and territories of our whole kingdom of Moſco: vpon the humble petition and ſute of the ſaide Engliſh merchants ſir Iohn Hart and his company, wee haue giuen them leaue to paſſe and trafficke into all parts of our dominions and territories of Moſco, and to our inheritance of Nouogrod and Pleſco with their wares and commodities without paying any cuſtome or dueties.

We the great Lord, king, and great duke Theodore Iuanowich of all Ruſſia haue firmely giuen and graunted vnto the aforeſaide Engliſh merchants ſir Iohn Hart and his company, for the loue we beare to our deare ſiſter Queene Elizabeth, we I ſay of our gracious goodnes haue giuen leaue to trauel and paſſe to our royal ſeat of Moſco, and to all the parts of our kingdome with all kinde of commodities, and to trafficke with all kinde of wares at their owne pleaſure, without paying any cuſtome of their ſaid wares.

To you our Cuſtomers we wil and command not to take any maner of cuſtome of the ſaid merchants and their company, neither for entering, weying nor paſſing by or through any place of our territories, nor for cuſtome, of iudgement by Lawe, or for their perſon or perſons; nor any duties ouer bridges, or for certificats or proceſſes, or for conducting ouer any ſtreames or waters, or for any other cuſtomes or dueties that may be named; we wil and ſtraitly commaund you not to take any of them in any wiſe.

Prouided alwayes, that the ſaide merchants ſhall not colour any ſtrangers wares, nor bring them into our countrey, nor fauour them colourably, nor ſel for any ſtranger. To you our ſubiects alſo we cõmand, not to meddle or deale with any wares of ſtrangers colourably, nor to haue them by you in keeping, nor to offer to ſel their cõmodities; but themſelues to ſel their owne commodities in change or otherwiſe as they may or can. And in al townes, cities, countreys, or any part of our dominions and territories it ſhalbe lawful for the foreſaid merchants and their company to ſell or barter away their owne commodities in change or otherwiſe, for or at their pleaſure as they will. And whenſoeuer the ſaid merchants or any of them come into our territories of great Nouogrod or Pleſco, or to any other parts of our kingdome with their wares, by vertue of theſe our Maieſties letters we ſtraitly charge and commaund you our Captaines, generals, and all other that be authoriſed or in office, to ſuffer the aforeſaid merchants to paſſe and repaſſe, and to take no kinde of cuſtome or dutie of them, or any of their goods, howſoeuer it may haue name: nor in no place elſe where they ſhal come in all our kingdome. Likewiſe if they ſell not nor buy no wares, you ſhall take no cuſtome, but ſuffer them quietly to paſſe where they will with their goods. Of our gratious goodnes and meere goodwill we haue giuen the ſaid merchants leaue to trafficke throughout all our kingdomes, and in all townes and cities with all maner of wares and commodities without paying any cuſtome or dutie. Whereſoeuer they ſhal happen to ſel or barter away any of their commodities to our ſubiects, they are to barter or ſell by whole ſale, and not by retaile, as by the yard or by the ounce in their houſes or elſewhere: but by the packe or whole clothes, veluets, damasks, taffaties by the piece, and not by the yard; and al other wares that are to be ſold by weight, they are to be ſold not by the ounce, but by great ſale. Their wines ſhalbe ſold by hogs heads, pipes or buttes, but not by quartes nor pintes.

The ſaid Engliſh merchants are to ſel or barter away their owne cõmodities themſelues, and not to ſuffer any Ruſſes to buy or ſell for them: nor to carry or tranſport any wares of ſtrangers in ſtead of their owne in no wiſe. And if the ſaide Engliſh merchants ſhall be deſirous to ſell any of their commodities at Colmogro, or vpon the Riuer of Duina, or at Vologhda or at Yeraſlaue; when as the ſaide merchants haue ſolde in any of the ſaide Townes, Cities or territories, then you our officers and authoriſed people by vertue of this our gratious letter wee will and ſtraitly commaund not to take any cuſtome of the aforeſaid merchants, howſoeuer it may be named.

Alſo whenſoeuer the ſaide Engliſh merchants or any of their factours ſhalbe deſirous to hire carriers to carry their wares to any place of our dominions or Cities, it ſhalbe at their choyſe and pleaſure to hier them the beſt they can, and where they will, either water men to rowe, or veſſels.

Alſo when any of the ſaid merchants themſelues, or any of theirs are deſirous to trauel into any part of our dominions, or into any other kingdomes, or into their owne kingdome, if any of our treaſure be deliuered to them, they to take it with them, and to ſel it in barter or otherwiſe for ſuch wares as are moſt requiſit and neceſſary to be brought into our kingdome and to be deliuered into our treaſury. You, our nobilitie, generals & al others in authority ſuffer them to paſſe through al our cities, townes & countries without taking any cuſtome of them. And when the ſaid merchants haue done their traffick in any place & come to the Moſco, they ſhal make it knowen at their arriual at the houſe of Chancery and ſecretariſhip to Vaſili Shalkan. And further when there come any Engliſh merchants with their ſhips or veſſels by ſea, that by miſhap ſhalbe caſt away vpon any of our ſhoars or coſtes, we wil and commaund you to ayde & helpe them, and to ſeeke for their goods ſo periſhed by any caſualtie, and to be reſtored againe to the ſaide Engliſh merchants or their aſſignes without any prolonging or detaying. As alſo if any of the aforeſaide merchants goods be found in any part of our coaſtes or ſtreames and they not preſent themſelues, let the ſaid goods be taken and layd vp in ſafetie in ſome place or other, and be deliuered to the aforeſaid merchants or their factors vnder penaltie of our diſpleaſure.

Furthermore we King, Lord, and great duke of all Ruſſia, of our gracious goodneſſe giue vnto the Engliſh merchants and their company, their houſe in the Citie of Moſco ſtanding by the Church of S.Maske behinde the market place: which they ſhall keepe and remaine therein after their old accuſtomed vſe. Prouided alwayes that they ſhall keepe one Ruſſe porter or one of their owne people, & may keepe any other Ruſſe ſeruants at their diſcretion. Alſo their houſes in ſundry places, as at Ieraſlaue, Vologhda, Colmogro, and at S.Michael Archangel, all theſe houſes they ſhall keepe and vſe at their owne pleaſure, according to our former letters patents without paying any dutie, rent, or cuſtome. Nor you the communaltie of the ſaid townes ſhal take any thing of them or theirs for any dutie that ſhould belong to you, eſpecially of the houſes aforeſaid: but the ſaid Engliſh merchants ſhal enioy them peaceably for themſelues and their families, but ſhall not ſuffer any other ſtrangers Ruſſes or others to vſe the aforeſaid houſes: Alſo you ſhall ſuffer them to lay their wares and commodities in their warehouſes, and to ſell their commodities to whom they pleaſe without let or hinderance, by vertue of this our gracious letter.

Their houſekeeper being a Ruſſe ſhall not vndertake to meddle, or ſell any of their wares without they themſelues be preſent, nor to buy any thing for them.

Alſo it ſhalbe lawfull for the ſaid merchants when they ſhal arriue at their port, to lade and vnlade their merchandiſes as in times paſt they haue done at their pleaſure. And when they lade their ſhips with Ruſſe commodities or vnlade them, it ſhalbe lawfull for them to hire any of our ſubiects to helpe them for the preſent time, and for them to carry their goods to and fro with their owne veſſels to S.Michael Archangel, or elſewhere.

Alſo we command you our authoriſed people at the ſea ſide as wel Cuſtomers as others to take of the foreſaid merchants a note, or remembrance, what goods they bring in and ſhip out: whereby it may be knowen what goods come in and go out. But in no wiſe ſhall you open or vnpacke any of their wares or merchandiſes.

In like maner when as they ſhip or ſende away any of their countrey commodities from S.Michael Archangel to any other place, or to our royall Citie of Moſco yee ſhall not hinder nor let them any maner of wiſe for the ſhipping of their merchandiſes in or out, by vertue of theſe our gracious letters of priuiledge giuen them.

And whenſoeuer any of the ſaid Engliſh merchants haue any occaſion to ſend ouer land out of our dominions into their own countrey any of their ſeruants or factors, by vertue of this our gracious letter we command you to giue them their paſſeport out of the office of our Secretariſhip.

And whenſoeuer any of our ſubiects hath any thing to do with any of the foreſaid merchants by way of contentions: or that they be dammified or hindered by any of our ſubiects: then we appoint and ordeine our Chanceller and Secretary Vaſili Shalcan to heare their cauſes, and finally to determine on both ſides according to equitie and iuſtice: and that he ſhall ſearch the trueth betweene both parties.

And when the trueth cannot be proued or found out, then to caſt lots by order of the foreſaide Iudge, and he to whom the lot ſhall fall to take his othe.

Furthermore whenſoeuer any of the Engliſh merchants or their factors ſhall come into any parts of our dominions or Cities, and ſhalbe wronged any kinde of wayes in trading, or otherwiſe by any abuſed, or haue any occaſion of contention with any by way of trade in merchandiſe or otherwayes: we ſtraitly charge and command you our gouernours, and authoriſed ſubiects within all our Realme and territories of the ſame, to miniſter iuſtice vnto the aforeſaide merchants, or to their deputies, and to ſearch the trueth of the contention: And for want of ſufficient proofe caſt lots who ſhall take his oath for the more ready triall of the cauſe: And in no wiſe to take any fee or dutie of the aforeſaid Engliſh merchants for the ſaid iudgement in Lawe.

We wil and command all this to be obſerued and kept in all parts of our dominions by all our ſubiects and authoriſed people, by vertue of theſe our royal letters patents: And the ſaid letters not to be diminiſhed in any part or parcell thereof, by any perſons howſoeuer they be named. And whoſoeuer ſhall withſtand & not regard theſe our gracious letters ſhalbe in our high diſpleaſure, and ſhal incurre the loſſe of his life. This our gracious letter was giuen in our kingdom and royal City of Moſco, in the yere from the beginning of the world 7104. in the moneth of May. After our account 1596.

The contents of M. Garlands Commiſsion vnto Thomas Simkinſon for the bringing of M. Iohn Dee to the Emperour of Ruſsia his Court.

FRiend Thomas Simkinſon I pray you goe to Brounſwik or Caſſil and inquire if Maſter Iohn Dee be there or where he is, and when you finde him, certifie him howe that I haue ſent you purpoſely to knowe where hee doeth remaine, and at your returne I will come and ſpeake with him my ſelfe. Alſo you may certefie him that the Emperour of Ruſſeland hauing certaine knowledge of his great learning and wiſdome is marueilous deſirous of him to come into his Countrey. And hath giuen me his letter with his hand and golden ſeale at it for to bring him into the Countrey with mee if it be poſſible, and for his liuing ſhewe him that he ſhall be ſure of 2000. pound yeerely, and alſo all prouiſion for his table out of the Emperours kitching free: and if he thinke this too little, I will aſſure him that if he aske aſmuch more, hee ſhall haue it, and for his charges into the Countrey, I haue ſufficient of the Emperours allowance to bring him and all his royally into the Countrey. And becauſe hee may doubt of theſe proffers, hee ſhall remaine at the borders vntill the Emperour be certified of him, and of his requeſts, which he would haue. And I am ſure he ſhall be conueyed through the land with fiue hundred horſes, and hee ſhal be accompted as one of the chiefeſt in the land next the Emperour. Alſo ſhew him howe that my Lord Protectour at my comming away did take me in his armes, and deſired me as hee ſhould be my friend to bring him with me, and he would giue him of his owne purſe yeerely 1000. rubbles beſides the Emperours allowance. All theſe foreſaide graunts and demaunds doe I Thomas Simkinſon acknowledge to be ſpoken by Edward Garland to mee, and to be ſent to declare the ſame vnto Maſter Iohn Dee. And in witneſſe that this is of a trueth I haue written the ſame with my owne hand, and thereunto ſet my name, in Wittingaw, otherwiſe called Trebona, the 18. of September, Anno 1586.

By me Thomas Simkinſon of Hull.

A letter to the right worſhipfull M. Iohn Dee Eſquire, conteyning the ſumme and effect of M. Edward Garland his meſſage, deliuered to Maſter Dee himſelfe, (Letterwiſe) for a more perfect memoriall thereof. Anno 1586.

RIght worſhipfull, it may pleaſe you to vnderſtand, that I was ſent vnto you from the moſt mightie Prince Feodor Iuanowich, Lord, Emperour and great duke of Ruſsia, &c. As alſo from the moſt excellent prince Boris Feodorowich, Lord Protector of Ruſsia: to giue your worſhip to vnderſtand the great good will and heartie deſire they beare vnto you; for that of long time they haue had great good report of your learning & wiſedom, as alſo of your good counſel vnto Princes: whereupon his Maieſties moſt earneſt deſire and requeſt is vnto you; that you would take the paines to come vnto his citie of Moſco, to viſite his Maieſties Court: for that hee is deſirous of your company, and alſo of your good counſell in diuers matters that his Maieſtie ſhall thinke needfull. And for the great good will that his Maieſtie beareth vnto you, he will giue you yeerely toward your mainteinance 2000. pound ſterling; and the Lord Protectour will giue you a thouſand rubbles, as alſo your prouiſion for your table you ſhall haue free out of his Maieſties kitchin: And further whatſoeuer you ſhall thinke needefull or conuenient for you, in any part or parts of his dominion, it ſhall be at your worſhips commaundement. And this is the ſumme and effect of my meſſage and commaundement giuen me by his Maieſtie and the Lord Protectour.

In witneſſe whereof I haue written this with my owne hand, the 17. of December 1586.

By me Edward Garland.

In Trebona Caſtel otherwiſe called Wittingaw in Boemia: to which place this M. Edward Garland, came to M. Dee with two Moſcouites to ſerue him, &c. He had ſixe more, which by M. Dees counſell were ſent backe.

Witneſſe M. Edward Kelley, and M. Francis Garland, brother to foreſaid Edward, and diuers others.

IT ſeemeth that this princely offer of the Emperour Pheodor Iuanowich, and of the L. Boris Pheodorowich Protectour to his Maieſtie, was made vnto the learned and famous Mathematitian M. Iohn Dee, partly to vſe his counſell & direction about certaine diſcoueries to the Northeaſt; and partly for ſome other weightie occaſions: but becauſe their conqueſt to Siberia was not as then fully ſettled, & for diuers other ſecret reaſons, it was for yͤ time with al thankfulnes refuſed.

A branch of a letter from M. Iohn Merick, Agent vnto the Moſcouie company in Ruſsia, cloſed vp in the Moſco the 14. of March, Anno 1597. touching the death of Pheodor Iuanowich late Emperour of all Ruſsia, &c.

Hauing thus farre proceeded with this my anſwere vnto the chiefeſt points of your worſhips letters receiued, my deſire was to haue ſent one vnto you long ſince, as you may perceiue by ſ the firſt date: but by reaſon I could not get leaue, I haue deferred it of till this inſtant, for that there was none ſuffered to paſſe out of the land. The cauſes may be iudged, for that it pleaſed God to call out of this world, the Emperour his Maieſtie, who departed about the 7. of Ianuary: and euer ſince hath bene a mourning time, & no ſuites for any matter could be heard. But it hath bene a very dead ſeaſon. Yet (thankes be to God) through the wiſe gouernment of Lord Boris Pheodorowich the Lord Protector vnto the ſaide late Emperour, ſince his death all things haue bene very quiet without any diſſention; as the like in ſuch a great kingdome I haue not heard of. And now through the prouidence of Almightie God, and by ſurrender of the late Empreſſe Irenia Feodoruna, and the common conſent of the Patriarch, Nobles, Biſhops, and the whole Cleargie, with the whole Commons beſides, choiſe is made of none other but of the ſaid Lord Protector, L. Boris Pheodorowich to be Emperour, and great duke of all Ruſsia, who was moſt vnwilling to receiue the kingdome, but the people would make no other choiſe, nor haue any other. So that with much adoe and entreatie, it hath pleaſed his Maieſtie to take vpon him the kingdome, and he is abſolute Emperor to him and his heires. And certainly God hath done much for this Countrey, and hath made the people greatly happy, in that he hath prouided and appointed ſo famous and worthy a Prince: whoſe excellent gouernment and experience theſe foureteene yeeres hath bene manifeſt to all Ruſsia. God graunt his highneſſe a moſt proſperous and long raigne, with his Lady the Empreſſe, the Prince his ſonne, and the Princeſſe his daughter. All men do reioyce both Ruſſe and ſtrangers for this moſt famous Emperour. The Coronation is thought ſhalbe on the Aſſenſion day next, til which time I cannot depart from Moſco: which is a litle before the time that ordinarily I doe take my iourney from hence. And touching his Maieſties fauour towards me on your behalfe, eſpecially for her Maieſties ſake, as in foretime it was extraordinary, and ſo ſpecially ſhewed to mee, as to none the like: ſo hath his highneſſe promiſed the continuance thereof, with further fauour as ſhalbe deſired. Whereof I haue no doubt: for dayly I do finde the ſame.

10. Febr. 1597.

Prince Boris Pheodorowich by generall conſent choſen Emperour of Ruſsia.

A learned Epiſtle written 1581. vnto the famous Coſmographer M. Gerardus Mercator concerning the riuer Pechora, Naramſay, Cara reca, the mighty riuer of Ob, the place of Taks Olguſh in Siberia, the great riuer Ardoh, the lake of Kittay called of the borderers Paraha, the Countrey of Carrah Colmak, giuing good light to the diſcouery of the Northeaſt paſſage to Cathay, China and the Malucaes.

To

To the famous and renowmed Gerardus Mercator, his Reuerend and ſingular friend at Duisburgh in Clineland, theſe be deliuered.

CAlling to remembrance (moſt deare Friend) what exceeding delight you tooke at our being together, in reading the Geographicall writings of Homer, Strabo, Ariſtotle, Plinie, Dion, and the reſt, I reioyced not a little that I happened vpon ſuch a meſſenger as the bearer of of theſe preſents, (whom I do eſpecially recommend vnto you) who arriued lately here at Aruſburg vpon the riuer of Oſella. This mans experience (as I am of opinion) will greatly auaile you to the knowledge of a certaine matter which hath bene by you ſo vehemently deſired, and ſo curiouſly laboured for, and concerning the which the late Coſmographers do hold ſuch varietie of opinions: namely, of the diſcouerie of the huge promontorie of Tabin, and of the famous and rich countreys ſubiect vnto the Emperor of Cathay, and that by the Northeaſt Ocean ſea. The man is called * Alferius being by birth a Netherlander, who for certaine yeeres liued captiue in the dominions of Ruſſia vnder two famous men Yacouius and Vnekius, by whom he was ſent to Antwerp to procure ſkilfull Pilots and Mariners, (by propounding liberall rewards) to go vnto the two famous perſonages aforeſayd, which two had ſet a Sweden Shipwright on worke to build two ſhips for the ſame diſcouerie vpon the riuer of Dwina. The paſſage vnto Cathay by the Northeaſt (as he declareth the matter, albeit without arte, yet very aptly, as you may well perceiue, which I requeſt you diligently to conſider) is without doubt very ſhort and eaſie. This very man himſelfe hath trauelled to the riuer of Ob, both by land, through the countreys of the Samoeds, and of Sibier, and alſo by Sea, along the coaſt of the riuer Pechora Eaſtward. Being encouraged by this his experience he is fully reſolued with himſelfe to conduct a Barke laden with merchandize (the keele whereof hee will not haue to drawe ouer much water) to the Baie of Saint Nicholas in Ruſſia, being furniſhed with all things expedient for ſuch a diſcouerie, and with a new ſupply of victuals at his arriuall there, and alſo to hire into his companie certaine Ruſſes beſt knowen vnto himſelfe, who can perfectly ſpeake the Samoeds language, and are acquainted with the riuer of Ob, as hauing frequented thoſe places yeere by yeere.

*Or Oliuer.

Two ſhips built vpon the riuer of Dwina for the Northeaſt diſcouerie.

Whereupon about the ende of May hee is determined to ſaile from the Baie of S. Nicholas Eaſtward, by the maine of Ioughoria, and ſo to the Eaſterly parts of Pechora, & to the Iſland which is called Dolgoia. And here alſo hee is purpoſed to obſerue the latitudes, to ſuruey and deſcribe the countrey, to ſound the depth of the Sea, and to note the diſtances of places, where, and ſo oft as occaſion ſhall be offered. And foraſmuch as the Baie of Pechora is a moſt conuenient place both for harbour and victuall, as well in their going foorth as in their returne home in regard of Ice and tempeſt, he is determined to beſtow a day in ſounding the Flats, and in ſearching out the beſt enterance for ſhips: in which place heretofore he found the water to be but fiue foote deepe, howbeit he doubteth not but that there are deeper chanels: and then hee intendeth to proceed on along thoſe coaſts for the ſpace of three or foure leagues, leauing the Iſland called Vaigats almoſt in the middle way betweene Vgoria and Noua Zembla: then alſo to paſſe by a certaine Baie betweene Vaigats and Ob, trending Southerly into the land of Vgoria, whereinto fall two ſmall riuers called * Marmeſia and Carah, vpon the which riuers doe inhabite another barbarous and ſauage nation of the Samoeds. He found many Flats in that tract of land, and many cataracts or ouerfals of water, yet ſuch as hee was able to ſaile by. When hee ſhall come to the riuer of Ob, which riuer (as the Samoeds report) hath ſeuentie mouthes, which by reaſon of the huge breadth thereof containing many and great Iſlands, which are inhabited with ſundry ſortes of people, no man ſcarcely can well diſcouer, becauſe he will not ſpend too much time, he purpoſeth to ſearch three or foure at the moſt of the mouthes thereof, thoſe chiefly which ſhall be thought moſt commodious by the aduiſe of the inhabitants, of whom hee meaneth to haue certaine with him in his voyage, and meaneth to employ three or foure boates of that Countrey in ſearch of theſe mouthes, as neere as poſſibly he can to the ſhore, which within three dayes iourney of the Sea is inhabited, that he may learne where the riuer is beſt nauigable. If it ſo fall out that he may ſayle vp the riuer Ob againſt the ſtreame, and mount vp to that place which heretofore accompanied with certaine of his friends, he paſſed vnto by land through the countrey of Siberia which is about twelue dayes iourney from the Sea, where the riuer Ob falleth into the Sea, which place is in the Continent neere the riuer Ob, and is called Yaks Olguſh, borowing his name from that mightie riuer which falleth into the riuer Ob, then doubtleſſe hee would conceiue full hope that hee had paſſed the greateſt difficulties: for the people dwelling thereabout report, which were three dayes ſayling onely from that place beyond the

The place vpon the riuer Ob, where he was but 12. dayes iourney frō ÿ mouthes thereof, and is called Yaks Olguſh.

riuer Ob, whereby the breadth thereof may be gathered (which is a rare matter there, becauſe that many rowing with their boates of leather one dayes iourney onely from the ſhore, haue bene caſt away in tempeſt, hauing no ſkill to guide themſelues neither by Sunne nor Starre) that they haue ſeene great veſſels laden with rich and precious merchandize brought downe that great riuer by blacke or ſwart people. They call that riuer * Ardoh, which falleth into the lake of Kittay, which they call Paraha, whereupon bordereth that mightie and large nation which they call Carrah Colmak, which is none other then the nation of Cathay. There, if neede require, he may fitly Winter and refreſh himſelfe and his, and ſeeke all things which he ſhall ſtand in need of: which if it ſo fall out, he doubteth not but in the meane while he ſhall be much furthered in ſearching and learning out many things in that place. Howbeit, he hopeth that hee ſhall reach to Cathaya that very Sommer, vnleſſe he be hindered by great abundance of Ice at the mouth of the riuer of Ob, which is ſometimes more, and ſometimes leſſe. If it ſo fall out, hee then purpoſeth to returne to Pechora, and there to Winter: or if he cannot doe ſo neither, then hee meaneth to returne to the riuer of Dwina, whither he will reach in good time enough, and ſo the next Spring following to proceed on his voyage. One thing in due place I forgate before.

* M. Ienkinſon in his voyage to Boghar ſpeaketh of the riuer Ardoh.

The people which dwell at that place called Yaks Olguſh, affirme that they haue heard their forefathers ſay, that they haue heard moſt ſweete harmonie of bels in the lake of Kitthay, and that they haue ſeene therein ſtately and large buildings: and when they make mention of the people named Carrah Colmak (this countrey is Cathay) they fetch deepe ſighes, and holding vp their hands, they looke vp to heauen, ſignifying as it were, and declaring the notable glory and magnificence of that nation. I would this Oliuer were better ſeene in Coſmographie, it would greatly further his experience, which doubtleſſe is very great. Moſt deare friend, I omit many things, and I wiſh you ſhould heare the man himſelfe which promiſed mee faithfully that he would viſite you in his way at Duisburg, for he deſireth to conferre with you, and doubtleſſe you ſhall very much further the man. He ſeemeth ſufficiently furniſhed with money and friends, wherein and in other offices of curteſie I offered him my furtherance if it had pleaſed him to haue vſed me. The Lord proſper the mans deſires and forwardneſſe, bleſſe his good beginnings, further his proceedings, and grant vnto him moſt happy iſſue. Fare you well good ſir and my ſingular friend. From Arusburg vpon the riuer of Oſſella, the 20. of February, 1581.

Yours wholy at commandement,

Iohn Balak.

Maſter Anthonie Ienkinſon in a diſputation before her Maieſtie with ſir Humfrey Gilbert for proofe of a paſſage by the Northeaſt to Cathaya, among other things alleageth this: videlicet, that there came a continuall ſtreame or currant through Mare glaciale, of ſuch ſwiftneſſe as a Colmak told him, that if you caſt any thing therein, it would preſently be caried out of ſight towards the Weſt, &c.

A teſtimonie of the Northeaſterne Diſcouerie made by the Engliſh, and of the profite that may ariſe by purſuing the ſame: taken out of the ſecond volume of Nauigations and Voyages, fol.17. of the notable Coſmographer, M. Iohn Baptiſta Ramuſius, Secretarie to the State of Venice: Written in Italian in the yeere, 1557.

D*Alla parte poi di ſotto la noſtra Tramontana, che chiaſcuno ſcrittore & Coſmographo di queſti & de paſſati tempi ſin' hora vi ha meſſo & mette mare congelato, & che la terra corra continuamente ſino a' 90. gradi verſo il Polo: ſopra queſto mappa-mondo all' incontro ſi vede che la terra và ſolamente vn poco ſopra la Norvega & Suetia, & voltando corre poi Greco & Leuante nel paeſe della Moſcouia & Roſſia, & và diritto al Cataio. Et che cio ſia la verità, le nauigationi che hanno fatte gl' Ingleſi con le loro naui, volendo andare à ſcoprire il Cataio al tempo del* Re Odoardo Seſto d' Inghilterra, queſti anni paſſati, ne poſſono far vera teſtimonianza: perche nel mezzo del loro viaggio, capitate per fortuna a i liti di Moſcouia, doue trouarono all' hora regnare Giouanni Vaſiliuich Imperatore della Roſſia & gran Duca di Moſcouia, il quale con molto piacere & marauiglia vedutogli, fece grandiſſime carezze, hanno trouato quel mare eſſere nauigabile, & non agghiacciato. La qual nauigatione (ancor che con l'eſito ſin hora non ſia ſtata bene inteſa) ſe col ſpeſſo frequentarla & col lungo vſo & cognitione de que' mari ſi continuerà, è per fare grandiſſima mutatione & riuolgimento nelle coſe di queſta noſtra parte del mondo.

The ſame in Engliſh.

Moreouer (hauing before ſpoken of diuers particularities, in an excellent Map of Paulus Venetus) on that part ſubiect to our North pole, where euery writer and Coſmographer of theſe and of former times hitherto, haue, and doe place the frozen Sea, and that the land ſtretcheth continually to 90. degrees, towards the pole: contrarywiſe, in this mappe is to bee ſeene, that the land extendeth onely a litle aboue Norway and Swethland, and then turning it ſelfe trendeth afterwards towards the Southeaſt and by Eaſt, vnto the countrey of Moſcouie and Ruſſia, and ſtretcheth directly vnto Cathay. And that this is true, the nauigations which the Engliſh men haue of late made, intending to diſcouer Cathay, in the time of Edward the ſixt, king of England, are very ſufficient witneſſes. For in the mids of their voiage, lighting by chance vpon the coaſt of Moſcouie (where they found then reigning Iohn Vaſiliwich Emperor of Ruſſia, and great duke of Moſcouia, who after he had, to his great delight and admiration, ſeene the Engliſh men, entertained them with exceeding great curteſies) found this ſea to be nauigable, and not frozen.

Which nauigation to Cathay, although it be not as yet throughly knowen, yet if with often frequenting the ſame, and by long vſe and knowledge of thoſe ſeas it bee continued, it is like to make a wonderfull change and reuolution in the ſtate of this our part of the world.

The great hope of the Northeaſterlie diſcouerie.

The teſtimonie of Gerardus Mercator in his laſt large Mappe of Europe, touching the notable diſcoueries of the Engliſh, made of Moſcouie by the Northeaſt.

Magnam occaſionem certámque rationem emendandæ Europæ nobis attulit celeberrima Anglorum per Cronium mare nauigatio: quæ littora Septentrionalia Finlappiæ Moſcouiæque iuxta cœli ſitum, mundíque plagas digeſta habet. Exacta etiam vrbis Moſcuæ latitudo ab Anglis obſeruata, interiorum Regionum emendatiùs deſcribendarum infallibilem legem præſcripſit: Quibus oblatis adminiculis pulcherrimis, iniquum putaui tabulam hanc caſtigatiorem non reddere.

The ſame in Engliſh.

The moſt famous nauigation of the Engliſh men by the Northeaſt ſea hath offered vnto me a great occaſion, and certaine direction for the reformation of the mappe of Europe: which diſcouerie hath the Northerne parts of Finmarke, Lapland, and Moſcouie, laied out according to the iuſt eleuation and the quarters of the world. And further, the true obſeruation of the latitude of the city of Moſco, made by the foreſaid Engliſhmen, hath yeelded me an infallible rule, for the correcting of the ſituation of the inland countries: which notable helps being miniſtred vnto me, I thought it my duetie to exhibite to the world this Mappe, more exact and perfect then hitherto it hath bene publiſhed.

Another teſtimonie of Ioannes Metellus Sequanus concerning the ſame Nauigation and Diſcouerie in his Preface prefixed before Oſorius de rebus geſtis Emanuelis Regis Portugalliæ, written about the yeere, 1574.

At ne omnis, vnis Hiſpanis, Oceani maris gloria totáque concederetur, Britanni Septentriones noua in Moſcouiam nauigatione, ab hinc annis viginti plus minus illuſtrarunt. Nam bellis Sueticis à Moſcouitarum, Naruæque Liuoniæ excluſi commercio, iter ad illos Oceano, hinc Noruegiæ, Finmarchiæ, Lappiæ, Scricfinniæ, Biarmiæque; illinc Groenlandiæ littora præteruecti, vltrà Septuageſimum latitudinis Aquilonaris gradum ſibi patefaciunt. Quam nauigationem Belgæ poſteà, non ſine tamen cum cum iiſdem Britannis velitatione, ſunt ſecuti. Eò vehunt argenti veteris fragmenta, lineáſque veſtes propè detritas, omniſque generis minutiores merces, ad vſum, cultúmque corporis hominum vtriuſque ſexus, veluti lintea & byſſea cingula, periſcelides, crumenas, cultros, & id genus ſexcenta. A Moſchis autem pelles omnis generis pretioſas adferunt, & ſalmones ſalitos, fumóque duratos.

The ſame in Engliſh.

But leaſt all and the whole glory of diſcouering the Ocean ſea ſhould be aſcribed to the Spaniards, the Engliſhmen about twentie yeeres paſt, by a new nauigation into Moſcouie, diſcouered the Northeaſt partes. For they by reaſon of the warres of Swethland being hindered from the traffique of the Moſcouites and of the Narue in Liefland, opened a paſſage for themſelues by the Ocean ſea, beyond the Northerne latitude of 70. degrees: hauing in their courſe on the one ſide the coaſtes of Norway, Finmark, Lapland, Scrickfin and Biarmia: On the other ſide the coaſt of Gronland. Which voyage the Hollanders afterwarde entred into, but not without ſome conflict with the Engliſh. They cary thither old plate and courſe linnen cloth, and all kind of ſmall Mercerie wares, ſeruing for the apparelling of men and women, as linnen, and like girdles, garters, purſes, kniues, and many ſuch like things. And they bring away from the Moſcouites, all kinde of precious Furres, and Salmons ſalted and dried in the ſmoke.

Nec inferiorem multò conſecuti ſunt gloriam Sperthius & Bulis, Lacedæmonij, qui ad auertendam potentiſſimi Regis Perſarum Xerxis, ob occiſos à Lacedæmonijs Darij patris legatos, vltionem, ad Regem profecti ſunt, & vt legatorum necem in ſe, non in patria vlciſceretur, erectis & conſtantibus animis ſeſe obtulerunt.

Quæ verò res, Sereniſſ. Princeps, illos ac alios complures mouit, vt patriæ flagrantes amore, nullũ pro ea periculum, nullas moleſtias, imò ne mortẽ ipſam recuſarint, ea profectò me quoque impulit, non quidem, vt quemadmodum illi, mortem ſponte appeterem, aut me mactandum vltrò offerrem, ſed tamen, vt id quod ſolum poſſem, in gratiam patriæ tentarem: Hoc eſt, vt ſcriptorum de ea errores colligerem & rumuſculos vanos refellerem: Ac ita rem profectò periculoſam, & multorum forſan ſiniſtro obnoxiam iudicio, aggrederer.

In eo propoſito me etiam Cn. Pompeij exemplum confirmauit: Quem rei frumentariæ apud Romanos procuratorem, cum in ſumma Vrbis annonæ charitate, in Sicilia, Sardinia & Africa frumentum collegiſſet, maiorem patriæ, quàm ſui, tradunt rationem habuiſſe. Cum enim Romam verſus properaret, & ingenti ac periculoſa oborta tempeſtate, Nauclerostrepidare, nec ſe ventorum aut maris ſæuitiæ committere velle animaduerteret, ipſe nauim primus ingreſſus, anchoras tolli iuſſit, in hæc verba exclamans: Vt nauigemus vrget neceſſitas: vt viuamus, non vrget. Quibus vir prudentiſſimus innuiſſe videtur, patriæ periclitantis maiorem habendam rationem, quàm priuatæ incolumitatis.

(Si parua licet componere magnis, & muſcam Elephanto conferre) vt collectis ac comportatis ijs, quibus ad ſuccurrendum gentis noſtræ nomini ac famæ, apud extraneos, ex maleuolorum quorundam inuidia iam diu laboranti vterer; paucula hæc in lucem emittere, méque pelago huic quantumuis turbulento committere, lintea ventis tradere, cúmque illo exclamare non dubitem: Vt ſcribamus, vrget neceſsitas: Vt verò ſcriptum noſtrum, cuiuſuis delicato palato, vbiq; ſatisfaciat, aut omnem Momi proteruiam effugiat, non vrget. Inſtitutum meum complures probaturos ſpero: ſucceſſum forſan non itidem omnes probabunt. Nihilominus tamen maiorem habendam rationem patriæ, multorum hactenus opprobria & contumelias ſuſtinentis, quàm ſiue laudis, ſiue vituperationis, ad me ipſum hinc forſan rediture, exiſtimabā. Quid enim cauſa eſſe poteſt, cur nōnullorū odium & inuidētiam, cum hoc patriæ benefaciendi ſeu gratificandi ſtudio fortè coniunctā recuſem?

Quodſi ſcriptorum errores liberius notare, ſi quorundam calumnias durius perſtringere videbor, eos tamen æquos me habiturum cenſores confido, qui paulò diligentius animaduertere volent, quam parùm tolerabiles ſint ſcriptorum de noſtra gente errores: quot etiam & quàm graues quorundam in nos calumniæ, quibus nationem noſtram varijs modis laceſsiuere, & etiamnum laceſſere non deſiſtunt. Dandum etiam aliquid omnibus congenito ſoli natalis amori eſt; Dandum iuſto, ob hanc patriæ illatam iniuriam, dolori. Et ego quidem, quantum fieri potuit, vbiq; mihi temperaui, ac à conuitijs abſtinere volui: quòd ſi quid videatur mollius dicendum fuiſſe, id prædicta ratione veniam, ſpero, merebitur.

Cum igitur hæc mihi ſubeunda ſit alea, quod omnibus ſcriptum aliquod edituris in more poſitum animaduerto, id mihi hoc tempore ſolicitè curandum eſt: Nempè vt patronum & mecænatem aliquem huic meo commentariolo quæram, ſub cuius nomine & numine, tutius in vulgi manus exeat.

Eam igitur ad rem nihil poterit contingere optatius, veſtra, clementiſsime Princeps, Sereniſſ. Maieſtate: Etenim nos ei, qui vitam & fortunas noſtras in ſuam poteſtatem & tutelam accepit, ei inquam, nomen quoque gentis noſtræ innocenter contaminatum, curæ vt ſit, ſupplices rogamus.

Imo verò, Rex clementiſſ. non ſolùm ad hanc rem, S. Maieſtatis V. clemens implorare auxilium neceſſum habemus; Sed ad multa quoq; alia, quæ in noſtra patria deſiderantur, aut quæ alioqui ad huius vtilitatem & ſalutem communem ſpectant: quæq; non per me, ſed per ſummorum noſtræ gentis virorum libellos ſupplices hoc tempore exponuntur, aut certè breui exponentur. Nihil enim dubitamus quin S. V. Maieſtas, Chriſtianiſſimorum maiorum exemplo, etiam noſtram patriam, inter reliquas imperij ſui Inſulas, ſua cura & protectione regia dignari velit. Nam quæ noſtra eſt ad S. Maieſtatem V. confugiendi neceſſitas, ea eſt S. Maieſtatis V in nobis ſubleuandis, curandis & protegendis, gloria: Et ob nutritam extremi ferè orbis Arctoi eccleſiam, in remotiſſimis M. V. imperij finibus, quæ tranquillitatem & tuta ſingulari Dei beneficio halcyonia habet, præmium, ac repoſita in cœlis immarceſſibilis vitæ æternæ corona.

Cæterum cùm illa huius loci non ſint, id quod mei eſt propoſiti ſubiũgo: & à S. Maieſtate V. ea, qua par eſt, animi ſubmiſſione peto, vt huic meæ opellæ & ſtudio in patriam collato fauere, & patroni benigni eſſe loco, clementer dignetur. Quod ſupereſt, Sereniſſ. Princeps, Dom. clementiſſime, Maieſtatem V. ſapientia & prudentia, omniúmq; adeò virtutum heroicarum indies incrementa ſumentem, ad ſummum imperij faſtigium, ſummus ille regnorum, omniúmq; adeò rerum humanarum diſpenſator, Deus opt. max. euehat: Euectum, omni rerum fœliciſſimo ſucceſſu continuè beet: Beatámque hoc modo, vt ſummum horum regnorum ornamentum, columen, præſidium, Eccleſiæ clypeum & munimen, quàm diutiſſimè conſeruet: Ac tandem in altera vita, in ſolido regni cœleſtis gaudio, cum præcipuis eccleſiæ Dei nutritijs, ſyderis inſtar, illuſtrem fulgere faciat. Faxit etiã idem Pater clementiſ. vt hæc vota, quantò ſæpius, in ampliſſimorum Maieſtatis V. regnorũ & Inſularum quouis angulo, quotidiè repetuntur ac ingeminantur, tantò rata magis & certiora maneant.

QVemadmodum in militia caſtrenſi, alios nulla æqua ratione adductos, ſed ambitione, inuidia & auaritia motos, Martis caſtra ſequi animaduertimus: Alios verò iuſtis de cauſis arma ſumere; vt qui vel doctrinæ cœleſtis propagandæ aut ſeruandæ ergò bella mouent, vel aliquo modo laceſſiti paratam vim ac iniuriam repellunt, vel ſaltem non laceſſiti, propter obſidentem hoſtem metu in armis eſſe coguntur: Non ſecus Apollini militantes: alij animo nequaquam bono, Philoſophico ſeu verius Chriſtiano, ad ſcribendum feruntur: puta qui gloriæ cupiditate, qui liuore ac odio, qui affectata ignorantia alios ſugillant, vt ipſi potiores habeantur, nunc in perſonam, nomen ac famam alicuius, nunc in gentem totam ſtylum acuentes, atque impudenter quaſi mentiendo, inſontem nationem & populos commaculantes: Alij verò contrà, animo ingenuo multa lucubrando inueſtigant & in lucem emittunt; vt qui ſcientiam Theologicam & Philoſophicam ſcriptis mandarunt, quiſque ſuis vigilijs veterum monumenta nobis explicuerunt: qui quicquid in illis obſcurum, imperfectum, inordinatum animaduerterunt, vſu & experientia duce illuſtrarunt, explerunt, ordinarunt: qui mundi hiſtorias, bona fide, æternæ memoriæ conſecrarunt: qui linguarum cognitionem ſuis indefeſſis laboribus iuuerunt: denique qui aliorum in ſe ſuamue gentem vel patriam, licentioſam petulantiam reprimere, calumnias refellere, & quandam quaſi vim iniuſtam propulſare annixi ſunt.

Et quidem ego, cui literas vix, ac ne vix quidem videre contigit, omnium qui diuinæ Palladi nomen dederunt, longè infimus (vt id ingenuè de mea tenuitate confitear) facere certè non poſſum, quin me in illorum aciem conferam, qui gentis ſuæ maculam abluere, veritatem ipſam aſſerere, & conuitiantium iugum detrectare ſtuduerunt: Maiora ingenio ſors denegauit: Id quoquo modo tentare compellit ipſius veritatis dignitas, & innatus amor patriæ, quam extraneos nonnullos falſis rumoribus deformare, varijs conuitijs, magna cum voluptate proſcindere, aliiſq; nationibus deridendam propinare comperimus. Quorum petulantiæ occurrere, & criminationes falſas, detectis ſimul ſcriptorum de hac Inſula erroribus, apud bonos & cordatos viros, (Nam vulgus ſui ſemper ſimile, falſi & vani tenaciſſimum, non eſt quòd ſperem me ab hac inueterata opinione abducere poſſe) diluere hoc commentariolo decreui.

Etſi autem Iſlandia multos habet, vt ætate, ita ingenio & eruditione me longè ſuperiores, ideóq; ad hanc cauſam patriæ ſuſcipiendam multò magis idoneos: Ego tamen optimi & clariſſimi viri, Dom. Gudbrandi Thorlacij, Epiſcopi Holenſis, apud Iſlandos, ſollicitationibus motus communi cauſæ, pro viribus, nequaquam deeſſe volui, tum ut æquiſſimæ poſtulationi ipſius parerem, atque amorem & ſtudium debitum erga patriam declararem, tum vt reliquos ſympatriotas meos, in bonarum literarum ſcientia fœlicius verſatos, atque in rerum plurimarum cognitione vlterius progreſſos, ad hoc gentis noſtræ patrocinium inuitarem: Tantum abeſt, vt ijs qui idem conabuntur, obſtaculo eſſe voluerim.

Cæterum vt ad rem redeamus, quoniam illi quicunque ſunt noſtræ gentis obtrectatores, teſtimonio ſcripto ſe vti ac niti iactitant: videndum omnino eſt, quidnam de Iſlandia, & quàm vera ſcriptores prodiderint, vt ſi fortè iſti, alijs in nos dicendi aliquam occaſionem dederint, patefactis ipſorum erroribus (nolo enim quid durius dicere) quàm meritò nos calumnientur, reliquis planum fiat. Porrò, quamuis vetuſtiorum quorundam ſcripta de hac Inſula, ad veritatis & experientiæ normam exigere non verear: Tamen nobis eorundem alioqui ſacra eſt memoria, reuerenda dignitas, ſuſpicienda eruditio, laudanda voluntas & in Rempub. literariam ſtudium: Nouitij verò, ſi qui ſunt id genus ſcriptores, aut verius paſquilli, cum ijs longè veriora quàm ſcripſerant, audire & noſſe de Iſlandia licuerit, ſua leuitate & ingenio malè candido, nihil niſi inuidiæ & calumniæ maculam lucrati eſſe videbuntur.

Commentarij duæ partes.

Atque vt Commentarius hic noſter aliquid ordinis habeat, duo erunt propoſitæ orationis capita, vnum de Inſula, de incolis alterum: quantum quidem de his duobus capitibus Scriptores qui in noſtris manibus verſantur, annotatum reliquerunt: Quoniam vltra has metas vagari, vel plura quàm hæc ipſa, & quæ huc pertinere videbuntur attingere nolo. Non enim ex profeſſo Hiſtoricum vel Geographum ſed diſputatorem tantùm agimus. Itaque omiſſa longiore præfatione partem primam, quæ eſt de ſitu, nomine, miraculis, & alijs quibuſdam adiunctis Inſulæ, aggrediamur.

Primæ partis tractatio.

SECTIO PRIMA.

Inſula Iſlandia, quæ per immenſum à cæteris ſecreta longè ſita eſt in Oceano, vixq́; à nauigantibus agnoſcitur, &c.

Munſt.lib.4. Coſmograph.

ETſi hæc tractare, quæ ipſam terram vel illius adiuncta ſeu proprietates concernunt, ad gentem vel incolas à calumniantium morſu vindicandos parùm faciat: tamen id nequaquam omittendum videtur. Sed de his primùm, & quidem prolixiùs aliquantò agendum eſt, vt perſpecto, quàm vera de hac re tradant illi Iſlandiæ ſcriptores, facilè inde candidus Lector, in ijs quæ de Incolis ſcripta reliquerunt, quæque ab illis alij, tanquam Dijs prodentibus, acceperunt, vnde ſua in gentem noſtram ludibria depromi aiunt, quantum fidei mereantur, iudicet.

Primum igitur diſtantiam Iſlandiæ à reliquis terris non immenſam eſſe, nec tantam, quanta vulgò putatur, ſi quis inſulæ longitudinem & latitudinem aliquo modo cognitam haberet, facilè demonſtrari poſſet. Non enim id alio, quàm iſto cognoſci exactè poſſe modo exiſtimârim, cum nulli dubium ſit, quàm ſemper nautarum vel rectiſſimus, vt illis videtur, curſus aberret. Quare varias authorum de ſitu Iſlandiæ ſententias ſubiungam, vt inde quiuis de diſtantiâ id colligat, quod maximè veriſimile videbitur, donec fortè aliquando propria edoctus experientia, meam quoque ſententiam ſi non interponam, tamen adiungam.

Iſlandia tribus gradibus in circulum vſque Arcticum ab æquinoctiali excurrit, adeò ferè, vt mediam circulus ille ſecet, &c.

Et ſi qui ſunt præterea, qui vel in mappis, vel alioqui ſuis ſcriptis Inſulæ ſitum notarunt, quorum plures ſententias referre nihil attinet, cum quò plures habeas, eò magis diſſidentes reperias. Ego quamuis veriſimiles coniecturas habeo, cur nullæ citatæ de Iſlandiæ ſitu ſententiæ aſſentiar, quin potius diuerſum quippiam ab ijs omnibus ſtatuam, tamen id ipſum in dubio relinquere malo, quàm quicquam non exploratum ſatis affirmare, donec, vt dixi, fortè aliquando non coniecturam, ſed obſeruationem & experientiam propriam afferre liceat.

Diſtantiam ab oſtio Albis ad portum Iſlandię meridionalis Batzende, quidam ſcripſerat eſſe circiter 400. milliarium: Vnde ſi longitudinis differentiam ad meridianum Hamburgenſem ſupputaueris, nullam modò poſitarum longitudinum habebis illo in loco Iſlandia. Ego ternis Hamburgenſium nauigationibus docere poſſum, ſeptimo die Hamburgum ex Iſlandia peruentum eſſe. Præterea etiam, Inſulæ quæ ab ouium multitudine Færeyjar, ſeu rectius Faareyjar dictæ ſunt, bidui nauigatione, vt & littora Noruagiæ deſerta diſtant. Quatridui verò nauigatione in Gronlandiam habitabilem, & pari ferè temporis interuallo, ad prouinciam Noruagiæ Stad. inter opida Nidroſiam & Bergas ſitam peruenitur, quemadmodum in harum nationum vetuſtis codicibus reperimus.

Bidui nauigatio ab Iſlandia ad Noruagiam deſertam.

SECTIO SECVNDA.

Munſterus, Olaus magnus & reliqui. In hac, æſtiuo ſolſtitio, ſole ſignum Cancri tranſeunte, nox nulla, brumali Solſtitio proinde nullus dies. Item, Vadianus. In ea autem Inſula quæ longe ſupra Arcticum circulum in ampliſſimo Oceano ſita eſt, Iſlandia hodie dicta, & terris congelati maris proxima, quas Entgronlandt vocant, menſes ſunt plures ſine noctibus.

NVllum eſſe hyemali ſolſtitio diem, id eſt, tempus quo ſol ſupra horizontem conſpicitur in illo tantum Iſlandiæ angulo, ſi modò quis eſt, fatemur, vbi polus ad integros 67. gradus attollitur. Holis autem, quæ eſt ſedes Epiſcopalis Borealis Iſlandiæ, ſita etiam in anguſtiſſima & profundiſſima conualle, latitudo eſt circiter grad. 65. 44. min. vt à Domino Gudbrando eiuſdem loci Epiſcopo accepimus, & illic diem breuiſſimum habemus ad minimum duarum horarum, in meridionali autem Iſlandia longiorem, vt ex artificum tabulis videre eſt. Vnde conſtat nec Iſlandiam vltra Arcticum circulum poſitam eſſe, nec menſes plures noctibus in æſtiuo, vel diebus in brumali ſolſtitio carere.

SECTIO TERTIA.

Munſterus. Saxo. Nomen habet à glacie quæ illi perpetuo ad Boream adhæret. Item. A latere Occidentali Noruagiæ Inſula, quæ Glacialis dicitur, magno circumfuſa Oceano reperitur, obſoletæ admodum habitationis tellus, &c. Item, Hæc eſt Thyle, nulli veterum non celebrata.

N*Omen habet à glacie)* Tria nomina conſequenter ſortita eſt Iſlandia. Nam qui omnium primus eius inuentor fuiſſe creditur Naddocus genere Noruagus, cũ verſus inſulas Farenſes nauigaret tẽpeſtate valida, ad littora Iſlandiæ Orientalis fortè appulit: vbi cum fuiſſet aliquot ſeptimanas cum ſocijs commoratus, animaduertit immodicam niuium copiam, montium quorundam cacumina obtegentem, atque ideò à niue nomen Inſulæ Snelandia indidit. Snelandia. Hunc ſecutus alter, Gardarus, fama quam de Iſlandia Naddocus attulerat impulſus, Inſulam quæſitum abijt, reperit, & nomen de ſuo nomine Gardarsholme id eſt, Gardars Inſula impoſuit. Quin & plures nouam terram viſendi cupido inceſſit: nam & poſt illos duos adhuc tertius quidam Noruagus (Floki nomen habuit) contulit ſe in Iſlandiam, illiq; à glacie qua viderat ipſam cingi nomen fecit.

Obſoletæ admodum) Ego ex iſtis verbis Saxonis hanc ſententiam nequaquam eruo, vt quidam, quòd inde ab initio habitatam eſſe Iſlandiam, ſeu vt verbo dicam, Iſlandos autocthonas dicat, cum conſtet vix ante annos 718. incoli cœptam.

Hæc eſt Thyle) Grammatici certant & adhuc ſub iudice lis eſt. Quam tamen facilè dirimi 874 poſſe crediderim, ſi quis animaduertat, circa annum Domini 874 primùm fuiſſe inhabitatam. Niſi quis dicere velit Thulen illum Aegypti Regem, quem hoc ipſi nomen dediſſe putant, ad Inſulam iam tum incultam & inhabitatam penetraſſe. Illud verò rurſus ſi quis neget, per me ſanè licebit, vt illud ſit quoddam quaſi ſpectaculum, dum ita in contrarias ſcinduntur ſententias. Vnus affirmat eſſe Iſlandiam. Alter quandam inſulam, vbi arbores bis in anno fructificant. Tertius vnam ex Orcadibus, ſiue vltimam in ditione Scoti, vt Ioannes Myritius & alij, qui nomen illius referunt Thylenſey, quod etiam Virgilius per ſuam vltimam Thylen ſenſiſſe videtur, Siquidem ultra Britannos, quo nomine Angli hodie dicti & Scoti veniunt, nullos populos ſtatueret. Quod vel ex illo Virgilij Eclog. 1. apparet.

Et penitus toto diuiſos orbe Britannos. Quartus vnam ex Farenſibus. Quintus Telemarchiam Noruagiæ. Sextus Schrichfinniam.

Perpetuò ad Boream adhæret.) Illud verò, Glaciem Inſulæ perpetuò, vel vt paulò poſt aſſerit Munſterus: Octo continuis menſibus adhærere: neutrum verum eſt. Nam vt plurimum in menſe Glacies Aprili aut Maio ſoluitur Aprili aut Maio ſoluitur, & Occidentem verſus propellitur, nec ante Ianuarium aut Februarium ſæpiſſimè etiam tardius redit. Quid? quòd plurimos annos numerare licet, quibus glaciem illam huius nationis immite flagellum, ne viderit quidem Iſlandia: Quod etiam hoc anno 1592. compertum eſt. Vnde conſtat quàm verè à Friſio ſcriptum ſit, nauigationem ad hanc inſulam tantum quadrimeſtrem patere, propter glaciem & frigora, quibus intercludatur iter, Cùm Anglicæ naues quotannis nunc in Martio, nunc in Aprili, quædam in Maio, Germanorum & Danorum in Maio & Iunio, plærumque ad nos redeant, & harum quædam non ante Auguſtum iterum hinc ſoluant. Superiore autem anno 1591. quædam nauis Germanica, cupro onuſta, portum Iſlandiæ Vopnafiord 14. dies circiter in Nouembri occupauit, quibus lapſis inde fœliciter ſoluit. Quare cum glacies Iſlandiæ, nec perpetuò, neque octo menſibus adhæreat, Munſterus & Friſius manifeſtè falluntur.

SECTIO QVARTA.

Tam grandis Inſula, vt populos multos contineat. Item, Zieglerus, Situs Inſulæ extenditur inter auſtrum & boream ducentorum prope Schanorum longitudine. Krantzius. Munſterus.

GRandis.) Wilſtenius quidam, rector Scholæ OLDENBVRGENSIS Anno 1591. ad auunculum meum in Iſlandia Occidentali miſit breuem commentarium, quem ex ſcriptorum rapſodijs de Iſlandia collegerat, Vbi ſic reperimus: Iſlandia duplo maior Sicilia, &c. Sicilia autem ſecundum Munſterum 150. milliaria Germanica in ambitu habet. Noſtræ verò Inſulæ ambitus etſi nobis non eſt exactè cognitus, tamen vetus & conſtans opinio, & apud noſtrates recepta 144. milliaria numerat per duodecim videlicet promontoria Iſlandiæ inſigniora, quæ ſingula 12. inter ſemilliaribus diſtent, aut circiter, quæ collecta prædictam ſummam oſtendunt. Magnitudo Iſlandiæ.

Populos multos) Gyſſerus quidam, circa annum Domini 1090. Epiſcopus Schalholtenſis in Iſlandia, omnes Inſulæ colonos ſeu ruſticos qui tantas facultates poſſiderent, vt regi tributum ſoluere tenerentur (reliquis pauperibus cum fœminis & promiſcuo vulgo omiſſis) luſtrari curauit, reperítque in parte Inſulæ Orientali 700, meridionali 1000, Occidentali 1100, Aquilonari 1200. Summa 4000. colonorum tributa ſoluentium. Iam ſi quis experiatur, inueniet Inſulam plus dimidio fuiſſe inhabitatam.

SECTIO QVINTA.

Inſula multa ſui parte montoſa eſt & inculta. Qua parte autem plana eſt præſtat plurimùm pabulo, tam lato, vt pecus depellatur à paſcuis, ne ab aruina ſuffocetur. Munſt. Friſius, Ziegler.

ID ſuffocationis periculum nullo teſtimonio, nec noſtra nec patrum noſtrorum, vel quàm longè retrò numeraris, memoria confirmari poteſt.

SECTIO SEXTA.

Sunt in hac Inſula montes elati in cœlum, quorum vertices perpetua niue candent, radices ſempiterno igne aſtuant. Primus Occidentem verſus eſt, qui vocatur Hecla, alter Crucis, tertius Helga. Item Zieglerus. Rupes ſiue promontorium Hecla aſtuans perpetuis ignibus. Item Saxo. In hac itidem Inſula mons eſt, qui rupem ſideream perpetua flagrationis aſtibus imitatus, incendia ſempiterna iugi flammarum eructatione continuat. Munſt. Friſius.

MIracula Iſlandiæ Munſterus & Friſius narraturi mox in veſtibulo, magno ſuo cum incommodo impingunt. Nam quod hic de monte Hecla aſſerunt, etſi aliquam habet veritatis ſpeciem, tamen quod idem de duobus alijs montibus perpetuo igne æſtuantibus dicunt, manifeſtè erroneum eſt. Illi enim in Iſlandia non extant, nec quicquam, quod huic tanto ſcriptorum errori occaſionem dederit, imaginari poſſumus. Facta tamen eſt, ſed nunc demum Anno 1581. ex monte quodam auſtralis Iſlandiæ, maritimo, perpetuis niuibus & glacie obducto memorabilis fumi ac flammæ eruptio, magna ſaxorum ac cineris copia eiecta. Cæterum ille mons longè eſt ab his tribus, quos authores commemorant, diuerſiſſimus. Porrò etſi hæc de montibus ignitis maximè vera narrarent, annon naturaliter iſta contingerent? An ad extruendam illam, quæ mox in Munſtero, Zieglero & Friſio ſequitur, de orco Iſlandico opinionem aliquid faciunt? Ego ſanè nefas eſſe duco, his vel ſimilibus naturæ miraculis ab abſurda aſſerenda abuti, vel hæc tanquam impoſſibilia cum quadam impietate mirari. Quaſi verò non concurrant in huiuſmodi incendijs cauſæ ad hanc rem ſatis validæ. Eſt in horum montium radicibus materia vri aptiſſima, nempe ſulphurea & bituminoſa, Accedit aër per poros ac cauernas in terræ viſcera ingreſſus, ac illum maximi incendij fomitem exſufflans vnà cum nitro, qua exſufflatione tanquam follibus quibuſdam, ardentiſſima excitatur flamma. Habet ſiquidem ignis, his ita conenientibus, quæ tria ad vrendum ſunt neceſſaria, materiam ſcilicet, motum, & tandem penetrandi facultatem: Materiam quidem pinguem & humidam ideóque flammas diuturnas alentem: Motum præſtat per terræ cauernas admiſſus aër: Penetrandi facultatem facit ignis vis inuicta, ſine reſpiraculo eſſe neſcientis, & incredibili conatu violenter erumpentis, atque ita (non ſecus ac in cuniculis machiniſue ſeu tormentis bellicis, globi è ferro maximi, magno cum fragore ac ſtrepitu, à ſulphure & nitro, è quibus pyrius puluis conficitur, excitato, eijciuntur) lapides & Saxa in iſta voragine ignita, ceu quodam camino, colliquefacta cum immodica arenæ & cinerum copia, exſpuentis & eiaculantis, idque vt plurimum, non ſine terræmotu: qui ſi ſecundum profunditatem terræ fiat, ſuccuſſio à Poſſidoneo appellatur, vel hiatus erit, vel pulſus.

Hiatu terra dehiſcit: pulſu eleuatur intumeſcens, & nonunquam, vt inquit Plinius, moles magnas egerit: Cuiuſmodi terræmotus iam mentionem fecimus, maritima Iſlandiæ Auſtralis Anno 1581 infeſtantis, quique à Pontano his verbis ſcitiſſimè deſcribitur,

Ergo incerta ferens raptim veſtigia, anhelus
Spiritus incurſat, nunc huc, nunc percitus illuc,
Explorátque abitum inſiſtens, & ſingula tentat,
Si quà forte queat victis erumpere clauſtris.
Interea tremit ingentem factura ruinam
Terra, ſuis quatiens lætas cum mœnibus vrbes:
Diſſiliunt auulſa iugis immania ſaxa, &c.

Hæc addere libuit, non quòd cuiquam hæc ignota eſſe exiſtimemus; Sed ne nos alij ignorare credant, atque ideo ad ſuas fabulas, quas hinc exſtruunt, confugere velle.

Cardanus.

Cæterum video quid etiamnum admirationem non exiguam ſcriptoribus moueat, in his, quos ignoranter fingunt, tribus Iſlandiæ montibus, videlicet cum eorum baſin ſemper ardere dicant, ſummitates tamen nunquā niue careant. Porrò id admirari, eſt præter authoritatem tātorum virorum, quibus Ætnę incendium optimè notum erat, quæ, cùm ſecundum Plinium hybernis temporibus niualis ſit, noctibus tamen, eodem teſte, ſemper ardet. Quare etiam ſecundū illos, ille mons, cum adhuc niuium copia obducitur, & tamen ardeat, ſordidarum animarum quoque erit receptaculum: id quod Heclæ propter niues in ſummo vertice & baſin æſtuantem, adſcribere non dubitarunt. Vix autem mirum eſſe poteſt, quòd ignis montis radicibus latens, & nunquā, niſi rariſſimè erumpens, excelſa montis cacumina, quæ niuibus obducuntur, non colliquefaciat. Nam & in Caira, altiſſima montis cacumina niuibus ſemper cādentia eſſe perhibentur: & in Beragua quidem ſimiliter, ſed 5000 paſſuum in cœlum elata, quæ niuibus nunquam liberentur, cum tamen partibus tantùm decem ab æquatore diſtent. Vtrámq; hanc prouinciam iuxta Pariam eſſe ſitam accepimus. Quid? quod illa Teneriffæ (quæ una eſt ex inſulis Canarijs, quæ & Fortunatæ) pyramis, ſecundum Munſterum, 8 aut 9 milliarium Germanicorum altitudine in aëra aſſurgens, atq; inſtar Aetnæ iugiter conflagrans, niues, quibus media cingitur, teſte Benzone Italo, Indiæ occidentalis Hiſtorico, non reſoluit. Quod ipſum in noſtra Hecla quid eſt, quod magis miremur? Atque hæc ita breuiter de incendiis montanis.

Nunc illud quoq; caſtigandum arbitramur, quod hos montes in cœlum vſq; attolli ſcribant. Habent enim nullā præ cæteris Iſlandiæ montibus notabilem altitudinem: Præcipuè tertius ille Helga à Munſtero appellatus, nobis Helgafel. i. Sacer mons, apud monaſterium eiuſdē nominis, nulla ſui parte tempore æſtiuo niuibus obductus, nec montis excelſi, ſed potius collis humils nomen meretur, nunquā, vt initio huius ſectionis dixi, de incendio ſuſpectus. Nec verò perpetuę niues Heclæ, vel paucis alijs adſcribi debebant: Permultos enim habet eiuſmodi mōtes niuoſos Iſlandia, quos omnes vel toto anno, non facilè collegerit aut connumerarit, horum prædicator & admirator Coſmographus. Quin etiam id non ngligendum, quod mons Hecla non occidentem verſus, vt à Munſtero & Ziglero annotatum eſt, ſed inter meridiem & orientem poſitus ſit. Nec promontorium eſt: ſed mons ferè mediterraneus.

Annales Iſlandię.

Incendia perpetua iugi, &c. Quicunq; perpetuam flammarum eructationem Heclæ adſcripſerunt, toto cœlo errarunt, adeò, vt quoties flammas eructârit, noſtrates in annales retulerint, viz. anno Chriſti 1104. 1157. 1222. 1300. 1341. 1362. & 1389. Neque enim ab illo de montis incendio audire licuit, vſque ad annum 1558. quæ vltima fuit in illo monte eruptio. Interea non nego, fieri poſſe, quin mons infernè latentes intus flammas & incendia alat, quæ videlicet ſtatis interuallis, vt hactenus annotatum eſt, eruperint, aut etiam forte poſthac erumpant.

SECTIO SEPTIMA.

Priſius. Munſt.

Montis Heclæ flamma nec ſtuppam lucernarum luminibus aptiſſimam adurit, neque aquis extinguitur: Eóque impetu, quo apud nos machinis bellicis, globi eijciuntur, illinc lapides magni in aera emittuntur, ex frigoris & ignis & ſulphuris commixtione. Is locus à quibuſdam putatur carcer ſordidarum animarum. Item Zieglerus. Is locus eſt carcer ſordidarum animarum.

N*Ec ſtuppam adurit.*) Vnde habeant Scriptores, non ſatis conijcitur. Hæc enim noſtris hominibus prorſus ignota, nec hîc vnquam, niſi prodidiſſent illi, audita fuiſſent. Nemo enim eſt apud nos tam temerariæ curioſitatis, vt huius rei periculum, ardente monte, facere auſit, vel quod ſcire licuit, vnquā auſus fuerit. Quod tamen Munſterus aſſerit. Qui, inquit, naturam tanti incendij contēplari cupiunt, & ob id ad montem propius accedunt, eos vna aliqua vorago viuos abſorbet, &c. Quæ res, vt dixi, noſtræ genti eſt ignota prorſus. Extat tamen liber veteri Noruagorum lingua ſcriptus, in quo terrarum, aquarum, ignis, aëris, &c. miracula aliquot conſuſa fuſa reperias, pauca vera, plurima vana & falſa. Vnde facile apparet, à Sophis quibuſdam, ſi dijs placet, in Papatu olim eſſe conſcriptum: Speculum Regale nomen dederunt, propter vaniſſima mendacia, quibus totus, ſed plærumque ſub religionis & pietatis prætextu (quo difficilius eſt fucum agnoſcere) ſcatet ſpeculum minimè regale, ſed Anile & Irregulare. In hoc ſpeculo figmenta quædam de Heclæ incendio, his quæ nunc tractamus non multum diſſimilia, habentur, nullo experimento magis quàm hæc ſtabilita, ideóque explodenda.

Speculum Regale

Cæterum ne audaculus videar, qui ſpeculum illud Regale mendacij accuſem; nullum verò ex his quę minus credibilia affert, recenſeam; Accipe horum pauca Lector, quæ fidem minimè mereri exiſtimarim.

1 De quadam Inſula Hyberniæ; quæ templum & Parochiam habet: Cuius incolæ decedentes non inhumantur: ſed ad aggerem ſeu parietem cœmeterij, viuorum inſtar erecti, conſiſtunt perpetuò: Nec vlli corruptioni, nec ruinæ, obnoxij: vt poſterùm quiuis ſuos maiores ibi quærere & conſpicere poſſit.

2 De altera Hyberniæ Inſula, vbi homines emori nequeant.

3 De omni terrâ & omnibus arboribus Hyberniæ, quæ omnibus omninò venenis reſiſtant, ſerpentes & alia venenata, vbiuis terrarum, ſolâ virtute & præſentiâ, etiam ſine contactu, enecent.

4 De tertia Hyberniæ Inſula: Quòd hæc dimidia Diabolorum colonia facta ſit. In dimidiam vero propter templum ibidem exſtructum, iuris habeant nihil, licet & paſtore (vt tota Inſula incolis) & ſacris perpetuò careat: idque per naturam ita eſſe.

5 De quarta Hyberniæ Inſula, quæ in lacu quodam ſatis vaſto fluitet: cuius gramina, quibuſuis morbis præſentiſſimum remedium exiſtant: Inſula verò ripam lacus ſtatis temporibus accedat, idque vt plurimum, diebus Dominicis, vt tum quiuis facilè eam veluti nauim quandam, ingrediatur: id quod tamen pluribus ſimul, per fatum licere negat. Hanc vero Inſulam ſeptimo quoque anno ripæ adnaſci tradit, vt à continente non diſcernas: In eius autem locum mox ſuccedere alteram, priori, naturâ, magnitudine & virtute conſimilem: quæ vnde veniat, neſciri: idque cum quodam quaſi tonitru contingere.

6 De venatoribus Noruegiæ, qui lignum domare (ſic enim loquitur, quantumuis impropriè: cùm ligno vt non vita, ita nec domitura competat) adeò docti ſint, vt aſſeres 8. vlnas longi, plantis pedum eorundem alligati, tanta eos celeritate, vel in excelſis montibus, promoueant, vt non modò canum venaticorum, aut caprearum curſu, ſed etiam auium volatu ſuperari nequeant: atque vnico curſu, vnico etiam haſtæ ictu, nouem vel plures capreas feriant. Hæc & ſimilia, de Hybernia, Norvegia, Iſlandia, Gronlandia, de aquæ & aëris etiam miraculis, centonum ille magiſter, in ſuum ſpeculum collegit: Quibus, licet ſuis admirationem, vulgo ſtuporem, nobis tamen riſum concitauit.

Gronlandia.

Sed Friſium audiamus. Flamma, inquit, Montis Heclæ nec ſtuppam, lucernarũ luminibus aptiſſimam, adurit, nec aqua extinguitur. Atqui, inquam, ex Schola veſtra Philoſophica petitis rationibus hoc Paradoxon confirmari poterit. Docent enim Phyſici, commune eſſe validioribus flammis omnibus vt ſiccis extinguantur, alantur verò humidis: Vnde etiam fabri, aqua inſperſa, ignem excitare ſolent. Cùm enim, aiunt, ardentior fuerit ignis, à frigido incitatur, & ab humido alitur, quorum vtrumq; aqua ineſt. Item: Aqua ſolet vehementes accendere ignes: Quoniam humidum ipſum quod exhalat, pinguius redditur, nec à circumfuſo fumo abſumitur, ſed totum ignis ipſe depaſcitur, quò purior inde factus, ac ſimul collectus, à frigido alacrior inde redditur. Vnde etiam ignes artificioſi aqua minimè extinguibiles. Item: Sunt ſulphure & bitumine loca abundantia, quæ ſponte ardent, quorum flamma aqua minimè extinguitur. Prodidit etiam Philoſophus, Aqua ali ignem. Ariſt. 3. de anim. Et Plin. lib. 2. Nat. Hiſtor. cap. 110. Et Strabo lib. 7. In Nymphæo exit è Petra flamma, quæ aquâ accenditur. Idem, Viret æternum contexens fontem igneum fraxinus. Quin & repentinos ignes in aquis exiſtere, vt Thraſumenum lacum in agro Peruſino arſiſſe totum, idem autor eſt. Et anno 1226, & 1236, non procul à promontorio Iſlandiæ Reykianes, flamma ex ipſo mari erupit. Etiam in corporibus humanis repentinos ignes emicuiſſe, vt Seruio Tullio dormienti, è capite flammam exſilijſſe: Et L. Martium in Hiſpania, interfectis Scipionibus, concionem ſeu orationem ad milites habentem, atque ad vltionem exhortantem, conflagraſſe, Valerius Antias narrat. Meminit etiam Plinius flammæ montanæ, quæ vt aqua accendatur, ita terra aut fœno extinguatur. Item, Alterius campeſtris, quę frondem denſi ſupra ſe nemoris non adurat. Quæ cum ita ſint, mirum, homines id in ſolâ Heclâ mirari (ponam enim iam ita eſſe, cum non ſit tamen, quòd à quoquam ſcire potuerim) quod multis aliarum terrarum partibus ſeu locis, tam montanis, quàm campeſtribus, cum ea commune eſſet.

Chronica Iſlandiæ

Eo impetu quo apud nos globi. Sic enim Munſterus. Mons ipſe cum furit, inquit, horribilia tonitrua inſonat, proijcit ingentia Saxa, ſulphur euomit, cineribus egeſtis, tam longè terram circumcirca

Friſius.

operit, vt ad viceſimum lapidem coli non poſſit, &c. Cæterum oportuit potius cum Ætnâ, aut alijs montibus flammiuomis, quos mox recitabo, comparaſſe, cum non deeſſet, non modò ſimile, ſed prope idem: Niſi fortè quòd incendia rarius ex Heclâ erumpant, quàm alijs id genus montibus. Nam proximis 34. annis prorſus quieuit, facta videlicet vltima eruptione, An. 1558 vt ſuperius annotauimus. Et nihil tam magnificè dici poteſt de noſtra Hecla, quin idem, vel maius cæteris montibus flammiuomis competat, vt mox apparebit. Quòd verò ſulphur eiaculetur, manifeſtum eſt commentum, nullo experimento apud noſtrates cognitum.

Is locus eſt carcer ſordidarum animarum. Hîc præfandum eſſe mihi video, atque veniam à Lectore petendam, quòd, cum initio propoſuerim, de terra & incolis diuiſim agere, in hac prima parte tamen, quæ ſunt meritò ſecundæ partis, miſcere cogar. Euenit hoc ſcriptorum culpa, qui Inſulæ ſitui ac miraculis, religionis incolarum particulam hanc, de opinione infernalis carceris, confuderunt. Quare etiam vt hunc locum attingamus, quis non miretur iſthoc commentum ab homine cordato in Hiſtoria poſitum eſſe? Quis non miretur, viros ſapientes eò perduci, vt hæc vulgi deliramenta auſcultent, nedum ſequantur? Vulgus enim extraneorum & hominum colluuies nautica, (hîc enim ſaniores omnes, tam inter nautas quam reliquos, excipio,) de hoc inſolito naturæ miraculo audiens, ingenito ſtupore ad iſtam, de carcere animarum, imaginationem fertur: Siquidem incendio nullam ſubſterni materiam videt, quemadmodum in domeſticis focis fieri conſueuit. Atque hac perſuaſione vulgi fama inoleuit, dum (vt ad maledicta optimè aſſuefactum eſt) vnus alteri huius montis incendium imprecatur. Quaſi verò ignis elementaris & materiatus ac viſibilis, animas, i. ſubſtantias ſpirituales comburat. Quis denique non miretur, cur eundem carcerẽ damnatorum, non in Ætnâ etiam, nihilo minus ignibus ac incendijs celebri, confingant? At confinxit, dices, Gregorius Pontifex. Purgatorium igitur eſt. Sit ſanè: Eadem igitur huius carceris veritas, quæ & purgatorij. Sed priuſquã longius procedamus, libet hîc referre fabulam perlepidam, huius opinionis infernalis originem & fundamentum: Nempe cuidam extraneorum naui Iſlandiam relinquenti, & turgidis velis, citiſſimo curſu iter ſuum rectà legenti, factam obuiam alteram, ſimiliter impigro curſu, ſed contra vim tempeſtatum, velis & remis nitentem: cuius præfectus rogatus, quinam eſſent? Reſpondiſſe fertur: De Biſchop van Bremen. Iterum rogatus quo tenderent? ait. Thom Heckelfeldt tho, Thom Heckelfeldt tho. Hæc videns Lector vereor, ne peluim poſtulet dari: Eſt enim mendacium adeo deteſtandum, vt facilè nauſeam pariat. Abeat igitur ad Cynoſarges & ranas paluſtres: illud enim eiuſdẽ facimus atq; illarũ coax, coax. Nec verò dignum eſt hoc commentum, quod rideatur, nedum refutetur. Sed nolo cum inſanis Papiſtis nugari: Quin potius ad ſcriptores noſtros conuertamur.

Atque inprimis nequeo hîc, clariſſimi viri, D. Caſparis Peuceri, illud præterire. Eſt in Iſlandia, inquit, mons Hecla, qui immanis barathri, vel inferni potius profunditate terribilis, eiulantium miſerabili & lamentabili ploratu perſonat, vt voces plorantium circumquaq;, ad interuallum magni milliaris, audiantur. Circumuolitant hunc coruorum & vulturum nigerrima agmina, quæ nidulari ibidẽ ab incolis exiſtimantur. Vulgus incolarum deſcenſum eſſe per voraginem illam ad inferos perſuaſum habet: Inde, cum prælia committuntur alibi in quacunq; parte orbis terrarum, aut cædes fiunt cruenta, commoueri horrendos circumcirca tumultus, & excitari clamores, atq; eiulatus ingentes longâ experientia didicerunt. Quis verò rem tam incredibilem ad te vir doctiſſime perferre auſus fuit? Nec enim vultures habet Iſlandia, ſed genus aquilarum ſecundum, quod ab albicante caudâ Plinius notauit, & Pygarſum appellauit. Nec vlli ſunt huius ſpectaculi apud nos teſtes: Nec deniq; ibidem coruos aut aquilas nidificare probabile eſt, quæ, igni & fumo ſemper inimiciſſimo, potius à focis vel incendijs arceantur. Et nihilominus in huius rei teſtimonium, (vt & exauditi per voraginem montis tumultus extranei.) experientiam incolarum allegant, quæ certè contraria omnia teſtatur. Vnde verò foramen vel feneſtra illa montana, per quam clamores, ſtrepitus & tumultus apud antipodes, periæcos & antæcos factos exaudiremus? De quâ re multa eſſent, quæ authorem iſtius mendacij interrogatum haberem, modò quid de illo nobis conſtaret: qui vtinam veriora narrare diſcat, nec tam perfrictâ fronte ſimilia, incomperta, atq; adeò incredibilia, clariſſimo viro Peucero, aut alijs referre præſumat.

Aſt verò Munſterus cum incendij tanti & tam incredilis cauſſas in famoſiſſimâ Ætna inueſtigare conatus ſit, quam rem illic naturalem facit, hîc verò præternaturalẽ imo infernalem faciat, an non monſtri ſimile eſt? Cæterùm de Æthnâ quid dico? Quin potius videamus quid de Heclæ incendio aliâs ſentiat Munſterus.

Munſterus Coſmograph. vniuerſal. lib. 1. cap. 7.

Dubium non eſt, inquit, montes olim & campos arſiſſe in orbe terrarum: Et noſtra quidem ætate ardent. Verbi gratia: In Iſlandia mons Hecla ſtatis temporibus foras proycit ingentia Saxa, euomit ſulphur ſpargit cineres, tam longè circumcirca, vt terra ad viceſimum lapidem coli non poſſit. Vbi autem montiũ incendia perpetua ſunt, intelligimus nullam eſſe obſtructionem meatuum, per quos modò, quaſi fluuium quendam, ignes, modo flammas, nunc verò fumum tantùm euomunt. Sin per temporum interualla increſcunt, internis meatibus obturatis, eius viſcera nihilominus ardent. Superioris autem partis incendia propter fomitis inopiam, non nihil remittunt ad tempus. Aſt vbi ſpiritus vehementior, rurſus recluſis meatibus iiſdem vel alijs, ex carcere magnâ vi erumpit, cineres, arenam, ſulphur, pumices, maſſas, quæ habent ſpeciem ferri, ſaxa, aliáſq; materias foras proijcit, plerumq; non ſine detrimento regionis adiacentis. Hæc Munſterus. Vbi videas quæſo Lector, quomodo ſuo ſe iugulet gladio, videas inquam hîc eãdem de incendio Heclæ & AEtnæ opinionem & ſententiam, quæ tamen lib. 4. eiuſdem, admodum eſt diſpar, vt illic ad cauſas infernales confugiat.

Habet profectò Indię occidentalis mons quidam flammiuomus æquiores multò, quàm hic noſt r, cenſores & hiſtoricos, minimè illic barathrum exædificantes: Cuius hiſtoriam, quia & breuis eſt, & non illepida, ſubijciam, ab Hieronimo Benzone Italo in Hiſtoriar. noui orbis, lib. 2. his verbis deſcriptam.

Triginta quinq;, inquit, milliarium interuallo abeſt Legione mons flammiuomus, qui per ingentem craterem tantos ſæpe flammarum globos eructat, vt noctu latiſſimè vltra 10000. paſſuum incendia reluceant. Nonnullis fuit opinio, intus liquefactum aurum eſſe, perpetuam ignibus materiam. Itaq; Dominicanus quidem monachus, cum eius rei periculum facere vellet, abenum & catenam ferream fabricari curat, moxq; in montis iugum cum quatuor alijs Hiſpanis aſcendens, catenam cum abeno ad centum quadraginta vlnas in caminum demittit. Ibi ignis feruore, abenum cum parte catenæ liquefactum eſt. Monachus non leuiter iratus Legionem recurrit, fabrum incuſat, quòd catenam tenuiorem multò, quàm iuſſiſſet ipſe, eſſet fabricatus. Faber aliam multo craſſiorem excudit. Monachus montem repetit: Catenam & lebetem demittit. Res priori incœpto ſimilem exitum habuit. Nec tantùm reſolutus lebes euanuit, verũ etiã flammæ globus repentè è profundo exſiliens, propemodũ & Fratrem & ſocios abſumpſit. Omnes quidem adeo perculſi in vrbem reuerſi ſunt, vt de eo incœpto exequendo nunquam deinceps cogitarent, &c.

O quam cenſura diſpar? In montano Indiæ occidentalis camino aurum: Iſlandię verò, infernum quærunt. Sed hoc vt nimis recens, ac veteribus ignotum fortaſſe reijcient: Cur igitur eundẽ, quem in Hecla Iſlandię animarũ carcerẽ, in Chimæra, Lyciæ monte, cuius noctu diuq; flamma immortalis perhibetur, non ſunt imaginati ſcriptores? Cur nõ in Epheſi montibus, quos tæda flãmante tactos, tantũ ignis cõcipere accepimus, vt lapides quoq; & arenæ in ipſis aquis ardeãt, & ex quibus accenſo baculo, ſi quis ſulcũ traxerit, riuos igniũ ſequi narratur à Plinio? Cur non in Cophantro Bactrorum monte, noctu ſemper conflagrante? Cur non in Hiera Inſula, in medio mari ardente? Cur non in Aeolia, ſimiliter in ipſo mari olim dies aliquot aliquot accenſa? Cur non in Babyloniorum campo, interdiu flagrante? Cur non in Aethiopum campis, Stellarum modo, noctu ſemper nitentibus? Cur non in illo Liparæ tumulo, ampla & profunda voragine hiante, teſte Ariſtotele, ad quẽ non tutò noctu accedatur: ex quo Cymbalorũ ſonitus, crotalorum boatus, cum inſolitis & inconditis cachinnis exaudiantur? Cur non in Neapolitanorum agro ad Puteolos? Cur nõ in illa ſuperius cõmemorata Teneriffę pyramide montana, inſtar Aetnæ, iugiter ardente, & lapides, vt ex Munſtero videre eſt, in aëra exſpuente? Cur non in illo Aethiopum iugo, quod Plinius teſtatur, horum omnium maximo aduri incendio? Cur non denique in Veſuuio monte, non ſine inſigni vicinię clade, & C. Plinij exitiali detrimẽto, dum inſueti incendij cauſas perſcrutaturus venit, nubium tenus flammas cum ſaxis euomẽte, pumicum & cinerum ineffabili copiâ aëra replente, & ſolem meridianum per totam viciniam denſiſſimis tenebris intercipiente? Dicam, & dicam quod res eſt: Quia ſcilicet illis, vtpote notioribus, fidem, etſi inferni eſſe incendia finxiſſent, minimè adhiberi præuidebant: Heclę verò æſtum, cuius rumor tardius ad eorum aures peruenit, huic commento vaniſſimo ſtabiliendo, magis inſeruire putabant. Sed faceſſite: Deprę̄henſa fraus eſt: Deſinite poſthac illam de inferno Heklenſi opinionem cuiquam velle perſuadere. Docuit enim & nos, & alios, vobis inuitis, conſimilibus incendijs, operationes ſuas Natura, non Infernus. Sed videamus iam plura eiuſdem farinæ vulgi mendacia, quæ Hiſtoricis & Coſmographis noſtris adeò malè impoſuerunt.

SECTIO OCTAVA.

Friſius Zieglerus, Olaus Magn.

Iuxta hos montes (tres prædictos Heclam, &c.) ſunt tres hiatus immanes, quorum altitudinem apud montem Heclam potiſſimum, ne Lynceus quidem perſpicere queat: Sed apparent ipſum inſpicientibus, homines primùm ſubmerſi, adhuc ſpiritum exhalantes, qui amicis ſuis, vt ad propria redeant, hortantibus, magnis ſuſpirijs ſe ad montem Heclam proficiſci debere reſpondent: Sicque ſubitò euaneſcunt.

AD confirmandum ſuperius mendacium de Inferno terreſtri ac viſibili, commentum hoc, non minus calumnioſum (etſi facilè largiar, Friſium non tam calumniandi, quàm noua & inaudita prædicandi animo iſta ſcripſiſſe) quàm falſum ac gerris Siculis longè vanius ac deteſtabilius,excogitarũt homines ignaui,nec cœlũ nec infernũ ſcientes. Quos ſcriptores iſti,viri alioqui pręclariſſimi & optimè de Repub.literaria meriti,nimiũ prępropero iudicio ſecuti ſunt.

Cæterum optandum eſſet,nullos tanto nouitatis ſtudio Hiſtorias ſcribere, vt non vereantur aniles quaſuis nugas ijs inſerere,atq; ita aurum purũ cœno aſpergere. Qui verò demũ ſunt homines illi ſubmerſi, in lacu infernali natitantes, & nihilominus cum notis & amicis confabulantes? Anne nobis veterem Orphea,cum ſua Euridice,in Stygias relabente vndas,colloquentem,& in his extremi orbis partibus,tanquam ad Tanaim Hebrumq́ue niualem, cantus exercentem lyricos,rediuiuum dabitis? Certè,etſi nolint alij futilem huiuſmodi ineptiarum leuitatem ac mendacium agnoſcere,agnouit tamen rerum omnium haud negligens æſtimator Cardanus,lib. 18.ſubtil.cuius hæc ſunt verba.

*Eſt Hecla mons in Iſlandia,ardetq́; non aliter ac Ætna in Sicilia per interualla,ideoq́; perſuaſione longa (vulgi) concepta,quod ibi expientur animæ. Alij,ne vani ſint, aſſingunt inania fabulæ,vt conſona videantur. Quæ ſunt autem illa inania? Quòd ſpectra comminiſcuntur,ſe ad montem Heclam ire reſpondentia,*ait idem. Et addit. Nec in Iſlandia ſolum, ſed vbiq́; licet rarò, talia contingunt: Subditq; de laruâ homicida Hiſtoriam,quæ ſic habet. Efferebatur, inquit,anno præterito, funus viri plebeij Mediolani,orientali in porta iuxta templum maius foro venali, quod à caulium frequentia nomen caulis noſtra lingua ſonat. Occurrit mihi notus: Peto, vt medicorum moris eſt, quo morbo exceſſerit? Reſpondet ille: conſueſſe hunc virum hora noctis tertia à labore redire domum: Vidit lemurem nocte quadam inſequentem: Quam cum effugere conaretur, ocyus citato pede abibat: Sed à ſpectro captus atq́; in terram proiectus videbatur. Exclamare nitebatur: Non poterat. Tandem,cum diu in terra cum larua volutatus eſſet, inuentus à prætereuntibus quibuſdam,ſemiuiuus domum relatus,cum reſipuiſſet, interrogatus, hæc quæ minus expectabantur, retulit. Ob id animam deſpondens,cum nec ab amicis,nec medicis,nec ſacerdotibus perſuaderi potuiſſet, inania eſſe hæc, octo inde diebus perijt. Audiui poſtmodum & ab alijs, qui vicini eſſent illi, neminem ab inimico vulneratum tam conſtanter de illo teſtatum,vt hic,quod à mortuo fuiſſet in terram prouolutum. Cum quidam quærerent, quid ille poſtquam in terram volutaretur ageret? Conatum,inquit,mortuum adhibitis gulæ manibus,vt eum ſtrangularet: Nec obſtitiſſe quicquam, niſi quòd ſe ipſum tueretur manibus. Cum alij dubitarent,ne forte hæc à vino paſſus eſſet,interrogarentq́;,in quo mortuum a viuo ſecernere potuiſſet? Cauſſam reddidit ſatis probabilem,dicens ſe tanquam cottum attrectaſſe,nec pondus habuiſſe,niſi vt premebatur. Et paulò poſt addit. Eadem verò ratione, qua in Iſlandia, in arena ſolitudinibus Ægypti & Æthiopiæ, Indiæq́;,vbi Sol ardet,eædem imagines,eadem ſpectra viatores ludificare ſolent. Hactenus Cardanus. Inde tamen nemo concluſerit, ſicut de Iſlandia ſcriptores noſtri faciunt,in illis Ægypti & Æthiopiæ,Indiæq́; locis,carcerem exiſtere damnatorum.

Hæc ex Cardano adſcribere libuit, vt etiam extraneorum teſtimonia pro nobis, contra figmenta tanta afferamus.Conuincit autẽ præſens Cardani locus hæc duo,ſcilicet: nec eſſe Iſlandiæ proprias ſpectrorũ apparitiones:(quod etiã omnes norunt,niſi eius rei ignorantiã nimis affectent)nec illud mortuorũ cũ viuis, in hiatu Heclenſi,colloquium,niſi ementitis hominum fabulis,quauis ampulla vanioribus,niti,quibus beluæ vulgares,ad confirmandã de animarũ cruciatibus opinionẽ,vſę fuerant.Et quiſquã eſt,qui illis ſcriptorũ hiatibus,mortuorũ miraculis ad ſummum vſque refertis,adduci poteſt vt credat? Quiſquam,qui vanitatẽ tantam non cotẽnat? Certè. Nam & hinc conuicia in gentem noſtram rectè ſumi aiunt: Nihil ſcilicet hac proiectius ac deterius eſſe vſquã,quæ intra limites Orcum habeat. Scilicet hoc cõmodi nobis peperit Hiſtoricorum ad res nouas diuulgandas auiditas. Verum illa è vulgi dementia nata opinio,vt ſtulta ac inanis,& in opprobrium noſtræ gentis conficta,hactenus,vt ſpero,ſatis labefactata eſt. Quare iam perge Lector, vlterius hanc de ſecretis infernalibus Philoſophiam cognoſcere.

SECTIO NONA.

Friſius & Munſt. Circum verò Inſulam,per ſeptem aut octo menſes fluctuat glacies, miſerabilem quendam gemitum, & ab humana voce non alienum,ex colliſione edens. Putant incolæ, & in monte Hecla,& in glacie loca eſſe,in quibus animæ ſuorum crucientur.

EGregium ſcilicet Hiſtoriæ augmentum,de Orco Iſlandico in vnius montis baſin,haud ſanè vaſtam,coacto: Et interdum (ſtatis forſan temporibus)loca commutante. Vbi ſcilicet domi in foco mõtano deliteſcere piget,& exire,pelaguſq;,ſed ſine rate,tentare iuuat,ſeſeq; in glaciei fruſtella colligere.Audite porrò,huius ſecreti admiratores: En porrigã Hiſtoricis aliud Hiſtoriæ auctarium nequaquam contemnendum.Scribant igitur,quotquot his ſcriptorũ cõmentis adhęrent,Iſlandos non ſolùm infernum intra limites habere, ſed & ſcientes volentes ingredi,atq; intactos eodẽ die egredi, Quid ita? Quia peruetus eſt Inſulæ cõſuetudo, vt maritimi in hanc glaciem,ab Hiſtoricis infernalem factam, manè phocas, ſeu vitulos marinos captum eant,ac veſperi incolumes redeant. Addite etiam, in ſcrinijs & alijs vaſis ab Iſlandis carcerem damnatorum aſſeruari,vt paulò poſt ex Friſio audiemus.

Sed maturè prævidendum erit vobis,ne Iſlandi fortitudinis & conſtantiæ laudem veſtris nationibus præripiant: Quippe qui tormenta(vt hiſtoricis veſtris placet)barathri ſuſtinuiſſe & velint & poſſint,illáq; ſine vllo grauiore damno perrũpere atq; effugere valeant,quod quidem ipſum ex iam dictis efficitur: Et multos noſtratium enumerare poſſum,qui in ipſo venationis actu longiuſculè à littore digreſſi, glacie à Zephyris diſſipata,multa milliaria glaciei inſidẽtes,tempeſtatis violentia profligati,& aliquot dies ac noctes continuas crudeliſſimi pelagi fluctibus iactati,ſicque (id enim,inquam,ex præſenti Hiſtoricorum problemate conſequitur) tormenta & cruciatus barathri glacialis experti ſunt : Qui tandem mutata tempeſtate,atq; à Borea ſpirantibus ventis,ad littora,cum hoc ſuo glaciali nauigio rurſus adacti, incolumes domum peruenerunt: Quorum aliqui etiam hodie viuunt. Quare hoc nouitatis auidi arripiant,indeque, ſi placet,iuſtum volumen conficiant, atque ad Hiſtoriam ſuam apponant. Nec enim vaniſſima illa commenta aliter,quàm eiuſmodi iocularibus excipienda & confundenda videntur. Cæterum,ioco ſepoſito, vnde digreſſi ſumus, reuertamur.

Primùm igitur ex ſectione ſecunda ſatis conſtat,glaciem,neque ſeptem,neque octo menſibus circa ipſam Inſulam fluitare:Deinde etiam,glaciem hanc,etſi interdum ex colliſione grandes ſonitus & fragores edit,interdum propter vndarum alluuionem,raucum murmur perſonat; quicquam tamen humanæ voci ſimile reſonare aut eiulare minimè fatemur.

Quod autem dicunt,nos & in glacie,& in monte Hecla loca ſtatuere, in quibus animæ noſtrorũ crucientur,Id verò ſeriò pernegamus,Deóq; ac Domino noſtro Ieſu Chriſto,qui nos à morte & inferno eripuit,& regni cœleſtis ianuam nobis reſerauit,gratias ex animo agimus,quod nos de loco,in quem animę noſtrorum defunctorum commigrent, rectius, quàm dicunt iſti Hiſtorici,inſtituerit. Scimus & tenemus animas piorum non in Purgatorium Pontificiorum, aut campos Elyſios,ſed in ſinum Abrahæ,in manum Dei, in Paradiſum cœleſtem,mox è corporis ergaſtulo transferri. Scimus & tenemus de impiorum animabus, non in montanos focos & cineres,vel glaciem noſtris oculis expoſitam,deflectere, ſed in extremas mox abripi tenebras,vbi eſt fletus & ſtridor dentiũ,vbi eſt frigus,vbi eſt ignis ille,non vulgaris, ſed extra noſtrã ſcientiã & ſubtilem diſputationem poſitus.Vbi non modò corpora,ſed animæ etiam.i.ſubſtantiæ ſpirituales,cruciantur. Huic extremo & tenebricoſo carceri non Iſlandos viciniores,quàm Germanos,Danos,Gallos,Italos,aut quamvis aliam gentem,quoad loci ſitum,ſtatuimus. Nec de huius carceris loco ſituúue quicquã diſputare attinet: Sufficit nobis abundè,quòd illius tenebricoſum fœtorem & reliqua tormẽta, dante & iuuante Domino noſtro Ieſu Chriſto, cuius precioſo ſanguine redempti ſumus,nunquam ſimus viſuri aut ſenſuri. Atque hîc de orco Iſlandico diſputationis colophon eſto.

SECTIO DECIMA.

Quòd ſi quis ex hac glacie magnam partem ceperit, eámque vaſi aut ſcrinio incluſam,quàm diligentiſſimè aſſeruarit, illa tempore glaciei,quæ circum inſulam eſt,degelantis,euaneſcit, vt neque minima eius particula vel guttula aquæ reperiatur.

Friſius, Zieglerus Saxo fere ſiniſter.

ID profectò neceſſariò addendum fuit : Hanc ſcilicet glaciem , voces humanas, ſecundum Hiſtoricos , repreſentatem , & damnatorum receptaculum exiſtentem,non eſſe , vt reliqua in vaſtiſſima hac vniuerſitate omnia , ex Elementi alicuius materia conflatam. Siquidem cum corpus eſſe videatur,corpus tamen non ſit,(quod ex Friſij paradoxo rectè deducitur) cum etiam corpora dura & ſolida perrumpat,non ſecus ac ſpectra & genij : Reſtat igitur cum non ſit elementaris naturæ, vt vel ſpiritualem habeat materiam , vel cœleſtem, vel quod ipſi forſan largiantur,infernalem. Infernalem tamen eſſe non aſſentiemur,quia ad aures noſtras peruenit frigus infernale longè eſſe intractabilius,quam eſt hęc glacies,humanis manibus in ſcrinio repoſita,nec quicquã ſuo contactu,vel nudatam carnem lædere valens.Nec profectò ſpiritualem eſſe dabimus;accepimus enim à Phyſicis , ſubſtantias ſpirituales nec cerni ,nec tangi , nec ijs quicquam decedere poſſe : Quæ tamen omnia in hanc hiſtoricorum glaciem , quantumuis, ſecundum illos,hyperphyſicam,cadere certum & manifeſtum eſt. Præterea & hoc veriſſimum eſt,eam calore ſolis reſolutam, ac in ſuperficie ſua ſtagnantem , ſiti piſcatorum reſtinguendæ, nõ ſecus ac riuos terreſtres,inſeruire: Id quod ſubſtantiæ ſpirituali denegatũ eſt.Non eſt igitur ſpiritualis, vt nec infernalis. Iam verò cœleſtem habere materiam, nemo audebit dicere : Ne forte inde aliquis ſuſpicetur,glaciem hanc barathrum,quod illi Hiſtorici affingũt, ſecum è cœlo traxiſſe: Vel id cœlo,quippe eiuſdem materię cum glacie,commune eſſe,atq; ita carcer damnatorum cum Paradiſo cœleſti loca commutaſſe,Hiſtoricorum culpa putetur.

Quare cum glacies hæc Hiſtorica nec ſit elementaris, vt ex præſenti loco Friſij optimè ſequi iam toties monuimus: nec ſpiritualis, nec infernalis, quod vtrumq; breuibus, ſolidis tamen rationibus demonſtrauimus: nec cœleſtis materiæ, quod opinari religio vetat: relinquitur omnino, vt ſecundum eoſdem Hiſtoricos nulla ſit, quam tamē illi tàm cum ſtupendâ admiratione prædicant, & nos videri ac tangi putamus. Eſt igitur, & non eſt: Quod axioma vbi ſecundum idem, & ad idem, & eodem tempore, verum eſſe poterit, nos demum miraculis iſtis glacialibus credemus. Itaq; iam vides Lector, ad hæc refellenda nullo alio eſſe opus, quàm mōſtrari quomodo ſecum diſſideant, Sed haud mirum, eum qui ſemel vulgi fabuloſis rumoribus ſe permiſit, ſæpius errare. Cuiuſmodi etiam prodidit quidam de glaciei huius Sympathiâ, quòd videlicet molis, cuius pars eſſet, diſceſſum inſequeretur, vt omnem obſeruationis diligentiam ineuitabili fugæ neceſſitate deciperet. Atqui ſæpe vidimus eiuſmodi ſolitariam molem poſt abactam reliquam glaciem, nullis vectibus, nullis machinis detentam, ad littus multis ſeptimanis conſiſtere, Palam eſt igitur, illud de glacie miraculum fundamento niti, quàm eſt ipſa glacies, magis lubrico.

SECTIO VNDECIMA.

Friſius. Non procul ab his montibus, (tribus prædictis) ad maritimas oras vergentibus, ſunt quatuor fontes diuerſiſſima natura. Vnus ſuo perpetuo ardore omne corpus ſibi immiſſum raptim conuertit in ſaxum, manente tamen priore formâ. Alter eſt algoris intolerabilis, Tertius vel melle dulcior, & reſtinguenda ſiti iucundiſſimus. Quartus planè exitialis, peſtilens, & virulentus.

ETiam hæc fontium topographia ſatis apertè monſtrat, quàm ex impuro fonte has ſuas narrationes omnes miraculoſas hauſerit Geographus. Id enim dicere videtur: Montes hos tres prædictos ferè cōtinguos eſſe: Siquidē tribus montibus quatuor fontes indiſcretè adſcribit. Alioqui ſi non vicinos ſtatuiſſet, vni alicui horum duos fontes adſcripſiſſet. Sed neque hi montes contigui ſunt (quippe multis milliaribus inuicem diſſiti) neque iuxta hos fontes illi quatuor reperiuntur: quod, qui credere nolit, experiatur. Cæterum ad hæc confundenda ſufficit, credo, ipſorum hiſtoricorū contrarietas. Nam de duobus fontibus quidam Friſio his verbis contradicit. Erumpunt ex eodem monte (Heclâ) fontes duo, quorum alter aquarum frigiditate, alter feruore intolerabili exedit omnem elementarem vim. Hi duo ſunt primi illi Friſij fontes, niſi quod hîc miraculum indurandi corpora, alteri fontium attributum, omiſſum ſit, Atqui non ſimul poſſunt ex ipſo monte, & iuxta montem erumpere.

Hîc vero libenter quæſierim, quâ ratione quiſquam ex Peripateticis dicat, aliquid ipſo elemento aquæ frigidius, aut igne calidius? Vnde demum, ſcriptores, iſta frigiditas? Vnde iſte feruor? Nonne è Schola veſtra accepimus aquam eſſe elementum frigidiſſimum & humidum, atque adeò frigidiſſimum, vt ad conſtituendas qualitates ſecundas, remitti ſit neceſſe, nec ſimplicem vſibus humanis inſeruire? (Hæc ego nunc Phyſicorum oracula fundo, vera an falſa, neſcio.) Teſtis eſt vnus omnium, & pro omnibus, Iohannes Fernelius lib. 2. Phyſiologiæ, cap. 4. Sic, inquit, qualitates hæ (quatuor primæ) quatuor rerum naturis ſumma obtigerunt, vt quemadmodum puro igne nihil calidius, nihilque leuius: Sic terra nihil ſiccius, nihil grauius: Aquam ſinceram, nullius medicamenti vis gelida euincit, vt nec aërem, vllius humor. Summa præterea ſic illis inſunt, vt ne minimum quidem poſſint augeſcere, remitti verò poſſunt. Nolo huc rationes ſeu argumenta Phyſicorum aggregare, Vnum profectò hîc cauendum eſt, ne dum fontium miracula prædicant ſcriptores, vt glaciem Iſlandorum, ita etiam fontes creatorum numero eximant. Nos fontium adiuncta, quæ huc ſcriptores pertraxerunt, ordine perſequemur. Primus ſuo perpetuo calore) Plurimæ ſunt in Iſlandia thermæ ſeu fontes calidi: Pauciores ardentes: quos neque cuiquam miraculo eſſe debere exiſtimamus, cum huiuſmodi, vt a ſcriptoribus didici, paſſim abundet Germania, præcipuè in ijs locis, quæ non ſunt procul ab Alpium radicibus. Nota eſt fama thermarum Badenſium, Gebarſuilienſium, Calbenſium, in ducatu Wirtēbergenſi, & multarum aliarum quarum meminit Fuchſius in lib. de arte medendi, Et non ſolum Germania, ſed etiam Gallia, & longè magis omnium bonorum parens Italia, inquit Cardanus. Et Ariſtoteles narrat, circa Epyrum calidas aquas ſcaturire, vnde locus Pyriphlegeton appellatur. Atq; inquàm, hæc ideo minus miranda, quod vt incendij montani, ita feruoris aquei cauſſas indagarint Naturæ ſpeculatores: Aquam ſcilicet per terræ venas ſulphureas, aut aluminoſas labi, indeq; non calorem ſolùm, ſed ſaporem etiam & virtutes alienas concipere. Docuit hoc Ariſtoteles libro de mundo, Continet, inquit, terra in ſe multos fontes, vt aqua, ita & ſpiritus & ignis: Quidam amnium more fluunt, & vel igneſcens eijciunt ferrum: Nunc tepida aqua erumpunt, nunc feruentiſſima, nunc temperata. Lib. 3. Nat. queſt. Et Seneca: Empedocles exiſtimabat ignibus, quos multis locis opertos tegit terra, aquam caleſcere, ſi ſubiecti ſint ſolo, per quod aqua tranſitus eſt. Et ſcitè de thermis Baianis Pontanus,

Baiano ſed ne fumare in littore thermas
Mirere, aut liquidis fluitare incendia venis:
Vulcani fora ſulphureis incenſa caminis
Ipſa mouent, latè multùm tellure ſub ima
Debacchari ignem, campoſq; exurere apertos.
Inde fluit, calidum referens ex igne vaporem,
Vnda fugax, tectis feruent & balnea flammis.

Hoc loco attingendum duxi quod tradit Saxo Grammaticus, Danorum celebratiſſimus hiſtoricus, Iſlandiæ fontes quoſdam nunc ad ſummum excreſcere, & exũdare: Nunc adeò ſubſidere, vt vix fontes agnoſcas. Qui etſi rariores apud nos inueniuntur, adſcribam tamen ſimiles, etiam alibi à natura productos, ne quis hîc monſtri quippiam imaginetur. Hos autem recitat Plinius. In Tenedo Inſula vnum, qui ſemper à tertia noctis hora, in ſextam ſolſtitio æſtiuo exundet. In agro Pitinate, trans Apenninum montem, fluuium eſſe, qui omnibus Solſtitijs æſtiuis exundet, brumali tempore ſiccetur. Refert etiam de fonte quodã ſatis largo, qui ſingulis horis intumeſcat & reſidat. Nec id magis negligendum: ſubire terras flumina, curſuſque redire: vt Lycus in Aſia, Eraſinus in Argolica, Tigris in Meſopotamia, quibus Cardanus addit Tanaim in Moſcouia: Et quæ in Æſculapij fonte Athenis immerſa ſunt, in Phaletico reddi. Et Seneca ſcribit eſſe flumina, quæ in ſpecum aliquem ſubterraneum demiſſa, ex hominum oculis ſe ſubducunt, quæ cõſumi paulatim & intercidere conſtet: Eademq; poſt interuallum reuerti, recipereq; & nomen & curſum priorem. Et iterum Plinius; fluuium in Atinate campo merſum, poſt 20 millia paſſuum exire. Quæ omnia, & his ſimilia, Iſlandiæ fontes, miraculo nullo, præ cæteris eſſe debere, oſtendunt.

Omne corpus immiſſum continuò conuertit in ſaxum. His duobus adiunctis, feruore nempe, ſeu ardore vehementiſſimo, & virtute indurandi corpora, primum ſuũ fontem deſcribit Friſius. Et fama quidem accepi, ipſe non ſum expertus, exiſtere ſimilem fontẽ in Iſlandia, non procul à ſede Epiſcopali Schalholt, apud villam nomine Haukadal. Habet ſimile Seneca, dicens, fontẽ quendam eſſe, qui ligna in lapides conuertat, hominumq; viſcera indureſcere, qui aquam eius biberint: Et addit eiuſmodi fontes in quibuſdam Italiæ locis inueniri: quod Ouidius Ciconum flumini tribuit 15. Metamorph.

Flumen habent Cicones, quod potum ſaxea reddit
Viſcera, quod tactis inducit marmora rebus.

Et Cardanus: Georgius Agricola, inquit, in Elbogano tractu iuxta oppidum à falconibus cognominatum, integras cum corpoee abietes in lapidem conuerſas eſſe, atq;, quod maius eſt, in rimis etiam Pyritidem lapidem continere. Et Domitius Bruſonius, in Sylare amne, qui radices montis eius, qui eſt in agro vrbis Vrſentinorum olim, nunc Conturſij, lambit, folia & arborum ramos in lapides tranſire, non fide alterum, ſed propria, vt qui incola ſit regionis, (cui rei etiam Plinius aſtipulatur) narrat, cortices antẽ lapidũ, annos numero oſtendere. Sic (ſi ſcriptoribus credimus) guttæ Gotici fontis ſparſę lapideſcunt. Et in Vngaria, Cepuſij aqua, in vrceos infuſa, lapideſcit. Plinius refert etiam, vt in Ciconum flumine, & in Piceno lacu velino, lignum deiectum, lapideo cortice obduci.

Secundus algoris intolerabilis. Quantum ad ſecundum fontem attinet, nullus hic eſt quòd quiſquã ſciat, algoris intolerabilis, ſed plurimi bene frigidi, ita vt vulgaribus riuis æſtiuo ſole tepeſcentibus, non ſine voluptate ex frigidioribus illis aquam hauriamus. Sunt & longè frigidiores fortè alibi: Nam & Cardanus in agro Corinthio è montis vertice fluentem riuum commemorat, niue frigidiorem: Et intra primum à Culma lapidem, Inſanam vocatum: quæ aqua cũ feruere videatur, ſit tamen longè frigidiſſima, &c.

Tertius vel melle dulcior. Neq; id proſus verum eſt. Non enim eſt vllus apud nos, qui vel minima ex parte cum mellis dulcedine conferri poſſit. Rectius igitur Saxo, qui fontes (quoniam plures ſunt) in Iſlandia dicit inueniri Cerealem referentes liquorem, vt etiam ibidem non diuerſi ſaporis ſolum, ſed diuerſi etiam coloris fontes & flumina reperiuntur.

Etſi autem tradunt Phyſici aquam naturaliter ex ſe neq; ſaporem neq; odorem habere, tamen, vt ſuperius attigimus, veriſimile eſt, quod alij per accidens vocant, eam ſæpe referre qualitatem terræ, in qua generatur, & per cuius venas tranſitum atq; excurſum habet: Atq; hinc aquarum odores, colores, ſapores, alios atq; alios exiſtere. Cuiuſmodi ſunt, de quibus narrat Senecà, quorum alij famem excitent, alij bibentes inebrient, alij memoriæ officiant, alij iuuent eandem, alij vini ſaporem & virtutem repræſentent: Vt ille apud Plinium in Andro Inſula fons, in templo Liberi, qui Nonis Ian: vini ſapore fluat. Et apud Ariſtotelem fons in agro Carthaginenſi, qui oleũ præbeat, & guttulas Cedri odore repræſentet. Item, Orcus fluuius Theſſaliæ, influens in Peneum, olei inſtar ſupernatans: Cuiuſmodi etiam narrat Cardanus in Saxonia eſſe, iuxta Brunonis oppidum, fontem oleo perfuſum: Et in Sueuia, iuxta Cœnobium, cui cui Tergenſche nomen eſt. Itē, in valle montis Iuraſſi. Cauſam huius rei putat eſſe bitumen valde pingue, quod oleum ſine dubio contineat. Idem, famam eſſe ait, in Cardia, iuxta locū Daſchyli, in campo albo aquam eſſe lacte dulciorem, Aliā quoq; iuxta pontem, qua Valbeburgum itur, Iam aquarū vini ſaporem referentium meminit his verbis Propertius, 3. lib. Elegiar.

En tibi per mediam bene olentia flumina Naxon,
Vnde tuum pota Naxia turba merum.

Eſt autem Naxus Inſula vna ex Cycladibus, in mari Ægeo, Cauſam huius aſſignat Cardanus, quod hydromel vetuſtate tranſeat in vinum. Ariſtoteles commemorat Siciliæ fontem, quo incolæ loco aceti vtantur. Idem ſaporum aquæ cauſam in calorem retulit, quòd terra excocta mutet & præbeat ſaporem aquæ.

Iam de aquæ coloribus ita Cardanus. Eadem eſt ratio colorum aquæ, ait, quæ & ſaporum: videlicet à terra originem trahere, Nam Candida eſt aqua, ad ſecundum lapidem à Glauca, Miſenæ oppido: Rubea, vt in Radera Miſenæ fluuio, iuxta Radeburgum: Et olim in Iudæa iuxta Ioppen: Viridis, in Carpato monte, iuxta Neuſolam: Cærulea aut blaua, inter Feltrium & Taruiſium, & in Thermopylis etiam talem fuiſſe referunt: Nigerrima in Allera fluuio Saxoniæ, vbi in Viſurgim ſe exonerat. Cauſſæ ſunt argillæ colores, ſed tenuiores. Item Ariſtoteles: circa Iapygiam promontoriū, eſſe fontem, qui ſanguinem fundat, addens, eam maris partem ſuo fœtore nauigantes procul arcere. Aiunt præterea in Idumæa fontem eſſe, qui quater in anno colorem mutet, cum ſit colore nunc viridi, nunc albo, nunc ſanguineo, nunc lutulento.

Et de aquarum odore ſic Cardanus, Similis ratio differentiæ eſt in odoribus. Plerumq; tamen aquarum odores iniucundi ſunt, quòd rarò terra bene oleat. Peſſimè olim fœtabat in Ælide, Anigri fluminis aqua, vſq; ad perniciem, non ſolum piſcium, ſed etiam hominum. Iuxta Metonem in Meſſania, in puteo quodam optimè olens aqua hauriebatur. Hæc ideo recito, vt nullus magis in Iſlandia quàm alibi, aquarum, colores odores, ſapores, miretur.

Quartus plane exitialis. Autor eſt Iſidorus, eſſe fontem quendam, cuius aqua pota vitam extinguat: Et Plinius: Iuxta Nonarim, inquit, Arcadiæ, Styx (iuxtà Cyllenem montem, ait Cardan. Sola equi vngula continebatur: referunt ea ſublatum Alexandrum magnū) nec odore differens, nec colore, epota illico necat. Idem, In Beroſo Taurorum colle ſunt tres fontes ſine remedio, ſine dolore mortiferi: Et quod longè maximum eſt, quod Seneca ſtagnum eſſe dicat, in quod proſpicientes ſtatim moriantur. Nos verò Iſlandi etiam hunc quartum Friſij fontē, cuius etiam Saxo meminit, vt antehac ſemper, itidem etiam nobis hodie penitus ignotum teſtamur: Hocq; igitur nomine, Deo immortales gratias agimus, quòd ab eiuſmodi fontibus & ſerpētibus, inſectis venenatis, ac alijs peſtiferis & contagioſis, eſſe nos immunes voluerit.

Præterea eſt apud prædictos fontes tanta ſulphuris copia. Montes tres à Munſtero & Friſio ignivomi dicti, omnes longiſſimo interuallo à noſtris fodinis diſtant. Quare cum iuxta hos montes, fontibus quatuor, quos tantopere miraculis celebrant, locum & ſitum faciant, neceſſe eſt eos fontes pari ferè interuallo à fodinis ſulphureis remotoſq; eſſe. Nec verò apud montem Heclam, vt Munſterus, nec apud hos Friſij fontes (quorum rumor quàm verus ſit, hactenus oſtenſum eſt) ſulphur effoditur: Nec patrum noſtrorum memoria effoſſum eſſe arbitramur, Neq; verum eſt, quod de ſulphuris copia tradit Munſterus, eſſe videlicet penè vnicum Inſulæ mercimonium & vectigal. Nam cum inſula in quatuor partes diuiſa ſit, quarta pars, nempe borealis, tantum dimidia, hoc vtitur mercimonio, nec ſulphuris mica in vectigal Inſulæ penditur.

QVidam in ſua mappa Iſlandiæ, 20. millaria continuo curſu aſſequi tradit cuiuſdam parœciæ equos. Sed vtrunque impoſſibile ducimus, Nam maximæ celeritatis & roboris beſtias (Rangiferos appellant) ſcribit Munſterus non niſi 30. millaria 24. horarum ſpacio conficere.

SECTIO DECIMAQVARTA.

Cete grandia inſtar montium prope Iſlandiam aliquando conſpiciuntur, quæ naues euertunt, niſi tubarum ſono abſterreantur, aut miſſis in mare rotundis & vacuis vaſis, quorum luſu delectantur, ludificentur. Fit aliquando, vt nautæ in dorſa cetorum, quæ Inſulas eſſe putant, anchoras figentes, ſæpe periclitentur, vocantur autem eorum lingua Troll wal, Tuffelwalen. i. Diabolica cete. Munſt.

INſtar montium: En tibi iterum, Lector, Munſteri Telenicia Echo, & cæcum, vt dici ſolet, inſomnium. Deformat, me Hercule, adeò mendax & abſurda hyperbole hiſtoriam, idque tantò magis quantò minus eſt neceſſaria. Nam quorſum attinet mentiri Hiſtoricum, ſi hiſtoria eſt rei veræ narratio? Quorſum tropicas hyperboles aſſumet? Quid conabitur perſuadere, aut quo pertrahere Lectorem, ſiquidem nihil niſi ſimplicem rerum expoſitionem ſibi proponit?

Pictoribus atq; Poetis,
Quidlibet audendi ſemper fuit æqua poteſtas:
Non itidem Hiſtoricis.

Dorſa cetorum, quæ Inſulas putant: Nata eſt hæc fabula, vt & reliquæ, ex mendacio quodam, vt antiquo, ita ridiculo & vano, cuius ego fidem titiuilitio non emam. Eſt autem tale: Miſſos fuiſſe olim Legatos cum ſodalitio monaſtico, ab Epiſcopo Bremenſi (Brandanus veteribus Noruagis, Krantzio, ni fallor, Alebrandus appellatur) ad fidem Papiſticam, quæ tum Chriſtiana putabatur, in Septentrione prædicandam & diuulgandam: Eoſque, vbi immenſum iter Septentrionem verſus nauigando conſumpſiſſent, ad inſulam quandam perueniſſe: ibique iacta anchora deſcenſum in Inſulam feciſſe, focos accendiſſe: (Nam veriſimile eſt nautas in ipſo mari glaciali frigore non parum eſſe vexatos) & commeatum naualem ad reliquum iter expediuiſſe. Aſt vbi bene ignibus accenſis incaluerant foci, Inſulam hanc ſubmerſam citò euanuiſſe, nautas autem per præſentem ſcapham vix ſeruatos fuiſſe. Habes huius rei fundamentum, Lector, ſed quàm incredibile, ipſe vides. Quid verò tandem eſt animi nautis, qui in mari proceſſoſo videntes ſcopulum, vel, vt Munſterus, Inſulam perexiguam emergere, non vitent potius omni ſtudio, alliſionem & naufragium metuentes, quàm vt in portu parum tuto quieſcere tentent? Sed vbi anchora figenda? Solent enim, vt plurimùm, deeſſe nautis tam immenſi funes, vt in altiſſimo æquore anchoram demittant: Igitur in dorſis cetorum, reſpondet Munſterus. Oportet igitur, veſtigiū vnci prius effodiant. O ſtultos nautas, balenarum carnem, à terræ ceſpitibus, inter fodiendum, non dignoſcentes, nec lubricam cetorum cutem, à terreſtri ſuperficie internoſcentes. Digni profectò, quibuſcum ipſe Munſterus, nauclerus transfretaret. Equidem hoc loco, vt & ſuperius, de miraculis Iſlandiæ terreſtribus agens, è Tantali, vt aiunt, horto fructus colligit, id eſt, ea conſectatur, quæ nunquam reperiuntur, nec vſquam ſunt, dum miracula hinc inde conquirere, terram & pelagus verrere, ad Hiſtoriæ ſuæ ſupplementum ſtudet: Vbi tamen nihil niſi commentitia tantùm venari poteſt.

Vocantur autem lingua eorum Trollwal. Ne vltra peram, Munſtere: Nullam ſiquidem es linguæ noſtræ cognitionem adeptus: Quare meritò puderet tantum virum, rem ignotam alios velle docere: Eſt enim eiuſmodi inceptum erroribus obnoxium complurimis, vt vel hoc tuo exemplo docebimus. Dum enim vis alijs autor eſſe, quomodo noſtra lingua balenæ vel cete appellentur, detracta, per inſcitiam, aſpiratione, quæ penè ſola vocis ſignificationem facit, quod minimè verum eſt, affers: Non enim val noſtra lingua balenam, ſed electionem ſiue delectum ſignificat, à verbo, Eg vel .i. eligo, vel deligo: vnde val, &c. At balena Hualur nobis vocatur: Vnde tu Trollhualur ſcribere debebas. Nec vero Troll Diabolum, vt tu interpretaris, ſed Gigantes quoſdam montanos ſignificat. Vides igitur, quomodo in toto vocabulo turpiter, quod haud tamen mirum, erres. Leuis quidem illa in linguam noſtram iniuria, in vnica tantùm voce: quoniam plures, haud dubiè, non noras.

Idem alijs etiam vſu venit: Non enim probandum eſt, quòd quidam, dum Iſlandiæ deſcriptionem, ab Iſlandis acceptam, ederet, maluerit omnia, aut certè plurima promontoriorum, ſinuum, montium, fontium, fluminum, teſquorum, vallium, collium, pagorum nomina deprauare (quòd noſtræ linguæ ignarus, non ſciret à noſtratibus accepta ſatis exactè legere) atque corrumpere, quàm prius ab ipſis Iſlandis, qui tum temporis, id eſt, Anno 1585. 1585.
in Academia Haffnienſi vixerunt, quomodo ſingula legi ac ſcribi deberent, ediſcere. Ipſum certè hac natiuorum nominum & appellationum voluntaria deprauatione, (qua factum eſt, vt ipſi ea legentes, pauciſſima noſtra agnoſcamus) in linguam noſtram, alioqui puram & auitam penè elegantiam retinentem, non leuiter peccaſſe reputamus.

Cæterum iam plurima Iſlandiæ miracula, quæ quidē ſcriptores noſtri attigerunt, ſic utcunq; examinauimus. Sed tamen priuſquā alio diuertamur, in hac parte attingendum videtur, quod idem ille in mappa Iſlandiæ, quam ſub ſuo nomine, prædicto anno edi fecerat, de duobus, præter ſupra dictos, fontibus Iſlandiæ prodidit: quorum alter lanas albas colore nigro, alter nigras albo, inficiat. Quod quidem vbi acceperit, aut vnde habeat, ſcire equidem non poſſumus: Nec enim apud noſtrates, nec apud extraneos ſcriptores, reperire licuit. Sed vndecunq; eſt, fabula eſt, nec veritatis micam habet. Quamuis autem ſit incredibile, Lanas nigras albo inſici colore, cum traditum ſit a Plinio, Lanarum nigras nullum imbibere colorem: Tamen ſimile quiddam narratur à Theophraſto: Flumen eſſe in Macedonia, quod oues nigras, albas reddat. Et illa, cuius etiam ſuperius memini, rapſodia Noruagica, ſpeculum ſcilicet illud Regale, hos ipſos fontes Irlandiæ, quæ hodie Hybernia, non Iſlandiæ eſſe affirmat. Quod forſan Lectori impoſuit, in lingua peregrina, pro R, S, legenti.

Non maiorem fidem meretur, quod Hiſtoricus quidam habet: Eſſe in Iſlandia ſaxum, quod montium prærupta non extrinſeca agitatione, ſed propria natiuaq; motione peruolitet: Id qui credere volet, quid incredibile ducet? Eſt enim commentum tam inauditum, vt nullum eius ſimile, fabulatos fuiſſe Epicuræos (qui tamen multa incredibilia excogitaſſe Luciano viſi ſunt) cõſtet: Niſi fortè hominem, qui Iſlandis proprio nomine Stein dicitur, ſentit Hiſtoricus rupes quaſdam circuiſſe, vel circumreptaſſe. Quod, etſi ridiculum eſt in Hiſtoriã miraculoſam referre, hominem ſcilicet moueri vel ambulare, tamen ad ſaluandam Hiſtorici fidem, ſimulandum: ne figmentum illud, per ſe ſatis abſurdum, nec dignum quod legatur, durius perſtringamus.

Eodem crimine tenentur, quicunq; Iſlandię, coruos albos, picas, lepores, & vultures adſcripſerunt: Perrarò enim vultures, cum glacie marina, ſicut etiam vrſos (ſed hos ſæpius quã vultures) & cornicum quoddam genus, Iſlandis Iſakrakur, aduenire obſeruatum eſt. Picas verò & lepores, vt & coruos albos, nunquàm Iſlandia habuit.

Atque hæc ferè ſunt, quę de prima commentarij noſtri parte per quotidianas occupationes, in præſentia, afferre licuit. Quæ in hunc finem à me ſcripta ſunt, (quod etiã prius teſtatus ſum,) vt ſcriptorum de terra ignota errores, & quorundam etiam affectata vanitas, patefierent: Neq; enim eorum famæ quicquam detractum cupio: Sed quòd veritati & patriæ, operam meam conſecraram, illa, quæ hactenus dicta ſunt à multis, de Inſula, fidem valde exiguam mereri, neceſſe habui oſtendere: ac ita mihi viam ad ſequentia de Incolis ſternere.

Commentarij primæ partis Finis.

Commentarij de Iſlandia pars ſecunda: quæ eſt de incolis.

ABſolutis hactenus miraculis Iſlandię, (cum nonnullis alijs, primæ parti annexis) quę dum ſcriptores, velut Agamemnonios quoſdam fontes, imò, vt quiddam præter & contra omnem naturam, mirantur, nec non variè deprædicant, minus veritati ipſi, & authoritati ſuæ conſulunt; monet propoſitæ orationis ſeries, vt ad alteram commentarij partem nos conferamus, quæ eſt de incolis: Vbi quid primùm dicam, aut vnde initium ſumam, non ſatis teneo. Tanta enim ſunt in nos vltimos Iſlandos, & tot quorundam ludibria, tot opprobria, tot ſcommata, tot dicteria, (Atque inter hæc etiam nonnulla eorum, qui ſimpliciſſimam veritatem profiteri volunt, nempe hiſtoricorum) vt ſi ſingula recenſere velim, non aliud quàm Icaria numerum dicere coner aqua. Sed, vt dixi initio, non cum omnibus æquè ſtricto iure agemus. Nam licet Krantzius, Munſterus, Friſius, & alij, nimis audacter multa de gente noſtra ſcripſerint: Tamen ſuis monumentis de ſtudijs liberalibus alioqui benè meriti, etiam apud nos eo erunt in precio, quo merentur. Verum interea, etſi quis velit eos à calumniandi nota liberare, tamen non leue eſt, eos res quaſdam tam abſurdas, impoſſibiles & ridiculas propoſuiſſe, cuiuſmodi illa fuerunt, quæ hactenus expoſuimus, tum impias, & atrocitate mendaciorum horrendas, cuiuſmodi iam ſequentur aliquot, in hiſtorias retuliſſe. Aſt alijs, quicunq; ſunt, qui quotidianis conuicijs nationem Iſlandorum inceſſunt, reſpõſio, quam merentur, parata eſſe debet: Ex quorum numero, ſcurra ille fuit, qui rhythmis aliquot, in gentis noſtræ contumeliam, Germanica lingua editis, nomen ſuum jmmortali dedecori conſecrauit.

Quapropter, vt inſtituti noſtri ratio exigit, dum ſcriptorum de hac re monumenta perſequimur, etſi quædam in eis occurrant, quæ contumeliæ parum habent, nos tamen pleraq; excutiemus, & errores, vt hactenus, annotabimus: tum ſi quid veri in ea re attulerint, id nequaquam diſſimulabimus. Ac eo modo, primùm Munſterum, Krantzium, Friſium, & ſi qui ſunt alij, audiemus, Graculo illo, cum ſuis rhythmis Germanicis, dira calumnia infectis in poſtremum, vt dignus eſt, reiecto locum. In hunc igitur modum, primùm de fide ſeu Religione Iſlandorum: Deinde de ipſorum moribus, inſtitutis ſeu viuendi ratione, authores iſti ſcribunt.

SECTIO PRIMA.

Adalbertus Metropolitanus Hamburgenſis, Anno Chriſti 1070. vidit ad Chriſtum conuerſos Iſlandos: licet ante ſuſceptam Chriſti fidem, lege Naturali viuentes, non multùm à lege noſtra diſcrepantes: itaque, petentibus illis, ordinauit quendam virum ſanctum, primum Epiſcopum, nomine Iſleif.

KRantzius his verbis, & Munſterus alibi, fidei ſeu Religionis Chriſtianæ dignitatem Iſlandis videntur adſcribere: Facerentq; & ſe, & veritate dignum, niſi eandem aliâs nobis adimerent. Nam (vt de Krantzio infra) Munſterus, quæ ſupra prodidit, de fide noſtra, ſeu opinione circa Inferni locum ſitumque, omninò eſt à Chriſtiana pietate alienum: Velle ſcilicet ſcrutari arcana, quæ Deus ſibi ſoli reſeruauit, quæq; voluit noſtrum captum excedere: Non enim reperitur de hac re quicquam in literis ſacris, vbi locus vel ſitus inferni ſeu ignis æterni, Diabolo & Angelis ipſius, adeoq; damnatis omnibus animabus deſtinati, determinetur, aut circumſcribatur: Nullum inquam, infra terram, ſeu in ea, aut vlla alia huius mundi parte, corporalem ſeu localem ſitum illi damnatorum carceri pagina ſacra aſſignat: quinimò, terram hanc interituram, & terram nouam & cœlos nouos, iuſtorum & ſanctorum habitacula, creanda affirmat: Apoc, 2. 2. Petri 3. Eſa. 65. Quare Chriſtianus rerum adeò abſtruſarum inquiſitionem libenter præterit: tum dogmata nullis apertis & illuſtribus ſcripturæ ſacræ teſtimonijs ſtabilita, velut certa & vera recipere, aut alijs tradere, nefas eſſe ducit. Deut. 4. & 12. Eſa. 8. Matth. 17. 2. Timoth. 3.

Deinde etiam pugnat acriter cum Religione Chriſtiana, quo Munſterus & Krantzius Iſlandos ornant, encomium: Eos videlicet, catulos ac pueros ſuos æquo habere in precio. De quo infra, ſection. 7. Sic igitur ſecum diſſidet Munſt. dum quos Chriſtianos aſſerit, inferni architectos aliàs facit: Item, Krantzius & Munſterus, dũ quos fide Chriſto inſertos affirmant, eoſdem omni pietatis & honeſtatis ſenſu exuunt: quòd ſcribant filios ab his, non maiore cura, quàm catulos diligi.

Sed vt ad rem: De Religione equidẽ noſtra, quæ qualiſue fuerit, cũ Ethniciſmus primùm fugari cæpit, nihil magnificè dicere poſſumus: quemadmodum nec alia Septentrionis Regna vicina, vti exiſtimo, de ſuis fidei initijs. Fatendũ enim eſt, & cum ſerijs gemitibus deplorandum vſq; ad illam nunquã ſatis prædicatam diem, quę nobis velut immortalitatis initiũ illuxit & repurgati Euangelij doctrinam attulit, tenebras pluſquã Cimmerias, etiã noſtris hominibus, vt reliquis Septentrionis Eccleſijs, offuſas fuiſſe. Illud tamen piè nobis ſentire liceat, apud nos, vt & in vicina Noruegia (nam nolo vltra ſepta vagari, & de populis ignotis quicquã pronunciare) eiecta primum Idololatria Ethnica, ſinceriorem longè & ſimpliciorem fidem ſeu religionem Chriſtianam viguiſſe; quippe veneno Papiſtico minus infectã, quã poſteà, vbi auctum Romanæ ſedis fermentum peſtiferum, & malum contagioſum maturuit, & per totum orbem virus ſuum diffudit: Nam vt poſteà apparebit, multis annis antequã noua Pontificiorum Idololatria vires & incrementum cepit, Iſlandia Chriſtum amplexa eſt: & vt laudatiſſimi duo illi Noruegiæ Reges, quibus vt commune nomen, ita commune nominis Chriſti propagandi ſtudium & profeſſio, nihil niſi fidem in Deum Patrem, Filium, & ſpiritum Sanctum, ſonabat. Dico autem illum Olaum Thryggonis F. qui Anno Chriſti 968. natus, Anno ætatis 27. imperium Noruegiæ adeptus eſt, & primus, vt accepimus, Noruegis Chriſtum obtruſit: quibus imperitabat annis 5. Et huic cognominem, Olaum nuncupatum Sanctũ, Haraldi F. Qui anno Chriſti 1013. aut circiter, imperij habenas arctius in primis obtinuit: Per annos fere 17. Chriſti doctrinam audacter tradidit. Anno Chriſti 1030, ab improbis parricidis nefariè interfectus, in pago Noruegiæ Stickla Stodum, pro Chriſti nomine cruorem fudit.

Habuit etiam noſtra patria inter multos alios quendam inſignem pietate virum; cui Nialus nomen erat, qui circa annum Chriſti 1000 vixit in prædio ſeu villa Berthors huol, ſita in Parochia Iſlandiæ, Landenum: Quiq; rerum humanarum experientia, circumſpecta animi prudentia, ſagacitate & conſilio, habebatur inſignis. Cum enim, eius ſeculo, indomitis Iſlandia motibus fluctuaret, incolis à nullo ferè ſuperiore magiſtratu repreſſis, nullis ſe factionibus immiſcuit: Plurimas cauta animi virtute ac induſtria compoſuit: Nunquam vim fecit, nec paſſus eſt, ſi vltimum tantum in vita diem excipias. Adeò ſtudioſè ſeditiones & turbas vitauit: alioſq; vitare aut euadere cupientes optimè iuuit: Nec quiſquam eius conſilio, niſi maximo ſuo commodo eſt vnquam vſus: nec quiſquam ab eo, niſi cum vitæ & fortunarum periculo deflexit. Tam certum ab eo oraculum petebatur, vt valde mirandum ſit, vnde homini tanta futurorum euentuum, & tam certa cõiectura & conſilium eſſe potuerit, quanta in ipſo deprehenſa eſt. Vnde ipſius cauta, prouidens & conſilij plena ſapientia, apud noſtrates in prouerbium abijt: Nials bitta raden: quaſi dicas, Niali conſilium: vel, Niali conſilio res geritur, aut ſuccedit: cùm quid prudenter & admirando cum conſilio geſtum eſt.

Hic cum domi ſuæ, à 100. viris coniuratis ob cędem à filio ipſius, ipſo tamen inſcio patratam cingeretur, & inimicis domum vndiq; igni ſuccendentibus, ſibi videret ſupremum fatum inſtare, ait tandem. Hæc quidem fato, hoc eſt, voluntate diuina accidunt. Cæterũ ſpem & fiduciam in Chriſto ſitam habeo, nos (de ſe & vxore loquens) licet corpus hoc noſtrum caducum, inimicorum flammis, mortalitatis corruptionem ſubeat, ab æternis tamen flammis liberatum iri. Sicq; inter has voces, & flammarum ſæuitiam, vitam, An. Chriſto 1010. cum vxore & filio homicida, finiuit. Vox profectò filijs Dei non indigna, animæ, cum mortis acerbitate luctantis ſummum ſolatium arguens.

Hæc ideo addidi, vt oſtendam, quâ coniectura adducar ad exiſtimãdum mox initio Chriſtianiſmi (vt ſic loquar) apud nos recepti, non fuiſſe tam deceptas & errorum tenebris immerſas hominum mentes, quàm nunc, paulò ante hæc noſtra tempora fuerunt.

Anno Domini 1070. vidit ad Chriſtum conuerſos Iſlandos.

Krantzius.

DVbium nobis eſt, vtrum his verbis dicere voluerit Krantzius, Iſlandos primùm Anno Domini 1070. ad Chriſtum eſſe conuerſos: an verò, prius quidem eſſe conuerſos non neget, ſed eo primùm anno id Adalberto innotuiſſe dicat. Vtrumuis autem affirmet, tamen fidem ipſius hoc loco ſuſpectam reddunt annales & Chronologiæ noſtræ gentis antiquiſſimæ, quæ contrarium teſtantur: quibus vtrum malis, de rebus noſtris proprijs & domeſticis & intra noſtræ inſulæ limites geſtis credere, an verò Krantzio, aut cuiuis alteri in noſtratium rerum hiſtoria peregrino, ſit penes tuum, candide Lector, arbitrium. Ego profectò multis adducor vt noſtris potius aſſentiar. Noſtrates enim nota tantùm & ferè domeſtica aſſerunt; ille peregrina & ignota. Hi ſuas Chronologias ſine aliarum omnium nationum labe, macula & ſugillatione cōtexuerunt tantùmmodò, vt rebus geſtis ſuum verū temp' ſeu æram aſſignarent; ille quędam cum re & veritate pugnantia in contumeliā gentis noſtrę ignotiſſimæ, hiſtoriæ ſuæ admiſcuit, vt paulò poſt apparebit: hi omnium epiſcoporū Iſlandiæ nomina, annos, ordinem & ſucceſſum deſcribunt: ille vnius tantùm mentionē facit, idq; longè ſecus quàm res habet. Porrò vt his fidem faciam, pauca, quę in vetuſtiſſimis noſtris annalibus de Iſlandia ad Chriſtum conuerſa, & de Epiſcoporum in noſtris Eccleſijs ſucceſſione reperi, quorum etiam fides apud nos publicè recepta eſt, cum extraneis communicabo. Quæ tametſi leuiuſcula, nec omnia prorſus digna quæ ſcribantur, ſcribenda tamen omninò ſunt ad noſtrarum rerum veritatem, aduerſus Krantzium & alios aſſerendam: Sic igitur habent.

Chronologiæ Iſlandicæ gentis antiquiſſimæ.

874 Iſlandia primum inhabitata.

Anno Chriſti 874. prius quidem, vt ante commemorauimus, inuenta, ſed tunc primum à Noruagis (quorum princeps fuit Ingulphus quidam, è cuius nomine promontorium Iſlandiæ orientalis Ingulffs hoffdi appellationem traxit) occupata eſt Iſlandia. Hi plures quam 400. cum cognatis & agnatis & pręterea numeroſa familia nominatim in annalibus noſtris recenſentur: nec illorum tantùm numerus deſcribitur, ſed quas oras, quæ littora, & quæ loca mediterranea, ſinguli occupauerint & incoluerint, & quomodo primi inhabitatores, fretis, ſinibus, portubus, Iſthmis, porthmis, promontorijs, rupibus, ſcopulis, mōtibus, collibus, vallibus, teſquis, fontibus, fluminibus, riuis, ac deniq; villis ſeu domicilijs ſuis nomina dederint, quorum hodiè plæraq; retinentur & in vſu ſunt, apertè narratur. Itaq; Noruagi occupatæ iam Iſlandiæ 60. annorum ſpacio, aut circiter, habitabiles partes ſua multitudine implent: Centum verò propemodum annis Ethnici manſerunt, ſi pauciſſimos, qui in Noruagia fortè ſacro fonte abluti fuerant, excipias. Annis autem vix centum à primo ingreſſu elapſis, mox de religione Chriſtiana agi cœptum eſt, nempe circa annum Domini 974. quæ res non ſine inſigni rebellione pluſquam 20. annis variè à multis tentata eſt. Commemorantur autem duo Epiſcopi extranei, qui cum alijs, in conuertenda ad fidem Chriſti inſula, diligenter laborarint: Prior Fridericus, Saxo natione, qui anno 981. ad Iſlandos venit, atque docendi munere ſtrenuè functus eſt, ac tantum fecit, vt Anno 984. ſacræ ædes Iſlandis in vſu fuerint.

974

Fredericus Saxo.

Alter verò ille extraneus Epiſcopus ſiue concionator, quem Thangbrandt nuncupauere, anno 997. in Iſlandiam primùm venit.

Anno dom. 1000.

Hinc poſt 26. annorum diſceptationem de religione, tandem Anno 1000. in conuentu generali omnium incolarum decretum eſt, vniuerſali eorundem conſenſu, vt Ethnicorum numinum cultu ſepoſito, religionem ſectarentur Chriſtianam.

Rurſus in ſolenni incolarum conuentu Anno 1050. ſancitum eſt, vt leges ſeculares ſeu politicæ (quarum conſtitutiones allatas ex Noruagia quidam Vlſhotus, Anno 926. Iſlandis communicarat) vbique cederent iuri Canonico ſeu diuino.

Anno 1056. abit peregrè ex Iſlandia Iſleifus quidam, in Epiſcopum Iſlandiæ ordinandus.

Redit ordinatus in Iſlandiam, & Cathedram Scalholtenſem adit Anno 1057. Moritur 1080. Ætatis 74. 4. Kalendas Iulias.

Videbuntur forſitan hæc minuta, conciſa, vilia, nec narratione ſatis digna, cum multis fortè quæ ſequuntur: Sed nec hiſtoriam Romanam conteximus, nec tam minuta erunt, quin contra Krantzij & aliorum errores conuincendos, prout noſtrum eſt inſtitutum, valeant. Et certè, quātum ad fidem noſtrarum Chronologiarum, conſtat Saxonem Grammaticum non parum illis tribuiſſe: Cuius, in præfatione ſuæ Daniæ, hæc ſunt verba. Nec Thylenſium inquit, (ſic enim Iſlandos appellat) induſtria ſilentio obliteranda: qui cum ob natiuam ſoli ſterilitatem, luxuriæ nutrimētis carentes, officia continuæ ſobrietatis exerceant, omniaq; vitæ momenta ad alienorum operum notitiam conferre ſoleant, inopiam ingenio penſant. Cunctarum quippe nationum res geſtas cognoſſe, memoriæq; mandare, voluptatis loco reputant, non minoris gloriæ iudicantes, alienas virtutes diſſerere, quam proprias exhibere. Quorum theſauros Hiſtoricarum rerum pignoribus refertos curioſius conſulens, haud paruam præſentis operis partem ex eorum relationis imitatione contexui: nec arbitros habere contempſi, quos tāta vetuſtatis peritia callere noui, Hæc Saxo. Quare lubet Epiſcoporū Iſlandię

Catalogum perſequi, vt ex annalibus noſtris continuata diligenter, quoad eius fieri poteſt, omnium ſeries, his quæ de primo Iſleiſo contra Krantzium attulimus, fidem faciat.

Item Munſterus, Multi in Iſlandia hodie coſtis & oſſibus balenarum, domos ſuas conſtruunt, &c.

Munſt. Krantz. Friſius.

HIc membrum ſecundum initium ſumit, de incolarum viuendi ratione & moribus. Et primùm, quibus vtantur ędificijs ſeu domibus: nempè ſecundũ Munſterum, Krantzium, Friſium, &c. Specubus & montium cauernis. Quamuis autem in ſplendidis ædificijs, alijsq; id genus mundani ornatus pretioſis rebus parum ineſt, quod ad verè beatam vitam conferre queat, tamen nec hîc veritatem tacere poſſumus: dicimúsq; omnino Coſmographos & Hiſtoricos in errore etiam hîc verſari. Etenim, cuiuſmodi gentis publica domicilia eſſe ſcribunt, ea ſunt tantùm in paucis locis, tum magalia, vt opilionum, tum piſcatorum caſæ & receptacula, eo tantum anni tempore quo piſcaturæ operam dare, aut propter gregem excubare opus habent. At ipſas domus, ſeu ipſa hominum domicilia, antiquitùs quidem ſatis magnificè & ſumptuoſè, quoad huius terræ fert conditio, ligno, ceſpite & ſaxis habuerunt Iſlandi conſtructa, vſq; ad illud tempus, quo illis cum Noruagis, qui ligna ſufficiebant, negociatio, & mercium commutatio eſſe deſijt, quæ inde paulatim collabi incipiunt: Cùm nec ſyluas ædificijs aptas habeamus, nec fluctuum maris beneficio iam vt olim ad littora, quod minima ex parte ſufficiat, adferatur: Nec mercatores extranei inopiæ noſtræ ſuccurrant. Vnde plurima rura ignobiliora ab antiqua illa integritate multum declinarunt, & iam quædam collapſa ſunt, quædam ruinam minantur. Nihilominus multa ſunt prædia, multæ villæ, quas haud facilè recenſuero, quarum ædificia veterem illam excellentiam imitantur, & quarum domus ſunt maximæ, & latæ & longæ, tum plærúmque benè altæ. Vt exempli gratia, Prædia ſeu villæ, quæ cubilia habent pluſquam 50. cubitos longa, 10. lata, alta 20. Tum reliquas domus, vt cœnaculum, hypocauſtum, penuarium &c. huic ſua proportione reſpondentes. Poſſum multa noſtratium ædificia ampla & vaſta, nec in ſpeciem deformia, nec ob artis ſtructuram & ſumptuoſam firmitudinem, ſeu robur, contemnẽda cum aliquot delubris, ſiue ſacris ædibus, ſolis lignis, antiqua & operoſa grauitate & pulchritudine exſtructis commemorare: Cuiuſmodi eſt templum Cathedrale Holenſe atrium habens, cuius columnæ vtrinque quinque, vlnas 14. altæ, 5. circiter craſſæ: tum trabes ac tigna, & reliquum culmen, huic ſubſtructioni proportionaliter reſpondens. Ligna ad hoc ipſum atrium Anno 1584. horrenda tempeſtate collapſum, clementiſſimus Rex noſter D. Fridericus, cuius nobis ſacratiſſima eſt memoria, Anno 1588, benigniſſimè largitus eſt. Ipſum verò templũ atrium ſuum omni quantitate manifeſtè excedit: tum templi intima pars quæ chorus appellari ſolet, & templi meditullio, & atrio magnitudine nonnihil cedit. Erat autem hoc longè maius olim, vt accepi Schalholtenſe, quod iam bis concrematum, ad inferiorem magnitudinem redactum eſt. Prætereà aliquot alia templa noſtrę Inſulæ, horum antiquam magnificentiam imitantia licet non æquantia. Sed hîc nequaquam res exigere videtur, vt in prolixiorem eius rei deſcriptionem euager. Vt enim Domus & ædificia noſtra nihil deprędicamus: ita eorundem nos nihil pudet, quòd contenti paupertate noſtra Chriſto gratias immortales agamus, qui à nobis vili tecto nõ dedignatur recipi, quódq; templa & domus noſtras, quas Munſterus, Krantzius, & Friſius piſcium & balenarum oſſibus non verè dicunt exſtructas, non aſpernetur magis, quàm illa extraneorum culmina marmorea, parietes vermiculatos, pauimenta teſſelata, reliquúmque id genus ornamenti.

Negotiatio cum Noruagis deſijt. Syluæ fluctibus maris delatæ.

SECTIO TERTIA.

Munſterus.
Krantzius.

Communi tecto, victu, ſtatu, (hic Krantzius habet, ſtrato) gaudent cum iumentis. Item: Solo paſtu peccorum & nunc captura piſcium victitant.

HAec ſunt & ſequentia, quæ Krantzius ſuo Munſtero præmanſa, in os ingeſſit, adeò vt Munſtero non opus fuerit ea vel ſemel maſticare, quod ex collatione vtriuſq; patet. Munſterus enim hæc opprobria, vt ex Krantzij in ſuam Norwegiam præfatione hauſta deglutierat, ita eadem cruda lib. 4. Coſmographiæ capit 8. in gentem noſtram euomit. Quæ hactenus fuerunt, etſi ſatis grauia ſunt, tolerabiliora tamen erant. Hoc verò commentum maligniſſimum, & quæ ſequentur, non facilè eſt ſine ſtomacho præterire. Noſtrum igitur eſt, etiam hîc veritatem aſſerere, & mendacium in Authoris caput retorquere.

Tecto: Primùm igitur quod de communi tecto, (vti etiam de victu & ſtatu) cum iumentis dicunt, falſum & erroneum clamamus, teſte non modò re ipſa, ſi quis id hodiè perquirere volet: Sed etiam multorum extraneorum, qui aliquot apud nos annos egerant, & veritati plus quam gentem noſtram calumniandi affectui tribuunt, experientia; qui ipſi domos & habitationes noſtras viderunt, & norunt in ſingulis prædijs ſeu villis, multas eſſe diſtinctas domus: nempe in abiectiſſimis & viliſſimis 7. vel 8. in maioribus, nunc decem, nunc 20. In maximis, nunc 40, nunc 50; quę vt plurimùm, & tecto & parietibus diſtinctæ, vni poſſeſſori vel domino, rarò duobus aut tribus, rariſsimè pluribus inſeruiunt, ac vſibus quotidianis & domeſticis ſufficiunt. Vnde facilè intelligis, Lector, quàm verè eodem tecto cum iumentis vtantur Iſlandi, cum ſinguli ruſtici in hac domuum varietate, peculiaria bouilia, ouilia, equilia, agnilia, debitis interuallis diſſita habeant, quæ ſerui, quoties opus eſt, petunt, vnde rurſus habitationem ſubinde repetunt.

Quòd autem quidam in mappa Iſlandiæ de prouincia Skagefiord annotauit, ſub eodem tecto homines, canes, ſues & oues, viuere, partim falſum, partim minimè mirandum eſt. De ouibus quidem, vt iam dictum eſt, & præcipuè ſuibus (cum illa prouincia ſues non habeat) falſum: De canibus haud mirum, cum illis nec regum aulæ caruerint nec hodiè careant, vt nimis omnibus eſt notum. Sed de canibus paulò poſt. Sect, 7. huius.

Victu. An iumentorum pabula poſſint commodè victus appellatione contineri, meritò dubitauerim: Cùm Doletus, Ciceronis interpretem agens, dicat: Victum, inquit, cum iureconſultis, ita exponemus, vt victus verbo contineantur, quæ eſui, potui, cultuiq; corporis, quæque ad viuendum homini ſunt neceſſaria. Et Vlpianus, de verborum ſignificat. Iiſdem verbis victum definit. Hoc loco verò Authores illi, etiam iumentorum pabula, victum appellant.

Cæterum videamus quomodo hîc eluceat veritatis & candoris præſtantia. Iumenta non habemus præterquam equos & boues: His gramina & fœnum (niſi vbi fœni inopia obrepit) pabulum, aqua potum præbet. At hi ipſi ſcriptores fatentur, Iſlandos piſcibus, butyro, carnibus, tum bubulis, tum ouillis, etiam frumento, licet pauco & aduentitio, viuere. Non igitur cibum habent cum brutis communem, quod tamen ijdem his verbis aſſerunt: Communi victu gaudent cum iumentis: Quod quid ſit Munſtero, ipſe paulò ſuperius haud obſcurè docuit. Iſlandia, inquit, populos multos continet ſolo pecorum paſtu, & nunc captura piſcium victitantes. Quid autem eſt pecorum paſtus, aliud, quàm pecorum cibus? ait Doletus: niſi Munſterus fortè pecorum paſtum, ipſa pecora ad paſtum hominum mactata appellet: cui, vt exiſtimo, vſus Romanorum refragatur, qui, vt homines veſci, ita pecora paſci docuit: hominúmque victum, pecorum autem, paſtum & pabulum vocari iuſſit. An verò exiſtimem tam dementes fuiſſe Munſterum & Krantzium, vt ſenſerint Iſlandos graminibus & fœno viuere? Quo miſeriæ Nabuchodonozor, diuinæ vltionis iugum ſubiens, redactus eſt, Dani. 4. 30. Facilè dabimus multa, quibus homines, non modò noſtrates, ſed veſtrates quoque veſcuntur, iumenta & pecora fortè non reijcere, ſi familiari pabulo deſtituantur. Vt equi frumento & panibus hordeaceis paſcuntur: ijdem lac (quemadmodum etiam vituli & agni) & cereuiſiam, ſi offeratur, bibunt, & quidem auidè. Sed & canes quæuis fercula & cibaria deuorant. An idcircò quiſquam dicet, homines communi victu cum canibus & iumentis gaudere?

Iam quęcunq; famis graſſantis tempore contigêre, pro vniuerſali gentis alicuius conſuetudine in hiſtoriam referri non debent. Vt non licet nobis de extraneis ſcribere, huius aut illius terræ populos canum, murium aut felium vſu victitare ſolitos, etſi fortè fame, ſiue obſidione, ſiue alioqui annonæ charitate inualeſcente immiſſa, id factitarint.

Potum autem interdum eſſe multis cum iumentis communem non magnoperè contraibimus: nempè aquam lympidiſſimam, naturalem illum potum, omnibus animantibus à Deo creatum: quem etiam ex parte, medicinæ conſulti comendant, imò nec patres Hebræi, nec ipſe Seruator noſter faſtidiebat.

Ad amictum verò quod attinet, (Nam & amictum victus vocabulo comprehendimus) nequaquam hic cum iumentis communis eſt. Illa enim pilis & villis natura (quod Munſterum & Krantzium nouiſſe iurarim) veſtiuit: homines, alioqui nudi, pannis corpus induere neceſſe habent. Hæc indumenta, quæ quidem Iſlandia ſuppeditat, ex lanis ouium conficiuntur. Sed non cogitaram ideò rectè dici, amictum eſſe nobis cum ouibus communem, ſiue eundem. Vtuntur etiam extranei pannis ex ouilla lana confectis, licet artificio ſubtiliore. Sed de indumentis nihil: Stultum enim eſt, ex eo laudem vel ſuperbam æſtimationem quærere, quod naturæ noſtræ infirmitatem arguit.

Statu. Reſtat ille ſtatus, quem cum brutis habere communem dicimur. Qui qualis aut cuiuſmodi ſit, aut eum eſſe velint noſtri ſcriptores, certè non facilè aſſequor. Status, inquit Doletus, eſt vel corporis, vel cauſarum, vel ordinis & cõditionis. Certè alium eſſe ſtatum noſtri corporis, quàm iumentorum (nam præter duos pedes etiam manus habemus, & corpore ac vultu ſurſum erecto incedimus) alium item ordinem & conditionem noſtram ducimus. Illi boni viri, ſi id de ſe aut alijs cognitum habent, fateantur. Nos hæc tam vana & in Deum creatorem noſtrum tam contemptibilia irridemus, nec prolixiore tractatu dignamur.

Cæterum quia noſtrum eſt, nec amori patriæ, nec vlli rei tantum tribuere, quin plus ſemper & vbique veritati largiamur: Dicam quid ſit, quod huic infami ſcriptorum conuicio occaſionem fortè dederit.

Occaſio harum fabularum.

Sunt in vicinia Schalholtæ, ad littus Iſlandiæ auſtrale, parœchiolæ tres, inter duos rapidiſſimos amnes Thiorſaa & Olffwis Aa interceptæ; quæ & ſyluis & ceſpitibus, conſueto gentis ad focos alendos fomite, ferè deſtituuntur. In iſtis parœchijs habitantes, & ſi qui ſint vicini, quamuis plures eorum, vt de omnibus rebus, ad rem familiarem pertinentibus, ita etiam de his, quæ ad focos & balnea opus habent, ſibi opportunè proſpiciunt: Tamen ſunt inter eos quidam, ſed infimæ tantum ſortis coloni, qui quoniam iſtis rebus domi deſtituantur, nec aliunde petere eas valeant, in culinis fœno ad coquendos cibos vtuntur: Aſt vbi hyemis niuoſæ ſæuitia horrida ingruit, coloni iſti miſeri ad ſuum bouile refugiunt, illic ſcilicet extructis tabulatis interdiù operas domeſticas exercentes, à bobus, cum focos habere nequeant, calorem mutuantur, quemadmodum mihi ab alijs narratum eſt. Sicq; illi tantùm, qui ſanè pauciſſimi ſunt, communi cum bobus tecto, in bruma, vti quidem non gaudent, ſed coguntur. Verùm victum & ſtatum longè alium habent, de qua re hactenus. Hęc eſt in iſtis Parœchiolis quorundam ſors & inopia, quorum conditio idcirco etiam apud nos fabula vulgi effecta eſt, quamuis non ſatis iuſtè. Vbi, quo iure toti genti tribuatur, quod vix ac ne vix quidem de iſtis paucis colonis verum eſt, libenter quæſierim? Tædet de his pluribus agere: Tantùm quia mihi cum Theologis res eſt, illud Salomonis ijs reponam. Qui calumniatur egenum, deridet factorem eius.

Prouerb. 14.

Equidem quia gens hæc noſtra pauper & egena eſt & fuit, ac veluti quidam mendicus inter diuites, tot extraneorum probra & ſcommata tulit. Sed videant cui exprobrent. Certè, ſi aliud nihil nobis cum illis commune eſt, tamen omnes ex iiſdem conſtamus elementis, & vnus & idem omnium Pater, Deus.

SECTIO QVARTA.

In ſimplicitate ſancta vitam agunt, cum nihil amplius quærant, quàm natura concedit. Beata gens, cuius paupertati nullus inuidet. Sed mercatores Anglici & Dani quieſcere gentem non ſinunt, qui ob piſcaturam euehendam terram illam frequentantes cum mercibus omnigenis vitia quoq; noſtra inuexerunt. Nam & fruges aqua miſcere in potum didicerunt, & ſimplicis aquæ hauſtus oderunt. Nunc aurum & argentum cum noſtris admirantur.

Krantzius. Munſter.

S*implicitate.* Equidem ſanctæ ſimplicitatis laudem nobis attribui, meritò gaudemus: Sed id dolemus, quòd reperiatur etiam apud nos iuſtitiæ ac legum ingens deprauatio, ac magna anarchia, quam multorum ſcelerum myriades conſequuntur; quod pij & boni omnes quotidiè deplorant. Id mali autẽ nequaquam ſupremi Magiſtratus, hoc eſt, Regis noſtri clementiſſimi, ſed verius noſtrapte culpa accidit: qui hæc quæ clàm ipſo præpoſterè geruntur & quæ in inferiore magiſtratu deſiderantur, ad maieſtatem ipſius nõn deferimus.

Mercatores. Mercatores porrò, non ſolùm Angli & Dani, ſed maximè Germani, vt nunc, ita olim terram noſtram, non ob piſcaturam ſed piſces auehendos frequentantes, nequaquam artem illam, miſcendarum frugum aquæ, Iſlandos docuerunt. Quippe ipſi Noruagi primi, quòd nobis conſtet, terræ noſtræ incolæ, à quibus oriundi ſunt Iſlandi, artem illam, ſicut etiam aureos argenteoſq; nummos, ſecum ex Noruegia attulerunt, vt initio non fuerit minor argenti & auri vſus apud nos, quàm eſt hodiè.

Et quidem ante Danorum, Germanorum, Anglorumuè frequentes ad nos nauigationes, terra noſtra multò, quàm nunc, ſeneſcentis mundi incommoda, cœlo ſoloq; perſentiens, fertilior, in delectiſſimis quibuſque locis, Cereris munera produxit.

SECTIO QVINTA.

Munſterus. Krantzius.

Rex Daniæ qui & Noruagiæ quotannis præfectum immittit genti.

ANno Domini 846. natus eſt Haraldus Harfagre (quod auricomum vel pulchricomum dixeris) Qui deinde Anno 858. Rex Noruagiæ deſignatus, vbi ætas viréſque iuſtum incrementum acceperunt, formam imperij Noruagici mutauit. Nam antea in minutas prouincias diuiſum (quas Fylki vocabant, & qui his præerant regulos, Fylkis Konga) ad Monarchiam armis potentibus redegit. Id cum & genere & potentia valentes aliquot regni incolæ ægrè ferrent, patria exulare, quàm ipſius Tyrannidis iugum non detrectare maluerunt. Vnde hi in Iſlandiam, antea quidem à quibuſdam viſam & inuentam, at deſertam tamen, colonias, dicto ſuperius Anno 874. tranſtulerunt: Atque ſic genti noſtræ originem præbentes, ſe Iſlandos nuncuparunt, quod nomen hodiè poſteri retinent. Vixerunt itaque Iſlandi diu, nullius imperium agnoſcentes, annis ſcilicet 386, plus minus. Et quamuis Rex Noruagiæ Haquinus ille conatus, qui omnium regum Noruagiæ diutiſſimè, nempe pluſquam 66. annos imperium gerebat, ſæpè per legatos tentarat tributarios ſibi facere Iſlandos, conſtanter tamen ſemper reſtiterunt, donec tandem circa annum Domini 1260. homagium ipſi præſtarent. Atque poſtea ſemper in data fide perſiſtentes, & regibus Noruagię parentes, tranſlato per Margaretam, Daniæ, Sueciæ, & Noruagiæ reginam, Noruagorum imperio, ad Danos, vnà cum reliquis imperij Noruagici Inſulis, Sereniſſimum Danię regem; Dominum & Regem ſuum hodiè ſalutant.

SECTIO SEXTA.

Krantzius. Munſterus.

Omnia inter eos communia ſunt, præter vxores.

HOc loco præmittit Krantzius talem Ironiam.

Multa inſignia in moribus illorum, &c. Porrò etiam hic fidem veſtram eleuat ingenium, ad aſſerendum res incompertas nimis procliue, cupidinem nouitatis, & nominis ac famæ, imò veritatis curam pręposteram arguit, omnium & rerum perſonarúmq;, & temporum experientia: O ſcriptores ſuſpiciendi.

Teſtes ſunt leges politicæ, quibus inde ab initio cum Noruagis vſi ſunt eiſdem Iſlandi: De Rege & ſubditis: De foro, & his quæ in forenſem diſceptationem cadere poſſunt: De hæreditatibus: adoptionibus, nuptijs, furto, rapinis, mutuo, contractibus & cæteris: Quæ omnia, quorſum illis, quibus res omnes ſunt communes? Teſtes ſunt, tot de bonis mobilibus & immobilibus contentiones, turbæ & certamina, in foris ac iudicijs Iſlandorum: Teſtes ſunt Reges nunc Daniæ & olim Noruagiæ, qui tot libellis ſupplicibus Iſlandorum, ad componendas iſtas de poſſeſſionibus controuerſias, olim & nunc interpellati ſæpè fuerant. Teſtis contra ſeipſum Krantzius, cuius verba diſtinction. i. huius, hæc fuerunt. Ante ſuſceptam Chriſti fidem (Iſlandi) lege naturali viuentes parum à lege noſtra diſcrepabant, &c. Si lege naturæ, certè lege illa iuſtitiæ, quæ tribuit vnicuique ſuum: Si lege iuſtitiæ, certè proprietatum & dominiorum diſtinctiones in noſtra gente locum habuiſſe oportet: Quanquam autem in hanc ipſam legem etiam in Eccleſia, & quidem ſatis atrociter, ſæpè delinquitur: tamen & Eccleſia & Ethnici iuſtiſſimam & optimam eſſe ſemper faſſi ſunt.

SECTIO SEPTIMA.

Catulos ſuos & pueros æquo habent in precio: Niſi quòd à pauperioribus facilius impetrabis filium quàm catulum, &c.

QVamuis principio hujus commentarioli cenſuerim, Munſterum & alios magni nominis viros, in ijs, quæ de Iſlandia ſcripta reliquerunt, eſſe à calumniæ nota liberandos: num tamen id hic, etiam à candidiſſimo & maximè ſincero quocunque fieri poſſit, non ſatis video. Quid enim mouit tantos viros, vt Nautarum maleuolas nugas & mendacia ſecuti, tam atroci & contumelioſo opprobrio gentem noſtram diffamarent, commacularéntque? Nihil profectò, niſi ſecura ridendi & contemnendi gentem pauperem & ignotam, licentia, & ſi quæ ſunt huic vicia confinia.

Cæterum nôrint omnes non tam Iſlandis, quàm ipſis Authoribus, incommodare hoc mendacium. Cum enim illud, & plurima etiam alia in hiſtoriam ſuam accumulant, efficiunt vnà, vt alibi quoque ſuſpectæ fidei habeantur. Illúdq; quod ait Ariſtoteles, lucrantur, vt cum vera dixerint, illis ſine ſuſpitione non credatur.

Sed age Lector, ſubſiſte pauliſper, mecúmq; grauitatem & ſapientiam tantorum virorum expende:

expende : Ne tantum Iſlandiæ Elogium intactum prætereamus. Docuerunt hactenus Krantzius & Munſterus : Iſlandos eſſe Chriſtianos. Item: Iſlandos ante ſuſceptam Chriſti fidem lege naturali vixiſſe. Item : Iſlandos vixiſſe lege quadam non multum à lege Germanorum diſcrepante. Item: Vixiſſe eos in ſancta ſimplicate. Adeidum igitur Lector, & quas Chriſtianiſmi, Legis naturalis, legis Germanorũ, ſanctæ ſimplicitatis notas Authores illi requirant, & in Iſlandis monſtrent ac depingant, perpende. Vna fuit ſupra, quòd infernum ſiue carcerem damnatorum montis Heclę 1 voragine & radicibus circumſcribant Iſlandi; de quo vide Sect. 1, huius: & ſect. 7. prior. part. Altera 2
nota, quòd, cum Anabaptiſtis, proprietatum & dominiorum diſtinctiones tollant: de quo
Sect. præced. Tertia éaque longè excellentiſſima hæc eſt: illi præclari affectus naturales, amor, 3 cura, & animus tam pius & paternus Iſlandorum in liberos, quòd videlicet eiuſdem precij ſint apud illos canes & filij, aut hi etiam vilioris. Siccine nobis Munſtere & Krantzi Legem Chriſti, natura, Germanorum, & ſanctam ſimplicitatem depingitis? O picturam præclaram & excellentem, quamuis nó prorſus Apelleam: O Inuentum acutum & admirandum, ſi benè authenticum: O ſcientiam pluſquàm humanam, etſi non prorſus diuinam.

Nos verò Iſlandi, quamuis vltimi & gelidam concluſi ad Arcton, longè alias Chriſtianiſmi notas requirimus. Nam & præceptum Dei habemus, vt quilibet proximũ diligat velut ſeipſum. Iam nemo eſt, puto, qui ſeipſum non plus diligat, aut pluris faciat, quàm canem. Quod ſi tantus eſſe debet proximi cuiuſlibet fauor, tanta æſtimatio, tantus amor, quantus quæſo erit in liberos? Quorum arctiſſimum amorem, pręterquam quòd ipſa parens natura nobis firmiſſimè cõciliauit, etiam Lex diuina curam ſummam in enutriendo habere iuſſit. (Exo. 12, 24. Ephe. 6, 4.) vt ſcilicet ſint in ſancto coniugio, Eccleſiæ quædam ſeminaria, omnis pietatis & honeſtatis exercitia: Prout vates ille pulcherrimè cecinit.

Vult Eccleſiolam quamlibet eſſe domum.

Item:

Coniugium humana quadam eſt Academia vita.

Vt iam ſatis conſtet, apud Chriſtianos longè pluris faciendos & curandos filios, quàm canes: Et, ſi qui non aliter curent, Chriſtianos non eſſe.

Sed & hic in prolem dulciſſimam affectus naturalis in Ethnicis etiam ſatis apertè conſpicitur: vt ſi quos hoc penitùs exueris, eoſdem etiam homines eſſe negaueris. Monſtrant id matres Carthaginenſes, cum tertio bello Punico adoleſcentes quiq; lectiſſimi obſides in Siciliam mitterentur, quos illæ fletu & lamentatione miſerabili ad naues comitatæ, & ex his quædam à filiorum complexibus ægrè diuulſæ, cum ventis pandi vela cernerent, nauéſq; è portu egredi, dolore ſtimulante, in ſubiectos fluctus diſſiluere; Sabellico authore. Monſtrat Ægeus, qui nauem filij Theſei, cum velis atri coloris, ex Creta redeuntem cerneret, perijſſe filium ratus, vitam in proximis vndis finiuit, Sabellic. lib. 3, cap. 4. Monſtrat Gordianus ſenior, Africæ proconſul, qui ſimiliter, ob rumores de morte filij, vitam ſuſpendio clauſit. Campofulgos lib. 5. cap. 7. Monſtrant idem Iocaſta Creontis filia, Auctolia Sinonis F. Anius Tuſcorum Rex, Orodes Rex Parthorum, & alij numero innumero: De quibus vide ſtat. lib. 2. Plutarchum, & alios, &c. Huc illud. Amor deſcendit, &c. Adeò, vt videas non minus eſſe homini proprium, ſobolem intimè diligere, & ſummo amore proſequi, quàm aui volare; vt ſi iam aliquando homines eſſe Iſlandos, nedum Chriſtianos ſcriptores noſtri faſſi ſint, hunc amorem & affectum in filios ijſdem, quantumuis inuiti & repugnantes, adſcribant: ſin minus, non modò hominis titulum & dignitatem illis detrahant, ſed etiam infrà bruta & quaſuis beſtias, quæ ipſæ, ſtimulante natura, maximo prolis ſuæ & arctiſſimo amore tenentur, deprimant.

Non addam contra hoc impudens mendacium exempla etiam noſtratium ſatis illuſtria: Tacebo leges noſtras plagiarias ipſis Iſlandis antiquiores, quippe à Noruagis acceptas, quæ exſtant in codice legum noſtrarum, titulo Mannhelge: cap. 5. Si quis hominem liberum (quemuis, nedum filium) extraneis vendat, &c.

Iam verò ſi quis eò fortunæ deueniat, vt proprium filium, ſiue incolæ, ſiue extranei alicuius poteſtati, vel fame vel extrema quacunq; vrgente neceſſitate, aut periculo, permittat, ne famelicum inedia deficientem aſpicere cogatur, canem verò in proprias dapes reſeruet, Is minimè dicendus eſt filium æquo aut inferiore loco habere quàm canem, ſiue id faciant Iſlandi, ſiue extranei quilibet.

Offenderant fortè Germanorũ vel Danorum nautę apud nos mendicos quoſdã, liberis onuſtos, quorũ hîc maximus eſt numerus, qui iocando, vt ſunt nugis ſcurrilibus addicti, dixerint: Da mihi aut vende hoc vel illud: Cúmq; rogarint extranei: Quid tu mihi viciſſim? Reſponderint mẽdici. Habeo liberos 10. vel 14. dabo ex eis vnũ vel plures, &c. Solet enim iſta mendicorum colluuies iſtiuſmodi ſcurriles dialogiſmos cum extraneis inſtituere. Quod ſi tum quiſpiam bonus vir, miſertus ſtoliditatis & inopię mendicorum, vno illos filio leuauerit, eíque propter Deum in alijs terris, aliquo tandem modo benè proſpexerit, num mendicus, qui alioqui cum filio, fame & paupertate moriturus, filium miſerenti permittit & committit, filium iſtum ſuum minoris facit quàm canem? Pręſtitum eſt à multis tam Iſlandis quàm extraneis huiuſmodi beneuolentiæ & commiſerationis opus: ex quibus fuit vir nobiliſſimus Accilius Iulius à ſereniſſimo rege Daniæ olim miſſus ad Iſlandos, Anno Domini 1552. Qui vt audiui, 15. pueros pauperculos aſſumpſit & ſecum in Daniam auexit: Vbi poſtea ipſius beneficio ſingulos ſuo vitæ generi addictos, in viros bonos & frugi euaſiſſe, mihi narratum eſt.

Quid ſi quis in extrema conſtitutus anguſtia, filium non modò vendat; ſed ſi emptorem nō habet, ipſe mactet & comedat? Nota ſunt huius rei exempla: Parentum videlicet inuitæ crudelitatis in filios, ſtimulante nō odio vel aſtorgia, ſed ineuitabili neceſſitate compellente. Num quis inde vniuerſale gentis alicuius cōuicium exſtruxerit? Legimus, in obſidione Samariæ matres duas filios ſuos mactaſſe, & coctos comediſſe: 4. Reg. C. 6. Legimus in obſidione Ieroſolymitana, quam flebilis fuerit vox miſerrimæ matris, filium miſellum iam mactaturæ. Infans, ait, (referam enim Euſebij verba de hac re, etſi notiſſima, vt miſeræ matris affectus appareat,) miſelle & infelix, cuinam in hoc belli, famis, & ſeditionis tumultu, te commodè reſeruem? Si Romanorum ſubijciamur imperio, illic ſeruitutis iugo preſſi, vitam infœliciter exigemus. Sed ſeruitutem credo fames anteuertet. Accedit factioſorum prædonum turba, his vtriſq; miſerijs toleratu multò aſperior. Age igitur mi gnate, ſis matri cibus, ſis prædonibus furia, ſis communi hominum vitæ fabula, quæ res vna ad Iudæorum calamitates deeſſe videtur. Quæ cum dixiſſet, natum trucidat, aſſatúmq; dimidiū mox comedit, dimidium reſeruat, &c. Euſebius libro 3. capite 6. Iam quis eſt, qui non credat miſerrimam hanc matrem filium hunc ſuum, domini alicuius, ſi ſe obtuliſſet, apud quem crediiſſet ſeruatum iri, aut emptoris poſſeſſioni fuiſſe permiſſuram? Nota eſt fames, Calaguritum, Hiſpaniæ vrbem, olim à Cneio Pompeio obſeſſam opprimens (Val. libro ſeptimo cap. 7.) cuius ciuibus, vxores & liberi in vſum extremæ dapis conuerſi ſunt, quos profectò, pro cibarijs & alijs dapibus haud inuiti vendidiſſent. Nota eſt quoque fames, quæ Anno Domini 851. (Vincent, libro 25. cap. 36.) Germaniam attriuit, vt etiam pater filium ſuum deuorare voluerit. Notum etiam eſt, poſt mortem Henrici ſeptimi Imperat. fame per triennium continuata, quomodo parentes liberos, vel liberi parentes deuorarint, & præcipuè quidem in Polonia & Bohemia. Et ne exempla tantùm antiqua petamus, accepimus tantam annonæ ſæuitiam, Anno 1586. & 1587. in Hungaria graſſatam fuiſſe, vt quidam alimentorum inopia adacti immaniſſimo Chriſtianorum hoſti proprios liberos vendiderint, & in perpetuum ſeruitutis iugum manciparint: quidam paruulos ſuos, quos vlterius tolerare non ſuſtinebant, crudeli miſericordia in Danubium proieciſſe, & ſuffocaſſe dicantur. Sed, num hæc & ſimilia exempla quempiam eò inſaniæ adigent, vt dicat hanc vel illam nationem, liberos in eſcam propriam mactare conſueuiſſe, Turcis libenter vendere, aut aquis ſubmergere & ſuffocare ſolitā eſſe? Non opinor. Sic neq; quòd mendici apud Iſlandos, extrema vrgente neceſſitate, cuius duriſſimi ſunt morſus, filios ſuos libenter amittant, toti genti, & quidem probri loco, communiter adſcribendū eſt à quoquam, niſi apud eundē omnis pudor, candor, humanitas, veritas exulent.

Cæterùm optarim ego, parcius Iſlandis canum curam exprobrare illos populos, quorum matronæ, & præcipuè nobiles, canes in maximis delicijs habent, vt eos vel in plateis, ne dicam in ſacris concionibus, ſinu geſtent, quem morem in peregrinis quibuſdam, quos Romæ catulos ſimiarum & canum in gremio circumferre Cæſar conſpexit, hac quæſtione reprehendit, dum quæreret: Numquid apud ipſos mulieres liberos non parerent? Monens errare eos, qui à natura inditos ſibi affectus, quibus in amorem hominum ac præcipuè ſobolis incitarentur, in beſtias transferunt, quarum deliciarum voluptas, Iſlandorum gentem, nunquam cepit aut habuit. Quare iam Munſtere & Krantzi, alias nobis Chriſtianitatis, (vt ſic dicam) legis naturæ, legis item Germanorum, & ſanctæ ſimplicitatis notas quærite.

Epiſcopum ſuum colunt pro Rege: ad cuius nutum reſpicit totus populus. Quicquid ex lege, ſcripturis, & ex conſuetudine aliarum gentium conſtituit, quàm ſanctè obſeruant.

FVit equidem initio ferè ad repurgatam Euangelij doctrinam maxima Epiſcopi obſeruantia; ſed nunquam tanta vt exteris legibus aut conſuetudini cederent noſtræ leges politicæ, ex nutu Epiſcopi. Nec tempore Alberti Krantzij, multò minùs Munſteri (quorum ille 1517. hic 1552. poſt partum ſalutiferum deceſſit) Epiſcopi Iſlandorum regiam obtinuerunt authoritatem, cùm ſcilicet multi ex ijs, qui diuitijs paulò plus valebant, aduerſus ipſos conſurgere non dubitarint; quæ res apud noſtrates liquidò conſtat. Interim tamen Epiſcopi, anathematis fulmine terribiles, alios in ſuam poteſtatem redegerunt, alios furibunda ſæuitia id temporis perſecuti ſunt.

Porrò etſi tum fuit magna, imò maxima Epiſcopi obſeruantia, tamẽ nunc diſpulſis tenebris Papiſticis, alia ratione homines Satan aggreditur, eorumq́; mentes contemptus libertate & refractaria contumacia, aduerſus Deum & ſacrum miniſterium, etiam hîc armare non negligit.

SECTIO NONA.

Munſter.

Illic victitant plerumq́; piſcibus, propter magnam penuriam frumenti, quod aliunde à maritimis ciuitatibus infertur: & qui inde cum magno lucro piſces exportant. Item Munſterus, Illic piſcibus induratis vtuntur loco panis qui illic non creſcit.

Vide Lector, quàm Munſterum iuuet, eadem oberrare chorda: vt cum de gente ignota nihil ſcribere poſſit, quod coloris aliquid habeat, vel falſa afferre, vel eadem ſæpiùs repetere, ſicque cramben eandem recoquere ſuſtineat. Dixerat enim paulò ante, Iſlandos piſcibus viuere. Verba ipſius ſuperiùs etiam recitata, hæc ſunt. Iſlandia populos continet multos, ſolo pecorum paſtu & nunc captura piſcium victitantes, &c. Et vt cætera tranſeam in quibus leue quiddam notari poterat; Illud ſanè, panem in Iſlandia non creſcere, perquam verum eſt. Quod etiam illi cum Germania commune eſſe crediderim, quòd videlicet nec illic panis creſcat, niſi fortè in Munſteri agro, vbi etiam acetum naturale optimè creſcit. Sed hæc, troporum indulgentia, ſcilicet, ſalua erunt. Ad conuicia autem, quæ ex victu Iſlandorum petunt extranei, infrà paucis reſpondebitur, Sect. 15.

SECTIO DECIMA.

Incolæ res maiorum & ſui temporis celebrant cantibus & inſculpunt ſcopulis, atque promontorijs, vt nulla, niſi cum naturæ iniuria, intercidant apud poſteritatem. Munſter. Krantzius.

Cytharædi, & qui teſtitudine ludunt, apud eos reperiuntur quàm plurimi, qui prædulci modulamine & volucres & piſces irretiant & capiant. Friſius.

Veterum geſta apud Iſlandos conſeruata.

Quin veterum geſta aliquot cantibus & poëmatibus noſtratium, vt & ſoluta oratione, apud nos conſeruentur, non negamus. Quòd verò à nobis aut maioribus noſtris eadem ſcopulis vel promontorijs inſculpta ſunt, eam non licet nobis, vt neque illam tantam Citharædorum, aues aut piſces demulcentium, laudem accipere. Statuimus enim animi eſſe generoſi ac veracis, vt crimina falſa refellere, ita laudem immeritam ſibi haud vendicare, nec, etſi quis tribuat, agnoſcere.

SECTIO VNDECIMA.

Sed cum ſcriptoribus iam dictis, viris alioqui ſpectatæ eruditionis & pręclari nominis, qui tamen hæc ita inconſideratè ſcriptis ſuis interſeruerunt, actionis finis eſto.

Et iam magna mei pars eſt exhauſta laboris:

Sed reſtat tamen fœtus ille vipereus Germanicus, quem idcircò anonymum ſecundo partu mater edi voluit, vt venenatis aculeis nomen Iſlandorum tantò liberiùs pungeret.

Porrò licet aduerſus hanc beſtiam in arenam deſcendere non dubitem, omnibus tamen conſtare volo, quonam hoc animo faciam, videlicet, non vt cum illius peſtifera virulentia, conuicijs aut maledicentia certem. (Nam vt eſt in triuiali paroemia,

Hoc ſcio pro certo, quod ſi cum ſtercore certo,
Vinco, ſeu vincor, ſemper ego maculor:)

Sed vt bonis & cordatis omnibus, etiam extraneis, ſatisfaciam, qui maledicentiam iſtam Germanicam lecturi vel audituri ſunt, aut olim audierint, ne & hi nos meritò calumniam tantam ſuſtinere credant: Tum etiam vt alios qui iſtis virulentis rhythmis Germanicis, in gentis noſtræ opprobrium vtuntur, & inde dicteria & contumelioſas ſubſannationes ad deſpiciendos Iſlandos petunt, ab illa mordendi licentia in poſterum, ſi fieri poſſit, abducamus.

Ergò, ne longis ambagibus Lectori faſtidium oratio noſtra pariat, ad ea narranda accedam, quæ maledicus ille Germanus in ſuum paſquillum congeſſit: Quem etiam ſua de Iſlandis carmina Encomiaſtica recitantem in his pagellis introducerem, niſi præuiderem fœtum illum probroſum, tot & tam varijs maledictis turgidum, omnibus bonis nauſeam mouere poſſe, ac ſua ſpurcitie ab ijs legendis abſterrere.

Referam igitur præcipua, (ijs ſcilicet omiſſis quæ cum alijs communia habet, atque hactenus ventilata ſunt) ſed, quàm ille, longè mitius; ne, vt dixi, linguæ ipſius obſcœna petulantia, aures bonæ & eruditæ offendantur: Qui ipſum videre aut audire volet, quærat apud propolas. Nobis inquam, non eſt in animo putida ipſius calumnia & conuiciorum ſentina, has chartas inquinare. Primùm igitur obijcit Germanicus hic noſter, ſi Dijs placet, Hiſtoricus: Multos ex paſtoribus Iſlandiæ toto biennio ſacram concionem ad populum nullam habere: Vt in priore editione, huius huius paſquilli legitur, quod tamen poſterior editio eiuſdem refutat: Dicens, eoſdem paſtores in integro anno tantũ quinquies concionari ſolitos: quæ duo quàm ritè ſibi conſentiant, videas bone Lector, cum conſtet Authorem mox à prima editionẽ vix vidiſſe Iſlandiam, Ita ſcilicet plerumq. mendacium mendacio proditur, iuxta illud: Verum vero conſentit: Falſum nec vero, nec falſo.

1. Obiectio ſeu conuicium.

Sed cum noſtrum non ſit veritatem vſpiam diſſimulare, nos haud negandum ducimus conciones ſacras circa id tempus, quo iſte Sycophanta in Iſlandia vixit, nempe anno 1554. aut circiter multò fuiſſe rariores, quàm ſunt hodiè, tum ſcilicet tenebris Papiſticis vix dum diſcuſſis. Quod etiam de Pſalmis Dauidicis à vulgo latinè demurmuratis, vt idẽ noſtratibus exprobrat, intelligere eſt: Papiſtæ enim totam ſpem ſalutis in ſua Miſſa collocantes, de concione aut doctrina parùm fuere ſolliciti. Poſtquam verò caligine illa exempti ſumus, aliter ſe rem habere, Deo inprimis gratias agimus: Licet quorundã paſtorum noſtrorum tardam ſtupiditatem, ſegnitiem & curam præpoſteram non poſſimus omni modo excuſare. Quod vtrum in nullos ſuorum popularium etiam competat, aliæ quoque nationes viderint.

SECTIO DVODECIMA.

2.Conuitium. Secundo calumniatur vitilitigator: Adulteria & ſcortationes non modo publica eſſe & frequentia ſcelera inter Iſlandos: ſed ab ijs pro ſcelere ne haberi quidem.

ETſi autem fœdiſſimæ iſtæ turpitudines etiam in noſtra repub. non prorſus inuſitatæ ſunt: tamen cum omnibus conſtet in alijs quoque nationibus longè etiam frequentiores eſſe, cum ibi quoque populi frequentia maior: immeritò & malignè hoc nomine magis Iſlandos, quàm populos & gentes reliquas, quarum, vt dixi, nomen etiam plus noſtratibus hoc crimine malè audit, notauit.

Et licet ex animo optarim longè minus ad ſcelera, & turpitudines in noſtra patria conniueri, quàm paſſim hîc fieri videmus: tamen etiam innata illa mordendi libidine, hoc veterator in pręſenti conuitio attexuit: videlicet, quòd ſcelera iſta ab Iſlandis pro ſcelere non habeantur. Nam in quà demum repub. id impudens ille aſſerere audet? Illáne; quæ in legem codicis ll. titulo Mannhelge: cap. 28. iurauit; quę ſtatuit, vt iterum adulterium qui cum coniuge alterius commiſerit, confiſcatis ſuis bonis, capite etiam plectatur? Illáne, quæ pro adulterio, à famulo cum vxore domini commiſſo, non ita dudum 80. thalerorum mulctam irrogauit? Illáne, quæ eundem, ſi ad ſtatutum tempus non ſoluerit vel vades dederit, in exilium proſcribendum decreuit? Illáne: cuius leges politicæ, quemuis in adulterio cum vxore, à viro legitimè deprehenſum, ſi euaſerit, homicidij mulctam expendere iubent? Illáne, cuius itidem leges politicæ, in complexu matris, filiæ aut ſororis, à filio, patre, vel fratre deprehenſum, vitam ſuam dimidio eius, quod quis ſi eundem inſontem interfeciſſet, expendere teneretur, redimere iubent? Illàne, cuius leges politicæ adulterium ſceleris infandi nomine notarunt & damnarunt? Et in eo tertiò deprehenſum, capite plectendum ſeuerè mandant?

Cernis igitur, Lector benigne, quàm iniurium habeamus notarium, dicentem: Adulterium & ſcortationes in Iſlandia peccati aut ſceleris nomen non mereri. Nam licet politici quidam hoc vel illud ſcelus impunitum omittant, non debet tota gens, non leges, non boni & pij omnes, eo nomine in ius vocari, aut malè audire.

SECTIO DECIMATERTIA.

3.Conuitium. T*Ertium conuicium eſt, quo fraudis & perfidiæ erga Germanos Iſlandis notam inurit.* Fuit autem proculdubio famoſi huius libelli author, cerdo & propola circumforaneus, multoſq; Iſlandiæ angulos, ſordidæ mercaturæ gratia, oſtiatim adierat: quod ipſe de ſe in præclaris illis ſuis rhythmis teſtatur, maximã Iſlandiæ partem ſibi peragratam eſſe. Vnde cum ipſe mala fide cũ multis egerit (plerumq; enim fraus & mendacia coniunguntur, & mendacem ſe fuiſſe, hac ingenij ſui experientia ſatis probauit) etiam fortè à ſe deceptorum fraudem eſt expertus. Hinc illa in totam gentem criminatio extitit: Diſſimulato intereà, qua fide quidam Germanorum, quibus annua eſt nauigatio ad Iſlandos, cum noſtris hominibus agant. Ea autem querela, cùm non alios conuiciari, ſed aliorum in gentem noſtram immerita conuicia monſtrare inſtituerim, conſultò ſuperſedeo.

SECTIO DECIMAQVARTA.

4.5.6.& 7.Conuitia. Quarto: negat in conuiuijs quemquam diſcumbentium à menſa ſurgere: ſed matresfamilias ſingulis conuiuis quoties opus fuerit matellas porrigere. Præterea variam conuiuiorum edendi bibendiq; ruſticitatem notat.

5 Cubandi & prandendi ritus obijcit: quod decem plus minus in eodem lecto promiſcuè viri cum fœminis minis pernoctent, inque lecto cibum capiant: atq; interea ſe non niſi alea aut latrunculorum ludo exerceant.

Sexto. Calumniatur eoſdem faciem & os vrina proluere. 6

Septimo. Nuptiarum, ſponſalium, natalitiorum celebritatem & funerum ritus contemptuoſè extenuat. 7

HÆc & huiuſmodi plurima in gentem inſontem, imò de ſe & ſuis optimè meritam, impurus calumniator euomit. Quæ quidem eius generis ſunt, vt illi de his reſpondere prorſus dedignemur. Nam vt demus (quod tamen non damus) aliquid huiuſmodi apud homines ſordidos, & ex ipſa vulgi colluuie infimos, quibuſcũ longè ſæpius, quàm bonis & honeſtis conuerſabatur, animaduertiſſe præclarum hunc notarium Germanicũ (vixerat enim, vt eius rhythmi teſtantur, diuriuſculè in locis maritimis Iſlandiæ, quo ferè promiſcuum vulgus, tempore piſcaturę annuatim confluit, & tam extraneorũ nautarum, quàm ſua nequitia corruptum, ſæpius inhoneſtè mores & vitam inſtituit) Tamen manifeſtiorem etiam hoc loco iniuriam nobis facit, vnius nebulonis & deſperati Sycophantę turpitudine, totã gentẽ (vt ferè ſolent etiã alij) aſpergendo, quàm vt refutatione vlla indigeat. Cuius rei etiam ipſi extranei in noſtra Inſula non parum verſati, locupletiſſimi teſtes eſſe poſſunt.

Poſſem multas eius farinæ fœditates, ruſticitates & obſcœnitates, etiam in ipſius natione deprehenſas colligere. Sed odi facundiam caninam, nec in aliorum opprobriũ diſertũ eſſe iuuat: nec tam tenerè eſſe volo, vt verbulis transuerberer. Id tantùm viderint boni & pij omnes, cuius ſit animi, peſſima quæq; ab vno aut altero deſignata, toti genti obijcere. Si quis Germaniç aut alterius nationes vrbes & pagos omnes peragret, & ſcelera ac mores peſſimos, furta, homicidia, parricidia, ſcortationes, adulteria, inceſtus, luxuriem, rapinas & reliquas impietates & obſcœnitates in vnum coactas, omnibus Germanis, aut alioqui alteri cuiuis toti nationi communes eſſe aſſerat, atq; hæc omnia inſigniter mentiendo, exaggeret, iſne optimæ rei ſtudioſus habebitur?

Sed quid mirum, licet verbero, &, vt propriè notem, porcus impurus, iſte, inquam, Rhythmiſta, naturam & ingenium ſuum eiuſmodi loidoria prodiderit?

Notum eſt enim porcos, cũ hortos amœniſſimos intrarint, nec liliũ nec roſas aut flores alioqui pulcherrimos & ſuauiſſimos decerpere: Sed roſtro in cœnum prono, quicquid eſtluti & ſtercoris volutare, vertere & inuertere, donec impuriſſima, hoc eſt, ſuo genio apprimè congruentia eruant, vbi demum ſolida voluptate paſcuntur.

Ad iſtum igitur modum hic porcus Rhythmiſta, optima, & quæ in noſtra Repub. laudibilia eſſe poſſunt, ſicco pede præterit, peſſima quæq;, atq; ea, vel à nullo, vel admodum paucis deſignata; hoc eſt, ſuæ naturæ, & ingenio aptiſſima, vt ſe eſſe, qui dicitur, re ipſa probaret, corraſit: vnde poſthac porci nomen ex moribus & ingenio ipſius factum, ſortitor.

SECTIO DECIMAQVINTA.

NOnum conuicium hic recenſebimus, quod à victu, ac præcipuè cibo ac potu Iſlandorum maledicus ille porcus, non vno aut paucis verbis, ſed prolixa inuectiua petiuit: Nempe quòd cibis vtantur vetuſtis, & inſulſis, idq; ſine panis vſu: Tum etiam quòd varia & incognita extraneis piſcium genera illis ſint eſui, & aquam ac ſerum lactis in potum miſceant. Quæ omnia venenatus hic paſquillus diſerta contumelia, & ingenioſa calumnia, pulchrè amplificauit. 9. Conuicium.

Cæterum etſi illum prolixiore reſponſione non dignemur: tamen propter alios, qui hodie hanc rem partim mirantur, partim haud leuiter noſtrę genti obijciunt, pauca hoc loco addenda videbantur.

Primùm igitur totam hanc gentem bipartitò ſecabimus; In mendicos, & hos qui & ſe & cum alijs etiam mendicos alunt. Mendicorum, & eorum qui ad hos proximè accedunt, omnia cibaria recenſere aut examinare haud facile eſt, nec quòd illos edere, aut ediſſe, extrema aliquãdo coëgit neceſſitas, reliquę genti cibariorũ genera aut numerũ præſcribere fas eſt. Nam & de ſuffocatis quidem non comedendis legem habemus inter canones, quorum ſeruantiſſima videri voluit antiquitas.

Deinde etiam tempora diſtinguemus, vt nihil mirum ſit, graſſante annonæ ſæuitia, multa à multis ad explendam famem adhiberi aut adhibita fuiſſe, quæ aliàs vix canes paſcant. Vt nuperrimè de Pariſienſibus accepimus, Anno 1590. arctiſſima Henrici 4. Nauarræi obſidione preſſis, & famem Saguntinam, vt P. Lindebergius loquitur, perpeſſis; eos non modò equinam, ſed morticinam quoque carnem ex mortuorum oſſibus in mortario contuſis farinæ pugillo vno aut altero miſto, confectam, in ſuas dapes conuertiſſe: & de alijs quoque populis notum eſt, qui ſimili vrgente inopia, etiam murium, felium & canum eſu victitarint. Sic etiam Iſlandis aliquando vſu venit (quanquam à canina, murium & felium, vt & humana carne hactenus, nobis quantum conſtat, abſtinuerint) licet non ab hoſte obſeſſis: Nam cùm ad victum neceſſaria ex terra marique petant, & ab extraneis nihil commeatus, aut parum admodum aduehatur, quoties terræ mariſque munera DEVS præcluſerit, horrendam annonæ caritatem ingruere & ingruiſſe, & dira fame vexari incolas, neceſſe eſt. Vnde fit, vt illos qui in diem viuere ſoliti fuerint, nec præcedentium annorum ſuperantes commeatus habuerint, extrema tentaſſe, quoties egeſtas vrſerit, credibile. Cæterum, vtrum hæc res publico & perpetuo opprobrio magis apud Iſlandos, quàm alias nationes, occaſionem meritò præbere debeat, candidis & bonis animis iudicandum relinquo.

Porrò quod de genus noſtræ proprijs & conſuetis alimentis multi obijcere ſolent, potiſſimum de carne, piſcibus, butyro, abſque ſale inueteratis, Item de lacticinijs, frumenti inopia, potu aquæ, &c. & reliquis: id nos in plurimis Iſlandiæ locis (nam ſunt multi quoque noſtratium, qui Danorum & Germanorum more, quantum quidem caſtis & temperatis animis ad mediocritatem ſufficere debet, licet magna condimentorum varietate, vt & ipſis Pharmacopolijs, deſtituimur, menſam inſtruere & frugaliter viuere ſuſtineant) ita ſe habere haud multis refragabimur, videlicet prædicta victus genera, paſſim ſine ſalis condimento vſitata eſſe. Et inſuper addemus, hæc ipſa cibaria, quæ extranei quidam vel nominare horrent, ipſos tamen extraneos apud nos, non ſine voluptate, manducare ſolitos. Nam etſi frumenti aut farris penè nihil vulgò habeamus, nec ſal, gulæ irritamentum, ad cibaria condienda, omnibus ſuppetit: docuit tamen Deus, opt. max. etiam noſtros homines rationem tractandi & conſeruandi, quæ ad vitam ſuſtentandam ſpectant, vt appareat, Deum in alendis Iſlandis non eſſe ad panem vel ſalem alligatum. Quòd verò ſua omnia extranei iucundiora & ſalubriora clamant; negamus tamen ſatis cauſæ eſſe, cur noſtra nobis exprobrent: Nec nos DEVM gulæ noſtræ debitorem reputamus; quin potius toto pectore gratias agimus, quod ſine opiparis illis delicijs & lautitijs, quæ tam iucundæ & ſalubres putantur, etiam noſtræ gentis hominibus, annos & ætatem bonam, tum valetudinem etiam firmiſſimã, robur ac vires validas (quæ omnia ſtatuimus boni & conuenientis alimenti, ὡς τῶν ἐγχωρίων eſſe indicia) concedere dignetur, cum ingenio etiam non prorſus tam craſſo ac ſterili, quàm huic noſtro aëri & alimentis aſſignare Philoſophi videntur, quod re libentius, quàm verbis multi fortaſſe noſtratium comprobare poterant, Ratio conſeruandi cibos ſine ſale.

Ni nos (vt inquit ille) paupertas inuida deprimeret.

Sed hic vulgi iudicium, vt in alijs ſæpè, etiam eos qui ſapere volunt (iam omnes bonos & cordatos excipio) nimis apertè decipit: Videlicet hoc ipſo, quòd omnia, quæ illorum vſus non admittit, aut quæ non viderunt, aut experti ſunt antea, continuò damnent. Veluti, ſi quis, qui mare nunquam vidit, mare mediterraneum eſſe aliquod, non poſsit adduci vt credat: Sic illi ſenſu ſuæ experientiæ omnia metiuntur, vt nihil ſit bonum, nihil conducibile, niſi quo illi ſoli viuunt: At profectò nos, eò dementiæ non proceſsimus, vt eos qui locuſtis veſcuntur, quod tum de alijs, tum Æthiopię quibuſdam populis, ideo (autore Diodoro) Acridophagis appellatis, & Indiæ gente, cui Mandrorum nomen Clytharcus & Mageſtanes dederunt, teſte Agatarchide, didicimus; aut ranis, aut cancris marinis, aut ſquillis gibbis, quæ res hodiè nota eſt, vulgi propterea ludibrijs exponere præſumamus, à quibus tamen edulijs, in totum noſtra conſuetudo abhorret.

SECTIO DECIMASEXTA.

16. Conuicium.

Decimo. Hoſpitalitatem noſtris hominibus inhumaniſsimus porcus obijcit. Marſupium inquit, non circumferunt, nec hoſpitiari aut conuiuari gratis pudor eſt. Nam ſi quis aliquid haberet, quod cum alijs communicaret, id faceret ſanè in primis ac libenter. His quoq; annectamus, quod templa, ſeu ſacras ædiculas domi propria à multis Iſlandorum extructas velut pudendū quiddam commemorat: quodq; eas primùm omnium de manè oraturi petant, nec à quoquam prius interpellari patiantur. Hæc ille velut inſigne quoddam dedecus in Iſlandis notauit.

Scilicet, quia nihil cum Amaricino, ſui:

Nec porci diuina vnquam amarunt: quod ſanè metuo ne nimis verè de hoc conuiciatore dicatur, id quod vel ex his vltimis duabus obiectionibus conſtare poterit.

Verùm enimuerò, cùm ipſe ſuarum virtutum ſit teſtis locupletiſsimus, nos Lectorem eius rei cupidum ad ipſius hoc opus Poëticum remittimus, quod is de Iſlandia compoſuit, & nos iam aliquot proximis diſtinctionibus examinauimus; cuius maledicentiæ & fœditatis nos hic pro ipſo puduit; ita, vt quæ is Satyrica, at quid Satyrica? Sathanica, inquam, mordacitate & maledicentia in noſtram gentem ſcribere non erubuit, nos tamen referre pigeat: Tanta eius eſt & tam abominanda petulantia, tam atrox calumnia. DEVS BONE: Hoc conuiciorum plauſtrum (paucisſima namq; attigimus; Nolui enim laterem lauare, & ſtulto, vt inquit ille ſapientiſsimus, ſecundum ſtultitiam ſuam reſpondere, cum in ipſius Rhythmis verbum non ſit quod conuicio careat) qui viderit, nonne iudicabit paſquilli iſtius autorem hominem fuiſſe peſſimum, imò fæcem hominum, tum virtutis ac veritatis contemptorem, ſine pietate, ſine humanite?

Sed hîc meritò dubitauerim, peiuſne horum conuiciorum autor de Iſlandis meritus ſit, an verò Typographus ille Ioachimus Leo (& quicunq; ſunt alij, qui in ſuis editionibus, nec ſuum nec vrbis ſuæ nomen profiteri auſi ſunt) qui illa iam bis, ſi non ſæpius, typis ſuis Hamburgi euulgauit. Hoccine impunè fieri ſinitis, ô ſenatus populuſq; Hamburgenſis? Hanccine ſtatuiſtis gratiam deberi Iſlandiæ, quæ vrbi veſtræ iam plurimos annos, exportatis affatim noſtratium quibuſuis commodis, pecudum, pecorumq; carnibus, butyro & piſcium copia quotannis, penè immodica, quædam quaſi cella penuaria fuit? Senſere huius Inſulæ commoda etiam Hollandiæ olim & Angliæ vrbes aliquot: Præterea Danis, Bremenſibus, & Lubecenſibus cum Iſlandis commercia diu fuerunt. Sed a nullis vnquam tale encomium, talem gratiam reportarunt, qualis hęc eſt Gregoriana calumnia: In veſtrà, veſtrà inquam vrbe, nata, edita, iterata, ſi non terciata: quę alias nationes, quibus Iſlandia vix, ac ne vix quidem, nomine tenus, alioqui innotuerat, ad huius gentis opprobrium & contemptum armauit: quam à ciue veſtro acceptam iniuriam, iam 30. annos, & plus eò, Iſlandia ſuſtinet. Sed etiam, inſcio magiſtratu, eiuſmodi multa ſæpè fiunt: Neq; enim dubitamus, quin viri boni eiuſmodi ſcripta famoſa indignè ferant, & ne edantur, diligenter caueant: cum tales editiones pugnent cum iure naturali: Ne alteri facias, quod tibi factum non velis: Et Cæſareo, de libellis famoſis: in quo irrogatur pœna grauiſſima ijs, qui tales libellos componunt, ſcribunt, proferunt, emi vendiue curant, aut non ſtatim repertos diſcerpunt.

Vrbes Angliæ commercia olim in Iſlandia exercent.

Scripſi Holis Hialtadalenſium in Iſlandia, Æra Chriſtiana
Anno 1592. 17. Kalendas Maias.

A BRIEFE COMMENTARIE of Iſland: wherin the errors of ſuch as haue written concerning this Iſland, are detected, and the ſlanders, and reproches of certaine ſtrangers, which they haue vſed ouer-boldly against the people of Iſland, are confuted.

By Arngrimus Ionas, of Iſland.

To the moſt mighty Prince and Lord, Lord Chriſtian the 4. of Denmarke, Norway, and of the Vandals and Gothes, King elect: of Sleſwic, Holſte, Stormar, and Dithmarſe Duke: Earle of Oldenburg, and Delmenhorſt: His moſt gratious Lord.

T*Hat heroical attempt of* Anchurus, ſonne of King Midas (moſt gratious prince) and that pietie towards his countrey in maner peereleſſe, deſerueth highly to be renowmed in hiſtories: in that freely and couragiouſly he offered his owne perſon, for the ſtopping vp of an huge gulfe of earth, about Celœna, a towne in Phrigia, which dayly ſwallowed multitudes of men, and whatſoeuer elſe came neere vnto it. For when his father Midas was aduertiſed by the Oracle, that the ſaid gulfe ſhould not be ſhut vp, before things moſt precious were caſt into it: Anchurus deeming nothing to be more inualuable then life, plunged himſelfe aliue downe headlong into that bottomeles hole; and that with ſo great vehemencie of mind, that neither by his fathers requeſt nor by the allurements and teares of his moſt amiable wife, he ſuffered himſelfe to be drawne backe from this his enterpriſe.

Sperthius alſo and Bulis, two Lacedemonians, were not much inferiour to the former, who to turne away the reuenge of Xerxes that moſt puiſſant King of the Perſians, entended againſt the Lacedemonians, for killing the ambaſſadors of his father Darius, hyed them vnto the ſayd king, and that he might auenge the ambaſſadours death vpon them, not vpon their countrey, with hardy, and conſtant mindes preſented themſelues before him.

The very ſame thing (moſt gracious prince) which moued them, and many others being enflamed with the loue of their countrey, to refuſe for the beneſite thereof, no danger, no trouble, no nor death it ſelfe, the ſame thing (I ſay) hath alſo enforced me, not indeed to vndergoe voluntarie death, or freely to offer my ſelfe vnto the ſlaughter, but yet to aſſay that which I am able for the good of my countrey: namely, that I may gather together and refute the errors, and vaine reports of writers, concerning the ſame: and ſo take vpon me a thing very dangerous, and perhaps ſubiect to the ſiniſter iudgement of many.

In this purpoſe the example of Cneius Pompeius hath likewiſe confirmed me: who being choſen procurator for corne among the Romanes, and in an extreme ſcarcetie and dearth of the citie, hauing taken vp ſome ſtore of graine in Sicilia, Sardinia, and Africa, is reported to haue had greater regard of his countrey, then of himſelfe. For when he made haſte towards Rome, and a mighty and dangerous tempeſt ariſing, he perceiued the Pilots to tremble, and to be vnwilling to commit themſelues to the rigor of the ſtormie ſea, himſelfe firſt going on boord, and commanding the anchors to be weighed, brake foorth into theſe words: That we ſhould ſayle neceſſitie vrgeth: but that we ſhould liue, it vrgeth not. In which words he ſeemeth wiſely to inferre, that greater care is to be had of our countrey lying in danger, then of our owne priuate ſafetie.

This man doe I thus imitate, { If ſmall with great as equals may agree:
{ And Flie with Elephant compared bee.

Namely that gathering together and laying vp in ſtore thoſe things which might be applied to ſuccour the fame and credite of our nation, hauing now this long time bene oppreſſed with ſtrangers, through the enuie of certeine malicious perſons, I boldly aduenture to preſent theſe fewe meditations of mine vnto the viewe of the world, and ſo hoyſing vp ſailes to commit my ſelfe vnto a troubleſome ſea, and to breake foorth into the like ſpeeches with him: That I ſhould write neceſſitie vrgeth: but that my writings in all places ſhould ſatisfie euery delicate taſte, or eſcape all peeuiſhnes of carpers it vrgeth not. I doubt not but many will allow this my enterpriſe: the ſucceſſe perhaps all men will not approue. Neuertheles, I thought that there was greater regard to be had of my countrey, ſuſteining ſo many mens mocks and reproches, then of mine owne praiſe or diſpraiſe, redounding perhaps vnto me vpon this occaſion. For what cauſe ſhould moue me to ſhunne the enuie and hate of ſome men, being ioyned with an indeuour to benefite and gratifie my countrey?

The errors of the writers of Iſland intolerable.

But if I ſhall ſeeme ſomewhat too bold in cenſuring the errors of writers, or too ſeuere in reprehending the ſlanders of ſome men: yet I hope all they will iudge indifferently of me, who ſhall ſeriouſly conſider, how intolerable the errors of writers are, concerning our nation: how many alſo and how grieuous be the reproches of ſome, againſt vs, wherewith they haue ſundry wayes prouoked our nation, and as yet will not ceaſe to prouoke. They ought alſo to haue me excuſed in regard of that in-bred affection rooted in the hearts of all men, towards their natiue ſoile, and to pardon my iuſt griefe for theſe iniuries offered vnto my countrey. And I in very deed, ſo much as lay in me, haue in all places moderated my ſelfe, and haue bene deſirous to abſtaine from reproches: but if any man thinke, we ſhould haue vſed more temperance in our ſtile, I truſt, the former reaſon will content him.

Sithens therefore, I am to vndergoe the ſame hazard, which I ſee is commonly incident to all men, that publiſh any writings: I muſt now haue eſpeciall regarde of this one thing: namely, of ſeeking out ſome patron, and Mecœnas for this my briefe commentary, vnder whoſe name and protection it may more ſafely paſſe through the hands of all men.

But for this purpoſe I could not finde out, nor wiſh for any man more fit then your royal Maieſtie, moſt gratious prince. For vnto him, who hath receiued vnder his power & tuition our liues and goods, vnto him (I ſay) doe we make humble ſute, that he would haue reſpect alſo vnto the credit of our nation, ſo iniuriouſly diſgraced.

Yea verily (moſt gracious King) we are conſtreined to craue your Maieſties mercifull aide, not onely in this matter, but in many other things alſo, which are wanting in our countrey, or which otherwiſe belong to the publique commoditie and welfare thereof: which not by me, but by the letters ſupplicatory of the chiefe men of our nation, are at this time declared, or will ſhortly be declared. For we doubt not but that your ſacred Maieſtie, after the example of your Chriſtian predeceſſors, will vouchſafe vnto our countrey alſo, amongſt other Iſlands of your Maieſties dominion, your kingly care and protection. For as the neceſſitie of fleeing for redreſſe vnto your ſacred Maieſtie, is ours: ſo the glory of relieuing, regarding, and protecting vs, ſhal wholy redound vnto your ſacred Maieſtie: as alſo, there is layd vp for you, in reſpect of your foſtering and preſeruing of Gods church, vpon the extreme northerly parts almoſt of the whole earth, and in the vttermoſt bounds of your Maieſties dominion (which by the ſingular goodnes of God, enioyeth at this preſent tranquillitie and quiet ſafetie) a reward and crowne of immortall life in the heauens.

But conſidering theſe things are not proper to this place, I will leaue them, and returne to my purpoſe which I haue in hand: moſt humbly beſeeching your S. M. that you would of your clemencie vouchſafe to become a fauourer and patron vnto theſe my labours and ſtudies, for the behalfe of my countrey.

It now remaineth (moſt gracious and mercifull ſoueraigne) for vs to make our humble prayers vnto almighty God, that king of kings, and diſpoſer of all humane affaires, that it would pleaſe him of his infinite goodnes, to aduance your Maieſtie (yearely growing vp in wiſedome & experience, and all other heroicall vertues) to the higheſt pitch of ſoueraigntie: and being aduanced, continually to bleſſe you with moſt proſperous ſucceſſe in all your affaires: and being bleſſed, long to preſerue you, as the chiefe ornament, defence and ſafegarde of theſe kingdomes, and as the ſhield and fortreſſe of his church: and hereafter in the life to come, to make you ſhine glorious like a ſtarre, amongſt the principall nurcing fathers of Gods Church, in the perfect ioy of his heauenly kingdome. The ſame moſt mercifull father likewiſe grant, that theſe praiers, the oftener they be daily repeated and multiplied in euery corner of your Maieſties moſt ample territories & Iſlands, ſo much the more ſure and certaine they may remaine, Amen. At Hafnia, or Copen Hagen 1593. in the moneth of March.

moſt humble ſubiect,

Arngrimus Ionas, Iſlander.

To

To the courteous and Chriſtian reader Gudbrandus Thorlacius, Biſhop of Holen in Iſland, wiſheth health.

THere came to light about the yeare of Chriſt 1561, a very deformed impe, begotten by a certain Pedlar of Germany: namely a booke of German rimes, of al that euer were read the moſt filthy and moſt ſlanderous againſt the nation of Iſland. Neither did it ſuffice the baſe printer once to ſend abroad that baſe brat, but he muſt publiſh it alſo thriſe or foure times ouer: that he might thereby, what lay in him, more deepely diſgrace our innocent nation among the Germans, & Danes, and other neighbour countries, with ſhamefull, and euerlaſting ignominie, So great was the malice of this printer, & his deſire ſo greedy to get lucre, by a thing vnlawfull. And this he did without controlment, euen in that citie, which theſe many yeres hath trafficked with Iſland to the great gaine, and commodity of the citizens. His name is Ioachimus Leo, a man worthy to become lions foode.

Great errors grow vpon mariners fabulous reports.

Moreouer, there are many other writers found, who when they would ſeeme to deſcribe the miracles of nature, which are thought to be very many in this Iſland, & the maners, & cuſtoms of the Iſlanders, haue altogether ſwarued from the matter and truth it ſelfe, following mariners fables more trifling then old wiues tales, & the moſt vain opinions of the common ſort. Theſe writers, although they haue not left behind them ſuch filthy & reprochful ſtuffe as that baſe rimer: yet there are many things in their writings that wil not ſuffer them to be excuſed, & altogether acquited from cauſing an innocent nation to be had in deriſion by others. Wherefore marking, reading, & weighing theſe things with my ſelfe, & conſidering that there dayly ſpring vp new writers, which offer iniury to the fame & reputatiō of the Iſlanders, being ſuch men alſo as do ſhameleſly filtch out of other mens labours, deluding their readers ẇ feined deſcriptions, & a new rehearſal of monſters, I often wiſhed that ſome one man would come forth, to make anſwere to the errors of hiſtoriographers & other vniuſt cenſurers; and by ſome writing, if not to free our innocent nation from ſo many reproches, yet at leaſtwiſe, in ſome ſort to defend it, among chriſtian & friendly readers. And for this cauſe I haue now procured an honeſt and learned young man one Arngrimus Fitz-Ionas, to peruſe the works of authors, that haue written any thing concerning Iſland, and by ſound reaſons to detect their errors, & falſhoods. And albeit at the firſt he was very loth, yet at length my friendly admonition, & the common loue of his countrey preuailed with him ſo farre, that he compiled this briefe commentary, taking his proofes, not out of the vaine fables of the people, but from his owne experience, and many other mens alſo of ſufficient credit,

Now, he that vndertooke this matter at my procurement, did againe as it were by his owne authority chalēge at my hands, that I ſhould in two or three words at leaſt, make a preface vnto his booke; thinking it might gaine ſome credit, and authority thereby. Wherfore to ſpeake my minde in a word: for my part, I iudge him to haue taken both honeſt & neceſſary paines, who hath done his indeuour not onely to weigh the diuers opinions of wrighters concerning things vnknowen, and to examine them by the cenſure of trueth, and experience, but alſo to defend his countrey from the venemous bitings of certaine ſycophants. It is thy part therefore (gentle reader) to accept this ſmall treatiſe of his, being as it were guarded with the ſacred loue of truth, and of his countrey, againſt the peruerſnes of carpers. Farewel. Anno 1592. Iulij 29.

EUen as in war, dayly experience teacheth vs, that ſome vpon no iuſt & lawful grounds (being egged on by ambition, enuie, and couetiſe) are induced to follow the armie, and on the contrary ſide, that others arme themſelues vpon iuſt and neceſſary cauſes: namely ſuch as go to battell for the defence and propagation of the Goſpel, or ſuch as being any way prouoked thereunto, doe withſtand preſent violence and wrong, or at leaſt (not being prouoked) by reaſon of the enemie approching are conſtrained, to be vp in armes: right ſo, they that fight vnder Apolloes banner. Amongſt whom, a great part, not vpon any honeſt, philoſophical, or intere Chriſtian intention, addreſſe themſelues to wright: eſpecially ſuch as for deſire of glory, for enuy and ſpight, or vpon malicious and affected ignorance, carpe at others: and, that they may be accompted ſuperiours, ſometimes whette their ſtiles againſt the perſon, name and fame of this or that particular man, ſometimes inueighing againſt a whole countrey, and by ſhameleſſe vntrueths diſgracing innocent nations and people. Againe, others of an ingenuous minde, doe by great induſtry, ſearch and bring to light things profitable:

namely, they that write of Diuinity, Philoſophy, Hiſtory and ſuch like: and they who (taking vſe and experience for their guides) in the ſaid Sciences haue brought things obſcure to light, things maimed to perfection, and things confuſed to order: and they that haue faithfully commended to euerlaſting poſteritie, the ſtories of the whole world: that by their infinite labours haue aduanced the knowledge of tongues: to be ſhort, that endeuour themſelues to repreſſe the inſolencie, confute the ſlanders, and withſtand the vniuſt violence of others, againſt themſelues, their Nation or their Countrey.

And I for my part, hauing ſcarce attained the ſight of good letters, and being the meaneſt of all the followers of Minerua (that I may freely acknowledge mine owne wants) can do no leſſe then become one of their number, who haue applied themſelues to ridde their countrey from diſhonor, to auouch the trueth, and to ſhake off the yoke of railers & reuilers. My eſtate enabled me onely to write; howbeit the excellencie of trueth, and the in-bred affection I beare to my countrey enforceth me to do the beſt I can: ſithens it hath pleaſed ſome ſtrangers by falſe rumours to deface, and by manifolde reproches to iniurie my ſayd countrey, making it a by-word, and a laughing-ſtocke to all other nations. To meet with whoſe inſolencie and falſe accuſations, as alſo to detect the errours of certeine writers concerning this Iland, vnto good and well affected men (for the common people will be alwayes like themſelues, ſtubburnly mainteining that which is falſe and fooliſh, neither can I hope to remooue them from this accuſtomed and ſtale opinion) I haue penned the treatiſe following.

And albeit Iſland is not deſtitute of many excellent men, who, both in age, wit, and learning, are by many degrees my ſuperiors, and therefore more fit to take the defence of the countrey into their hands: notwithſtanding, being earneſtly perſwaded thereunto, by that godly & famous man Gudbrandus Thorlacius Biſhop of Hola in Iſland, I thought good (to the vtmoſt of mine abilitie) to be no whit wanting vnto the common cauſe: both that I might obey his moſt reaſonable requeſt, and alſo that I might encourage other of my countreymen, who haue bene better trained vp in good learning, and indued with a greater meaſure of knowledge then I my ſelfe, to the defence of this our nation: ſo farre am I from hindering any man to vndertake the like enterpriſe.

But to returne to the matter, becauſe they (whatſoeuer they be) that reproch and maligne our nation, make their boaſt that they vſe the teſtimonies of writers: we are ſeriouſly to conſider, what things, and how true, writers haue reported of Iſland, to the end that if they haue giuen (perhaps) any occaſion to others of inueying againſt vs, their errours being layd open (for I will not ſpeake more ſharpely) all the world may ſee how iuſtly they do reproch vs. And albeit I nothing doubt to examine ſome ancient writers of this Iland, by the rule of trueth and experience: yet (otherwiſe) their memory is precious in our eyes, their dignity reuerend, their learning to be had in honour, and their zeale and affection towards the whole common wealth of learned men, highly to be commended: but as for nouices (if there be any ſuch writers or rather paſquillers) when they ſhall heare and know truer matters concerning Iſland, then they themſelues haue written, they ſhall ſeeme by their inconſtancie and peruerſe wit to haue gained naught elſe but a blacke marke of enuy and reproch.

And that this commentarie of mine may haue ſome order, it ſhall be diuided into two generall parts: the firſt of the Iland, the ſecond of the inhabitants: and of theſe two but ſo farre forth as thoſe writers which are come to our hands haue left recorded: becauſe I am not determined to wander out of theſe liſts, or to handle more then theſe things and ſome other which pertaine vnto them. For I profeſſe not my ſelfe an Hiſtoriographer, or Geographer, but onely a Diſputer. Wherefore omitting a longer Preface, let vs come to the firſt part concerning the ſituation, the name, miracles, and certaine other adiuncts of this Iland.

The firſt Section.

The Iſle of Iſland being ſeuered from other countreys an infinite diſtance, ſtandeth farre into the Ocean, and is ſcarſe knowen vnto Sailers.

Munſterus lib. 4. coſmographie.

Albeit a diſcourſe of thoſe things which concerne the land, and the adiuncts or properties thereof be of little moment to defend the nation or inhabitants from the biting of ſlanderers, yet ſeemeth it in no caſe to be omitted, but to be intreated of in the firſt place, that the friendly reader perceiuing how truely thoſe writers of Iſland haue reported in this ſubiect, may thereby alſo eaſily iudge what credit is to be giuen vnto them in other matters which they haue left written concerning the inhabitants, and which others haue receiued from them as oracles, from whence (as they ſay) they haue borrowed ſcoffes and taunts againſt our nation.

Firſt therefore, that the diſtance of Iſland from other countreys is not infinite, nor indeed ſo great as men commonly imagine, it might eaſily be prouided, if one did but in ſome ſort know the true longitude & latitude of the ſaid Iland. For I am of opinion that it cannot exactly be knowen any other way then this, whenas it is manifeſt how the Mariners courſe (be it neuer ſo direct, as they ſuppoſe) doth at all times ſwerue. In ẏ meane while therfore I will ſet downe diuers opinions of authors, concerning ẏ ſituation of Iſland, that from hence euery man may gather that of the diſtance which ſeemeth moſt probable; vntil perhaps my ſelfe being one day taught by mine owne experience, may, if not intrude, yet at leaſt adioin, what I ſhal thinke true as touching this matter.

There be others alſo, who either in their maps, or writings haue noted the ſituation of Iſland: notwithſtanding it is to no purpoſe to ſet downe any more of their opinions, becauſe the more you haue, the more contrary ſhall you finde them. For my part, albeit I haue probable coniectures perſwading me not to beleeue any of the former opinions, concerning the ſituation of Iſland, but to diſſent from them all: yet had I rather leaue the matter in ſuſpenſe then affirme an vncerteinty, vntill (as I haue ſayd) I may be able perhappes one day not to geſſe at the matter, but to bring forth mine owne obſeruation, and experience.

A certaine writer hath put downe the diſtance betweene the mouth of Elbe & Barzende in the South part of Iſland to be 400 leagues: from whence if you ſhall account the difference of longitude to the meridian of Hamburg, Iſland muſt haue none of the forenamed longitudes in that place. I am able to proue by three ſundry voyages of certaine Hamburgers, that it is but ſeuen dayes ſailing from Iſland to Hamburg. Beſides all thoſe Iſlands, which by reaſon of the abundance of ſheepe, are called Fareyiar, or more rightly Faareyiar, as likewiſe the deſert ſhores of Norway, are diſtant from vs but two dayes ſailing. We haue foure dayes ſailing into habitable Gronland: and almoſt in the ſame quantitie of time we paſſe ouer to the prouince of Norway, called Scad, lying betweene the townes of Nidroſia or Trondon, and Bergen, as we finde in the ancient records of theſe nations.

Seuen dayes ſailing from Iſland to Hamburg. Iſland but two dayes ſailing diſtant from Faar-Iſlands, & from the deſert ſhores of Norway.

The ſecond ſection.

In this Iland, at the Summer ſolſtitium, the Sun paſſing thorow the ſigne of Cancer, there is no night, and therefore at the Winter ſolſtitium there is no day. Alſo: Vadianus. But in that Iland, which farre within the arctic circle is ſeated in the maine Ocean, at this day called Iſland, and next vnto the lands of the frozen ſea, which they call Engroneland, there be many monethes in the yere without nights.

Munſterus, Olaus Magnus and others.

AT the ſolſtitium of winter, that there is no day (that is to ſay, no time, wherein the Sunne is ſeene aboue the horizon) we confeſſe to be true onely in that angle of Iſland (if there be any ſuch angle) where the pole is eleuated full 67 degrees. But at Holen (which is the biſhops ſeat for the North part of Iſland, and lieth in a moſt deepe valley) the latitude is about 65 degrees and 44 minutes, as I am enformed by the reuerend father, Gudbrand, biſhop of that place: and yet there, the ſhorteſt day in all the yere is at leaſt two houres long, and in South-Iſland longer, as it appeareth by the tables of Mathematicians. Wherevpon it is manifeſt, firſt that Iſland is not ſituate beyond the arctic circle : ſecondly, that in Iſland there are not wanting in Summer ſolſtitium many nights, nor in Winter ſolſtitium many dayes.

Iſland is not within the circle arctic.

The third ſection.

It is named of the ice which continually cleaueth vnto the North part thereof. Another writeth: From the Weſt part of Norway there lieth an Iland which is named of the ice, enuironed with an huge ſea, and being a countrey of ancient habitation, &c. Zieglerus. This is Thyle, whereof moſt of the ancient writers haue made mention.

Munſterus. Saxo.

IT is named of ice, &c. Iſland hath beene called by three names, one after another. For one Naddocus a Noruagian borne, who is thought to be the firſt Diſcouerer of the ſame, as he was ſailing towards the Faar-Ilands, through a violent tempeſt did by chance arriue at the Eaſt ſhore of Iſland; where ſtaying with his whole company certaine weeks, he beheld abundance of ſnow couering the tops of the mountaines, and thereupon, in regard of the ſnow, called this Iland Sneland. After him one Gardarus, being mooued thereunto by the report which Naddocus gaue out concerning Iſland, went to ſeeke the ſayd Iland; who, when he had found it, called it after his owne name Gardarſ-holme, that is to ſay, Gardars Iſle. There were more alſo deſirous to viſit this new land. For after the two former, a certaine third Noruagian, called Flok, went into Iſland, and named it of the ice, wherewith he ſaw it enuironed.

Iſland firſt diſcouered by Naddocus in a tempeſt.

Sneland.

Gardarſholme.

Iſland.

Of ancient habitation, &c. I gather not this opinion out of theſe wordes of Saxo (as ſome men do) that Iſland hath bene inhabited from the beginning, or (to ſpeake in one word) that the people of Iſland were autochthones, that is, earth-bred, or bred out of their owne ſoile like vnto trees and herbs; ſithens it is euident, that this Iland ſcarſe began to be inhabited no longer agoe then about 718 yeres ſince.

This is Thyle, &c. Grammarians wrangle about this name, and as yet the controuerſie is not decided. Which notwithſtanding, I thinke might eaſily grow to compoſition, if men would vnderſtand that this Iland was firſt inhabited about the yeere of our Lord 874. Vnleſſe ſome man will ſay that Thule King of Aegypt (who, as it is thought, gaue this name thereunto) paſſed ſo farre vnto an Iland, which was at that time vntilled, and deſtitute of inhabitants. Againe, if any man will denie this, he may for all me, that it may ſeeme to be but a dreame, while they are diſtracted into ſo many contrary opinions. One affirmes that it is Iſland: another, that it is a certeine Iland, where trees beare fruit twiſe in a yeere: the third, that it is one of the Orcades, or the laſt Iland of the Scotiſh dominion, as Iohannes Myritius and others, calling it by the name of Thylenſey, which Virgil alſo ſeemeth to haue meant by his vltima Thyle. If beyond the Britans (by which name the Engliſh men and Scots onely at this day are called) he imagined none other nation to inhabit. Which is euident out of that verſe of Virgil in his firſt Eclogue:

> And Britans whole from all the world diuided.

The fourth writeth, that it is one of of the Faar-Ilands: the fift, that it is Telemark in Norway: the ſixt, that it is Schrichfinnia.

Which continually cleaueth to the North part of the Iland. That clauſe that ice continually cleaueth &c. or as Munſter affirmeth a little after, that it cleaueth for the ſpace of eight whole moneths, are neither of them both true, when as for the moſt part the ice is thawed in the moneth of April or May, and is driuen towards the Weſt: neither doth it returne before Ianuarie or Februarie, nay often times it commeth later. What if a man ſhould recken vp many yeeres, wherein ice (the ſharpe ſcourge of this our nation) hath not at all bene ſeene about Iſland? which was found to be true this preſent yeere 1592. Heereupon it is manifeſt how truely Friſius hath written that nauigation to this Iland lieth open onely for foure moneths in a yeere, and no longer, by reaſon of the ice and colde, whereby the paſſage is ſhut vp, when as Engliſh ſhips euery yere, ſometimes in March, ſometimes in April, and ſome of them in May; the Germans and Danes, in May and Iune, doe vſually returne vnto vs, and ſome of them depart not againe from hence till Auguſt. But the laſt yere, being 1591, there lay a certeine ſhippe of Germanie laden with Copper within the hauen of Vopnafiord in the coaſt of Iſland about fourteene dayes in the moneth of Nouember, which time being expired, ſhe fortunately ſet ſaile. Wherefore, ſeeing that ice, neither continually, nor yet eight moneths cleaueth vnto Iſland, Munſter and Friſius are much deceiued.

The ice of Iſeland ſet always to the Weſt.

No ice at all ſome yeeres in Iſland.

Nauigation open to Iſland from March till the midſt of Nouember.

The fourth ſection.

The Iland is ſo great that it conteineth many people. Item Zieglerus ſayth: The ſituation of the Iland is extended betweene the South and the North almoſt 200 leagues in length.

Krantzius. Munſterus.

SO great, &c. One Wilſtenius ſchoolemaſter of Oldenburg, in the yere 1591, ſent vnto mine Uncle in Weſt-Iſland, a ſhort treatiſe which he had gathered out of the fragments of ſundrie writers, concerning Iſland. Where we found thus written : Iſland is twiſe as great as Sicilie, &c. But Sicilie, according to Munſter, hath 150 Germaine miles in compaſſe. As for the circuit of our Iland, although it be not exactly knowen vnto vs, yet the ancient, conſtant, and receiued opinion of the inhabitants accounteth it 144 leagues; namely by the 12 promontories of Iſland, which are commonly knowen, being diſtant one from another 12 leagues or thereabout, which two numbers being multiplied, produce the whole ſumme.

Iſland 144 Germaine miles in compaſſe.

Many people.&c. One Gyſſerus about the yere of our Lord 1090, being biſhop of Schalholten in Iſland, cauſed all the huſbandmen, or countreymen of the Iland, who, in regard of their poſſeſſions were bound to pay tribute to the king, to be numbred (omitting the poorer ſort with women, and the meaner ſort of the communalty) and he found in the Eaſt part of Iſland 700, in the South part 1000, in the Weſt part 1100, in the North part 1200, to the number of 4000 inhabitants paying tribute. Now if any man will trie, he ſhall finde that more then halfe the Iland was at that time vnpeopled.

The fifth ſection.

Munſter. Friſius. Zieglerus.

The Iland, moſt part thereof, is mountainous and vntilled. But that part which is plaine doth greatly abound with fodder, which is ſo ranke, that they are faine to driue their cattell from the paſture, leaſt they ſurfet or be choaked.

That danger of ſurfetting or choaking was neuer heard tell of, in our fathers, grandfathers, great-grandfathers or any of our predeceſſours dayes, be they neuer ſo ancient.

The ſixth ſection.

Munſterus. Friſius.

There be in this Iland mountaines liſt vp to the skies, whoſe tops being white with perpetuall ſnowe, their roots boile with euerlaſting fire. The firſt is towards the Weſt, called Hecla: the other the mountaine of the croſſe : and the third Helga. Item : Zieglerus. The rocke or promontorie of Hecla boileth with continuall fire. Item : Saxo. There is in this Iland alſo a mountaine, which reſembling the ſtarrie firmament, with perpetuall flaſhings of fire, continueth alwayes burning, by vnceſſant belching out of flames.

MVnſter and Friſius being about to report the woonders of Iſland doe preſently ſtumble, as it were, vpon the threſholde, to the great inconuenience of them both. For that which they heere affirme of mount Hecla, although it hath ſome ſhew of trueth : notwithſtanding concerning the other two mountaines, that they ſhould burne with perpetuall fire, it is a manifeſt errour. For there are no ſuch mountaines to be found in Iſland, nor yet any thing els (ſo farre foorth as wee can imagine) which might miniſter occaſion of ſo great an errour vnto writers. Howbeit there was ſeene (yet very lately) in the yeere 1581 out of a certaine mountaine of South Iſland lying neere the Sea, and couered ouer with continuall ſnow and froſt, a maruellous eruption of ſmoake and fire, caſting vp abundance of ſtones and aſhes. But this mountaine is farre from the other three, which the ſayd authours doe mention. Howbeit, ſuppoſe that theſe things be true which they report of firie mountaines : is it poſſible therefore that they ſhould ſeeme ſtrange, or monſtrous, whenas they proceed from naturall cauſes ? What ? Doe they any whit preuaile to eſtabliſh that opinion concerning the hell of Iſland, which followeth next after in Munſter, Ziegler, and Friſius? For my part, I thinke it no way tollerable, that men ſhould abuſe theſe, and the like miracles of nature, to auouch abſurdities, or, that they ſhould with a kinde of impietie woonder at them, as at matters impoſſible. As though in theſe kindes of inflammations, there did not concurre cauſes of ſufficient force for the ſame purpoſe. There is in the rootes of theſe mountaines a matter moſt apt to be ſet on fire, comming ſo neere as it doeth to the nature of brimſtone and pitch. There is ayer alſo, which inſinuating it ſelfe by paſſages, and holes, into the very bowels of the earth, doeth puffe vp the nouriſhment of ſo huge a fire, together with Salt-peter, by which puffing (as it were with certeine bellowes) a moſt ardent flame is kindled. For, all theſe thus concurring, fire hath thoſe three things, which neceſſarily make it burne, that is to ſay, matter, motion, and force of making paſſage : matter which is fattie and moyſt, and therefore nouriſheth laſting flames : motion which the ayer doeth performe, being admitted into the caues of the earth : force of making paſſage, and that the inuincible might of fire it ſelfe (which can not be without inſpiration of ayre, and can not but breake foorth with an incredible ſtrength) doeth bring to paſſe : and ſo (euen as in vndermining trenches, and engines or great warrelike ordinance, huge yron bullets are caſt foorth with monſtrous roaring, and cracking, by the force of kindled Brimſtone, and Salt-peter, whereof Gunne-powder is compounded) ſhingle and great ſtones being ſcorched in that fiery gulfe, as it were in a furnace, together with abundance of ſande and aſhes, are vomited vp and diſcharged, and that for the moſt part not without an earthquake: which, if it commeth from the depth of the earth, (being called by Poſſidonius, Succuſſio) it muſt either be an opening or a quaking. Opening cauſeth the earth in ſome places to gape, and fall a ſunder. By quaking the earth is heaued vp and ſwelleth, and ſometimes (as Plinie ſaith) caſteth out huge heaps: ſuch an earth-quake was the ſame which I euen now mentioned, which in the yere 1581 did ſo ſore trouble the South ſhore of Iſland. And this kinde of earth-quake is moſt clearkely deſcribed by Pontanus in theſe verſes:

Lib.20, cap.20.

The ſtirring breath runnes on with ſtealing ſteppes, vrged now vp, and now enforced downe:
For freedome eke tries all, it ſkips, it leaps, to ridde it ſelfe from vncouth dungeon,
Then quakes the earth as it would burſt anon,
The earth yquakes, and walled cities quiuer,
Strong quarries cracke, and ſtones from hilles doe ſhiuer.

I thought good to adde theſe things, not that I ſuppoſe any man to be ignorant thereof: but leaſt other men ſhould thinke that we are ignorant, and therefore that we will runne after their fables, which they do from hence eſtabliſh. But yet there is ſomewhat more in theſe three fained mountaines of Iſland, which cauſeth the ſayd writers not a little to woonder, namely whereas they ſay that their foundations are alwayes burning, and yet for all that, their toppes be neuer deſtitute of ſnowe. Howbeit, it beſeemeth not the authority and learning of ſuch great clearks to maruelle at this, who can not but well know the flames of mount Aetna, which (according to Plinie) being full of ſnowe all Winter, notwithſtanding (as the ſame man witneſſeth) it doth alwayes burne. Wherefore, if we will giue credit vnto them, euen this mountaine alſo, ſithens it is couered with ſnowe, and yet burneth, muſt be a priſon of vncleane ſoules: which thing they haue not doubted to aſcribe vnto Hecla, in regard of the frozen top, and the firie bottome. And it is no maruelle that fire lurking ſo deepe in the roots of a mountaine, and neuer breaking forth except it be very ſeldome, ſhould not be able continually to melt the ſnowe couering the toppe of the ſayd mountaine. For in Caira (or Capira) alſo, the higheſt toppes of the mountaine are ſayd continually to be white with ſnowe: and thoſe in Veragua likewiſe, which are fiue miles high, and neuer without ſnowe, being diſtant notwithſtanding but onely 10 degrees from the equinoctiall. We haue heard that either of the forſayd Prouinces ſtandeth neere vnto Paria. What, if in Teneriffa (which is one of the Canarie or fortunate Ilands) the Pike ſo called, ariſing into the ayre, according to Munſter, eight or nine Germaine miles in height, and continually flaming like Aetna: yet (as Benzo an Italian, and Hiſtoriographer of the Weſt Indies witneſſeth) is it not able to melt the girdle of ſnowe embracing the middeſt thereof. Which thing, what reaſon haue we more to admire in the mountaine of Hecla? And thus much briefly concerning firie mountaines.

Cardanus.

Now that alſo is to be amended, whereas they write that theſe mountaines are lifted vp euen vnto the ſkies. For they haue no extraordinarie height beyond the other mountaines of Iſland, but eſpecially that third mountaine, called by Munſter Helga, and by vs Helgafel, that is the holy mount, ſtanding iuſt by a monaſtery of the ſame name, being couered with ſnowe, vpon no part thereof in Summer time, neither deſerueth it the name of an high mountaine, but rather of an humble hillocke, neuer yet (as I ſayd in the beginning of this ſection) ſo much as once ſuſpected of burning. Neither yet ought perpetuall ſnowe to be aſcribed to Hecla onely, or to a few others; for Iſland hath very many ſuch ſnowy mountaines, all which the Coſmographer (who hath ſo extolled and admired theſe three) ſhould not eaſily finde out, and reckon vp in a whole yere. And that alſo is not to be omitted, that mount Hecla ſtandeth not towards the Weſt, as Munſter and Ziegler haue noted, but betweene the South and the Eaſt: neither is it an headland, but rather a mid-land hill.

Continueth alwayes burning &c. whoſoeuer they be that haue aſcribed vnto Hecla perpetuall belching out of flames, they are farre beſides the marke: inſomuch that as often as it hath bene enflamed, our countreymen haue recorded it in their yerely Chronicles for a rare accident: namely in the yeeres of Chriſt 1104, 1157, 1222, 1300, 1341, 1362, and 1389: For from that yeere we neuer heard of the burning of this mountaine vntill the yeere 1558, which was the laſt breaking foorth of fire in that mountaine. In the meane time I ſay not that is impoſſible, but that the bottome of the hill may inwardly breed and nouriſh flames, which at certaine ſeaſons (as hath bene heretofore obſerued) haue burſt out, and perhaps may do the like hereafter.

The chronicles of Iſland.

The ſeuenth ſection.

The flame of mount Hecla will not burne towe (which is moſt apt for the wieke of a candle) neither is it quenched with water: and by the ſame force that bullets are diſcharged out of warlike engines with vs, from thence are great ſtones caſt foorth into the aire, by reaſon of the mixture of colde, and fire, and brimſtone. This place is thought of ſome to be the priſon of vncleane ſoules. Item: Zieglerus. This place is the priſon of vncleane ſoules.

Friſius. Munſterus.

WIll not burne towe. Where theſe writers ſhould finde ſuch matters, it is not eaſie to coniecture. For our people are altogether ignorant of them, neither had they euer bene heard of heere among vs, if they had not brought them to light. For there is no man with vs ſo raſhly and fondly curious, that dareth for his life, the hill being on fire, trie any ſuch concluſions, or (to our knowledge) that euer durſt: which notwithſtanding Munſter affirmeth, ſaying: They that are deſirous to contemplate the nature of ſo huge a fire, & for the ſame purpoſe approch vnto the mountaine, are by ſome gulfe ſwallowed vp aliue, &c. which thing (as I ſayd) is altogether vnknowen vnto our nation. Yet there is a booke extant, written in the ancient language of the Noruagians, wherein you may finde ſome miracles of earth, water, fire, and aire, &c. confuſedly written, few of them true, and the moſt part vaine and falſe. Whereupon it eaſily appeareth that it was written long ſince by ſome that were imagined to be great wiſe men in the time of Popery. They called it a royall looking glaſſe: howbeit, in regard of the fond fables, wherewith (but for the moſt part vnder the ſhew of religion and piety, whereby it is more difficult to finde out the couſinage) it doeth all ouer ſwarme, it deſerueth not the name of a looking glaſſe royall, but rather of a popular, and olde wiues looking glaſſe. In this glaſſe there are found certaine figments of the burning of Hecla, not much vnlike theſe which we now entreat of, nor any whit more grounded vpon experience, and for that cauſe to be reiected.

Speculum regale written in the Noruagian tongue.

Whence the fables of Iſland grew.

But that I may not ſeeme ſomewhat foolehardy, for accuſing this royall looking glaſſe of falſhood (not to mention any of thoſe things which it reporteth as leſſe credible) loe heere a few things (friendly reader) which I ſuppoſe deſerue no credit at all.

1 Of a certaine Iſle in Ireland, hauing a church and a pariſh in it, the inhabitants whereof deceaſing are not buried in the earth, but like liuing men, do continually, againſt ſome banke or wall in the Churchyard, ſtand bolt-vpright: neither are they ſubiect to any corruption or downefall: inſomuch that any of the poſteritie may there ſeeke for, and beholde their anceſtors.

2 Of another Iſle of Ireland, where men are not mortall.

3 Of all the earth and trees of Ireland, being of force to reſiſt all poiſons, and to kill ſerpents, and other venimous things, in any countrey whatſoeuer, by the onely vertue and preſence thereof, yea euen without touching.

4 Of a third Iſle of Ireland, that the one halfe thereof became an habitation of deuils, but that the ſayd deuils haue no iuriſdiction ouer the other halfe, by reaſon of a Church there built, although, as the whole Iſle is without inhabitants, ſo this part is continually deſtitute of a Paſtor, and of diuine ſeruice: and that it is ſo by nature.

5 Of a fourth Iſle of Ireland floating vp and downe in an huge lake, the graſſe whereof is a moſt preſent remedy for all kinde of diſeaſes, and that the Iland, at certeine ſeaſons, eſpecially on Sundayes, commeth to the banke of the lake, ſo that any man may then eaſily enter into it, as it were into a ſhippe: which notwithſtanding (ſayth he) deſtiny will not ſuffer any more then one to enter at a time. Furthermore, he reporteth that this Iland euery ſeuenth yere groweth faſt to the banke, ſo that you cannot diſcerne it from firme land: but that into the place thereof there ſucceedeth another, altogether like the former, in nature, quantitie, and vertue: which, from what place it commeth, no man can tell: and that all this happeneth with a kinde of thundering.

6 Of the hunters of Norway who are ſo expert to tame wood (for ſo he ſpeaketh very improperly, whereas vnto wood neither life nor taming can be aſcribed) that wooden pattens of eight elnes long being bound to the ſoles of their feet do cary them with ſo great celeritie euen vpon hie mountaines, that they cannot be outrun, either by the ſwiftnes of hounds and deere, or yet by the flying of birds. And that they will kill nine roes or more at one courſe & with one ſtroke of a dart.

Theſe and ſuch like, concerning Ireland, Norway, Iſland, Gronland, of the miracles of water, and aire, this maſter of fragments hath gathered together into his looking glaſſe: whereby, although he hath made his owne followers wonder, and the common people to be aſtoniſhed, yet hath he miniſtred vnto vs nothing but occaſion of laughter.

But let vs heare Friſius. The flame of mount Hecla (ſayth he) will not burne towe (which is moſt apt matter for the wieke of a candle) neither is it quenched with water. But I ſay that this ſtrange opinion may be confirmed by many reaſons borrowed out of your ſchoole of Philoſophy.

ſophy. For the naturall Philoſophers doe teach, That it is common to all forcible flames to be quenched with dry things, and nouriſhed with moiſte: whereupon, euen blackſmithes, by ſprinckling on of water, vſe to quicken and ſtrengthen their fire. For (ſay they) when fire is more vehement, it is ſtirred vp by colde, and nouriſhed by moiſture, both which qualities doe concurre in water. Item, water is wont to kindle ſkorching fires: becauſe the moiſture it ſelfe, which ariſeth, doth proue more fattie and groſſe, neither is it conſumed by the ſmoke encloſing it, but the fire it ſelfe feedeth vpon the whole ſubſtance thereof, whereby being made purer, and gathering round together, it becommeth then more vehement by reaſon of colde. And therefore alſo wild-fires cannot be quenched with water. Item, There be places abounding with brimſtone and pitch, which burne of their owne accord, the flame wherof cannot be quenched with water. The graund Philoſopher alſo hath affirmed, that fire is nouriſhed by water. Ariſt. 3. de anim. And Plinie, in the ſecond booke of his naturall hiſtorie cap. 110. And Strabo in his 7. booke. In Nympheum there proceedeth a flame out of a rocke, which is kindled with water. The ſame author ſayth: The aſhe continually flouriſheth, couering a burning fountaine. And moreouer that there are ſudden fires at ſome times, euen vpon waters, as namely that the lake of Thraſumenus in the field of Perugi, was all on fire, as the ſame Strabo witneſſeth. And in the yeares 1226, and 1236, not farre from the promontorie of Iſlande called Reykians, a flame of fire brake forth out of the ſea. Yea euen vpon mens bodies ſudden fires haue glittered: as namely, there ſprang a flame from the head of Seruius Tullius lying a ſleepe: and alſo Lucius Martius in Spaine after the death of the Scipions, making an oration to his ſouldiers, and exhorting them to reuenge, was all in a flame, as Valerius Antias doth report. Plinie in like ſort maketh mention of a flame in a certaine mountaine, which, as it is kindled with water, ſo is it quenched with earth or haye: alſo of another field which burneth not the leaues of ſhadie trees that growe directly ouer it. Theſe things being thus, it is ſtrange that men ſhould accompt that a wonder in Hecla onely (for I will graunt it to be, for diſputation ſake, when indeede there is no ſuch matter ſo farre foorth as euer I could learne of any man) which is common to manie other parts or places in the world, both hilly and plaine, as well as to this.

And by the ſame force that bullets, &c. Munſter ſaith the like alſo. This mountaine when it rageth, it ſoundeth like dreadfull thunder, caſteth forth huge ſtones, diſgorgeth brimſtone, and with the cinders that are blowen abroad, it couereth ſo much ground round about it, that no man can inhabite within 20. miles thereof, &c. Howbeit, they ought to haue compared it with Aetna, or with other fierie mountaines, whereof I will preſently make mention, ſeeing there is to be found in them, not onely a like accident, but in a manner the very ſame. Unleſſe perhaps this be the difference, that flames brake ſeldomer out of Hecla, then out of other mountaines of the ſame kinde. For it hath now reſted theſe 34. yeares full out, the laſt fierie breach being made in the yeare 1558. as we haue before noted. And there can no ſuch wonders be affirmed of our Hecla, but the ſame or greater are to be aſcribed vnto other burning mountaines, as it ſhall by and by appeare. Priſon.

But that brimſtone ſhould be ſent foorth it is a meere fable, and neuer knowen vnto our nation, by any experiment.

This place is the priſon of vncleane ſoules. Here I am conſtrained to vſe a preface, and to craue pardon of the Reader, becauſe, whereas in the beginning I propounded vnto my ſelfe to treat of the land, and of the inhabitants diſtinctly by themſelues, I muſt of neceſſitie confuſedly handle certaine matters in this firſt part, which do properly belong vnto the ſecond. This is come to paſſe through the fault of theſe writers, who haue confounded this part of the inhabitants religion concerning the opinion of hell, or of the infernall priſon, with the ſituation & miracles of the iſland. Wherfore that we may come to this matter, who can but wonder, that wiſe men ſhould be growen to this point, not onely to liſten after, but euen to follow and embrace the dotings of the rude people? For the common ſort of ſtrangers, and the off-ſkowring of mariners (here I do except them of better iudgement aſwell mariners as others) hearing of this rare miracle of nature, by an inbred and naturall blockiſhneſſe are carried to this imagination of the priſon of ſoules: and that becauſe they ſee no wood nor any ſuch fewell layed vpon this fire as they haue in their owne chimneys at home. And by this perſwaſion of the groſſe multitude, the report grew ſtrong, eſpecially (as they are too much accuſtomed to banning and curſing) while one would wiſh to another the firie torments of this mountaine. As though elementarie, materiall, and viſible fire could conſume mens ſoules being ſpirituall, bodileſſe, and inuiſible ſubſtances. And to be ſhort, who can but woonder, why they ſhould not faine the ſame priſon of damned ſoules, aſwell in mount Aetna, being no leſſe famous for fires and inflamations then this? But you will ſay, that Pope Gregorie fained it ſo to be. Therefore it is purgatorie. I am content it ſhould be ſo: then there is the ſame trueth of this priſon that there is of purgatorie. But before I proceede any further I thinke it not amiſſe to tell a merie tale, which w[illegible] the originall and ground of this helliſh opinion: namely that a ſhip of certaine ſtrangers departing from Iſland, vnder full ſaile, a moſt ſwift pace, going directly on her courſe, met with another ſhip ſailing againſt winde & weather, and the force of the tempeſt as ſwiftly as themſelues, who hailing them of whence they were, anſwere was giuen by their gouernour, De Biſchop van Bremen: being the ſecond time asked whether they were bound? he anſwered, Thom Heckelfeld tho, Thom Heckelfeld tho. I am affeard leſt the reader at the ſight of theſe things ſhould call for a baſon: for it is ſuch an abominable lie, that it would make a man caſt his gorge to heare it. Away with it therefore to fenny frogs, for we eſteeme no more of it, then of their croaking coax coax. Nay, it is ſo palpable that it is not worthy to be ſmiled at, much leſſe to be refuted. But I will not trifle any longer with the fond Papiſts: let vs rather come vnto our owne writers.

And firſt of all I cannot here omit a ſaying of that moſt worthie man Doctor Caſpar Peucer. There is in Iſlande (quoth he) mount Hecla, being of as dreadfull a depth as any vaſte gulfe, or as hell it ſelfe, which reſoundeth with lamentable, & miſerable yellings, that the noiſe of the cryers may be heard for the ſpace of a great league round about. Great ſwarmes of vgly blacke Rauens and Vultures lie hoouering about this place which are thought of the inhabitantes to neſtle there. The common people of that countrey are verily perſwaded, that there is a deſcent downe into hell by this gulfe: and therefore when any battailes are foughten elſe where, in whatſoeuer part of the whole world, or any bloudie ſlaughters are committed, they haue learned by long experience, what horrible tumults and out-cryes, what monſtrous ſkritches are heard round about this mountaine. Who durſt be ſo bold (moſt learned Sir) to bring ſuch an incredible report to your eares? Neither hath Iſland any Vultures, but that ſecond kinde of Eagles, which Plinie noted by their white tayles, and called them Pygargi: neither are there any with vs, that can beare witneſſe of the foreſaid ſpectacle: nor yet is it likely that Rauens and Eagles would neſtle in that place, when as they ſhould rather be driuen from thence by fire and ſmoke, being things moſt contrarie to their nature. And yet notwithſtanding for proofe of this matter, as alſo of a ſtrange tumult heard within the hollow of the mountaine, they allege the experience of the inhabitants, which indeede teſtifieth all things to the contrarie. But whereabout ſhould that hole or windowe of the mountaine be, by the which we may heare outcries, noyſe and tumults done among them, who inhabite the moſt contrarie, diſtant, and remote places of the earth from vs? Concerning which thing I would aske the author of this fable many queſtions, if I might but come to the knowledge of him: in the meane time I could wiſh that from henceforth he would learne to tell troth, & not preſume with ſo impudent a face to enforme excellent Peucer, or others, of ſuch vnknowen and incredible matters.

But to returne to Munſter, who endeuouring to ſearch out the cauſes of the great and ſtrange fire of that famous hill Aetna, is it not monſtrous that the very ſame thing which he there maketh natural, he ſhould here imagine to be preternaturall, yea infernal? But why do I ſpeake of Aetna? Let vs rather conſider what Munſter in another place thinketh of the burning of Hecla.

Munſterus Coſmograph. vniuerſalis lib. 1. cap. 7.

It is without doubt (ſaith he) that ſome mountaines and fields burned in old time throughout the whole world: and in this our age do burne. As for example: mount Hecla in Iſland at certaine ſeaſons caſteth abroad great ſtones, ſpitteth out brimſtone, and diſperſeth aſhes, for ſuch a diſtance round about, that the land cannot be inhabited within 20. miles thereof. But where mountaines do continually burne we vnderſtand that there is no ſtopping of the paſſages, wherby they poure forth abundance of fire ſometime flaming, & ſometime ſmoaking as it were a ſtreaming flood. But if betweene times the fire encreaſeth, all ſecret paſſages being ſhut vp, the inner parts of the mountaine are notwithſtanding enflamed. The fire in the vpper part, for want of matter, ſomewhat abateth for the time. But when a more vehement ſpirite (the ſame, or other paſſages being ſet open again) doth with great violence breake priſon, it caſteth forth aſhes, ſand, brimſtone, pumiſtones, lumpes reſembling iron, great ſtones, & much other matter, not without the domage of the whole region adioyning. Thus farre Munſter. Where conſider (good Reader) how he cutteth his throat with his owne ſword, conſider (I ſay) that in this place there is the very ſame opinion of the burning of Hecla, & the burning of Aetna, which notwithſtanding in his 4. booke is very diuerſe, for there he is faine to run to infernall cauſes. A certaine fierie mountaine of Weſt India hath farre more friendly cenſurers, & hiſtoriographers then our Hecla, who make not an infernall gulfe therof. The Hiſtory of which mountain (becauſe it is ſhort & ſweete) I will ſet downe, being written by Hieronimus Benzo an Italian, in his hiſtory of the new world, lib. 2. Theſe be the words. About 35. miles diſtant from Leon there is a mountaine which at a great hole belcheth out ſuch mightie balles of flames, that in the night they ſhine farre and neare, aboue 100. miles. Some were of opinion that within it was molten gold miniſtring continuall matter & nouriſhment for the fire. Hereupon a certain Dominican Frier, determining to make trial of the matter, cauſed a braſſe kettle, & an irō chain to be made: afterward aſcending to the top of the hill with 4. other Spaniards, he letteth downe the chaine & the kettle 140. elnes into the fornace: there, by extreme heate of the fire, the kettle, & part of the chaine melted. The monke in a rage ran back to Leon, & chid the ſmith, becauſe he had made the chaine far more ſlender then himſelfe had cōmanded. The ſmith hammers out another of more ſubſtance & ſtrength then the former. The Monke returnes to the mountains, and lets downe the chaine & the cauldron: but with the like ſucceſſe that he had before. Neither did the caldrō only vaniſh & melt away: but alſo, vpon the ſudden there came out of the depth a flame of fire, which had almoſt cōſumed the Frier, & his companions. Then they all returned ſo aſtoniſhed, that they had ſmall liſt afterward to proſecute that attempt, &c. What great difference is there betweene theſe two cenſures? In a fiery hill of Weſt India they ſearch for gold: but in mount Hecla of Iſland they ſeeke for hel. Howbeit they will perhaps reiect this as a thing too new, & altogether vnknowen to ancient writers. Why therefore haue not writers imagined the ſame priſon of ſoules to be in Chimæra an hill in Lycia (which, by report, flameth continually day and night) that is in mount Hecla of Iſland? Why haue they not imagined the ſame to be in the mountaines of Epheſus, which being touched with a burning torch, are reported to conceiue ſo much fire, that the very ſtones & ſand lying in the water are cauſed to burne, & from the which (a ſtaffe being burnt vpon them, & trailed after a man on the ground) there proceede whole riuers of fire, as Plinie teſtifieth? Why not in Cophantrus a mountaine of Bactria, alwayes burning in the night? Why not in the Iſle of Hiera, flaming in the midſt of the ſea? Why not in Aeolia in old time likewiſe burning for certaine daies in the midſt of the ſea? Why not in the field of Babylon burning in the day ſeaſon? Why not in the fields of Aethiopia glittering alwaies like ſtars in the night? Why not in the hill of Lipara opening with a wide and bottomleſſe gulfe (as Ariſtotle beareth record) whereunto it is dangerous to approch in the night: frō whence the ſound of Cymbals and the noyſe of rattles, with vnwonted and vncouth laughters are heard? Why not in the field of Naples, neare vnto Puteoli? Why not in the Pike of Teneriffa before mentioned, like Aetna continually burning and caſting vp ſtones into the aier, as Munſter himſelfe witneſſeth? Why not in that Aethiopian hill, which Plinie affirmeth to burne more then all the former? And to conclude, why not in the mountaine of Veſuuius, which (to the great damage of al the countrey adioyning, & to the vtter deſtruction of Caius Plinius prying into ẏ cauſes of ſo ſtrange a fire) vomiting out flames as high as the clouds, filling the aire with great abundance of pumiſtones, and aſhes, & with palpable darkneſſe intercepting the light of the ſunne from al the region thereabout? I wil ſpeake, & yet ſpeake no more then the truth: becauſe in deede they foreſaw, that men would yeeld no credite to thoſe things as being too well knowen, though they ſhould haue feined them to haue beene the flames of hell: but they thought the burning of Hecla (the rumor whereof came more ſlowly to their eares) to be fitter for the eſtabliſhing of this fond fable. But get ye packing, your fraud is found out: leaue off for ſhame hereafter to perſwade any ſimple man, ẏ there is a hel in mount Hecla. For nature hath taught both vs & others (maugre your opinion) to acknowledge her operations in theſe fire workes, not the fury of hell. But now let vs examine a few more ſuch fables of ẏ cōmō people, which haue ſo vnhappily miſled our hiſtoriographers & coſmographers.

The eight ſection.

Friſius.
Ziglerus.
Olaus magnus.

Neare vnto the mountaines (the 3. fornamed Hecla &c.) there be three vaſte holes, the depth whereof, eſpecially at mount Hecla, cannot be diſcerned by any man, be he neuer ſo ſharpe ſighted: but there appeare to the beholders thereof certaine men at that inſtant plunged in, & as yet drawing their breath, who anſwere their friends (exhorting them with deepe ſighs to returne home) that they muſt depart to mount Hecla: and with that, they ſuddenly vaniſh away.

TO confirme the former lie, of an earthly & viſible hell (albeit I will eaſily grant that Friſius in writing theſe things did not entend to reproch any, but only to blaze abroad new & incredible matters) certaine idle companions knowing neither hell nor heauen haue inuented this fable, no leſſe reprochfull then falſe, and more vaine & deteſtable then Sicilian ſcoffes. Which fellowes theſe writers (being otherwiſe men of excellent parts, and to whom learning is much indebted) haue followed with an ouer haſtie iudgement.

But it were to be wiſhed, that none would write Hiſtories with ſo great a deſire of ſetting foorth nouelties & ſtrange things, that they feare not, in that regard to broch any fabulous & old-wiues toyes, & ſo to defile pure gold with filthy mire. But I pray you, how might thoſe ſoules [illegible] be ſwimming in the infernal lake, & yet for al that, parleing with their acquaintance & friends?

What? Will you coniure, & raiſe vp vnto vs from death to life old Orpheus conferring with his wiſe Euridice (drawen backe againe down to the Stigian flood) & in theſe parts of the world, as it were by the bankes of ſnowey Tanais, & Hebrus deſcanting vpon his harpe? But in very deed although others will not acknowledge the falſhood, & vanity of theſe trifles, yet Cardane being a diligent conſiderer of all things in his 18. booke de ſubtilitate, doth acknowledge & find them out. Whoſe words be theſe. There is Hecla a mountaine in Iſland, which burneth like vnto Ætna at certain ſeaſons, & hereupon the cōmon people haue conceiued an opinion this long time, that ſoules are there purged: ſome, leaſt they ſhould ſeeme liars, heape vp more vanities to this fable, that it may appeare to be probable, & agreeable to reaſō. But what be thoſe vanities? namely, they ſeine certaine ghoſts anſwering thē, that they are going to mount Hecla: as the ſame Cardane ſaith. And further he addeth. Neither in Iſland only, but euery where (albeit ſeldome) ſuch things come to paſſe. And then he tels this ſtorie following of a man-killing ſpright. There was (ſaith he) ſolemnized this laſt yeare the funerall of a cōmon citizen, in the gate neare vnto the great Church, by that markerplace, which in regard of the abundāce of herbs, in our toong hath the name of the herbmarket. There meets with me one of mine acquaintance: I (according to the cuſtome of Phiſitians) preſently aske of what diſeaſe the man died? he giueth me anſwere that this man vſed to come home from his labour 3. houres within night: one night amōg the reſt he eſpied an hobgoblin purſuing him: which to auoid, he ran away with al ſpeed: but being caught by the ſpright, he was throwne down vpon the ground. He would faine haue made a ſhout, & was not able. At length (when the ſpright & he had ſtruggled together vpon the ground a good while) he was found by certain paſſengers, & carried home halfe dead. And when he was come to himſelfe againe, being asked what was the matter, he vp and tolde this ſtrange relation. Hereupon (being vtterly daunted, & diſcouraged, when neither by his friends, nor by Phiſitians, nor by Prieſts, he could be perſwaded, that theſe things were but his owne conceits, & that there was no ſuch matter) 8. daies after he died. I heard alſo afterward of others which were his neighbors, that no man could more cōſtantly affirme himſelfe to be wounded of his enemy, then this man did, that he was caſt vpon the ground by a ghoſt. And when ſome demanded what he did, after he was tumbled on the earth? The dead man (quoth he) laying his hands to my throat, went about to ſtrāgle me: neither was there any remedy, but by defending my ſelfe with mine own hands. When others doubted leaſt he might ſuffer theſe things of a liuing man, they asked him how he could diſcerne a dead man frō a liuing? To this, he rendered a very probable reaſon, ſaying that he ſeemed in handling to be like Cottum, & that he had no weight, but held him down by maine force. And preſently after he addeth. In like manner as in Iſland, ſo in the deſert ſands of Ægypt, Æthiopia, and India, where the ſunne is hoat, the very ſame apparitions, the ſame ſprights are wont to delude wayfaring men. Thus much Cardane. Yet from hence (I trow) no man will conclude as our writers of Iſland do, that in the places of Ægypt, Æthiopia, and India, there is a priſon of damned ſoules.

I thought good to write theſe things out of Cardane, that I may bring euen the teſtimony of ſtrangers on our ſides, againſt ſuch monſtrous fables. This place of Cardane implieth theſe two things, namely ẏ apparitions of ſprights are not proper to Iſland alone (which thing al mē know, if they do not maliciouſly ſeigne thēſelues to be ignorant) And ſecondly that that conference of the dead with the liuing in ẏ gulfe of Hecla is not grounded vpon any certainty, but only vpon fables coined by ſome idle perſons, being more vaine then any bubble, which the brutiſh cōmon ſort haue vſed, to confirme their opinion of the tormenting of ſoules. And is there any man ſo fantaſticall, that wilbe induced to beleeue theſe gulfes, mētioned by writers, to be any where extant, although they be neuer ſo ful of dead mens miracles: yea doubtleſſe. For frō hence alſo they ſay, ẏ reproches are iuſtly vſed againſt our nation: namely, ẏ there is nothing in all the world more baſe, & worthleſſe then it, which conteineth hell within the bounds therof. This verely is the good that we haue gotten by thoſe hiſtoriographers, who haue bin ſo greedy to publiſh nouelties. But this opinion, bred by the ſottiſhnes of the cōmon people hath hitherto (as I hope) bene ſufficiently ouerthrowen as a thing fooliſh & vaine, and as being deuiſed for the vpbrayding of our nation. Wherefore, proceede (friendly Reader) and be farther inſtructed in this philoſophy of infernall ſecrets.

The ninth ſection.

Friſius and Munſter.

But round about the Iland, for the ſpace of 7. or 8. moneths in a yere there floateth iſe, making a miſerable kind of mone, and not vnlike to mans voice, by reaſon of the claſhing together. The inhabitants are of opinion that in mount Hecla and in the iſe, there are places wherein the ſoules of their countreymen are tormented.

NO doubt, a worthy augmentation of the hiſtory, concerning the hel of Iſland, ſhut vp within the bottome of one mountaine, & that no great one: yea, at ſome times (by fits and ſeaſons) changing places: namely, whē it is weary of lurking at home by the fires ſide within ẏ mountaine, it delighteth to be ranging abroad, & to venter to ſea, but without a ſhip, & to gather it ſelfe round into morſels of yce. Come forth, & giue eare all ye ẏ wonder at this ſecret. Lo, I will afford theſe hiſtoriographers another addition of hiſtory very notable. Let them write therfore, that ẏ Iſlanders haue not only hel within their iuriſdiction, but alſo ẏ they enter into it willingly & wittingly, & come forth againe vntouched ẏ very ſame day. How can that be? Why: it is an ancient cuſtome of the Iſland that they which inhabite neare the ſea ſhoare do vſually go betimes in a morning to catch Seales, euen vpon the very ſame iſe which the hiſtoriographers make to be hel, & in the euening returne home ſafe and ſound. Set downe alſo (if ye pleaſe) that the priſon of the damned is kept in ſtore by the Iſlanders in coffers and veſſels, as we ſhall anon heare out of Friſius.

Taking of Seales on the ice.

But you had need wiſely to foreſee, leſt ẏ Iſlanders beguile all your countries of the cōmendation of courage & conſtancy: namely, as they (for ſo it pleaſeth your writers to report) who both can & will endure the torments of hell, & who are able to breake through & eſcape them, without any farther hurt: which thing is neceſſarily to be collected out of that, that hath bin before mentioned. And I am able to reckon vp a great many of our countrimen, who in ẏ very act of hunting, wandring ſome what farre from the ſhoare (the ice being diſperſed by weſterne windes) & for the ſpace of many leagues reſting vpon the ice, being chaſed with the violence of the tempeſt, & ſome whole daies & nights being toſſed vp & downe in the waues of ẏ raging ſea, & ſo (for it followeth by good conſequence out of this probleme of the hiſtoriographers) haue had experience of the torments, & paines of this hell of ice. Who at the laſt, the weather being changed, & the windes blowing at the North, being tranſported again to the ſhoare, in this their ſhip of ice, haue returned home in ſafety: ſome of which number are aliue at this day. Wherefore let ſuch as be deſirous of newes ſnatch vp this, & (if they pleaſe) let them frame a whole volume hereof, & adde it to their hiſtory. Neither do theſe vaine phantaſies deſerue otherwiſe to be handled & cōfuted, then with ſuch like meriments, & ſportings. But to lay aſide all ieſting, let vs returne to the matter from whence we are digreſſed. Firſt of all therfore it is euident enough out of the ſecond ſection, ẏ ice floateth not about this Iland, neither 8. nor 7. moneths in a yeare: then, that this ice (although at ſome times by ſhuffling together it maketh monſtrous ſoundings & cracklings, & againe at ſome times with the beating of the water, it ſendeth forth an hoarſe kinde of murmuring) doth any thing at all reſound or lament, like vnto mans voice, we may in no caſe confeſſe. But whereas they ſay that, both in the Iſle, and in mount Hecla we appoint certaine places, wherin the ſoules of our countrimen are tormented, we vtterly ſtand to the deniall of that: and we thanke God & our Lord Ieſus Chriſt from the bottome of our hearts (who hath deliuered vs from death & hell, & opened vnto vs the gate of the kingdome of heauen) becauſe he hath inſtructed vs more truely, concerning the place, whether the ſoules of our deceaſed countrimen depart, then the fabulous hiſtoriographers doe tell vs. We know and maintain that the ſoules of ẏ godly are tranſported immediatly out of their bodily priſons, not into the Papiſts purgatory, nor into the Elyſian fields, but into Abrahams boſome, into the hand of God, & into the heauenly paradiſe. We know & maintaine concerning the ſoules of the wicked, that they wander not into the fires & aſhes of mountaines, or into viſible ice, but immediatly are carried away into vtter darkeneſſe, where is weeping & gnaſhing of teeth, where there is colde alſo, & fire not cōmon, but far beyond our knowledge & curious diſputation: where not onely bodies, but ſoules alſo, ẏ is ſpirituall ſubſtances are tormented. And we do alſo hold, ẏ the Iſlanders are no whit nearer vnto this extreame & darke priſon, in regard of the ſituation of place, then the Germans, Danes, Frenchmen, Italians, or any other nation whatſoeuer. Neither is it any thing to the purpoſe, at all to diſpute of the place or ſituation of this dungeon. It is ſufficient for vs, that (by the grace and aſſiſtance of our Lord Ieſus Chriſt, with whoſe precious blood we are redeemed) we ſhall neuer ſee that vtter darkneſſe, nor feele the reſt of the torments that be there. Now let vs here ſhut vp the diſputation concerning the hell of Iſland.

Weſterne windes diſperſe the ice.

Ice floateth not 7. or 8. moneths about Iland.

The tenth ſection.

If any man ſhall take a great quantity of this ice, & ſhall keepe it neuer ſo warily encloſed in a coffer or veſſel, it wil at that time when the ice thaweth about the Iland, vtterly vaniſh away, ſo that not the leaſt part thereof, no nor a drop of water is to be found.

Friſius.
Zieglerus.
Saxo.

Surely this was of neceſſity to be added: namely, ẏ this ice, which according to hiſtoriographers repreſenteth mans voice, & is the place of the damned, doth not as all other things in this wide world, conſiſt of ẏ matter of ſome element. For whereas it ſeemeth to be a body, when indeed it is no body: (which may directly be gathered out of Friſius abſurd opinion) whereas alſo it peirceth through hard & ſolide bodies, no otherwiſe then ſpirits & ghoſts: therfore it remaineth, ſeeing it is not of an elementary nature, ẏ it muſt haue either a ſpirituall, or a celeſtial, or an infernal matter. But ẏ it ſhould be infernall, we can not be perſwaded, becauſe we haue heard that infernall cold is farre more vnſufferable then this iſe, which vſeth to be put into a boxe with mens hands, & is not of force any whit to hurt euen naked fleſh, by touching thereof. Nor yet will we grant it to be ſpirituall: for we haue learned in naturall Philoſophy, that ſpirituall ſubſtances can neither be ſeene nor felt, nor cannot haue any thing taken from them: all which things do notwithſtanding moſt manifeſtly agree to this iſe of the Hiſtoriographers, howſoeuer according to them it be ſupernatural. Beſides alſo, it is moſt true, that the very ſame yſe being melted with the heat of the ſunne, & reſolued into water, vpon the vpper part thereof, ſtandeth fiſhermen in as good ſtead to quench their thirſt, as any land-riuer would do, which thing can no way be aſcribed to a ſpirituall ſubſtance. It is not therefore ſpirituall, nor yet infernall. Now none wilbe ſo bold to affirme, that it hath celeſtiall matter, leaſt ſome man perhaps might hereupon imagine, ỹ this iſe hath brought hell (which the hiſtoriographers annexe vnto it) downe from heauen, together with it ſelfe: or that the ſame thing ſhould be common vnto heauen, being of one & the ſame matter with iſe, & ſo that the priſon of the damned may be thought to haue changed places with the heauenly paradiſe, & all by the ouerſight of theſe Hiſtoriographers. Wherfore ſeeing the matter of this hiſtoricall iſe is neither elementarie (as we haue ſo often proued by this place of Friſius) neither ſpirituall, nor infernall, both which we haue concluded euidently, in ſhort, yet ſound and ſubſtantiall reaſons: nor yet celeſtiall matter, which, religion forbiddeth a man once to imagine: it is altogether manifeſt, ỹ according to the ſaid hiſtoriographers, there is no ſuch thing at all, which notwithſtanding they blaze abroad with ſuch aſtoniſhing admiration, & which we thinke to be an ordinary matter commonly ſeene and felt. Therefore it is, and it is not: which propoſition when it ſhall fall out true, in the ſame reſpect, in the ſame part, and at the ſame time, then will we giue credite to theſe frozen miracles. Now therefore the Reader may eaſily iudge, that we need none other helpe to refute theſe things, but onely to ſhew how they diſagree one with another. But it is no maruell that he, which hath once enclined himſelfe to the fabulous reports of the common people, ſhould oftentimes fall into error. There was a like ſtrange thing inuented by another concerning the ſympathy or conſiſting of this iſe: namely, that it followeth the departure of that huge lumpe, whereof it is a part, ſo narrowly, & ſo ſwiftly, that a man by no diligence can obſerue it, by reaſon of the vnchangeable neceſſitie of following. But we haue oftentimes ſeene ſuch a ſolitarie lumpe of iſe remaining (after the other parts thereof were driuen away) and lying vpon the ſhore for many weekes together, without any poſts or engines at all to ſtay it. Therefore it is plaine that theſe miracles of iſe are grounded vpon a more ſlippery foundation then iſe it ſelfe.

The eleuenth ſection.

Friſius. Not farre from theſe mountaines (the three forenamed) declining to the ſea ſhoare, there be foure fountaines of a moſt contrary nature betweene themſelues. The firſt, by reaſon of his continuall heat conuerteth into a ſtonie body caſt into it, the former ſhape only ſtill remaining. The ſecond is extremely cold. The third is ſweeter then hony, and moſt pleaſant to quench thirſt. The fourth is altogether deadly, peſtilent and full of ranke poiſon.

Euen this deſcription of fountaines doth ſufficiently declare how impure that fountaine was, out of which the geographer drew all theſe miraculous ſtories. For he ſeemeth to affirme, that the three foreſaid mountaines are almoſt one by another: for he aſcribeth foure fountaines indifferently vnto them all. Otherwiſe, if he had not made them ſtand neare together, he would haue placed next vnto ſome one of theſe, two of the foreſaide fountaines. But neither doe the foreſaid mountaines touch (being diſtant ſo many leagues aſunder) neither are there any ſuch foure fountaines neare vnto them, which he that will not beleeue, let him go try. But to confute theſe things, the very contrariety of writers is ſufficient. For another concerning two fountaines [illegible] ſayth Friſius in theſe words. There do burſt out of the ſame hill Hecla two fountaines, the one whereof by reaſon of the cold ſtreames, the other with intollerable heat exceedeth all the force of elements. Theſe be Friſius his two firſt fountaines, ſaying that here he omitteth the miracle of hardening bodies, being by him attributed to one of the ſaid fountaines. But they cannot at one time breake forth, both out of the mountaine it ſelfe, and neare vnto the mountaine.

But here I would willingly demaund, by what reaſon any of the Peripateticks can affirme, that there is ſome thing in nature colder then the element of water, or hotter then the element of fire. From whence (I pray you, learned writers) proceedeth this coldneſſe? From whence commeth this heate? Haue we not learned out of your ſchole that water is an element moſt colde and ſomewhat moiſt: and in ſuch ſort moſt cold, that for the making of ſecundarie qualities, it muſt of neceſſitie be remitted, & being ſimple, that it cannot be applyed to the vſes of mankind? I do here deliuer theſe Oracles of the naturall Philoſophers, not knowing whether they be true or falſe. M. Iohn Fernelius, lib. 2. Phyſ. cap. 4. may ſtand for one witneſſe amongſt all the reſt, & in ſtead of them all. So exceſſiue (ſaith he) be theſe foure firſt qualities in the foure elements, that as nothing is hotter thẽ pure fire, & nothing lighter: ſo nothing is drier then earth, & nothing heauier: and as for pure water, there is no qualitie of any medicine whatſoeuer exceedeth the coldnes thereof, nor the moiſture of aire. Moreouer, the ſaid qualities be ſo extreme & ſurpaſſing in thẽ, that they cannot be any whit encreaſed, but remitted they may be. I wil not heare heape vp the reaſons or arguments of the natural Philoſophers. Theſe writers had need be warie of one thing, leſt while they too much magnifie the miracles of the fountains, they exempt them out of the number of things created, aſwel as they did the ice of the Iſlanders. We wil proſecute in order the properties of theſe fountains ſet downe by the foreſaid writers. The firſt by reaſon of his continuall heat. There be very many Baths or hote fountains in Iſland, but fewer vehemently hote, which we thinke ought not to make any man wonder, when as I haue learned out of authors, that Germanie euery where aboundeth with ſuch hote Baths, eſpecially neere the foot of the Alpes. The hote Baths of Baden, Gebarſuil, Calben in the duchy of Wittenberg and many other be very famous: all which Fuchſius doeth mention in his booke de Arte medendi. And not onely Germanie, but alſo France, & beyond all the reſt Italy that mother of all commodities, ſaith Cardan. And Ariſtotle reporteth, that about Epyrus theſe hote waters doe much abound, whereupon the place is called Pyriplegethon. And I ſay, theſe things ſhould therefore be yͤ leſſe admired, becauſe the ſearchers of nature haue as wel found out cauſes of the heate in waters, as of the fire in mountaines: namely, that water runneth within the earth through certaine veines of Brimſtone & Allom, and from thence taketh not onely heat, but taſte alſo, & other ſtrange qualities. Ariſtotle in his booke de Mondo hath taught this. The earth (ſaith he) conteineth within it fountains not only of water, but alſo of ſpirite & fire: ſome of them flowing like riuers, doe caſt foorth red hote iron: from whence alſo doeth flow, ſomtimes luke-warme water, ſomtimes ſkalding hote, and ſomtimes temperate. And Seneca. Empedocles thought that Baths were made hote by fire, which the earth ſecretly conteineth in many places, eſpecially if the ſaid fire bee vnder that ground where the water paſſeth. And Pontanus writeth very learnedly concerning the Baian Baths.

Many hote Baths in Iſland.

The cauſes of hote Baths.

Lib. 3. nat. quæſt.

No maruell though from banke of Baian ſhore hote Baths, or veines of ſkalding licour flow:
For Vulcans forge incenſed euermore
doeth teach vs plaine, that heart of earth below
And bowels burne, and fire enraged glow.
From hence the flitting flood ſends ſmokie ſtreames,
And Baths doe boile with ſecret burning gleames.

I thought good in this place to touch that which Saxo Grammaticus the moſt famous hiſtoriographer of the Danes reporteth. That certaine fountains of Iſland do ſomtime encreaſe & flow vp to the brinke: ſometimes againe they fall ſo lowe that you can ſkarſe diſcerne them to be fountains. Which kind of fountains, albeit they bee very ſeldome found with vs, yet I will make mention of ſome like vnto them, produced by nature in other countries, leſt any man ſhould think it ſomwhat ſtrange. Plinie maketh a great recitall of theſe. There is one (ſaieth he) in the Iſle of Tenedos, which at the Solſtitium of ſommer doth alwaies flow from the third houre of the night, till the ſixt. In the field of Pitinas beyond the Apennine mountaine, there is a riuer which in the midſt of ſommer alwaies encreaſeth, and in winter is dried vp. He maketh mention alſo of a very large fountaine, which euery houre doeth encreaſe and fall. Neither is it to be omitted, that ſome riuers run vnder the ground, and after that fall againe into an open chanel: as Lycus in Aſia, Eraſinus in Argolica, Tigris in Meſopotamia, vnto which Cardan addeth Tanais in Moſcouia: and thoſe things which were throwen into Aeſculapius fountaine at Athens, were caſt vp againe in Phaletico. And Seneca writeth that there are certaine riuers which being let downe into ſome caue vnder ground, are withdrawen out of ſight, ſeeming for the time to be vtterly periſhed and taken away, and that after ſome diſtance the very ſame riuers returne, enioying their former name and their courſe. And againe Plinie reporteth that there is a riuer receiued vnder ground in the field of Atinas that iſſueth out twentie miles from that place. All which examples and the like, ſhould teach vs that the fountaines of Iſland are not to be made greater wonders then the reſt.

Doth forthwith conuert into a ſtone any body caſt into it. By theſe two properties, namely warmth or moſt vehement heat, & a vertue of hardening bodies doth Friſius deſcribe his firſt fountaine. And I haue heard reported (though I neuer had experience thereof my ſelfe) that there is ſuch a fountain in Iſland not far frõ the biſhops ſeat of Schalholt, in a village called Haukadal. Seneca reporteth of the like, ſaying: That there is a certain fountain which conuerteth wood into ſtone, hardening the bowels of thoſe men which drinke thereof. And addeth further, that ſuch fountains are to bee found in certaine places of Italy: which thing Ouid in the 15. booke of his Metamor. aſcribeth unto the riuer of the Cicones,

Water drunke out of Ciconian flood;
fleſhy bowels to flintie ſtone doeth change:
Ought elſe therewith beſprinckt, as earth or wood
becommeth marble ſtreight: a thing moſt ſtrange,

And Cardane. Georgius Agricola affirmeth, that in the territorie of Elbogan, about the town which is named of Falcons, that the whole bodies of Pine trees are conuerted into ſtone, and which is more wonderfull, that they containe, within certaine rifts, the ſtone called Pyrites, or the Flint. And Domitius Brusonius reporteth, that in the riuer of Silar (running by the foote of that mountain which ſtandeth in the field of the citie in old time called Vrſence, but now Conturſia) leaues and boughs of trees change into ſtones, & that, not vpon other mens credite, but vpon his own experience, being borne & brought vp in that country: which thing Plinie alſo auoucheth, ſaying, that the ſaid ſtones doe ſhew the number of their yeeres, by the number of their Barks, or ſtony husks. So (if we may giue credite to authors) drops of the Gothes fountain being diſperſed abroad, become ſtones. And in Hungary, the water of Cepuſius being poured into pitchers, is conuerted to ſtone. And Plinie reporteth, that wood being caſt into the riuer of the Cicones, and into the Veline lake in the field of Pice, is encloſed in a barke of ſtone growing ouer it.

Riuers of Iſland in ſommer ſeaſon luke-warme.

The ſecond is extremely cold. As for the ſecond fountaine, here is none to any mens knowledge ſo extremely cold: In deed there be very many that bee indifferently coole, inſomuch that (our common riuers in the Sommer time being luke-warme) wee take delight to fetch water from thoſe coole ſprings. It may be that there are ſome farre colder in other countries: for Cardane maketh mention of a riuer (ſtreaming from the top of an hill in the field of Corinth) colder then ſnow: and within a mile of Cuma, the riuer called Inſana ſeeming to be very hote is moſt extremely cold, &c.

The third is ſweeter then honie. Neither is this altogether true. For there is not any fountaine with vs, which may in the leaſt reſpect be compared with the ſweetneſſe of honie. And therfore Saxo wrote more truly, ſaying, that certaine fountains (for there be very many) yeelding taſte as good as beere: and alſo in the ſame place there are fountains & riuers not onely of diuers taſts, but of diuers colours.

And albeit naturall Philoſophers teach, that water naturally of it ſelfe hath neither taſte nor ſmel, yet it is likely (as we haue touched before, which other call per accidens) that oftentimes it repreſenteth the qualities of that earth wherein it is engendred, and through the veines whereof it hath paſſage and iſſue: and from hence proceed the diuers & ſundry ſmels, colours and ſauours of all waters. Of ſuch waters doeth Seneca make mention, whereof ſome prouoke hunger, others make men drunken, ſome hurt the memory, & ſome helpe it, & ſome reſemble the very qualitie and taſte of wine, as that fountaine which Plinie ſpeaketh of in the Ile of Andros, within the temple of Bachus, which in the Nones of January vſed to flow ouer with wine. And Ariſtotle reporteth, that in the field of Carthage there is a fountain which yeeldeth oile, & certaine drops ſmelling like Cedar. Alſo Orcus a riuer of Theſſalie flowing into Peneus, ſwimmeth aloft like oile. Cardane reporteth, that there is in Saxonie, neere vnto the town of Brunſwic, a fountaine mixed with oile: and another in Sueuia neere vnto the Abbey called Tergenſch. Alſo in the valley of the mountain Iuraſſius. He ſuppoſeth the cauſe of this thing to bee very fattie pitch, which cannot but conteine oile in it. The ſame author ſaieth: It is reported that in Cardia neere to the place of Daſchylus, in the white field, there is water ſweeter then milke. Another alſo neere vnto the bridge which we paſſe ouer going to the towne of Valdeburg. Propertius likewiſe in the third booke of his Elegies mentioneth certaine waters repreſenting the ſauour of wine in theſe words.

In lib. de mirab. auſcult.

Amidſt the Iſle of Naxus loe, with fragrant ſmels and fine
A freſhet runs; ye Naxians goe fill cups, carouſe, there's wine.

This Naxus is one of the Ilands called Cyclades lying in the Ægean ſea. Cardane giueth a reaſon hereof, namely, becauſe Hydromel or water-hony, in long continuance will become wine. Ariſtotle nameth a fountaine in Sicilia, which the inhabitants vſe in ſtead of vineger. The ſame author maketh the cauſe of ſauours in water to be heate, becauſe the earth being hote changeth and giueth ſauour vnto the water.

Now concerning the colours of water ſo ſaieth Cardane. There is the ſame reaſon (ſaith he) of the colours of water, that there is of the ſauours thereof, for both haue their originall frō the earth. For there is white water within two miles of Glauca a town in Miſena: red water in Radera a riuer of Miſena not farre from Radeburg: & in old time neere vnto Ioppa in Iudea: greene water in the mountaine of Carpathus by Newſola: skie-coloured or blue water betweene the mountains of Feltrius & Taruiſius: & it is reported that there was water of that colour in Thermopylis: cole-blacke water in Alera a riuer of Saxonie, at that place where it diſchargeth it ſelf into the Weſer. The cauſes of theſe colours are the colours of the ſoile. Alſo Ariſtotle ſaieth, that about the promontorie of Iapigia, there is a fountaine which ſtreameth blood: adding moreouer, that Mariners are driuen farre from that place of the ſea, by reaſon of the extreme ſtench thereof. Furthermore, they ſay that in Idumæa there is a fountaine which changeth color foure times in a yeere: for ſometimes it is greene, ſomtime white, ſomtime bloodie, & ſomtimes muddy coloured.

Concerning the ſmels of waters, thus writeth Cardane. There is the like reaſon of difference in ſmels. But for the moſt part the ſteames of waters bee vnpleaſant, becauſe the earth doeth ſeldome times ſmel well. The water of the riuer Anigris in Aelis ſtanke, to the deſtruction, not onely of fiſhes, but alſo of men. About [illegible] in Meſſania, out of a certaine pond there hath bene drawen moſt ſweet ſmelling, and odoriferous water. I doe recite all theſe examples to the end that no man ſhould make a greater wonder at the colours, ſmels, and ſauours of waters that be in Iſland, then at thoſe which are in other countreis.

The fourth is altogether deadly. Iſidore affirmeth, that there is a certaine fountaine whoſe water being drunke, extinguiſheth life. And Plinie ſaieth, That about Nonaris in Arcadia, the riuer of Styx (neere the mountaine of Cellene, ſaieth Cardane: it would be contained in nothing but an horſe-hoofe: and it is reported that Alexander the great was poiſoned therewithal) not differing from other water, neither in ſmell nor colour, being drunke, is preſent death. In Beroſus an hill of the people called Tauri, there are three fountains, euery one of them deadly without remedy, & yet without griefe. And (which is the ſtrangeſt thing of all the reſt) Seneca maketh mention of a poole, into which whoſoeuer looks, do preſently die. But, as for this fourth fountaine of Friſius, which Saxo doeth likewiſe mention, we Iſlanders, as alwayes heretofore, ſo euen at this day do teſtifie, that it is vtterly vnknowen vnto vs: and therefore in this regard, we render vnto God immortall thanks, becauſe he hath vouchſafed to preſerue our nation from ſuch fountains, from ſerpents and venemous wormes, & from al other peſtiferous & contagious creatures.

Iſland free from ſnakes and other venemous beaſts.

Furthermore about the foreſaid mountains there is ſuch abundance of brimſtone. The three mountains called by Munſter and Friſius, Fierie mountains, do all of them ſtand an huge diſtance from our Mines. Wherefore, when as neere vnto theſe hils they haue found out a place for foure fountains, which they doe ſo mightily extoll for wonders, they muſt needs haue ſome Brimſtone Mines alſo, ſtanding a like diſtance from the ſaid fountaines. And aſſuredly, neither about mount Hecla, as Munſter would haue it, nor by Friſius his fountaines (the report whereof how true it is, hath bene hitherto declared) is Brimſtone digged vp at this day: nor I thinke euer was within the remembrance of our fathers. Neither is it true that Munſter reporteth concerning the abundance of Brimſtone: namely, that it is almoſt the onely merchandize and tribute of the Iland. For whereas the Iland is deuided into foure partes, the fourth part onely towards the North (nay, but euen the halfe thereof) doeth vſe it for merchandize, and there is not one crumme of Brimſtone paied for tribute of the Iland.

Brimſtone Mines onely in the North part of Iſland.

The twelfth Section.

There are ſo great ſtore of fiſhes in this Iland, that they are laid foorth on piles to be ſold in the open aire, as high as the tops of houſes.

Munſter.

IN the open aire. In deed we haue ſeen other countrey merchants doe ſo, vntil they had vnladen their ſhips of outlandiſh wares, & filled thē againe with fiſhes & with other of our countrey merchandize. But whether our men haue done the like at any time, it is not manifeſt. Certainly, that plentifull and ancient abundance of fiſh is now decaied, and the Iſlanders now begin to be pinched with the want of theſe and other good things, the Lord laying the iuſt ſcourge of our impietie vpon vs, which I pray God we may duely acknowledge.

Abundance of fiſh about Iſland diminiſhed.

The thirteenth Section.

They haue moſt ſwift horſes, which wil run without ceaſing a continual courſe for the ſpace of 30. leagues.

Friſius.

A Certaine Coſmographer in his Map of Iſland reporteth concerning the horſes of one pariſh, that they will run 20. leagues at once in a continued race. But we account both to bee impoſſible. For Munſter writeth that thoſe beaſts which excell all other in ſwiftneſſe & ſtrength of body, called ‖ Rangiferi, cannot run aboue 30. leagues in 24. houres.

‖ Raine deere.

The foureteenth Section.

There be ſeen ſometimes neere vnto Iſland huge Whales like vnto mountains, which ouerturne ſhips, vnleſſe they be terrified away with the ſound of trumpets, or beguiled with round and emptie veſſels, which they delight to toſſe vp and downe. It ſometimes falleth out that Mariners thinking theſe Whales to be Ilands, and caſting out ankers vpon their backs, are often in danger of drowning. They are called in their tongue Trollwal Tuffelwalen, that is to ſay, the deuiliſh Whale.

Like vnto mountains. Loe here once againe (gentle Reader) Munſters falſifying eccho, and (as the prouerbe ſaieth) his blind dreame. Such a falſe and ſenceleſſe ouer-reaching doeth exceedingly diſgrace an hiſtorie, and that by ſo much the more, by how much the leſſe neceſſary it is. For to what purpoſe ſhould an Hiſtoriographer make leaſings, if hiſtory be a report of plaine trueth? Why ſhould he vſe ſuch ſtrange ſurmountings? What is it that he would perſwade, or whither would he rauiſh the Reader, if he propoundeth vnto himſelfe nothing but the ſimple declaration of things?

Poets and Painters had leaue of old,
To feigne, to blaze, in all things to be bold.
But not Hiſtoriographers.

Certain letters ſent by Brandan biſhop of Breme, to preach Chriſtian faith in the North.

The backs of Whales which they thinke to be Ilands. This fable, like all the reſt, was bred of an old, ridiculous and vaine tale, the credite and trueth whereof is not worth a ſtrawe. And it is this that foloweth, namely, that the biſhop of Breme (called by the ancient Norwaies Brandan, and by Kranzius, if I be not deceiued, Alebrandus) in old time ſent certaine Legates with a Couen of Friers to preach and publiſh in the North the popiſh faith, which was then thought to bee Chriſtian: and when they had ſpent a long iourney in ſailing towards the North, they came vnto an Iland, and there caſting their anker they went a ſhore, and kindled fiers, (for it is very likely that the Mariners were not a litle vexed with the nipping cold which they felt at ſea) and ſo prouided victuals for the reſt of their iourny. But when their fires grew very hote, this Iland ſanke, and ſuddenly vaniſhed away, and the Mariners eſcaped drowning very narowly with the boate that was preſent. This is the foundation of the matter, but how incredible it is, I appeale to the Reader. But what ailed theſe Mariners, or what meant they to doe, who in a tempeſtuous ſea, ſeeing a rocke before their eyes, or (as Munſter ſaieth) a little Iland, would not rather with all diligence haue auoided it for feare of running a ſhore and ſhipwracke, then to reſt in ſuch a dangerous harbour? But in what ground ſhould the anker be faſtened? for Mariners for the moſt part are deſtitute of ſuch long cables, whereby they may let downe an anker to the bottom of the maine ſea, therefore vpon the backs of Whales, ſaith Munſter. But then they had need firſt to bore a hole for the flouke to take hold in. O ſilly Mariners, that in digging cannot diſcerne Whales fleſh frō lumps of earth, nor know the ſlippery ſkin of a Whale from the vpper part of the ground: without doubt they are worthy to haue Munſter for a Pilot. Verily in this place (as likewiſe before treating of the land-miracles of Iſland) he gathereth fruits as they ſay, out of Tantalus his garden, and foloweth hard after thoſe things which will neuer and no where be found, while he endeuoureth to proule here and there for miracles, peruſing ſea and land to ſtuffe vp his hiſtory: where notwithſtanding he cannot hunt out ought but feigned things.

But they are called in their language Trollwal. Go not farther then your ſkil, Munſter, for I take it you cannot ſkill of our tongue: and therefore it may be a ſhame for a learned man to teach others that which he knoweth not himſelfe: for ſuch an attempt is ſubiect to manifold errours, as we will ſhew by this your example. For while you take in hand to ſchoole others, & to teach them by what name a Whale-fiſh is to be called in our tongue, leauing out through ignorance the letter H. which almoſt alone maketh vp the ſignification of the worde, you deliuer that which is not true: for val in our language ſignifieth not a Whale, but chuſing or choiſe of the verbe Eg vel, that is to ſay, I chuſe, or I make choiſe, from whence val is deriued, &c. But a Whale is called Hualur with vs, & therefore you ought to haue written Trollhualur. Neither doeth Troll ſignifie the deuill, as you interprete it, but certaine Giants that liue in mountaines. You ſee therefore (and no maruel) how you erre in the whole word. It is no great iniurie to our language being in one word onely: becauſe (doubtleſſe) you knew not more then one.

Others alſo do offend in the ſame fault, for it is not to be allowed that a certaine man being about to publiſh a Map of Iſland receiued from Iſlanders themſelues, had rather marre the faſhion of all, or in very deed of the moſt names of Capes, Baies, mountaines, ſprings, riuers, homocks, valleis, hils & townes (becauſe that being ignorant of our language, he was not able to read thoſe things aright, which he receiued from our countreymen) he had rather (I ſay) depraue & corrupt them all, then learne of the Iſlanders themſelues, which at that time, namely in the yeere 1585. liued in the vniuerſitie of Haſnia, or Copen Hagen, how euery thing ought to be read and written. And we eſteeme him for this his wilfull marring of our natiue names and wordes, (whereupon it came to paſſe that we reading the ſame, could acknowledge very few to be our owne) that he is no ſlight offender againſt our tongue, otherwiſe retaining the pure and the ancient propertie.

But now we haue after ſome ſort examined moſt of the miracles of Iſland, which our writers haue mentioned. Notwithſtanding before we enter into any further matter, we thinke it good in this ſection to touch that which the laſt forenamed mã (in this Map of Iſland, that he cauſed to be put forth w ŷ [illegible] verſe, vnder his owne name) hath giuen out concerning two other fountains beſides the former, whereof the one ſhould die white wooll black, & the other blacke wooll white. Which thing where he receiued it, or whence he had it, we can by no meanes imagine: for it is not to be found in our owne writers, nor in ŷ writers of other countreys. But whenceſoeuer it be, it is but a tale, & hath not one iote of trueth in it. And although it be incredible That black wooll may be died of a white colour, ſeeing it is affirmed by Plinie, that blacke wooll (of all other) will receiue no colour, & notwithſtanding there is ſome ſuch thing reported by Theophraſtus: namely, that there is a riuer in Macedonia which maketh blacke ſheepe white. Alſo, that Norway pamphlet called the Reiall looking-glaſſe, which I mentioned before, doth attribute theſe fountains to Ireland, which is alſo called Hybernia, and not to Iſland. Which peraduenture deceiued the Reader, reading in a ſtrange language S in ſtead of R.

Who be the Iſlandiſh writers?

Speculum regale.

That likewiſe deſerueth no better credite which another Author writeth: That there is a certaine great ſtone in Iſland which runneth vp and downe the crags and clifs of mountaines by no outward force, but by the owne proper and naturall motion. Hee that will beleeue this, what will he not beleeue? For it is ſuch a rare deuiſe that the Epicures themſelues (who yet ſeemed to Lucian to haue fained many incredible things) I am ſure neuer inuented the like: vnleſſe perhaps the ſayd Author doeth imagine, that a man (who is called of the Iſlanders by the proper name of Stein) ſhould compaſſe about, and clime vp certaine rockes: which although it be ridiculous to put into a ſtory of wonders, namely, that a man ſhould mooue or walke, yet is it ſaid, bee ſuppoſed to ſaue the credite of the Author, that we may not more ſeuerely condemne that fable, which is ſo ſenceleſſe of it ſelfe and not worthy to be read.

They are guiltie of the ſame crime alſo who haue found out rauens, pies, hares and vultures, all white in Iſland: for it is wel knowen that vultures come very ſeldome, together with the Iſe of the ſea, vnto vs, as beares alſo (but they ſeldomer then vultures) and a certaine kind of crowes called by the Iſlanders Iſekraken. But as for white pies, hares, and rauens, Iſland neuer had any.

Vultures, beares and crowes come vpon the wild Ice into Iſland.

And theſe in a manner be the things which, in regard of our daily buſines, we were able at this preſent to afoord, as touching the former part of our treatiſe, which were penned by me for this purpoſe (as in the beginning I did proteſt) that the errours of Authors concerning an vnknowen land, and the affected malicie alſo of ſome men might be diſcloſed; for I am not deſirous to diminiſh any mans good name: but becauſe I conſecrated theſe my labours to trueth and to my countrey, I could not chuſe but ſhew, that thoſe things which hitherto haue bene reported by many concerning our Iſland deſerue very litle credite: and ſo to addreſſe my ſelfe vnto the matters folowing concerning the Inhabitants.

Here endeth the firſt part of the Commentarie.

Of Iſland the ſecond part, concerning the Inhabitants.

HAuing hitherto finiſhed the miracles of Iſland with certaine other particulers belonging to the firſt part, the which while writers doe wonder at, and vtterly extoll as it were the fountains of Agamemnon, yea, as things beſides and againſt all nature, they haue bene very careleſſe both of trueth it ſelfe, & of their owne credite. Now the courſe of the preſent ſpeach doeth admoniſh mee to make haſte vnto the other part of the treatiſe concerning the Inhabitants: wherein what I ſhould firſt ſay, or where I ſhould begin, I am altogether ignorant. For there be ſuch monſtrous, and ſo many mocks, reproches, ſlaunders, and taunts of certaine men againſt vs poore Iſlanders dwelling in the vtmoſt parts of the world (and amongſt theſe alſo, ſome things of theirs who take vpon them to profeſſe moſt ſimple trueth, namely Hiſtoriographers) inſomuch, that to reckon vp the particulers were nothing 'els but to tell the waues of the Icarian ſea. But as I ſaid in the beginning, we will not deale alike ſeuerely with all. For although Krantius, Munſterus, Friſius & others haue written many things too boldly of our nation: yet hauing otherwiſe deſerued wel of learning by their monuments, they ſhalbe ſtill in ŷ ſame reputation with vs that they are worthy of. Howbeit in the meane time, although a man would free thẽ from the marke of ſlanderers, yet is it no ſmall matter that they ſhould vouch certaine ſenceleſſe, and emptie veſſels, which they delight to toſſe vp and downe. It ſometimes falleth out that Mariners thinking theſe Whales to be Ilands, and caſting out ankers vpon their backs, are often in danger of drowning. They are called in their tongue Trollwal Tuſſelwalen, that is to ſay, the deuiliſh Whale.

But as for white pies, hares, and rauens, Iſland neuer had any.

Vultures, beares and crowes come vpon the built Ice into Iſland.

And theſe in a manner be the things which, in regard of our daily buſineſſe, we were able at this preſent to affoord, as touching the former part of our treatiſe, which were penned by me for this purpoſe (as in the beginning I did proteſt) that the errours of Authors concerning an vnknowen land, and the affected vanitie alſo of ſome men might be diſcloſed, for I am not deſirous to diminiſh any mans good name: but becauſe I conſecrated theſe my labours to trueth and to my countrey, I could not chuſe but ſhew, that thoſe things which hitherto haue bene reported by many concerning our Iſland deſerue very litle credite: and ſo to addreſſe my ſelfe vnto the matters folowing concerning the Inhabitants.

Here endeth the firſt part of the Commentarie.

Hauing hitherto finiſhed the miracles of Iſland with certaine other particulers belonging to the firſt part, the which while writers doe wonder at, and vtterly extoll as it were the fountains of Agamemnon, yea, as things beſides and againſt all nature, they haue bene very careleſſe both of trueth it ſelfe, & of their owne credite. Now the courſe of the preſent ſpeach doeth admoniſh mee to make haſte vnto the other part of the treatiſe concerning the Inhabitants: wherein what I ſhould firſt ſay, or where I ſhould begin, I am altogether ignorant. For there be ſuch monſtrous, and ſo many mocks, reproches, ſlaunders, and taunts of certaine men againſt vs poore Iſlanders dwelling in the remoteſt parts of the world (and amongſt theſe alſo, ſome things of theirs who take vpon them to profeſſe moſt ſimple trueth, namely Geographers) inſomuch, that to reckon vp the particulars were nothing els but to tell the waues of the Icarian ſea. But as I ſaid in the beginning, we will not deale alike ſeuerely with all. For although Krantius, Munſterus, Friſius & others haue written many things too boldly of our nation: yet hauing otherwiſe deſerued wel of learning by their monuments, they ſhalbe ſtill in ÿ ſame reputation with vs that they are worthy of. Howbeit in the meane time, although a man would free them from the marke of ſlanderers, yet is it no ſmall matter that they ſhould broch certaine ſenceleſſe, impoſſible & ridiculous things, ſuch as thoſe are which we haue hitherto laid downe: as alſo that they ſhould record in hiſtories prophane and horrible vntruethes, ſome of which kind ſhal now immediately be diſcuſſed. As for others, whatſoeuer they be, who vpbraid the nation of Iſlanders with daily reproches, they are to haue that anſwere in a readineſſe which they then deſerue. In the number of whom, that ſcoffer is to be accounted, who by a company of rimes publiſhed in the Germane tongue, to the diſgrace of our countrey, hath brought his name into euerlaſting ignominie.

Wherefore as our preſent buſineſſe requireth, while we are in hand with the writings of Authors concerning this matter, although we meet with ſome things containing falſe reproches, notwithſtanding we will examine moſt of them, noting the errors as hitherto wee haue done: in the meane time alſo when they ſhall alleage any trueth, we will in no ſort diſſemble it. And after this maner, firſt we will heare Munſter, Krantzius and Friſius, and others alſo, if there be any ſuch, what they haue to ſay, reiecting that Parot and his Dutch rimes infected with fell ſlander, as he is worthy, vnto the laſt place. Firſt therefore the ſayd Authors write concerning the faith and religion of the Iſlanders: and ſecondly, of their Maners, Cuſtomes, and courſe of life in maner folowing.

The firſt Section.

Krantzius in præfatione ſuæ Norwegiæ.

Adalbert Metropolitane of Hamburg in the yeere of Chriſt 1070. ſaw the Iſlanders conuerted vnto Chriſtianitie: albeit, before the receiuing of Chriſtian faith, they liued according to the lawe of nature, and did not much differ from our lawe: therefore at their humble requeſt, he appointed a certaine holy man named Iſlief to be their firſt Biſhop.

KRantzius in theſe words, and Munſter other where, doe ſeeme to attribute vnto the Iſlanders the prerogatiue of Chriſtian faith: and they ſhould deale both beſeeming themſelues and the trueth, if they did not in other places depriue vs of the ſame. For (to ſpeake of Krantzius anone) that which Munſter before reported concerning our faith or opinion about the place and ſituation of hell, is very farre from Chriſtian pietie: namely, to be deſirous to prie into thoſe ſecrets which God hath kept cloſe vnto himſelfe alone, and which his pleaſure is, ſhould exceed our capacitie: for there is not any thing found in the holy Scriptures of this matter, where the place and ſituation of hell, or of eternall fire prepared for the deuill and his angels, and ſo for all damned ſoules, is bounded or compaſſed about. The holy Bible (I ſay) aſſigneth no locall or bodily ſituation beneath the earth, or vpon the earth, or in any other place of this world, to that priſon of the damned: but it affirmeth that this earth ſhall periſh, and that a new earth, and new heauens ſhall be created for the habitation of iuſt and holy men, Reuel.2. 2.Pet.3. and Eſay 65. Wherefore a Chriſtian man willingly giueth ouer to ſearch into ſuch hidden ſecrets: and he accounteth it vnlawful to receiue or deliuer vnto others, opinions (grounded vpon no plaine and manifeſt places of Scripture) for certainties and trueths, Deut.4. and 12. Eſay 8. Matth.27. 1.Tim.3.

Further alſo that commendation wherewith Munſter and Krantzius doe grace the Iſlanders, is meerly contrary to Chriſtian religion: namely, that they make al one reckoning of their whelps and of their children. But more of this matter anone in the 7. ſection. So therefore Munſter diſagreeth with himſelfe, whereas thoſe whom he affirmeth to be Chriſtians, afterward he maketh to be maſter-builders of hell. Alſo Krantzius and Munſter both together, when as thoſe whom they affirme to be engraffed by faith into Chriſt, they exempt from all ſenſe of pietie and honeſty, in that they write that their ſonnes are not dearer vnto them then their whelpes.

But to returne to the matter: In very deed we haue no great thing to ſay concerning our religion, what, or of what ſort it was when Gentiliſme was firſt put to flight. No more (I thinke) haue other Northern nations neere vnto vs to ſay concerning yͤ beginning of their faith. For (alas) we muſt needs confeſſe & bewaile with deepe ſighes, that vntill that day which ſhined vnto vs like the beginning of immortalitie, & brought vnto vs the pure doctrine of the goſpel, our countreymen, as likewiſe other churches of the North, were ouer-ſpred with more then Cimmerian darkeneſſe. But we may iuſtly and religiouſly thinke thus much, that among vs and our neighbours of Norway (for I wil not range out of my bounds, nor affirme any thing of vnknowen people) after heatheniſh idolatry was rooted out, Chriſtian faith & religion did floriſh far more ſincere and ſimple, as being leſſe infected with the poiſon of poperie at that time, then afterward, when as the peſtiferous leauen of the ſee of Rome being augmented, & the contagious miſchiefe growing ripe, the poiſon thereof was diſperſed through yͤ whole world: for, as it ſhal afterward appeare, Iſland embraced Chriſt many yeeres before the new idolatry of the papiſts began to preuaile, and did ſound foorth nothing but faith in God the Father, the Sonne & the holy Ghoſt, like vnto thoſe two moſt renowmed kings of Norway, who as they had one common name, ſo had they one common care and profeſſion to aduance the goſpel of Chriſt. I meane Olaus the ſonne of Thryggo, who was borne in the yeere of Chriſt 968. attaining to the kingdom of Norway in the 27. yeere of his age, and was the firſt, as we haue heard, that offred Chriſt vnto the Norwegians, ouer whom hee reigned fiue yeeres: and another of that name called Olaus Sanctus the ſonne of Harald, who in the yeere of Chriſt 1013. or thereabout, gouerned with more ſeueritie, & for the ſpace of 17. yeeres did boldly deliuer the doctrine of Chriſt. In the yere of Chriſt 1030. being vniuſtly ſlaine by wicked murtherers, he ſhed his blood for yͤ name of Chriſt in a towne of Norway called Sticfla Stodum.

The firſt chriſtian king of Norway.

Our countrey alſo had, among many other, one man of excellent pietie whoſe name was Nialus, who about the yeere of Chriſt 1000. liued in the village of Berthorshuol ſituate in the pariſh of Iſland called Landehum: who alſo for his experience in humane affaires, for his great wiſedome and ſage counſell was accompted famous. For whereas in his time Iſland was turmoiled with many fierce mutinies, the inhabitants being in ſubiection to no ſuperiour magiſtrate, he intermedled not in any quarels, ſauing that by his diſcreet vertue & diligence, hee ſet through and brought to compoſition a great number: hee neuer did nor ſuffered violence, but onely vpon the laſt day of his life. So carefully auoyded he al ſeditions and ſtrifes: and gaue good aſſiſtance to others, who were deſirous alſo to auoyd and eſcape them: neither did any man euer put in practiſe his counſel, but it turned to his eſpeciall good: nor euer any did ſwerue therefrom, but with the danger of his life and poſſeſſions. The wordes or rather the oracles that came from him were ſo certaine, that it was wonderfull from whence any man ſhould haue ſo great and ſo ſure forecaſt and counſell of things to come, as was found to be in him. Whereupon his diſcreet and prouident wiſedome ioyned with counſell became a prouerbe amongſt vs Nials bytaradem That is to ſay, the counſel of Nialus: or, the thing is done, or ſucceedeth by Nialus his counſel: when any buſines was atchieued prudently, and with admirable diſcretion. This man, when, for a ſlaughter committed by his ſonne without his knowledge, he was in his owne houſe beſet with a 100. men, who had conſpired his death, and when his enemies began on all ſides to ſet his houſe on fire, ſeeing his ende approch, at length he brake into theſe words. Doubtleſſe theſe things happen by fate, that is, by the will of God. Howbeit, I put my hope and confidence in Chriſt, that we (meaning his wife, and himſelfe) although this our fraile body ſhal vndergoe the corruption of death, in the fire of our enemies, yet, that it ſhalbe deliuered from eternal flames. And ſo in the midſt of theſe voyces, and in the fury of the flames, he with his wife and the manſlayer his ſonne, in the yere of Chriſt 1010. ended his life. A voyce vndoubtedly full well beſeeming the ſonnes of God, arguing the notable comfort of his ſoule amidſt the very pangs of death.

Nialus the firſt knowne profeſſour of Chriſtian faith in Iſland.

I therefore added thoſe things to ſhew by what reaſon I was moued to thinke, that in the very beginning of Chriſtianitie receiued amongſt vs, mens minds were not ſo beguiled and ouerwhelmed in the darkenes of errors, as of late, a little before theſe our times, they haue bene.

But after the Lord God by Luther, and Luthers fellow-labourers in the vineyard of the Lord, and by his godly ſucceſſours, did make the doctrine of ſaluation more manifeſt, and ſhaking off the heauie ſlothe, and thicke miſte of our minds by the finger of his right hand, that is by his holy Spirit Matth.12.v.28.) did plucke the eares of our hearts, and opened our eyes, that we might behold his ſauing health: We all, and euery of vs do beleeue and confeſſe, that God is a ſpirit (Iohn 4.v.24.) eternal (Eſay 40.v.28,) infinite (Iere.23.v.24.Pſal.139.v.7.8.9.) moſt good (Matth.19.v.17.) almighty (Gen.17.1.Reuel.1.8.) one in being, and nature: one in prouidence: one in the making and gouerning of all things (Deut.6.5.Ephe.4.5.) But diſtinguiſhed by the perſons of the Godhead and their properties, the Father, the Sonne, and the holy Ghoſt (Matth.28.19.&3.17.) God the Father the firſt perſon of the Godhead creator of heauen and earth, and all other things (Gen.1.v.1.and in thoſe that folow) the vpholder & gouernor of all (Pſa.115.3.Heb.1.3.) Father of our Lord Ieſus Chriſt (Pſal.2,7. and verſes following) and our Father through him (Rom.8,15.) keeper of our ſoules and bodies (Luke 12.12.) And that Ieſus Chriſt the ſecond perſon of the Godhead is the ſonne of God the Father (Iohn 1.18.&c.) onely begotten (Iohn 1.29.Heb.1.2,) equal to his Father (1.Chro.17.13.Ioh.1.1.) true God (Iohn 1.2,&c.) foreappointed before the creation of all things (1.Pet.1,20,Reuel.13.8.&c.) and preſently after mans fall promiſed to be the Meſſias (Gene.3.15.&c.) publiſhed eftſoones vnto the holy Patriarches, as vnto Abraham (Gen.12.3.&c.) vnto Iſaac (Gen 26.4) vnto Iacob (Gene.28.14.) and confirmed by promiſes (Gen.49.9.Eſa.11.1,10.) prefigured by yͤ ſacrifices of Moſes (Leu.1.2,&c.) and by other types, as namely by the offering of Iſaac (Gen.22.) by the lifting vp of the brazen ſerpent (Num.21.) by Ionas (Ionas 2,&c.) proclaimed by the teſtimony of the Prophets (Eſa.7.14.) and at length in the fulneſſe of time truely exhibited: true man (Iohn 1.14.&c.Gal.4.) that he died for our ſinnes, and was raiſed againe for our iuſtification (Rom.4.25.&c.) Aſcending into heauen (Acts 1.9.&c.) and making interceſſion for vs at the right hand of his Father without ceaſing (1.Iohn 2,1,&c.)

by his holy Spirit (which is the thirde perſon of the Godhead, coequall, and conſubſtantial to the Father and the Sonne, Acts.5.4.) gathering the Church to himſelfe by the Word, and Sacraments (Matth.16.18.Rom.10.14.&c. and ſanctifying it to eternal life, Acts.9.31.&c. And that one day at the end of the world he will come from heauen (Acts.1.11.) to iudge the quicke and the dead (1.Theſſal.4.15.) that he will render vnto the wicked according to their workes, and that he wil iudge them to eternal paines (Matth.13.42.& 25.4.) but that he wil reward them with eternal life, who beleeue in his Name (Matth.25.34.) This Ieſus Chriſt (I ſay) wee acknowledge to be our redeemer (Matth.1.21.) our head (1.Corinth.12.27.) and our Lord (Ephe.4.5.) And that wee in our holy baptiſme do giue, and haue giuen our names vnto him (Acts.2.38.) and that we are engraffed into him by baptiſme (1.Corin.12.13.) And this we do plainely, ingenuouſly, freely, and willingly confeſſe, and witneſſe: And as for all others who inuent any other name in heauen giuen vnto men by which they may be ſaued, we doe earneſtly deteſt, curſe, and condemne them (Acts.4.12.) We holde his moſt holy Word to be the onely rule of our ſaluation: And that alone (all mans deuiſes being caſt away and contemned) we propound vnto our ſelues as an infallible rule, and leuel of our faith (Galat.1.8.Eſai 29.13.Ezech.20.) which we conteine vnder the name of the olde and newe Teſtament (Hebr.8.) deliuered by the Prophets and Apoſtles (Ephe.2.20.) by the ſingular and infinite goodneſſe of God, preſerued euer vnto this day and to be preſerued hereafter alwayes in the Church (Matth.28, laſt verſe. Pſal.71.18.1.Cor.11.26.)

Therefore we render thankes vnto our moſt gratious and Almightey God from our ſoule, and from our whole heart, becauſe that euen vnto vs being ſeparated an huge diſtance from the reſt of the body of his Church, and inhabiting the fartheſt parts of the world, hee would that this light graunted for the reuelation of the Gentiles, and prepared before the face of all people, and in olde time fauourably ſhewed to holy Simeon (for in Chriſt are all the treaſures of wiſedome hidden) which now doeth enlighten and cheriſh with the ſauing beames thereof our whole nation, that hee would (I ſay) this light ſhould come vnto vs. This in briefe (running ouer the very ſumme) is our faith, and our Religion, which by the direction of the holy Spirit, and of his Miniſters in the vineyard of Chriſt, we haue drawen and that out of the fountaines of Iſrael.

Kranzius.

In the yeere of our Lord 1070. ſaw the Iſlanders conuerted vnto Chriſt, &c.

The moſt ancient Chronicles of Iſland.

It is doubtful vnto vs whether in theſe words Kranzius would haue ſaid, that ỹ Iſlanders were firſt conuerted vnto Chriſt in the yeere of our Lord 1070: or whether he doth not deny that they were indeed before conuerted, but ſaith that it was knowne firſt vnto Adalbert that yeere. But whetherſoeuer of theſe he affirmeth: notwithſtanding the yeerely records, and moſt auncient Chronicles of our nation teſtifying the contrary do make his credite to be ſuſpected in this place, vnto which records and Chronicles, whether you had rather giue aſſent concerning our owne proper and domeſtical affaires, done within the bounds of our Iſland, or to Krantzius or any other being ignorant in the ſtory of our countrey, I appeale (friendly reader) vnto your owne diſcretion. For my part I am enforced by many reaſons to agree rather vnto our owne writers. For our countreymen affirme thoſe things onely that be knowen, and in a maner domeſticall: he writeth matters forreine and vnknowen: they haue compiled their hiſtories without the diffaming, diſgracing or reprehending of any other nations, onely that they might aſſigne vnto their owne acts and exploits the true time or age thereof: he hath intermedled in his hiſtorie certaine things contrary to the trueth, and that to the vpbraiding of our nation being moſt vnknowen vnto him, as it ſhall immediatly appeare: they deſcribe the names, yeres, order, ſucceſſion of all the Biſhops of Iſland: he mentioneth onely one, & that farre otherwiſe then the trueth. Furthermore, that I may make good the credite of our Countreymen, I wil impart with ſtrangers a fewe things which I found in our moſt ancient records of the conuerſion of Iſland vnto Chriſt, and of the ſucceſſion of Biſhops in our Churches. Which although they be of litle moment, and not altogether worthy to be written, yet muſt they of neceſſitie bee ſet downe for the defence of the trueth of our affaires againſt Krantzius and others: Thus therefore ſtandeth the certeintie thereof.

Iſland firſt inhabited.

In the yeere of Chriſt 874. Iſland (being indeed diſcouered before that time, as is aboue mentioned) was then firſt of all inhabited by certaine Noruagians. Their chiefetaine was one Ingulphus from whoſe name the Eaſt cape of Iſland is called Ingulffs hoffdi. Theſe planters are reckoned vp by name in our recordes more then to the number of 400. together with thoſe of their blood and kinred, and great families beſides: neither onely is their number deſcribed, but it is alſo plainely ſet downe, what coaſts, what ſhores, and what in-land places eche of them did occupie and inhabite, and what names the firſt inhabitants did giue vnto Streights, bayes, harboroughs, necklands, creekes, capes, rockes, cragges, mountaines, hilles, valleys, homockes, ſprings, floods, riuers. And to be ſhort, what names they gaue vnto their graunges or houſes, whereof many at this day are reteined and vſed. Therefore the Norwayes with their company peopled all the habitable parts of Iſland now occupied by them for the ſpace of 60. yeeres or thereabout: but they remayned Ethnickes almoſt a 100. yeres, except a very few which were baptiſed in Norwaie. But ſcarce a 100. yeres from their firſt entrance being paſt, preſently Chriſtian Religion began to be conſidered vpon, namely about the yeere of our Lord 974. Which thing aboue 20. yeres together, was diuerſly attempted of many not without notable rebellion: amongſt the reſt there are mentioned two outlandiſh Biſhops, who with others diligently laboured in conuerting the Iland to Chriſtian faith: the former was one Fridericus a Saxon borne, who in the yeere 981, came into Iſland, and behaued himſelfe couragiouſly in the office of preaching, and preuailed ſo much, that in the yeere 984. Churches were vſed in Iſland.

Fridericus Saxo the firſt preacher of the Chriſtian faith in Iſland. Anno Domini 981.

But the other outlandiſh Biſhop or preacher whom they called Thangbrands came firſt into Iſland in the yeere 997.

And then after 26. yeeres conſulting about Religion, at length in the yeere 1000. it was decreed in a generall aſſembly of all the inhabitants by their whole conſent, that the worſhip of heatheniſh Idoles being abandoned, they ſhould embrace Chriſtian Religion.

Anno Domini 1000.

Againe, in the yeere 1050. it was decreed in a ſolemne aſſembly of the inhabitants, that temporall or politique lawes (the conſtitutions whereof being brought out of Norwaie were communicated vnto the Iſlanders by one Vlſliot in the yeere 926.) ſhould euery where giue place to the Canon or diuine Lawe.

In the yere 1056. one Iſleif went beyond the ſeas out of Iſland to be cõſecrated biſhop of Iſlãd. He came home conſecrated into Iſland, and entred into the biſhopricke of Schalholt in the yeere 1057. He died 1080. in the yeere of his age 74. The 4. of the Kalends of Iuly.

These things perhaps wil ſeeme trifling, ſhort and baſe, nor ſufficiently worthy to be mentioned, together with many other matters which follow: but neither doe wee compile the Romane hiſtory, neither yet ſhall theſe things be ſo trifling, but that they may be of ſufficient force to conuince the errours of Krantzius and others, according to our purpoſe. And vndoubtedly as touching the trueth of our hiſtories, it is euident that Saxo Grammaticus attributeth very much vnto them: whoſe words in his preface of Denmarke be theſe: Neither is the diligence of the Thylenſes (for ſo he calleth Iſlanders) to be ſmothered in ſilence: who when as by reaſon of the natiue barrennes of their ſoile, wanting nouriſhments of riot, they do exerciſe the duties of continuall ſobrietie, and vſe to beſtow all the time of their life in the knowledge of other mens exploits, they ſupply their want by their wit. For they eſteeme it a pleaſure to know, and commit vnto memory the famous acts of other nations, reckoning it no leſſe praiſeworthy to diſcourſe of other mens vertues, then to practiſe their owne. Whoſe treaſuries repleniſhed with the monuments of hiſtorical matters, I more curiouſly ſearching into, haue compiled no ſmal part of this preſent worke by following of their relation: neither deſpiſed I to haue thoſe men for my iudges, whom I knew to be skilfull in ſo great knowledge of antiquitie. Thus farre Saxo.

A notable teſtimonie of Saxo concerning the Iſlanders.

Wherefore I thinke it not amiſſe to proceede in the recitall of the Biſhops of Iſland, that the order and deſcent of them all, being ſo farre foorth as is poſſible, diligently put together out of our yeerely records, may make good that which we haue alleged againſt Krantzius concerning Iſleif the firſt Biſhop of Iſland.

For which cauſe his countrey (beſides, for many other books tranſlated into our mother tongue) ſhalbe eternally bounden vnto him, that the ſacred Bible alſo, by his meanes, is fairely printed in the language of Iſland. Hee (I ſay) being at this preſent, Biſhop, when he was about to take his charge:

Departed his countrey. 1570.
Returned and entred the ſee of Holen. 1571.

IN theſe times therefore light is reſtored vnto our ſoules from heauen, and the gate of the kingdome of heauen is opened vnto vs by the ſincere preaching of Chriſtian doctrine. For in either of the Biſhops ſeats there is a free ſchoole founded by the liberality and pietie of that moſt renowmed King of Denmarke Chriſtian the third: and afterward the ſonne following the godly ſteppes of his moſt Chriſtian father, the ſaid Free ſchooles by Lord Friderick the ſecond, our moſt religious King, being called vp to his heauenly countrey in the yeare 1588, haue beene encreaſed and furthered: which at this day alſo doe proſper and flouriſh by the fauour and authoritie of the moſt gracious King and our Prince, Chriſtian the fourth, wherein the youth of our Iſlande being inſtructed in the rudiments of liberall artes, and ſacred diuinitie, are trained vp to knowledge and true godlineſſe, that from hence miniſters of Churches may proceede.

We are come at length in the regiſter of the Biſhops of Iſland downe to this preſent day, wherein the forenamed excellent men Gudbrandus Thorlacius, and Otto Enerus, the one at Holen, and the other at Schalholt are Biſhops of our Cathedrall Churches: both of which men, that it would pleaſe God long to preſerue vnto his Church in health and life, for the glorie of his moſt holy name, we all doe earneſtly and with feruent prayers beſeech him.

The ſecond ſection.

They inhabite for the moſt part in caues, or hollowe places within the ſides of mountaines. And againe, They haue many houſes and Churches built with the bones of fiſhes, and Whales. Againe, Many of them alſo to auoide the extremitie of colde, doe keepe themſelues cloſe in their caues, euen as the people of Africa doe to auoyde the heate of the ſunne. Alſo Munſter ſayth: Many in Iſland at this day build their houſes with the ribbes and bones of Whales.

Munſterus. Krantzius. Friſius.

HEre the ſecond member taketh his beginning concerning the courſe of life, and the manners of the inhabitants. And firſt of all what buildings or houſes they doe vſe: namely according to Munſter, Krantzius, Friſius &c. Holes and caues of mountaines. But although in gorgeous buildings, and ſuch other worldly braueries there is very litle helpe to the attayning of a life truely happie: notwithſtanding, wee can not in this place conceale the truth: and we plainely affirme that Coſmographers and Hiſtoriographers alſo doe erre in this point. For ſuch habitations as they write to be common vnto the whole nation, are but in verie fewe places, and are either ſheepe-cots for ſhepheards, or cottages and receptacles for fiſhermen at that time of the yeere onely when they goe a fiſhing, and the others ſtande in neede to watch their flocke. But for their houſes themſelues, and the very dwelling places of men, the Iſlanders haue had them built from auncient time ſtately and ſumptuouſly enough, according to the condition of the Countrey, with timber, ſtones, and turfes, vntill ſuch time as traffike and exchange of wares beganne to ceaſe betweene them and the Noruagians, who were wont to ſupply them with timber, and for that cauſe nowe our houſes beginne to decay: whenas neither we haue woods conuenient for building, nor yet there are nowe a dayes, as there were in olde time, trees caſt vpon our ſhores by the benefite of the ſea, which may in any ſort relieue vs: neither doe outlandiſh Merchants ſuccour our neceſſities: whereupon many of our meaneſt countrey villages are much decayed from their auncient integritie, ſome whereof be fallen to the ground, and others bee very ruinous. Notwithſtanding there be many farmes and villages which I cannot eaſily reckon vp, the buildings whereof doe reſemble that auncient excellencie, the houſes being very large, both in breadth and length, and for the moſt part in height alſo. As for example: farmes or granges which conteine chambers in them, more then fiftie cubites in length, tenne in breadth, and twentie in height. And ſo other roomes, as a parler, a ſtoue, a butterie, &c. anſwering in proportion vnto the former. I could here name many of our countrie buildings both large and wide, neither illfauoured in ſhewe, nor baſe in regarde of their workemanſhip and coſtly firmeneſſe or ſtrength, with certaine Churches alſo, or religious houſes built of timber onely, according to auncient and artificiall ſeemelineſſe and beautie: as the Cathedrall Church of Holen hauing a bodie the fiue pillars whereof on both ſides be foure elnes high, and about fiue elnes thicke, as alſo beames and weather-bourdes, and the reſt of the roofe proportionally anſwering to this lower building. Our moſt gracious King Lord Frederick, whoſe memory is moſt ſacred vnto vs, in the yere 1588, did moſt liberally beſtow timber for the reedifying of this body being caſt downe in the yere 1584. by an horrible tempeſt. But the Church it ſelfe doth manifeſtly exceed the body thereof in all quantity: alſo the inner part of the Church, which is commonly called the quier is ſomwhat leſſe, both then the middle part of the Church, and alſo then the bodie.

Traffike with the people of Norway ceaſed.

Drift wood not ſo plentifull now, as in times paſt.

The Church of Schalholt was farre greater as I haue heard in olde time, then this our Cathedrall, which hauing now beene twiſe burnt, is brought to a leſſer ſcantling. Likewiſe there be ſome other Churches of our Iland, although not matching, yet reſembling the auncient magnificence of theſe. But here the matter ſeemeth not to require that I ſhould runne into a long deſcription of theſe things. For as wee doe not greatly extoll our houſes and buildings, ſo are we nothing aſhamed of them: becauſe being content with our pouertie, we render vnto Chriſt immortall prayſe who deſpiſeth not to be receiued of vs vnder a baſe roofe, and contemneth not our temples and houſes, (which Munſter, Krantzius and Friſius doe not truely affirme to be built of fiſhes and Whales bones) more then the marble vaults, the painted walles, the ſquare pauementes, and ſuch like ornamentes of Churches and houſes in other countries.

The third ſection.

Krantzius. Munſterus.

They and their cattell vſe all one houſe, all one foode or victuals, all one ſtate (here Krantzius hath it lodging.) Alſo. They liue onely by feeding of cattell, and ſometimes by taking of fiſhes.

These be the things together with thoſe that followe, which Krantzius hath champed, and put into Munſters mouth, ſo that Munſter ſhall not neede ſo much as once to chewe them, which may appeare by comparing them both together. For Munſter, as hee ſwallowed theſe reproches, taking them out of Krantzius his preface vpon Norway, ſo he caſteth vp the verie ſame morſels vndigeſted and rawe againſt our nation, in his fourth booke of Coſmographie cap. 8. Thoſe things which haue beene hitherto, although they haue ſufficiently grieued vs, yet will we let them ſeeme more tollerable: but this moſt malitious deuiſe, and thoſe which follow we cannot eaſily brooke. It is our part therefore in this place alſo to auouch the trueth, and to turne the leaſing vpon the authors owne head.

Houſe, &c. Firſt, that which they ſay concerning the ſame common houſe (as alſo liuing, and ſtate) with our cattell, we plainely affirme to be falſe and erronious, not onely the truth it ſelfe being our witneſſe, if any man would make triall, but alſo the experience of manie ſtrangers, that haue liued ſome yeeres amongſt vs, and haue more minde to ſpeake the trueth then to reuile our nation: who haue ſeene our houſes and habitations with their owne eyes, and knewe that in euery particular farme or graunge there were many ſeuerall roomes: namely, in thoſe that were moſt ſimple and baſe, ſeuen or eight: In others which were greater, ſometimes tenne, and ſometimes twentie. In the greateſt ſometimes fortie, and ſometimes fiftie. Which for the moſt part being ſeuered, both by roofes and walles, doe ſerue for the dayly and houſhold affaires of one owner or maſter, ſeldome of two or three, but almoſt neuer of more: whereupon the Reader may eaſily iudge, howe true it is that the Iſlanders and their cattell haue all one houſe to lie in, when euery huſbandman in this varietie of roomes hath ſeuerall oxe-ſtalles, ſheepe-cotes, ſtables, lambes-cots ſeparated indifferent ſpaces one from another, which the ſeruants goe vnto ſo oft as neede requireth, and from thence returne backe to the dwelling houſes.

But whereas one noted in his Mappe of Iſland, concerning the prouince of Skagefiord, that vnder the ſame roofe, men, dogges, ſwine and ſheepe liue all together, it is partly falſe, and partly no maruell: for ſheepe, as it hath beene ſayde, and ſpecially for ſwine (when as that prouince hath no ſwine at all) it is vtterly falſe: for dogges it is no maruell, when as not kings courts were euer, or at this day are deſtitute of them, as it is well knowen to all men. But as touching dogges afterward in the ſeuenth ſection.

Victuals, &c. Whither beaſts meate may fitly be termed by the name of Victus, a man may iuſtly doubt: when Doletus interpreting a peece of Tullie, ſaith: As for Victus (ſayth he) wee will ſo expound it with the Ciuilians, namely that we comprehend vnder the word of Victus all things neceſſarie for the life of man, as meate, drinke, attire of the bodie, &c. And Vlpianus de verborum ſignificatione defineth Victus in the very ſame words. But in this place the ſaide authors call beaſts meate by the name of Victus.

But let vs ſee what trueth and plaine dealing is to be found in theſe men. We haue no labouring cattell beſides horſes and oxen: theſe haue graſſe and hay (except where haye is wanting) for their fodder, and water to drinke. Now, the very ſame writers confeſſe, that the Iſlanders liue by fiſh, butter, fleſh both beefe, and mutton, and corne alſo, though it bee ſcarce, and brought out of other countries. Therefore they haue not the ſame foode with brute beaſts, which notwithſtanding the ſayde writers affirme in theſe wordes:

They and their cattell vſe all one victuals or food. What Munſters meaning is in this clauſe, he himſelfe a little before hath plainely taught.

Iſland (ſaith he) conteineth many people liuing onely with the food of cattell, and ſometimes by taking of fiſhes. But what elſe is the food of cattell, but the meat of cattell, ſaith Doletus? Vnleſſe perhaps Munſter calleth the food of cattell, cattell themſelues ſlaine for the foode of men: whom, as I thinke, the vſe of the latine tongue doth gaineſay, which hath taught vs that as men doe eate, ſo beaſts do feede, and hath termed the victuals of men, and the food or fodder of cattel. But may I thinke that Munſter and Krantzius were ſo mad as to imagine that the Iſlanders liue vpon graſſe and hay? To this paſſe of miſerie was Nabuchodonozor brought vndergoing the yoke of Gods vengeance: Daniel 4. verſ. 30. We will eaſily graunt that beaſts, and cattell will not perhaps refuſe many things, which men not onely of our countrey but of yours alſo eate, if the ſaide beaſts be deſtitute of their vſuall food: as horſes are fedde with corne and barley loaues: they will drinke milke alſo (like vnto calues and lambes) and ale, if it be proffered them, and that greedily. And dogges in like manner will deuour any deinty diſhes whatſoeuer. May any man therefore ſay that men vſe the ſame common victuals with dogges and horſes?

Now, whatſoeuer things haue happened in the time of grieuous famine ought not to be recorded in hiſtorie for the generall cuſtome of any countrey. As it is not lawfull for vs to write concerning other nations, that the people of this or that countrie, doe vſually liue by eating of dogs, miſe, cats, although perhaps in the time of famine or ſeige or dearth of corne, they haue often bene conſtrained ſo to doe.

But that the ſame drinke is ſome times common to many men with beaſts, we will not greatly gaineſay: namely moſt pure water, that naturall drinke created by God for all liuing creatures: which alſo in ſome reſpect Phiſicians doe commende, yea, neither the Patriarkes themſelues, nor our ſauiour Chriſt deſpiſed it.

As touching apparell (for we comprehend apparell alſo vnder the name of Victus) it is no wiſe common to vs with beaſts. For nature hath clad them with haires & briſtles (as I dare ſay Munſter and Krantzius cannot be ignorant) men, being otherwiſe naked, ſtande in neede of clothes to couer their bodies. But I had not thought it might therefore haue properly bene ſayde, that ſheepe and we haue all one apparell. Men of other countries alſo weare cloth of ſheepes wooll, although it be more finely wrought. But no more concerning the attire of the bodie. For it is a meere folly to ſeeke for praiſe, and ambitious reputation by that, which argueth the infirmitie of our nature.

State, &c. Now, it remaineth that we ſhould ſpeake of that ſtate, which we are ſayd to haue common with beaſts: but of what kinde or maner it ſhould be, or our writers would haue it to be, I cannot eaſily diſcerne. State (ſayth Doletus) is either of the body, or of cauſes, or of order and condition. Doubtleſſe, that there is another ſtate of our bodies then of beaſts (for beſides our two feet, we haue hands alſo, and go with our bodies, and countenances lift vpright) and that we be of another order and condition from them, we are verily perſwaded. As for theſe good fellowes, if they know any ſuch matter by themſelues or others, let them diſcloſe it. We doe altogether ſcorne theſe, being ſo vaine things, and breeding ſo great contempt againſt the Maieſty of God our creator, neither do we vouchſafe them any larger diſcourſe.

But becauſe it is our duety not ſo highly to regard either the loue of our countrey, or of any other thing whatſoeuer, but that we may be ready at all times, and in all places, to giue trueth the preheminence: I will ſay in a word what that was which perhaps might miniſter occaſion to this infamous reproch of writers.

There be nere vnto Schalholt, vpon the South ſhore of Iſland, three ſmall pariſhes ſtanding betweene two moſt ſwift riuers Thiorſaa, and Olfwis Aa, being in a maner deſtitute both of wood and turfe, which is the accuſtomed fewell of the countrey. And although moſt of the inhabitants of theſe pariſhes, and ſome of their neighbours, as they doe in time of yeere prouide all things neceſſary for houſholde, ſo eſpecially thoſe things which belong to fires and bathes: notwithſtanding there be certaine among them of the baſeſt ſort of people, who, becauſe they want thoſe things at home, and are not able to prouide them from other places, are conſtrained to vſe ſtraw for the dreſſing of their meat. But when the ſharpe rigor of ſnowy Winter commeth on, theſe poore people betake them to their oxe ſtalles, & there ſetting vp ſheds, & doing their neceſſary buſineſſe in the day time, when they are not able to make fires, they borrow heat from their oxen, as it hath beene reported to mee by others: And ſo they onely, being verie fewe in number, doe not willingly enioye, but are conſtrayned to vſe the ſame common houſe with their oxen. But for their liuelihoode and ſtate it is farre otherwiſe with them then with their oxen, of which thing I haue entreated before. This is the lot, & pouertie of certaine men in thoſe pettie pariſhes, the condition whereof is therefore made a common by-worde of the people amongſt vs, though ſomewhat iniuriouſly. Where I would willingly demaund with what honeſtie men can impute that vnto the whole nation, which is hard and ſkantly true of theſe fewe poore men: I am wearie to ſtay any longer in this matter: onely, becauſe I haue to doe with Diuines, let that of Salomon ſuffice, Prouerbs 17. verſe 5. Hee that mocketh the poore, reprocheth him that made him.

And in very deede, becauſe this our nation is nowe, and heretofore hath beene poore and needie, and as it were a begger amongeſt many rich men, it hath ſuſteined ſo many taunts and ſcoffes of ſtrangers. But let them take heede whom they vpbraide. Verely if there were nothing elſe common vnto vs with them, yet we both conſiſt of the ſame elements, and haue all one father and God.

The fourth ſection.

Krantzius.
Munſterus.

They leade their liues in holy ſimplicitie, not ſeeking any more then nature doeth afforde. A happie Nation, whoſe pouertie no man doth enuie. But the Engliſh and Daniſh merchants ſuffer not the nation to be at reſt, who frequenting that countrey to tranſport fiſhing, haue conueighed thither our vices, together with their manifolde wares. For nowe, they haue learned to brew their water with corne, and beginne to deſpiſe, and loath the drinking of faire water. Now they couet golde and ſiluer like vnto our men.

Simplicitie, &c. I am exceedingly glad, that the commendation of holy ſimplicitie is giuen vnto vs. But it grieueth vs that there is found ſo great a decay of iuſtice, and good lawes, and ſo great want of gouernement amongſt vs, which is the cauſe of many thouſande haynous offences: which all honeſt and godly men doe continually bewayle. This inconuenience doth not happen through the negligence of the higheſt Magiſtrate, that is, of our moſt gracious King, but rather by our owne fault: who doe not preſent theſe thinges vnto his Maieſtie, which are diſorderly committed without his knowledge, and which are wanting in the inferiour Magiſtrate.

Merchants, Moreouer, Merchants, not onely of England and Denmarke, but eſpecially of Germanie, as at this time, ſo heretofore frequenting our countrey, not to tranſport fiſhing, but fiſhes, taught not Iſlanders the arte of brewing corne with water. For yͤ Norvagians themſelues, the firſt, to our knowledge, that inhabited this Iland, frõ whom yͤ Iſlanders are lineally deſcended, brought with them out of Norway that arte, as alſo golde and ſiluer coine, ſo that in old time there was no leſſe vſe of ſiluer and golde with vs, then there is at this day.

And it is certaine that before the often nauigations of Danes, Germans, and Engliſh men vnto vs, our land was much more fertile then nowe it is (feeling the inconueniences of the aged and decayed worlde, both from heauen and earth) and brought foorth, in certaine choyſe places, corne in abundance.

Corne of old time growing in Iſland.

The fift ſection.

Munſterus.
Krantzius.

The King of Denmarke and Norway ſendeth euery yeere a Lieutenant into the Countrey.

IN the yeere of our Lord eight hundred fortie and ſixe Harald Harfagre (which is to ſay, golden haires or faire clockes) was borne. Who afterward in the yeere eight hundred fiftie and eight, being choſen king of Norway, when he was growen to age, and full ſtrength, changed the forme of the Noruagian gouernment. For whereas before it was deuided into pettie Prouinces (which they called Fylki, and the pettie kings that gouerned them, Fylkis konga) he reduced it by force of armes vnto a Monarchie. But when ſome inhabitants of the countrie, being mightie, and deſcended of good parentages, could not well brooke this hard dealing, they choſe rather to be baniſhed their countrey, then not to ſhake off the yoke of tyranny. Whereupon, they in the yeere aboue named eight hundred ſeuentie and foure, tranſported colonies into Iſland being before diſcouered by ſome men and found out, but vnpeopled as yet: And ſo being the firſt founders of our nation, they called themſelues Iſlanders, which name their poſteritie reteineth vnto this day. And therefore the Iſlanders liued a long time, namely, three hundred eightie and ſixe yeeres, more or leſſe, acknowledging no ſubmiſſion to any other Nation. And although Haquinus that crowned King of Norway, who reigned longeſt of any Noruagian king, namely, aboue ſixtie ſixe yeares, did oftentimes attempt by Ambaſſadours to make the Iſlanders become tributaries vnto him, notwithſtanding at all times they conſtantly withſtoode him, till at length about the yeere of our Lord 1260. they performed homage vnto him. And afterward ward continued alwayes in their promiſed loyaltie, being ſubiects to the king of Norway. But now at this day, ſince the Empire of the Norwagians was tranſlated by Margaret Queene of Denmarke, Suedeland, and Norway vnto the Danes, they doe honour as their ſoueraigne Lord and King the moſt gracious king of Denmarke.

The ſixt ſection.

All things are common among them except their wiues.

Krantzius. Munſterus,

HEre Krantzius in the firſt place beginneth with ſuch a gybe. There be many notable things in their manners, &c. Moreouer, your wit being too haſtie in affirming things vnknowen, doth here alſo deminiſh your credite. The experience as well of all things as of perſons and times prooueth your ouer greedie deſire of noueltie, of fame and vaine-glorie, and argueth your great negligence in maintaining the truth. O worthy writers.

But whether the aforeſayde things bee true or no, wee call the lawes of our Countrey to witneſſe, which the Iſlanders from the beginning haue vſed all one with the Norwayes: of the King and his ſubiects: of the ſtate of iuſtice, and of law-caſes which come to be decided there: of inheritances: of adoptions, marriages, theft, extortions, lending, bargaines, and the reſt: all which, to what purpoſe ſhould they be enioyned vnto them with whom all things are common? We call to witneſſe ſo many broyles and contentions in our courts, and places of iudgement in Iſland concerning goods mooueable, and immooueable: we call to witneſſe our kings, now of Denmarke, aforetime of Norway, who by ſo many billes of ſupplication out of Iſland in old time, and of late haue beene often interrupted, for the ſetting through of controuerſies concerning poſſeſſions. Wee call Krantzius himſelfe to witneſſe againſt himſelfe, whoſe words in the firſt ſection were theſe. Before the receiuing of Chriſtian faith the Iſlanders liuing according to the lawe of nature did not much differ from our lawe, &c. If by the lawe of nature, then doubtleſſe by that lawe of iuſtice, which giueth to euery man his owne: If by the lawe of iuſtice, then certainely diſtinctions of properties and poſſeſſions muſt needes haue taken place in our Nation: and although this very lawe is often tranſgreſſed, and that haynouſly euen in the Church: notwithſtanding both the Church, and alſo heathen men doe acknowledge it to be moſt iuſt and good.

They make all one reckoning of their whelpes, and of their children: except that of the poorer ſort you ſhall eaſier obtaine their ſonne then their ſhalke.

ALthough in the beginning of this Treatiſe I thought that Munſter and other men of great name in thoſe things which they haue left written concerning Iſland, were not to bee charged with ſlander, yet whether that fauour may here be ſhewed by any man whatſoeuer (be he neuer ſo fauourable, and neuer ſo ſincere) I doe not ſufficiently conceiue. For what ſhould moue ſuch great men, following the deſpightfull lyes, and fables of mariners, to defame and ſtaine our nation with ſo horrible and ſo ſhamefull a reproch? Surely nothing elſe but a careleſſe licentiouſneſſe to deride and contemne a poore and vnknowen Nation, and ſuch other like vices.

But, be it knowen to all men that this vntrueth doth not ſo much hurt to the Iſlanders, as to the authors themſelues. For in heaping vp this, and a great number of others into their Hiſtories, they cauſe their credite in other places alſo to be ſuſpected: And hereby they gaine thus much (as Ariſtotle ſayth) that when they ſpeake trueth no man will beleeue them without ſuſpition.

But attend a while (Reader) and conſider with me the grauitie and wiſedome of theſe great Clarkes: that we may not let paſſe ſuch a notable commendation of Iſland. Krantzius and Munſter haue hitherto taught, that the Iſlanders are Chriſtians. Alſo: that before the receiuing of Chriſtian faith they liued according to the lawe of nature. Alſo: that the Iſlanders liued after a law not much differing from the lawe of the Germanes. Alſo, that they liued in holy ſimplicitie.

Attend I ſay (good Reader) and conſider, what markes of Chriſtianitie, of the law of nature, of the Germanes law, of holy ſimplicitie, theſe authors require, and what markes they ſhew and deſcribe in the Iſlanders. There was one of the ſayd markes before: namely, that the Iſlanders doe place hell or the priſon of the damned, within the gulfe and bottome of mount Hecla: concerning which, reade the firſt ſection of this part, and the ſeuenth ſection of the former. The ſeconde marke is, that with the Anabaptiſts they take away diſtinctions of properties and poſſeſſions: in the ſection next going before. The third and moſt excellent is this: thoſe ſingular & naturall affections, that loue and tender care, and that fatherly and godly minde of the Iſlanders towards their children, namely that they make the ſame accompt of them, or leſſe then they doe of their dogges. What? Will Munſter and Krantzius after this faſhion picture out vnto vs the law of Chriſt, the lawe of nature, the lawe of the Germanes, and holy ſimplicitie? O rare and excellent picture, though not altogether matching the ſkill of Apelles: O ſharpe and wonderfull inuention, if authenticall: O knowledge more then humane, though not at all diuine.

But wee Iſlanders (albeit the fartheſt of all nations and inhabiting a frozen clime) require farre other notes of Chriſtianitie. For we haue the commaundement of God, that euery man ſhould loue his neighbour as himſelfe. Nowe there is none (I ſuppoſe) that doeth not loue or eſteeme more of himſelfe then of his dogge. And if there ought to bee ſo great fauour, ſo great eſtimation, ſo great loue vnto our neighbour, then how great affection doe wee owe vnto our children? The moſt neare and inſeparable loue of whom, beſides that nature hath moſt friendly ſetled in our mindes, the loue of God alſo commandeth vs to haue ſpeciall regard in trayning them vp (Exod. 12. 24. Epheſ, 6. 4.) namely, that there may be in holy marriage certaine ſeminaries of Gods Church, and exerciſes of all pietie and honeſtie: according to the excellent ſaying of the Poet.

God will haue each family,
  a litle Church to be.
Alſo Of humane life or mans ſocietie, a Schole or College is holy matrimonie.

That it may be manifeſt, that among Chriſtians their ſonnes are more to be accompted of and regarded, then their dogges: and if any doe no otherwiſe eſteeme of them, that they are no Chriſtians.

But this naturall affection towarde our moſt deare of-ſpring is plainely ſeene in the heathen themſelues: that whomſoeuer you totally depriue of this, you denie them alſo to bee men. The mothers of Carthage teſtifie this to be true, when as in the third Punic warre the moſt choyſe and gallant young men in all the Citie were ſent as pledges into Sicilia, whom they followed vnto the ſhippes with moſt miſerable weeping and lamentation, and ſome of them being with griefe ſeparated from their deare ſonnes, when they ſawe the ſayles hoyſed, and the ſhippes departing out of the hauen, for very anguiſh caſt themſelues headlong into the water: as Sabellicus witneſſeth. Egæus doth teſtifie this, who when hee ſawe the ſhippe of his ſonne Theſeus, returning out of Creete with blacke ſayles, thinking that his ſonne had periſhed, ended his life in the next waters: Sabell, lib. 3. cap. 4. Gordianus the elder, Proconſul of Africa, doth teſtifie this, who likewiſe, vpon rumors of the death of his ſonne, hanged himſelfe. Campoful. lib. 5. cap. 7. Alſo Iocaſta the daughter of Creon, Auctolia daughter of Simon, Anius King of the Thuſcans, Orodes King of the Parthians, and an infinite number of others. Concerning whom reade Plutarch ſtar. lib. 2. and other authors &c. To theſe may be added that ſentence, Loue deſcendeth, &c. So that you ſee, it is no leſſe proper to a man entirely to loue his children, then for a bird to flie: that if our writers at any time haue confeſſed the Iſlanders to be men (much leſſe to be Chriſtians) they muſt, will they nill they, aſcribe vnto them this loue and affection towardes their children: If not, they doe not onely take from them the title and dignitie of men, but alſo they debaſe them vnder euery brute beaſt, which euen by the inſtinct of nature are bound with exceeding great loue, and tender affection towards their young ones.

I will not adde againſt this ſhameleſſe vntruth moſt notable examples of our owne countreymen: I will omit our lawes of man-ſtealing, more ancient then the Iſlanders themſelues, being receiued from the Norwagians, and are extant in our booke of lawes vnder the title Manhelge cap. 5. Whoſoeuer ſelleth a freeman (any man much more a ſonne) vnto ſtrangers &c.

Now if any man be driuen to that hard fortune, that he muſt needs commit his owne ſonne into the hands of ſome inhabitant or ſtranger, being vrged thereunto by famine, or any other extreame neceſſity, that he may not be conſtrained to ſee him hungerſtarued for want of ſuſtenance, but keepeth his dogge ſtill for his owne eating, this man is not to be ſayd, that he eſteemeth equally or more baſely of his ſonne then of his dogge: whether Iſlanders or any other countreymen do the ſame.

The occaſion of this ſlander.

The Germane or the Daniſh mariners might perhaps find amongſt vs certaine beggars laden with children (for we haue here a great number of them) who in ieſting maner for they are much giuen to trifling talke, might ſay: Giue me this, or ſell me that: and when the ſtranger ſhould aſke, What will you giue me for it? the begger might anſwere; I haue ten or foureteene children, I will giue you ſome one or more of them, &c. For this rabble of beggers vſeth thus fondly to prate with ſtrangers. Now if there be any well diſpoſed man, who pitying the need and folly of theſe beggers, releaſeth them of one ſonne, and doth for Gods ſake by ſome meanes prouide for him in another countrey: doth the begger therefore (who together with his ſonne being ready to die for hunger and pouerty, yeeldeth and committeth his ſonne into the hands of a mercifull man) make leſſe account of his ſonne then of his dogge? Such works of loue and mercie haue bene performed by many, aſwell Iſlanders themſelues as ſtrangers: one of which number was that honourable man Accilius Iulius, being ſent by the moſt gracious King of Denmarke into Iſland in the yere of our Lord 1552, who, as I haue heard, tooke, and carried with him into Denmarke fifteene poore boyes: where afterward it was reported vnto me, that by his good meanes euery one of them being bound to a ſeuerall trade, proued good and thriftie men.

What if ſome man be driuen to that paſſe, that he doth not onely ſell his ſonne, but not finding a chapman, his owne ſelfe killeth and eateth him? Examples of this kinde be common, namely of the vnwilling and forced crueltie of parents towards their children, not being pricked on through hate, or want of naturall affection, but being compelled thereunto by vrgent neceſſitie. Shall any man hereupon ground a generall reproch againſt a whole nation? We reade that in the ſiege of Samaria, two mothers ſlew their ſonnes, and eat them ſodden: 4.King. chap.6. We reade in the ſiege of Ieruſalem, how lamentable the voice of that diſtreſſed mother was, being about to kill her tender childe: My ſweet babe, ſayth ſhe (for I will report Euſebius owne words, concerning this matter, though very common, that the affection of a mother may appeare) borne to miſerie and miſhap, for whom ſhould I conueniently reſerue thee in this tumult of famine, of warre, and ſedition? If we be ſubdued to the gouernment of the Romans, we ſhall weare out our vnhappy dayes vnder the yoke of ſlauery. But I thinke famine will preuent captiuity. Beſides, there is a rout of ſeditious rebels much more intollerable then either of the former miſeries. Come on therefore, my ſonne, be thou meat vnto thy mother, a fury to theſe rebels, and a byword in the common life of men, which one thing onely is wanting to make vp the calamities of the Iewes. Theſe ſayings being ended, ſhe killeth her ſonne, roaſting and eating one halfe, and reſeruing the other, &c. Euſebius lib.3. cap.6. Now, what man will not beleeue that this vnhappy mother would full gladly haue paſſed ouer this her ſonne into the poſſeſſion of ſome maſter or chapman, if ſhe could haue happened vpon any ſuch, with whom ſhe thought he might haue beene preſerued? That famine is well knowen which oppreſſed Calagurium, a city of Spaine, when in olde time Cneius Pompeius layed ſiege thereunto (Valerius lib.7.cap.7.) the citizens whereof conuerted their wiues and children into meat for the ſatiſfying of their extreame hunger, whom doubtleſſe they would with all their hearts haue ſolde for other victuals. That famine alſo is well knowen which in the yere of our Lord 851 (Vincent.lib,25,cap,26.) afflicted Germany, inſomuch that the father was glad to deuoure his owne ſonne. It is well knowen after the death of the Emperour Henry the ſeuenth, in a famine continuing three whole yeres, how the parents would deuoure their children, and the children their parents, and that eſpecially in Polonia and Bohemia. And that we may not onely allege ancient examples: it is reported that there was ſuch a grieuous dearth of corne in the yeeres 1586, and 1587, thorowout Hungary, that ſome being compelled for want of food were faine to ſell their children vnto the moſt bloudy and barbarous enemy of Chriſtians, and ſo to enthrall them to the perpetuall yoke of Turkiſh ſlauery: and ſome are ſayd to haue taken their children, whom they could no longer ſuſtaine, and with cruell mercy to haue caſt them into Danubius, and drowned them. But ſhould theſe ſtories and the like make any man ſo mad as to affirme that this or that nation accuſtometh to kill their children for their owne food, and to ſell them willingly vnto the Turks, or to drowne and ſtrangle them willingly in the water? I cannot thinke it. So neither (becauſe beggers in Iſland being enforced through extreame and biting neceſſitie, do willingly part with their ſonnes) is this cuſtome generally to be imputed vnto the whole nation, and that by way of diſgrace, by any man, except it be ſuch an one who hath taken his leaue of all modeſty, plaine dealing, humanity, and trueth.

But I could wiſh that the loue of dogges in Iſlanders might be more ſparingly reprehended by thoſe people, whoſe matrons, and ſpecially their noble women, take ſo great delight in dogs, that they carry them in their boſomes thorow the open ſtreetes: I will not ſay in Churches: which faſhion Cæſar blamed in certaine ſtrangers, whom he ſaw at Rome carrying about young apes and whelpes in their armes, aſking them this queſtion: Whether women in their countrey brought foorth children or no? ſignifying heereby, that they do greatly offend, who beſtow vpon beaſts theſe naturall affections, wherewith they ſhould be inuited to the loue of mankinde, and ſpecially of their owne offpring: which ſtrange pleaſure neuer ouertooke, nor poſſeſſed the nation of the Iſlanders. Wherefore now (Munſter and Krantzius) you muſt finde vs out other markes of Chriſtianity, of the law of nature, of the Germans law, and of holy ſimplicity.

The eight ſection.

Krantzius. Munſterus.

They honour their Biſhop as their King: vnto whoſe command all the whole people haue reſpect. Whatſoeuer he preſcribeth out of the law, the ſcriptures, or the cuſtomes of other nations, they do full holily obſerue.

There was indeed at the beginning, about the time of the reformation of religion, great reuerence had vnto the biſhop; but neuer ſo great, that our politique lawes at the biſhops command ſhould giue place to outlandiſh lawes & cuſtomes. Neither in the time of Albertus Krantzius, much leſſe of Munſter (of which two the firſt deceaſed in the yere of our Lord 1517, and the ſecond 1552) the biſhops of Iſland had the authority of kings, when as many of the country which were of the richer ſort, would not doubt to rebell againſt them; which thing is too well knowen in our countrey. Yet in the meane time, the biſhops being terrible with their authority of excommunication, reduced ſome vnder their ſubiection, and others at that time they cruelly perſecuted.

Moreouer, albeit at that time the biſhop was had in great, yea, in exceeding great reuerence, yet now adayes, the darkeneſſe of popery being diſpelled, the deuill aſſaulteth men after another ſort, and euen here amongſt vs, he is not ſlacke to arme their minds with contempt, and peruerſe ſtubburneſſe againſt God, and his holy miniſtery.

The ninth ſection.

Munſterus.

They liue there for the moſt part vpon fiſhes, becauſe of their great want of corne, which is brought in from the port townes of other countreys: who cary home fiſhes from thence with great gaine. Alſo Munſter ſayth, they do there vſe ſtockefiſh in ſtead of bread, which groweth not in that countrey.

Conſider (friendly reader) how Munſter is delighted to harpe vpon one ſtring, that when he can write nothing of an vnknowen nation which may cary any ſhew with it, he is faine either to bring in falſhood, or often to repeat the ſame things, & ſo to become tedious vnto his reader: for he ſayd a little before, that the Iſlanders liue vpon fiſh. His words aboue recited were theſe: Iſland conteineth many people liuing onely with the food of cattell, and ſometimes by taking of fiſhes. And that I may omit the reſt in which ſome trifle might be noted: whereas he ſayeth that bread groweth not in Iſland: it is moſt true: which I thinke is common there with to Germany alſo, becauſe bread groweth not there neither, except it be in Munſters field where naturall vineger alſo doth marueilouſly encreaſe. But theſe toyes, by the liberty of rethoricke forſooth, ſhall be out of danger. Howbeit, vnto theſe reproches, which ſtrangers do gather from the meats and drinks of the Iſlanders, we will hereafter briefly anſwere, Sect. 15.

The tenth ſection.

Munſterus. Krantzius.

The inhabitants do celebrate the actes of their anceſtours, and of their times, with ſongs, and they graue them in rocks and promontories, that they may not decay with poſterity, but onely by the defect of nature.

Friſius.

There be diuers found amongſt them that be minſtrels, and can play vpon the lute, who with their delectable muſicke do enſnare and take both fowles and fiſhes.

The Iſlanders preſerue in writing the acts of their anceſtors.

We denie not but that ſome worthy actes of our forefathers be reſerued in the ſongs and poemes of our countreymen, as alſo in proſe: but that the ſame things haue beene engrauen by vs, or by our anceſtours, in rocks or promontories, we may in no caſe acknowledge that praiſe to be due vnto vs, nor yet the other of minſtrels, and taking of birds and fiſhes. For we holde it to be the part of an honeſt and ingenuous mind, as to refute falſe crimes, ſo not to challenge vndeſerued praiſe vnto himſelfe, nor to accept it being offered.

The eleuenth ſection.

But now, let this be the end of our controuerſie with the authours aforeſayd, being otherwiſe men of excellent learning, and of great renowne, who notwithſtanding ſo inconſiderately haue entermedled theſe things in their writings. And now the better part of my labour is finiſhed.

But yet there remaines that viperous German brood, the mother whereof would haue it come to light, as it were at a ſecond birth, without name, that it might ſo much the more freely wound the fame of the Iſlanders with venemous ſting.

Moreouer, although I be not afrayd to encounter with this beaſt, yet would I haue all men to know with what minde I vndertake this enterpriſe, namely, not that I meane to contend with his peſtiferous rancour, by reproches, and railing ſpeeches (for as it is in the common prouerbe:

I know, that if I ſtriue with dung moſt vile,
How ere it be, my ſelfe I ſhall defile)

but that I may ſatisfie all honeſt and well affected men, euen ſtrangers themſelues, who ſhall hereafter reade or heare, or haue heretofore heard that Germane paſquill, leaſt they alſo ſhould thinke that we worthily ſuſtaine ſo monſtrous a diſgrace: and alſo that I may from henceforth, if it be poſſible, reſtraine others (who vſe thoſe venemous Germaine rimes to the vpbraiding of our nation, and from hence borrow their ſcoffes, and reprochfull taunts to the debaſing of vs Iſelanders) from that libertie of backbiting.

Therefore, that I may not be tedious to the reader with long circumſtances, I will come to the rehearſing of thoſe things which that railing Germane hath heaped vp in his lewd paſquill: whom alſo I could bring in, repeating his friendly verſes of the Iſlanders, within the compaſſe of this my booke, but that I doe foreſee that the ſayd ſlanderous libell being ſtuffed with ſo many and diuers reproches, might breed offence to all honeſt men, and deterre them from reading it, with the filthineſſe thereof.

I will therefore repeat the principall matters (omitting thoſe things which he hath common with others, or, that heretofore haue beene examined) but farre more modeſtly then he, leaſt (as I ſayd) I cauſe good and learned mens eares to tingle at his lewd and vnſeemely rimes: they that are deſirous to ſee or heare him, let them enquire at the Stationers. It is no part of our meaning (I ſay) to defile theſe papers with his ſtinking ſlanders, or with the filthy ſinke of his reproches.

The firſt obiection or reproch.

Firſt therefore, this our goodly Germane Hiſtoriographer obiecteth that there be many Paſtours in Iſland, which preach not to their people once in two yeres, as it is read in the former edition of this paſquill, which notwithſtanding the latter edition doth refute: ſaying that the ſayd Paſtours vſe to preach but fiue times in an whole yeere: Which two, how well they agree together, let the reader be iudge, ſeeing it is manifeſt that the authour himſelfe, preſently after the firſt edition, had ſcarſe ſeene Iſland. So oftentimes one lie bewrayeth another, according to that ſaying: Trueth agreeth vnto trueth; but falſhood agreeth neither to trueth nor to falſhood.

But ſith it is our part not to diſſemble the trueth in any place, we will not denie that holy ſermons, about the time wherein this ſycophant liued in Iſland, namely in the yere 1554, were ſeldomer in vſe then they are at this day, namely, the darkeneſſe of popery being ſcarſely at that time diſpelled. Which alſo is to be vnderſtood concerning the Pſalmes of Dauid mumbled by the common people in Latine, as he caſteth vs in the teeth: for the Papiſts grounding all the hope of their ſaluation in the Maſſe, did little regard the ſermon, or doctrine. But after we were freed from that miſt, it hath bene (God be thanked) farre otherwiſe with vs: although we cannot altogether excuſe the dulneſſe, ſlouth, and prepoſterous care of certeine of our Paſtours. Which, whether it agreeth to any of their countreymen or no, let other nations iudge.

The twelfth ſection.

The ſecond reproch.

Secondly, the trifler ſhamefully reporteth, that adulteries and whoredomes are not onely publique, and common vices amongſt Iſlanders: but that they are not accounted by them for vices.

ALthough indeed theſe moſt filthy abominations, euen in our common wealth, be not altogether vnuſuall: notwithſtanding, ſince all men know that they are farre more common in other nations, where be greater multitudes of people, he did vndeſeruedly, and maliciouſly note the Iſlanders rather with this reproch, then other people and nations, who are more infamous with this crime then our countreymen.

And albeit I wiſh with all mine heart that vices and enormities were much leſſe winked at in our countrey, then we ſee they are, yet notwithſtanding this iugler, by reaſon of his naturall inclination to backbiting, hath added this in his laſt reproch: namely, that theſe vices by the Iſelanders are not accounted for vice. For, in what common wealth dare the impudent companion affirme this to be true? What? in that common wealth which hath ſworne to obſerue the law contained in our ſtatutebooke vnder the title of Manhelge chap. 28, whereby it is enacted, that whoſoeuer committeth adultery with another mans wife the ſecond time, his goods being confiſcate, ſiſcate, he ſhall be puniſhed with death: Or in that common wealth, which not long ſince hath inflicted the penalty of 80 dallers vpon a ſeruant committing adultery with his maſters wife: Or in that common wealth which hath decreed, that if he doth not pay, nor lay in ſureties at the day appointed, he ſhalbe baniſhed the countrey: Or in that common wealth the politike lawes whereof doe ſtreightly command that whoſoeuer be according to law found in adultery with another mans wife, by her huſband, if he eſcape, he ſhall vndergoe the puniſhment of manſlaughter: Or in that common wealth, the politike lawes whereof do alſo enioyne a man that is taken in carnall copulation with the mother, daughter, or ſiſter, by the ſonne, father, or brother, to redeeme his life with the one halfe of that which he ought to haue payed, if he had ſhed the innocent bloud of the ſayd party: Or in that common wealth the politike lawes whereof haue noted and condemned adultery vnder the name of a moſt heinous offence: and do ſtraightly command that he which is taken the third time in that beaſtly act ſhalbe puniſhed with death:

You ſee therefore (friendly readers) what an iniurious Notary we haue, affirming that adultery and whoredome in Iſland deſerueth not the name of ſinne and wickedneſſe: for although ſome officers let ſlip this or that vice vnpuniſhed, yet ought not the whole nation, nor the lawes, nor all good and godly men, in that regard, to be accuſed or euill ſpoken of.

The thirteenth ſection.

The third reproch.

The third reproch is, whereby he doth brand the Iſlanders with the marke of deceit and trechery toward the Germans.

Doubtles the author of this libell was ſome vagabond huckſter or pedler, and had gone particularly into many corners of Iſland to vtter his trumpery wares, which he alſo teſtifieth of himſelfe in his worthy rimes, that he had trauailed thorow the greateſt part of Iſland, whereupon when he had played the couſining mate with others (for often times deceit and lying are ioyned together, and he hath ſufficiently proued himſelfe to be a liar, by this triall of his wit) peraduenture himſelfe was beguiled by them whom he before time had defrauded.

From hence proceedeth this ſlander againſt our whole Nation: diſſembling in the meane time with what honeſtie certaine Germans, making yeerely voyages into Iſland, deale with our men. But ſeeing by this complaint I haue not determined to reproch others, but to lay open the vndeſerued reproches of others againſt our nation, I do here of purpoſe ſurceaſe.

The fourteenth ſection.

The 4,5,6,& 7 reproches.

Fourthly, he ſayth that in bankets none of the gheſts vſe to riſe from the table: but that the good wife of the houſe reacheth to euery one a chamber-pot, ſo oft as need reqnireth. Moreouer, he noteth much vnmanerlineſſe of eating and drinking at bankets.

Fiftly, he obiecteth cuſtomes of lying in bed, and of dining: namely that ten perſons, more or leſſe, men and women lie altogether in the ſame bed, and that they eat their meat lying in bed: and that in the meane time they do nothing but play at dice or at tables.

Sixtly, he reporteth that they waſh their hands and their faces in piſſe.

Seuenthly, he deſpightfully abaſeth our ſolemnizings of marriages, ſpouſals, birth-dayes, and our cuſtomes at burials.

These, and a number of ſuch like reproches hath this impure ſlanderer ſpued foorth againſt an innocent nation, yea and that nation which hath deſerued right well of him and his countrimen. Which are of the ſame kind with theſe, in ſo much that we altogether diſdeigne to make anſwere vnto them. For, that we may graunt (which notwithſtanding we will in no caſe yeelde vnto) that this worthy Germane notarie obſerued ſome ſuch matter among baſe companions, and the very of-ſcouring of the common people, with whom he was much more conuerſant then with good and honeſt perſons (for he had liued, as his rimes teſtifie, ſomewhat long vpon the coaſt of Iſland, whither a confuſed rout of the meaneſt common people, in fiſhing time do yeerely reſort, who being naught aſwell through their owne lewdneſſe, as by the wicked behauiour of outlandiſh mariners, often times doe leade a badde and diſhoneſt life) notwithſtanding we are in this place more manifeſtly wronged through the knauery of this one varlet, and deſperate ſycophant by his defaming of the whole nation (as others alſo vſually do) then that it ſhould neede any refutation at all. Of which thing ſtrangers themſelues, who are not a little conuerſant in our Iſland, may be moſt ſufficient witneſſes.

I could alſo gather together many ſuch filthy, vnmannerly, and baudie faſhions noted by others euen in his own countrey. But I deteſt this dogged eloquence, neither take I any pleaſure to be witty in the diſgracing of others: and yet I will not ſhew my ſelfe ſuch a milke-ſoppe as to be daunted with light words. Onely, let all honeſt and good men conſider, what diſpoſition it argueth, for one to obiect againſt a whole nation certaine miſdemeanours committed by ſome one or other particular man. If any man ſhould trauell thorowout all the cities and townes of Germanie or any other nation, and heaping together the offences, and moſt leud maners, the robberies, manſlaughters, murthers, whoredomes, adulteries, inceſts, riots, extortions, and other prophane, and filthy acts, ſhould affirme them to be common to all Germans, or otherwiſe to any other whole nation, and ſhould exaggerate all theſe things with notorious lies, is he to be accounted one that ſpends his time in a good argument? But what maruaile is it, though a varlet, and, that I may giue him his true title, a filthy hogge, that rimer (I ſay) hath bewrayed his nature and diſpoſition in ſuchlike reproches? For it is well knowen that ſwine, when they enter into moſt pleaſant gardens, do not plucke lillies, or roſes, or any other moſt beautifull and ſweet flowers; but thruſting their ſnouts into the ground, doe tumble and toſſe vp and downe whatſoeuer durt and dung they can finde, vntill they haue rooted vp moſt vncleane things, namely ſuch as are beſt agreeable to their nature, wherewith they greedily glut themſelues: Euen ſo this hoggiſh Rimer lightly paſſeth ouer the beſt and moſt commendable things of our Common wealth, but as for the worſt, and thoſe which haue beene committed by none, or by very few, namely, ſuch things as beſt fit his humour and diſpoſition (that he might indeed ſhew himſelfe to be the ſame which we haue termed him) thoſe things (I ſay) hath he ſcraped vp together: whereupon hereafter by my conſent, for his maners and diſpoſition let him enioy the name of a ſwine.

The fifteenth ſection.

The ninth reproch.

WEe will heere rehearſe the ninth reproch, which that ſlanderous hogge hath drawen from the maner of liuing, and ſpecially from the meat and drinke of the Iſlanders, and that not in one or a few wordes, but in a large inuectiue: namely, that they eate olde and vnſauoury meates, and that, without the vſe of bread. Alſo, that they eate diuers kinds of fiſhes which are vnknowen to ſtrangers: and that they mingle water and whey together for drinke. All which this venemous paſquill, with eloquent railing and wittie ſlaunder hath ſet out at the full.

And albeit we doe ſcarſe vouchſafe to ſtand longer about anſwering of him, yet in regard of others, who at this day partly woonder at the matter, and partly obiect it to our nation, we thought good to adde ſome few things in this place.

Firſt therefore we will diuide this our nation into two parts: into beggers, and thoſe that ſuſteine both themſelues, and, amongſt others, beggers alſo. As touching all kinds of meats wherewith beggers and other poore men ſatiſfie their hunger, it is no eaſie matter to rehearſe and examine them: neither, becauſe extreame neceſſity hath at ſome times compelled them to eate this or that, therefore is it meet to preſcribe certeine kindes and number of meats to the reſt of the nation. For we haue alſo a law among the canons apoſtolicall, which forbiddeth to eat things ſtrangled: in the obſeruing of which canons, antiquity hath ſeemed to be very deuout.

Moreouer, we will make a diſtinction of times alſo, that it may ſeeme no ſtrange accident in the time of famine, though many things are, and haue bene vſed by a great number of men to ſatiſfie their hunger, which at other times are ſcarſe meat for dogges. As very lately in the yeere 1590 we heard concerning the citizens of Paris, being enuironed with the moſt ſtreight ſiege of Henrie the fourth, King of Nauarre, ſuffering (as Petrus Lindebergius ſpeaketh) the famine of Saguntum; inſomuch that they did not onely eate their horſes, but alſo taking the fleſh of dead men, and beating their bones to powder in a morter, they mingled therewith a handfull or two of meale, eſteeming it dainties. And it is well knowen alſo of other nations, who in the like vrgent neceſſities haue liued by eating of miſe, cats and dogs. In like maner ſometimes are we Iſlanders conſtrained to doe, not being beſieged by our enemies (although hitherto we haue abſteined from mans fleſh, yea, and to our knowledge, from dogs, miſe, and cats) for whereas we prouide things neceſſary for food out of the land and ſea, & no ſuſtenance, or very little, is brought vnto vs by ſtrangers: ſo often as God withholdeth his gifts of land and ſea, then muſt follow and enſue a dreadfull ſcarſity of victuals, whereupon the inhabitants are ſometimes vexed with grieuous famine. And therefore it is likely that they amongſt vs which vſed to liue from hand to mouth, and had not ſome prouiſion of former yeeres remaining, haue beene driuen to great extremities, ſo often as need hath enforced them thereunto. But whether this thing ought worthily to miniſter occaſion to a publique and perpetuall reproch againſt the Iſlanders, more then other nations, I referre it to the iudgement of indifferent and honeſt mindes.

Moreouer, whereas diuers vſe to obiect concerning the proper & accuſtomed fare of our country, eſpecially of fleſh, fiſh, butter being long time kept without ſalt: alſo concerning white-meats, want of corne, drinking of water, and ſuch like: in moſt places of Iſland (for there be many of our countrimen alſo, who, after the maner of the Danes and Germans ſo farre foorth as ought in a meane to ſuffice chaſt and temperate minds, although we haue not any great varietie of ſauce, being deſtitute of Apothecaries ſhops, are of ability to furniſh their table, and to liue moderately) we cōfeſſe it to be euen ſo: namely that the foreſaid kinds of victuals are vſed in moſt places without the ſeaſoning of ſalt. And I will further adde, that the very ſame meats, which certaine ſtrangers abhorre ſo much as to name, yet ſtrangers themſelues, when they are among vs do vſe to eat them with delight. For albeit for the moſt part we haue no corne, nor meale, nor yet ſalt the prouocation of gluttony, for the ſeaſoning of our victuals, is common to vs all: yet notwithſtanding almighty God of his goodneſſe hath taught our men alſo the way, how they ſhould handle, and keepe in ſtore thoſe things which belong to the ſuſtentation of life, to the end it may appeare, that God in nouriſhing and ſuſteining of vs Iſlanders, is not tyed to bread and ſalt.

Want of ſalt in Iſland.

The Iſlanders meanes of preſeruing their meates without ſalt.

But whereas ſtrangers boaſt that all their victuals are more pleaſant and wholeſome: yet we denie that to be a ſufficient reaſon, why they ſhould vpbraid vs in regard of ours: neither do we thinke God to be a debter vnto our deinty mouthes; but rather we giue him thanks with our whole hearts, that he vouchſafeth without this delicate and nice fare, which is eſteemed to be ſo pleaſant and wholeſome, to grant euen vnto the men of our countrey many yeeres, and a good age as alſo conſtant health, and flouriſhing ſtrength of body; all which we account to be ſignes of wholeſome and conuenient nouriſhment, and of a perfect conſtitution. Beſides, our wits are not altogether ſo groſſe and barren, as the philoſophers ſeeme to aſſigne vnto this our aier, and theſe nouriſhments, which perhaps many of our countreymen could much rather verifie in deeds then in words, if (as the Poet ſayth) enuious pouerty did not holde vs downe.

But here the iudgement of the common people, as often in other matters, doth too plainly deceiue (I except all good and well experienced men) ſome of them which would ſeeme to be wiſe: namely, that whatſoeuer their vſe doth not admit, or that they haue not ſeene, nor had triall of beforetime, they preſently condemne. As for example, he that neuer ſaw the ſea will not be perſuaded that there is a mediterrane ſea: ſo doe they meaſure all things by their owne experience and conceit, as though there were nothing good and profitable, but that onely wherewith they mainteine their liues. But we are not growen to that pitch of folly, that becauſe we haue heard of certeine people of Aethiopia, which are fed with locuſts, being therefore called by Diodorus, Acridophagi, and of a certaine nation of India alſo, whom Clitarchus & Megaſtenes haue named Mandri, as Agatarchides witneſſeth, or of others that liue vpon frogs or ſea-crabs, or round ſhrimps, which thing is at this day commonly knowen, that (I ſay) we ſhould therefore preſume to make them a laughing ſtocke to the common people; becauſe we are not accuſtomed to ſuch ſuſtenance.

The tenth reproch.

TEnthly, that vnciuill beaſt caſteth our men in the teeth with their good hoſpitality. They do not (ſayth he) carry about mony with them in their purſes, neither is it any ſhame to be enterteined in a ſtrange place, and to haue meat and drinke beſtowed of free coſt. For if they had any thing which they might impart with others, they would very gladly. Moreouer, he maketh mention of certeine churches or holy chappels (as of a baſe thing) which many of the Iſlanders haue built in their owne houſes: & that firſt of all in the morning, they haue recourſe thither, to make their prayers, neither do they ſuffer any man before they haue done their deuotion, to interrupt them. Theſe be the things which he hath ſet downe as ſome notable diſgrace vnto the Iſlanders. And no maruell:

For filthy ſwine deteſt all cleanly ones,
And hogs vncleane regard not precious ſtones.

Which I feare, leaſt it may be too truely affirmed of this ſlanderer, as it is manifeſt out of theſe two laſt obiections.

Howbeit, ſithens he himſelfe is a moſt ſufficient witneſſe of his owne vertues, we will referre the reader, who is deſirous to know more of him vnto his booke of rimes againſt Iſland, wich we haue now examined in our former ſections: at whoſe railing & filthy ſpeeches we haue bene aſhamed on his behalfe: inſomuch that thoſe things which he with ſatyrical, ſatyrical: nay ſathanicall biting and reuiling of our nation, hath not bluſhed to write, are irkſome for vs to repeat: ſo great & abominable is his inſolency, & his reproches ſo heinous. Good God! whoſoeuer ſhall view this cartlode of ſlanders (for we haue mentioned the leaſt part thereof, becauſe I was loth to loſe my labour, or, as the wiſe man ſayth, to anſwere a foole according to his fooliſhneſſe, whereas in his times there is not one word without a reproch) will he not iudge the authour of this paſquill to haue bene a moſt lewde man, yea the very droſſe of mankinde, without pietie, without humanitie?

But here I haue iuſt occaſion to doubt whether the authour of theſe reuilings hath bene the more iniurious to Iſlanders, or the Printer thereof Ioachimus Leo (and whatſoeuer elſe they be who in their editions dare neither profeſſe their owne name, nor the name of their Citie) which Leo hath nowe twiſe, if not oftner, publiſhed the ſaide pamphlet at Hamburg. Doe you ſuffer this to goe vnpuniſhed, O ye counſell and commons of Hamburg? What? haue you determined to gratifie Iſland in this ſort, which theſe many yeeres, by reaſon of your aboundant traffique with vs, and your tranſporting home of all our commodities, of our beeues and muttons, and of an incredible deale of butter and fiſhes, hath bene vnto your Citie in ſtead of a ſtorehouſe? In times paſt alſo, certaine Cities of England and of Holland haue reaped the commodities of this Iſle: Moreouer, there hath bene ancient traffique of Denmarke, Breme, and Lubeck with the Iſlanders. But they neuer gained by any of their chapmen ſuch commendations, and ſuch thanks, as are conteined in this libell: It hath in your, in your Citie (I ſay) bene bred, brought forth, iterated, if not the thirde time publiſhed: which hath armed other people, vnto whom the name of Iſland was otherwiſe ſcarce knowne, to the diſdaine and contempt of this our Nation: and this iniurie offered by a Citizen of yours, hath Iſland ſuſteined theſe 30. yeeres and more, and doeth as yet ſuſteine. But many ſuch accidents often come to paſſe without the knowledge of the magiſtrate, neither do we doubt but that good men are grieued at ſuch infamous libels, and do take diligent heed that they be not publiſhed: for ſuch editions are contrary to the lawe of nature: Doe not that to another which thou wouldeſt not haue done vnto thy ſelfe: and to the lawes Emperial of infamous libels: wherein is enioyned a moſt grieuous penaltie vnto thoſe, who inuent, write, vtter, or cauſe ſuch libels to be bought or ſold, or do not preſently vpon the finding thereof teare them in pieces.

The commodities of Iſland.

The ancient traffique of England with Iſland.

Lawes againſt libels.

But now time bids vs to ſound a retreat: and to returne home vnto thee Iſland (our moſt deare mother) whom neither pouertie, nor colde, nor any other ſuch inconueniences ſhall make irkſome vnto vs, ſo long as thou ceaſeſt not to giue heartie and willing entertainment vnto Chriſt: where, firſt we doe earneſtly exhort thee to the ſerious and ardent affection, and loue of God, and of the heauenly knowledge reueiled vnto vs in Chriſt: that thou wouldeſt preferre this before all things, being enflamed with deſire of doctrine, and of the worde: that thou wouldeſt not lightly eſteeme, contemne or hate the holy miniſterie and miniſters, but reuerence, cheriſh, and loue them. Accompting thoſe that practiſe the contrary as wicked and prophane: and managing all thine affaires both priuate and publique, according to the preſcript rule of pietie and honeſtie, that vnto this, thy ſtates and orders Eccleſiaſticall and politique may in all things be conformed: and ſo in either kinde of life relying thy ſelfe vpon that leuell and line of equitie and iuſtice, and auoyding others, who vpon ſtubberneſſe and impietie ſwerue therefrom. That thou wouldeſt alſo inflict iuſt puniſhments vpon offenders: All which we doubt not but the Magiſtrate will haue reſpect vnto. But eſpecially that thou admitteſt none to be Magiſtrates, but men of approued fidelitie and honeſtie, and ſuch as may adioyne vnto theſe vertues others hereto belonging, by which meanes inconueniences may fitly be preuented. For if this matter be well handled, namely that they which are the beſt of all good men be choſen to beare publique authoritie, wicked and vnfit men being altogether reiected; the condition of the ſubiects ſhalbe moſt proſperous: the liues and maners of all men ſhal proue by ſo much the more commendable: godlineſſe alſo and honeſtie ſhal become the more glorious. But on the contrary, if paſtours of Churches be not anſwerable to their function, either in life or doctrine; if all men without reſpect or difference be admitted to the gouernment of the common wealth, who aſpire thereunto by their owne raſhneſſe, ambition, or auarice, and deſire of honour, yea though they be ſuſpected or conuicted of crimes and diſhoneſtie, or be protectours or vniuſt fauourers of ſuch perſons as are ſuſpected and conuicted; then what will be thy ſtate, oh Iſland? What wil be thy outward ſhew or condition? Doubtleſſe moſt miſerable. Neither ſhalt thou by any other meanes more ſuddenly approch to thy ruine and deſtruction, then if thou committeſt thy ſelfe to the gouernment of ſuch men, who to the vttermoſt of their power, although they be of thine owne blood, dayly ſeeke thine ouerthrow for their owne priuate aduantage and ſecret malice. Wherefore (to be ſhort) let theſe be to aduertiſe my deare Countrey, how behouefull it is that the matters aforeſaid be put in practiſe.

But whileſt I am ſpeaking theſe things vnto thee (my Countrey) oh that my deepe and dolefull ſighes, which lie hid in the former ſpeach, might pierce the eares of our Kings moſt excellent Maieſtie, before whom, on thy behalfe I doe bewaile the publique miſeries, which in this reſpect eſpecially doe ariſe, because wee are ſo farre diſtant from the ſeate and royall preſence of our King, that many therefore take more libertie, and promiſe more ſecuritie of offending vnto themſelues. But we will commit all theſe matters to the moſt iuſt Iudge of heauen and earth who beholdeth all things in equitie.

Nowe it remaineth (my beloued Countrey) that thou wouldeſt take in good part theſe my labours employed in thy ſeruice, and accept them with that fauourable and courteous minde which I haue expected. And although they be not of ſuch worth as I could wiſh, yet ſith a willing minde is worth all, I would not therefore giue ouer becauſe I miſtruſted my ſelfe as one inſufficient to contend for thine innocencie, for thy reputation, and thine honour, my deare Countrey. But rather whatſoeuer it be (if it be ought) and how mickle-ſoeuer which for my ſlender abilitie I was able to afford in thy defence, I thought good not to ſuppreſſe it: for I eſteeme not thoſe men worthy of commendation, who deſpairing

To ouergrow the limmes of Lyco ſtoute,
Neglect to cure their bodies of the goute.

And in very deed, it doeth no whit repent me of my labour, if this little treatiſe ſhall tend neither to thine, nor to mine owne diſgrace. But if it ſhall any thing auaile to thine honour or defence, I will thinke my trauaile right well beſtowed. Yea, if by this my ſlender attempt I may but onely excite other of thy children, and my natiue Countreymen, being farre my ſuperiours both in learning and induſtrie to take thy cauſe in hand, either nowe or hereafter, what reaſon is there why any man ſhould ſay that it is not worth my labour? Nowe, if they addreſſe themſelues to write, howſoeuer my fame ſhalbe obſcured, yet will I comfort my ſelfe with their excellencie, who are like to impaire my credite: for albeit a man ought to haue ſpeciall regard of his name and fame, yet is he to haue more of his Countrey, whoſe dignitie being ſafe and ſound, we alſo muſt needes eſteeme our ſelues to be in ſafetie.

The ſame in Engliſh.

To the reuerend, learned, and vertuous, Maſter Hugh Branham miniſter of the Church of Harwich in England, his brother and felow-paſtour, &c.

I Much marueiled (euen as your ſelfe, reuerend ſir, coniectured that I would) at the firſt ſight of your letters, that being a ſtranger I ſhould be ſaluted in writing by one altogether vnknowen vnto mee. Howbeit, reading a litle further, I found my ſelfe, if not otherwiſe, yet by name at leaſt (which proceedeth of your curteſie) knowen vnto you: And alſo, for that I ſawe you deſirous of the credite and honeſt report of vs Iſlanders, I greatly reioyced. Wherefore I my ſelfe will be a meane, that your vertue and good name (becauſe you congratulate with vs for the Goſpel of Chriſt here publiſhed, and doe thinke and write ſo louingly and honourably of our nation) may ceaſe hereafter to be vnknowen amongſt vs.

As touching the monuments of antiquitie which are here thought to be extant; there is, in very deede, nothing (except thoſe particulars, whereof mention is made in the Commentary of Iſland, which you write vnto me that you haue ſeene) worthy to be read or written, which I may communicate with you. And as concerning our neighbour Countreys we haue litle to ſhewe, beſides the hiſtory of the Kings of Norway, (or rather ſome fragments of the ſame hiſtory) which others haue otherwiſe deſcribed: howbeit they are all in a maner ſuch things as Crantzius neuer mentioned: vnleſſe it be ſome fewe relations. Moreouer, as touching Gronland, we holde this from the opinion of our aunceſtours; that, from the extreeme part of Norway, which is called ‖ Biarmlandia, and from whence the ſaide Gronland is not farre diſtant, it ſtretcheth about the Northren coaſt of Iſland with an huge circuit in maner of an halfe Moone. Our Chronicles likewiſe doe teſtifie that our owne countreymen in times paſt reſorted thither for traffique, and alſo that the very ſame countrey of Gronland had certaine Biſhops in the dayes of Poperie. More then this we cannot auouch. But now it is reported that your Engliſhmen (whom I may almoſt call the lordes of the Ocean ſea) make yeerely voyages vnto Gronland: concerning which matter if you pleaſe to giue me further aduertiſement, you ſhall doe me an eſpecial fauour. Moreouer, whatſoeuer newes you heare concerning the affaires of England or of other Countreys thereabout, I pray you make vs acquainted therewith. Thus (reuerend ſir) wiſhing you long life, for the ſeruice of God, for the increaſe of learning, and the benefit of the people committed to your charge, I bid you farewel. From Iſland vpon the feaſt of the viſitation of the bleſſed Virgine Mary, Anno Dom. 1595.

Yours Gudbrandus Thorlacius Biſhop of

The miraculous victory atchieued by the Engliſh Fleete, vnder the diſcreet and happy conduct of the right honourable, right prudent, and valiant lord, the L. Charles Howard, L. high Admirall of England, &c. Vpon the Spaniſh huge Armada ſent in the yeere 1588. for the inuaſion of England, together with the woſull and miſerable ſucceſſe of the ſaid Armada afterward, vpon the coaſts of Norway, of the Scottiſh Weſterne Iſles, of Ireland, of Spaine, of France, and of England, &c. Recorded in Latine by Emanuel van Meteran in the 15. booke of his hiſtory of the low Countreys.

HAuing in part declared the ſtrange and wonderfull euents of the yeere eightie eight, which hath bene ſo long time foretold by ancient propheſies; we will now make relation of the moſt notable and great enterpriſe of all others which were in the foreſaid yeere atchieued, in order as it was done. Which exploit (although in very deed it was not performed in any part of the low Countreys) was intended for their ruine and deſtruction. And it was the expedition which the Spaniſh king, hauing a long time determined the ſame in his minde, and hauing conſulted thereabout with the Pope, ſet foorth and vndertooke againſt England and the low Countreys. To the end that he might ſubdue the Realme of England, and reduce it vnto his catholique Religion, and by that meanes might be ſufficiently reuenged for the diſgrace, contempt and diſhonour, which hee (hauing 34. yeeres before enforced them to the Popes obedience) had endured of the Engliſh nation, and for diuers other iniuries which had taken deepe impreſſion in his thoughts. And alſo for that hee deemed this to bee the moſt readie and direct courſe, whereby hee might recouer his hereditarie poſſeſſion of the lowe Countreys, hauing reſtrained the inhabitants from ſayling vpon the coaſt of England.

Which verily, vpon moſt weightie arguments and euident reaſons, was thought would vndoubtedly haue come to paſſe, conſidering the great aboundance and ſtore of all things neceſſary wherewith thoſe men were furniſhed, which had the managing of that action committed vnto them. But now let vs deſcribe the matter more particularly.

The preparation of the Spaniſh King to ſubdue England and the lowe Countreys.

The Spaniſh King hauing with ſmall fruite and commoditie, for aboue twentie yeeres together, waged warre againſt the Netherlanders, after deliberation with his counſellers thereabout, thought it moſt conuenient to aſſault them once againe by Sea, which had bene attempted ſundry times heretofore, but not with forces ſufficient. Unto the which expedition it ſtoode him nowe in hand to ioyne great puiſſance, as hauing the Engliſh people his profeſſed enemies; whoſe Iland is ſo ſituate, that it may either greatly helpe or hinder all ſuch as ſaile into thoſe parts. For which cauſe hee thought good firſt of all to inuade England, being perſwaded by his Secretary Eſcouedo, and by diuers other well experienced Spaniards and Dutchmen, and by many Engliſh fugitiues, that the conqueſt of that Iland was leſſe difficult then the conqueſt of Holland and Zeland. Moreouer the Spaniards were of opinion, that it would bee farre more behoouefull for their King to conquere England and the lowe Countreys all at once, then to be conſtrained continually to maintaine a warlike Nauie to defend his Eaſt and Weſt Indie Fleetes, from the Engliſh Drake, and from ſuch like valiant enemies.

And for the ſame purpoſe the king Catholique had giuen commandement long before in Italy and Spaine, that a great quantitie of timber ſhould be felled for the building of ſhippes; and had beſides made great preparation of things and furniture requiſite for ſuch an expedition; as namely in founding of braſen Ordinance, in ſtoring vp of corne and victuals, in trayning of men to vſe warlike weapons, in leauying and muſtering of ſouldiers: inſomuch that about the beginning of the yeere 1588. he had finiſhed ſuch a mightie Nauie, and brought it into Liſbon hauen, as neuer the like had before that time ſailed vpon the Ocean ſea.

A very large and particular deſcription of this Nauie was put in print and publiſhed by the Spaniards; wherein were ſet downe the number, names, and burthens of the ſhippes, the number of Mariners and ſouldiers throughout the whole Fleete; likewiſe the quantitie of their Ordinance, of their armour, of bullets, of match, of gun-poulder, of victuals, and of all their Nauall furniture was in the ſaide deſcription particularized. Unto all theſe were added the names of the Gouernours, Captaines, Noblemen and gentlemen voluntaries, of whom there was ſo great a multitude, that ſcarce was there any family of accompt, or any one principall man throughout all Spaine, that had not a brother, ſonne or kinſeman in that Fleete: who all of them were in good hope to purchaſe vnto themſelues in that Nauie (as they termed it) inuincible, endleſſe glory and renowne, and to poſſeſſe themſelues of great Seigniories and riches in England, and in the lowe Countreys. But becauſe the ſaid deſcription was tranſlated and publiſhed out of Spaniſh into diuers other languages, we will here onely make an abridgement or briefe rehearſall thereof.

The number and qualitie of the ſhips in the Spaniſh Fleete, with the ſouldiers, Mariners, and pieces of Ordinance.

Portugal furniſhed and ſet foorth vnder the conduct of the duke of Medina Sidonia generall of the Fleete, ten Galeons, two Zabraes, 1300. Mariners, 3300. ſouldiers, 300. great pieces, with all requiſite furniture.

Biſcay, vnder the conduct of Iohn Martines de Ricalde Admiral of the whole Fleete, ſet forth tenne Galeons, 4. Pataches, 700. mariners, 2000. ſouldiers, 250. great pieces, &c.

Guipuſco, vnder the conduct of Michael de Oquendo, tenne Galeons, 4. Pataches, 700. mariners, 2000. ſouldiers, 310. great pieces.

Italy with the Leuant Ilands, vnder Martine de Vertendona, 10. Galeons, 800. mariners, 2000. ſouldiers, 310. great pieces, &c.

Caſtile, vnder Diego Flores de Valdez, 14. Galeons, two Pataches, 1700. mariners, 2400. ſouldiers, and 380. great pieces, &c.

Andaluzia, vnder the conduct of Petro de Valdez, 10. Galeons, one Patache, 800. mariners, 2400. ſouldiers, 280. great pieces, &c.

Item, vnder the conduct of Iohn Lopez de Medina, 23. great Flemiſh hulkes, with 700. mariners, 3200. ſouldiers, and 400. great pieces.

Item, vnder Hugo de Moncada, foure Galliaſſes containing 1200. gally-ſlaues, 460. mariners, 870. ſouldiers, 200. great pieces, &c.

Item, vnder Diego de Mandrana, foure Gallies of Portugall, with 888. gally-ſlaues, 360. mariners, 20. great pieces, and other requiſite furniture.

Item, vnder Anthonie de Mendoza, 22. Pataches and Zabraes, with 574. mariners, 488. ſouldiers, and 193. great pieces.

Beſides the ſhips aforementioned there were 20. carauels rowed with oares, being appointed to performe neceſſary ſeruices vnto the greater ſhips: inſomuch that all the ſhips appertayning to this Nauie amounted vnto the ſumme of 150. eche one being ſufficiently prouided of furniture and victuals.

The number of Mariners in the ſaide Fleete were aboue 8000. of ſlaues 2088. of ſouldiers 20000. (beſides noblemen and gentlemen voluntaries) of great caſt pieces 2650. The foreſaid ſhips were of an huge and incredible capacitie and receipt. For the whole Fleete was large ynough to containe the burthen of 60. thouſand tunnes.

A deſcription of the Galeons.

The Galeons were 64. in number, being of an huge bigneſſe, and very ſtately built, being of marueilous force alſo, and ſo high, that they reſembled great caſtles, moſt fit to defend themſelues and to withſtand any aſſault, but in giuing any other ſhips the encounter farre inferiour vnto the Engliſh and Dutch ſhips, which can with great dexteritie weild and turne themſelues at all aſſayes. The vpperworke of the ſaid Galeons was of thickneſſe and ſtrength ſufficient to beare off muſket-ſhot. The lower worke and the timbers thereof were out of meaſure ſtrong, being framed of plankes and ribs foure or fiue foote in thickneſſe, inſomuch that no bullets could pierce them, but ſuch as were diſcharged hard at hand: which afterward prooued true, for a great number of bullets were founde to ſticke faſt within the maſſie ſubſtance of thoſe thicke plankes. Great and well pitched Cables were twined about the maſts of their ſhippes, to ſtrengthen them againſt the battery of ſhot.

A deſcription of the Galliaſſes.

The Galliaſſes were of ſuch bigneſſe, that they contained within them chambers, chapels, turrets, pulpits, and other commodities of great houſes. The Galliaſſes were rowed with great oares, there being in eche one of them 300. ſlaues for the ſame purpoſe, and were able to do great ſeruice with the force of their Ordinance. All theſe together with the reſidue aforenamed were furniſhed and beautified with trumpets, ſtreamers, banners, warlike enſignes, and other ſuch like ornaments.

The great Ordinance, bullets, gun-poulder, and other furniture.

Their pieces of braſen ordinance were 1600. and of yron a 1000.

The bullets thereto belonging were 120. thouſand.

Item of gun-poulder 5600. quintals. Of matche 1200. quintals.

Of muſkets and kaliuers 7000. Of halberts and partiſans 10000.

Moreouer they had great ſtore of canons, double-canons, culuerings and field-pieces for land ſeruices.

Their prouiſion of victuals and other things neceſſary.

Likewiſe they were prouided of all inſtruments neceſſary on land to conueigh and tranſport their furniture from place to place; as namely of carts, wheeles, wagons, &c. Alſo they had ſpades, mattocks and baſkets to ſet pioners on worke. They had in like ſort great ſtore of mules and horſes, and whatſoeuer elſe was requiſite for a land-armie. They were ſo well ſtored of biſcuit, that for the ſpace of halfe a yeere, they might allow eche perſon in the whole Fleete halfe a quintall euery moneth; whereof the whole ſumme amounteth vnto an hundreth thouſand quintals.

Likewiſe of wine they had 147. thouſand pipes, ſufficient alſo for halfe a yeeres expedition. Of bacon 6500. quintals. Of cheeſe three thouſand quintals. Beſides fiſh, rice, beanes, peaſe, oile, vineger, &c.

Moreouer they had 12000. pipes of freſh-water, and all other neceſſary prouiſion, as namely candles, lanternes, lampes, ſailes, hempe, oxe-hides and lead to ſtop holes that ſhould be made with the battery of gunſhot. To be ſhort, they brought all things expedient either for a Fleete by ſea, or for an armie by land.

This Nauie (as Diego Pimentelli afterward confeſſed) was eſteemed by the King himſelfe to containe 32000. perſons, and to coſt him euery day 30. thouſand ducates.

A Spaniſh terza conſiſteth of 3200. ſouldiers.

There were in the ſaid Nauie fiue terzaes of Spaniards, (which terzaes the Frenchmen call Regiments) vnder the command of fiue gouernours termed by the Spaniards, Maſters of the field, and amongſt the reſt there were many olde and expert ſouldiers choſen out of the gariſons of Sicilie, Naples, and Terçera. Their Captaines or Colonels were Diego Pimentelli, Don Franciſco de Toledo, Don Alonço de Luçon, Don Nicolas de Iſla, Don Auguſtin de Mexia; who had eche of them 32. companies vnder their conduct. Beſides the which companies there were many bands alſo of Caſtilians and Portugals, euery one of which had their peculiar gouernours, captaines, officers, colours and weapons.

It was not lawfull for any man, vnder grieuous penaltie, to cary any women or harlots in the Fleete: for which cauſe the women hired certaine ſhippes, wherein they ſailed after the Nauie: ſome of the which being driuen by tempeſt arriued vpon the coaſt of France.

The generall of this mightie Nauie, was Don Alonſo Perez de Guzman duke of Medina Sidonia, Lord of S. Lucar, and knight of the golden Fleece: by reaſon that the Marques of ſanta Cruz appointed for the ſame dignitie, deceaſed before the time.

Iohn Martines de Ricalde was Admirall of the Fleete.

Francis Bouadilla was chiefe Marſhall: who all of them had their officers fit and requiſite for the guiding and managing of ſuch a multitude. Likewiſe Martin Alorcon was appointed Vicar generall of the Inquiſition, being accompanied with more then a hundreth Monkes, to wit, Ieſuites, Capuchines, and friers mendicant. Beſides whom alſo there were Phiſitians, Chirurgians, Apothecaries, and whatſoeuer elſe perteined vnto the hoſpitall.

Ouer and beſides the forenamed gouernours and officers being men of chiefe note, there were 124. very noble and worthy Gentlemen, which went voluntarily of their owne coſts and charges, to the ende they might ſee faſhions, learne experience, and attaine vnto glory. Amongſt whom was the prince of Aſcoli, Alonzo de Leiua, the marques de Pennafiel, the marques de Ganes, the marques de Barlango, count de Paredes, count de Yeluas, and diuers other marqueſes and earles of the honourable families of Mendoza, of Toledo, of Pachieco, of Cordona, of Guzman, of Manricques, and a great number of others.

The preparation of the duke of Parma to aide the Spaniards.

While the Spaniards were furniſhing this their Nauie, the duke of Parma, at the direction of king Philip, made great preparation in the low Countreys, to giue ayd & aſſiſtance vnto the Spaniards; building ſhips for the ſame purpoſe, and ſending for Pilots and ſhip-wrights out of Italy.

In Flanders hee cauſed certaine deepe chanels to be made, and among the reſt the chanell of Yper commonly called Yper-lee, employing ſome thouſands of workemen about that ſeruice: to the end that by the ſaid chanel he might tranſport ſhips from Antwerp and Ghendt to Bruges, where hee had aſſembled aboue a hundreth ſmall ſhips called hoyes being well ſtored with victuals, which hoyes hee was determined to haue brought into the ſea by the way of Sluys, or elſe to haue conueyed them by the ſaide Yper-lee being now of greater depth, into any port of Flanders whatſoeuer.

In the riuer of Waten he cauſed 70. ſhips with flat bottomes to be built, euery one of which ſhould ſerue to cary 30. horſes, hauing eche of them bridges likewiſe for the horſes to come on boord, or to goe foorth on land. Of the ſame faſhion he had prouided 200. other veſſels at Neiuport, but not ſo great. And at Dunkerk hee procured 28. ſhips of warre, ſuch as were there to be had, and cauſed a ſufficient number of Mariners to be leuied at Hamburg, Breme, Emden, and at other places. Hee put in the ballaſt of the ſaid ſhips, great ſtore of beames of thicke plankes, being hollow and beſet with yron pikes beneath, but on eche ſide full of claſpes and hookes, to ioyne them together.

Hee had likewiſe at Greueling prouided 20. thouſand of caſke, which in a ſhort ſpace might be compact and ioyned together with nailes and cords, and reduced into the forme of a bridge. To be ſhort, whatſoeuer things were requiſite for the making of bridges, and for the barring and ſtopping vp of hauens mouthes with ſtakes, poſts, and other meanes, he commanded to be made ready. Moreouer not farre from Neiuport hauen, he had cauſed a great pile of wooden fagots to be layd, and other furniture to be brought for the rearing vp of a mount. The moſt part of his ſhips conteined two ouens a piece to bake bread in, with a great number of ſadles, bridles, and ſuch other like apparell for horſes. They had horſes likewiſe, which after their landing ſhould ſerue to conuey, and draw engines, field-pieces, and other warlike prouiſions.

Neere vnto Neiuport he had aſſembled an armie, ouer the which he had ordained Camillo de Monte to be Camp-maſter. This army conſiſted of 30. bands or enſignes of Italians, of tenne bands of Wallons, eight of Scots, and eight of Burgundians, all which together amount vnto 56. bands, euery band containing a hundreth perſons. Neare vnto Dixmud there were muſtered 80. bands of Dutch men, ſixtie of Spaniards, ſixe of high Germans, and ſeuen bands of Engliſh fugitiues, vnder the conduct of ſir William Stanlie an Engliſh knight.

In the ſuburbes of Cortreight there were 4000. horſemen together with their horſes in a readineſſe: and at Waten 900. horſes, with the troupe of the Marques del Gwaſto Captaine generall of the horſemen.

Vnto this famous expedition and preſuppoſed victorie, many potentates, princes, and honourable perſonages hied themſelues: out of Spaine the prince of Melito called the duke of Paſtrana and taken to be the ſonne of one Ruygomes de Silua, but in very deed accompted among the number of king Philips baſe ſonnes. Alſo the Marques of Burgraue, one of the ſonnes of Archiduke Ferdinand and Philippa Welſera. Veſpaſian Gonſaga of the family of Mantua, being for chiualry a man of great renowne, and heretofore Vice-roy in Spaine. Item Iohn Medices baſe ſonne vnto the duke of Florence. And Amadas of Sauoy, the duke of Sauoy his baſe ſonne, with many others of inferiour degrees.

The Popes furtherance to the conqueſt of England, and of the low Countries.

Likewiſe Pope Sixtus quintus for the ſetting forth of the foreſaid expedition, as they vſe to do againſt Turkes & infidels, publiſhed a Cruzado, with moſt ample indulgences which were printed in great numbers. Theſe vaine buls the Engliſh and Dutchmen deriding, ſayd that the deuill at all paſſages lay in ambuſh like a thiefe, no whit regarding ſuch letters of ſafe conduct. Some there be which affirme that the Pope had beſtowed the realme of England with the title of Defenſor fidei, vpon the king of Spaine, giuing him charge to inuade it vpon this condition, that hee ſhould enioy the conquered realm, as a vaſſal and tributarie, in that regard, vnto the ſea of Rome. To this purpoſe the ſaid Pope proffered a million of gold, the one halfe thereof to be paied in readie money, and the other halfe when the realme of England or any famous port thereof were ſubdued. And for the greater furtherance of the whole buſineſſe, he diſpatched one D. Allen an Engliſh man (whom hee had made Cardinall for the ſame ende and purpoſe) into the Low countries, vnto whom he committed the adminiſtration of all matters eccleſiaſticall throughout England. This Allen being enraged againſt his owne natiue countrey, cauſed the Popes bull to be tranſlated into Engliſh, meaning vpon the arriual of the Spaniſh fleete, to haue it ſo publiſhed in England. By which Bull the excommunications of the two former Popes were confirmed, and the Queenes moſt ſacred Maieſtie was by them moſt vniuſtly depriued of all princely titles and dignities, her ſubiects being enioined to performe obedience vnto the duke of Parma, and vnto the Popes Legate.

But that all matters might be performed with greater ſecretie, and that the whole expedition might ſeeme rather to be intended againſt the Low countries, then againſt England, and that the Engliſh people might be perſwaded that all was but bare words & threatnings, and that nought would come to effect, there was a ſolemne meeting appointed at Borborch in Flanders for a treatie of peace betweene her maieſtie and the Spaniſh king.

Againſt which treatie the vnited prouinces making open proteſtation, vſed all meanes poſſible to hinder it, alleaging that it was more requiſite to conſult how the enemie now preſſing vpon them might be repelled from off their frontiers. Howbeit ſome there were in England that greatly vrged and proſecuted this league, ſaying, that it would be very commodious vnto the ſtate of the realme, as well in regard of traffique and nauigation, as for the auoiding of great expenſes to maintaine the warres, affirming alſo, that at the ſame time peace might eaſily and vpon reaſonable conditions be obtained of the Spaniard. Others thought by this meanes to diuert ſome other way, or to keepe backe the nauy now comming vpon them, and ſo to eſcape the danger of that tempeſt. Howſoeuer it was, the duke of Parma by theſe wiles enchanted and dazeled the eyes of many Engliſh & Dutch men that were deſirous of peace: whereupon it came to paſſe, that England and the vnited prouinces prepared in deed ſome defence to withſtand that dreadfull expedition and huge Armada, but nothing in compariſon of the great danger which was to be feared, albeit the conſtant report of the whole expedition had continued rife among them for a long time before. Howbeit they gaue eare vnto the relation of certaine that ſayd, that this nauie was prouided to conduct and waft ouer the Indian Fleets: which ſeemed the more probable becauſe the Spaniards were deemed not to be men of ſo ſmall diſcretion as to aduenture thoſe huge and monſtrous ſhips vpon the ſhallow and dangerous chanel of England.

A treatie of peace, to the end that England and the vnited prouinces might be ſecure of inuaſion.

At length when as the French king about the end of May ſignified vnto her Maieſtie in plaine termes that ſhe ſhould ſtand vpon her guard, becauſe he was now moſt certainly enformed, that there was ſo dangerous an inuaſion imminent vpon her realme, that he feared much leaſt all her land and ſea-forces would be ſufficient to withſtand it, &c. then began the Queens Maieſtie more carefully to gather her forces together, & to furniſh her owne ſhips of warre, & the principall ſhips of her ſubiects with ſouldiers, weapons, and other neceſſary prouiſion. The greateſt and ſtrongeſt ſhips of the whole nauy ſhe ſent vnto Plimmouth vnder the conduct of the right honorable Lord Charles Howard, lord high Admirall of England, &c. Vnder whom the renoumed Knight Sir Francis Drake was appointed Vice-admiral. The number of theſe ſhips was about an hundreth. The leſſer ſhips being 30. or 40. in number, and vnder the conduct of the lord Henry Seimer were commanded to lie between Douer and Caleis.

Her maieſties warlike preparation by ſea.

On land likewiſe throughout the whole realme, ſouldiers were muſtered and trained in all places, and were committed vnto the moſt reſolute and faithfull captaines. And whereas it was commonly giuen out that the Spaniard hauing once vnited himſelfe vnto the duke of Parma, ment to inuade by the riuer of Thames, there was at Tilburie in Eſſex ouer-againſt Graueſend, a mightie army encamped, and on both ſides of the riuer fortifications were erected, according to the preſcription of Frederike Genebelli an Italian enginier. Likewiſe there were certaine ſhips brought to make a bridge, though it were very late firſt. Vnto the ſayd army came in proper perſon the Queens moſt roiall Maieſtie, repreſenting Tomyris that Scythian warlike princeſſe, or rather diuine Pallas her ſelfe. Alſo there were other ſuch armies leuied in England.

Her Maieſties land-forces.

The principall catholique Recuſants (leaſt they ſhould ſtirre vp any tumult in the time of the Spaniſh inuaſion) were ſent to remaine at certaine conuenient places, as namely in the Iſle of

Ely and at Wisbich. And ſome of them were ſent vnto other places, to wit, vnto ſundry biſhops and noblemen, where they were kept from endangering the ſtate of the common wealth, and of her ſacred Maieſtie, who of her moſt gracious clemencie gaue expreſſe commandement, that they ſhould be intreated with all humanitie any friendſhip.

The preparation of the vnited prouinces.

The prouinces of Holland and Zeland, &c. giuing credite vnto their intelligence out of Spain, made preparation to defend themſelues: but becauſe the Spaniſh ſhips were deſcribed vnto them to be ſo huge, they relied partly vpon the ſhallow and dangerous ſeas all along their coaſts. Wherfore they ſtood moſt in doubt of the duke of Parma his ſmall and flat-bottomed ſhips. Howbeit they had all their ſhips of warre to the number of 90. and aboue, in a readineſſe for all aſſayes: the greater part whereof were of a ſmall burthen, as being more meete to ſaile vpon their riuers and ſhallow ſeas: and with theſe ſhips they beſieged all the hauens in Flanders, beginning at the mouth of Scheld, or from the towne of Lillo, and holding on to Greueling and almoſt vnto Caleis, & fortified all their ſea-townes with ſtrong garriſons.

Againſt the Spaniſh fleets arriuall, they had prouided 25. or 30. good ſhips, committing the gouernment of them vnto Admirall Lonck, whom they commanded to ioine himſelfe vnto the lord Henry Seymer, lying betweene Douer and Cales. And when as the foreſaid ſhips, (whereof the greater part beſieged the hauen of Dunkerke) were driuen by tempeſt into Zeland, Iuſtin of Naſſau the Admiral of Zeland ſupplied that ſquadron with 35. ſhips being of no great burthen, but excellently furniſhed with gunnes, mariners and ſouldiers in great abundance, and eſpecially with 1200. braue Muſquetiers, hauing bene accuſtomed vnto ſea-fights, and being choſen out of all their companies for the ſame purpoſe: and ſo the ſaid Iuſtin of Naſſau kept ſuch diligent ward in that Station that the duke of Parma could not iſſue foorth with his nauy into the ſea out of any part of Flanders.

The Spaniſh fleete ſet ſaile vpon the 19. of May.

In the meane while the Spaniſh Armada ſet ſaile out of the hauen of Lisbon vpon the 19. of May, An. Dom, 1588. vnder the conduct of the duke of Medina Sidonia, directing their courſe for the Baie of Corunna, alias the Groine in Gallicia, where they tooke in ſouldiers and warlike prouiſion, this port being in Spaine the neereſt vnto England. As they were ſailing along, there aroſe ſuch a mightie tempeſt, that the whole Fleete was diſperſed, ſo that when the duke was returned vnto his company, he could not eſcry aboue 80. ſhips in all, whereunto the reſidue by litle and litle ioyned themſelues, except eight which had their maſtes blowen ouer-boord. One of the foure gallies of Portingal eſcaped very hardly, retiring her ſelfe into the hauen. The other three were vpon the coaſt of Baion in France, by the aſſiſtance and courage of one Dauid Gwin an Engliſh captiue (whom the French and Turkiſh ſlaues aided in the ſame enterpriſe) vtterly diſabled and vanquiſhed: one of the three being firſt ouercome, which conquered the two other, with the ſlaughter of their gouernours and ſouldiers, and among the reſt of Don Diego de Mandrana with ſundry others: and ſo thoſe ſlaues arriuing in France with the three Gallies, ſet themſelues at libertie.

They ſet ſaile from ẏ Groine vpon the 11. of Iuly.

The Spaniards come within kenning of England.

Captaine Fleming.

The nauy hauing refreſhed themſelues at the Groine, & receiuing daily commandement from the king to haſten their iourney, hoiſed vp ſailes the 11. day of Iuly, and ſo holding on their courſe till the 19. of the ſame moneth, they came then vnto the mouth of the narow ſeas or Engliſh chanel. From whence (ſtriking their ſailes in the meane ſeaſon) they diſpatched certaine of their ſmal ſhips vnto the duke of Parma. At the ſame time the Spaniſh Fleete was eſcried by an Engliſh pinaſſe, captaine whereof was M. Thomas Fleming, after they had bene aduertiſed of the Spaniards expedition by their ſcoutes and eſpials, which hauing ranged along the coaſt of Spaine, were lately returned home into Plimmouth for a new ſupply of victuals and other neceſſaries, who conſidering the foreſayd tempeſt, were of opinion that the nauy being of late diſperſed and toſſed vp and downe the maine Ocean, was by no meanes able to performe their intended voiage.

Moreouer, the L. Charles Howard L. high admiral of England had receiued letters from the court, ſignifying vnto him that her Maieſtie was aduertiſed that the Spaniſh Fleete would not come foorth, nor was to be any longer expected for, and therefore, that vpon her Maieſties commandement he muſt ſend backe foure of her talleſt and ſtrongeſt ſhips vnto Chattam.

The L. Admirals ſhort warning vpon the 19. of Iuly.

The lord high Admiral of England being thus on the ſudden, namely vpon the 19. of Iuly about foure of the clocke in the afternoone, enformed by the pinaſſe of captaine Fleming aforeſaid, of the Spaniards approch, with all ſpeed and diligence poſſible he warped his ſhips, and cauſed his mariners and ſouldiers (the greater part of whom was abſent for the cauſe aforeſayd) to come on boord, and that with great trouble and difficultie, inſomuch that the lord Admiral himſelfe was faine to lie without in the road with ſixe ſhips onely all that night, after the which many others came foorth of the hauen. The very next day being the 20. of Iuly about high noone, was the Spaniſh Fleete eſcried by the Engliſh, which with a Southweſt wind came ſailing along, and paſſed by Plimmouth: in which regard (according to the iudgement of many ſkilful nauigators) they greatly ouerſhot themſelues, whereas it had bene more commodious for them to haue ſtaied themſelues there, conſidering that the Engliſhmen being as yet vnprouided, greatly relied vpon their owne forces, and knew not the eſtate of the Spaniſh nauy. Moreouer, this was the moſt conuenient port of all others, where they might with greater ſecuritie haue bene aduertiſed of the Engliſh forces, and how the commons of the land ſtood affected, and might haue ſtirred vp ſome mutinie, ſo that hither they ſhould haue bent all their puiſſance, and from hence the duke of Parma might more eaſily haue conueied his ſhips.

But this they were prohibited to doe by the king and his counſell, and were expreſſely commanded to vnite themſelues vnto the ſouldiers and ſhips of the ſaid duke of Parma, and ſo to bring their purpoſe to effect. Which was thought to be the moſt eaſie and direct courſe, for that they imagined that the Engliſh and Dutch men would be vtterly daunted and diſmaied thereat, and would each man of them retire vnto his owne Prouince and Porte for the defence thereof, and tranſporting the armie of the duke vnder the protection of their huge nauy, they might inuade England.

It is reported that the chiefe commanders in the nauy, and thoſe which were more ſkilfull in nauigation, to wit, Iohn Martines de Ricalde, Diego Flores de Valdez, and diuers others found fault that they were bound vnto ſo ſtrict directions and inſtructions, becauſe that in ſuch a caſe many particular accidents ought to concurre and to be reſpected at one and the ſame inſtant, that is to ſay, the opportunitie of the wind, weather, time, tide, and ebbe, wherein they might ſaile from Flanders to England. Oftentimes alſo the darkeneſſe and light, the ſituation of places, the depths and ſhoulds were to be conſidered: all which eſpecially depended vpon the conueniencie of the windes, and were by ſo much the more dangerous.

But it ſeemeth that they were enioined by their commiſſion to ancre neere vnto, or about Caleis, whither the duke of Parma with his ſhips and all his warrelike prouiſion was to reſort, and while the Engliſh and Spaniſh great ſhips were in the midſt of their conflict, to paſſe by, and to land his ſouldiers vpon the Downes.

The Spaniſh captiues reported that they were determined firſt to haue entred the riuer of Thames, and thereupon to haue paſſed with ſmall ſhips vp to London, ſuppoſing that they might eaſily winne that rich and flouriſhing Citie being but meanely fortified and inhabited with Citizens not accuſtomed to the warres, who durſt not withſtand their firſt encounter, hoping moreouer to finde many rebels againſt her Maieſtie and popiſh catholiques, or ſome fauourers of the Scottiſh queene (which was not long before moſt iuſtly beheaded) who might be inſtruments of ſedition.

Thus often aduertiſing the duke of Parma of their approch, the 20. of Iuly they paſſed by Plimmouth, which the Engliſh ſhips purſuing and getting the wind of them, gaue them the chaſe and the encounter, and ſo both Fleets frankly exchanged their bullets.

The 21. of Iuly.

The day following which was the 21. of Iuly, the Engliſh ſhips approched within muſquet ſhot of the Spaniſh: at what time the lorde Charles Howard moſt hotly and valiantly diſcharged his Ordinance vpon the Spaniſh Vice-admirall. The Spaniards then well perceiuing the nimbleneſſe of the Engliſh ſhips in diſcharging vpon the enimie on all ſides, gathered themſelues cloſe into the forme of an halfe moone, and ſlackened their ſailes, leaſt they ſhould outgoe any of their companie. And while they were proceeding on in this maner, one of their great Galliaſſes was ſo furiouſly battered with ſhot, that the whole nauy was faine to come vp rounder together for the ſafegard thereof: whereby it came to paſſe that the principall Galleon of Siuill (wherein Don Pedro de Valdez, Vaſques de Silua, Alonzo de Sayas, and other noble men were embarqued) falling foule of another ſhippe, had her fore-maſt broken, and by that meanes was not able to keepe way with the Spaniſh Fleete, neither would the ſayde Fleete ſtay to ſuccour it, but left the diſtreſſed Galeon behind. The lord Admirall of England when he ſaw this ſhip of Valdez, & thought ſhe had bene voyd of Mariners and Souldiers, taking with him as many ſhippes as he could, paſſed by it, that he might not looſe ſight of the Spaniſh Fleet that night. For ſir Francis Drake (who was notwithſtanding appointed to beare out his lanterne that night) was giuing of chaſe vnto fiue great Hulkes which had ſeparated themſelues from the Spaniſh Fleete: but finding them to be Eaſterlings, he diſmiſſed them. The lord Admirall all that night following the Spaniſh lanterne in ſtead of the Engliſh, found himſelfe in the morning to be in the midſt of his enimies Fleete, but when he perceiued it, hee cleanly conueyed himſelfe out of that great danger.

The 22. of Iuly.

The day folowing, which was the two and twentie of Iuly, Sir Francis Drake eſpied Valdez his ſhippe, whereunto hee ſent foorth his pinnaſſe, and being aduertiſed that Valdez himſelfe was there, and 450. perſons with him, he ſent him word that he ſhould yeeld himſelfe. Valdez for his honors ſake cauſed certaine conditions to be propounded vnto Drake: who anſwered Valdez that he was not now at laiſure to make any long parle, but if he would yeeld himſelfe, he ſhould find him friendly and tractable: howbeit if he had reſolued to die in fight, he ſhould prooue Drake to be no baſtard.

Don Pedro de Valdez with his ſhip & company taken.

Vpon which anſwere Valdez and his company vnderſtanding that they were fallen into the hands of fortunate Drake, being mooued with the renowme and celebritie of his name, with one conſent yeelded themſelues, and found him very fauourable vnto them. Then Valdez with 40. or 50. noblemen and gentlemen pertaining vnto him, came on bord ſir Francis Drakes ſhip. The reſidue of his company were caried vnto Plimmouth, where they were detained a yere & an halfe for their ranſome.

Valdez comming vnto Drake and humbly kiſſing his hand proteſted vnto him, that he and his had reſolued to die in battell, had they not by good fortune fallen into his power, whom they knew to be right curteous and gentle, and whom they had heard by generall report to bee moſt fauourable vnto his vanquiſhed foe: inſomuch that he ſayd it was to bee doubted whether his enimies had more cauſe to admire and loue him for his great, valiant, and proſperous exploites, or to dread him for his ſingular felicitie and wiſedom, which euer attended vpon him in the warres, and by the which hee had attained vnto ſo great honour. With that Drake embraced him and gaue him very honourable entertainement, feeding him at his owne table, and lodging him in his cabbin.

Here Valdez began to recount vnto Drake the forces of all the Spaniſh Fleet, and how foure mightie Gallies were ſeparated by tempeſt from them: and alſo how they were determined firſt to haue put into Plimmouth hauen, not expecting to bee repelled thence by the Engliſh ſhips which they thought could by no meanes withſtand their impregnable forces, perſwading themſelues that by means of their huge Fleete, they were become lords and commanders of the maine Ocean. For which cauſe they marueled much how the Engliſh men in their ſmall ſhips durſt approch within muſket ſhot of the Spaniards mightie woodden caſtles, gathering the wind of them with many other ſuch like attempts.

Immediately after, Valdez and his company, being a man of principal authoritie in the Spaniſh Fleete, and being deſcended of one and the ſame familie with that Valdez, which in the yeere 1574. beſieged Leiden in Holland, were ſent captiues into England. There were in the ſayd ſhip 55. thouſand ducates in ready money of the Spaniſh kings gold, which the ſouldiers merily ſhared among themſelues.

The ſame day was ſet on fire one of their greateſt ſhippes, being Admirall of the ſquadron of Guipuſco, and being the ſhippe of Michael de Oquendo Vice-admirall of the whole Fleete, which contained great ſtore of gunnepowder and other warrelike prouiſion. The vpper part onely of this ſhippe was burnt, and all the perſons therein contained (except a very few) were conſumed with fire. And thereupon it was taken by the Engliſh, and brought into England with a number of miſerable burnt and ſkorched Spaniards. Howbeit the gunpowder (to the great admiration of all men) remained whole and vnconſumed.

A great Biſcaine ſhip taken by the Engliſh.

In the meane ſeaſon the lord Admirall of England in his ſhip called the Arke-royall, all that night purſued the Spaniards ſo neere, that in the morning hee was almoſt left alone in the enimies Fleete, and it was foure of the clocke at afternoone before the reſidue of the Engliſh Fleet could ouertake him.

At the ſame time Hugo de Moncada gouernour of the foure Galliaſſes, made humble ſute vnto the Duke of Medina that he might be licenced to encounter the Admirall of England: which libertie the duke thought not good to permit vnto him, becauſe hee was loth to exceed the limites of his commiſſion and charge.

The 23. of Iuly.

Vpon Tueſday which was the three and twentie of Iuly, the nauy being come ouer againſt Portland, the wind began to turne Northerly, inſomuch that the Spaniards had a fortunate and fit gale to inuade the Engliſh. But the Engliſhmen hauing leſſer and nimbler Ships, recouered againe the vantage of the winde from the Spaniards, whereat the Spaniards ſeemed to bee more incenſed to fight then before. But when the Engliſh Fleete had continually and without intermiſſion from morning to night, beaten and battered them with all their ſhot both great and ſmall: the Spaniardes vniting themſelues, gathered their whole Fleete cloſe together into a roundell, ſo that it was apparant that they ment not as yet to inuade others, but onely to defend themſelues and to make haſt vnto the place preſcribed vnto them, which was neere vnto Dunkerk, that they might ioine forces with the duke of Parma, who was determined to haue proceeded ſecretly with his ſmall ſhippes vnder the ſhadow and protection of the great ones, and ſo had intended circumſpectly to performe the whole expedition.

This was the moſt furious and bloodie ſkirmiſh of all, in which the lord Admirall of England continued fighting amidſt his enimies Fleete, and ſeeing one of his Captaines afarre off, hee ſpake vnto him in theſe wordes: Oh George what doeſt thou? Wilt thou nowe fruſtrate my hope and opinion conceiued of thee? Wilt thou forſake mee nowe? With which wordes hee being enflamed, approched foorthwith, encountered the enemie, and did the part of a moſt valiant Captaine. His name was George Fenner, a man that had bene conuerſant in many Sea-fights.

In this conflict there was a certaine great Venetian ſhip with other ſmall ſhips ſurpriſed and taken by the Engliſh.

A great Venetian ſhip and other ſmall ſhips taken by the Engliſh.

The Engliſh nauie in the meane while increaſed, whereunto out of all Hauens of the Realme reſorted ſhips and men: for they all with one accord came flocking thither as vnto a ſet field, where immortall fame and glory was to be attained, and faithfull ſeruice to bee performed vnto their prince and countrey.

In which number there were many great and honourable perſonages, as namely, the Erles of Oxford, of Northumberland, of Cumberland, &c. with many Knights and Gentlemen: to wit, Sir Thomas Cecill, Sir Robert Cecill, Sir Walter Raleigh, Sir William Hatton, Sir Horatio Palauicini, Sir Henry Brooke, Sir Robert Carew, Sir Charles Blunt, Maſter Ambroſe Willoughbie, Maſter Henry Nowell, Maſter Thomas Gerard, Maſter Henry Dudley, Maſter Edward Darcie, Maſter Arthur Gorge, Maſter Thomas Woodhouſe, Maſter William Haruie, &c. And ſo it came to paſſe that the number of the Engliſh ſhippes amounted vnto an hundreth: which when they were come before Douer, were increaſed to an hundred and thirtie, being notwithſtanding of no proportionable bigneſſe to encounter with the Spaniards, except two or three and twentie of the Queenes greater ſhippes, which onely, by reaſon of their preſence, bred an opinion in the Spaniardes mindes concerning the power of the Engliſh Fleet: the mariners and ſouldiers whereof were eſteemed to be twelue thouſand.

The foure and twentie of Iuly when as the ſea was calme, and no winde ſtirring, the fight was onely betweene the foure great Galleaſſes and the Engliſh ſhippes, which being rowed with Oares, had great vauntage of the ſayde Engliſh ſhippes, which notwithſtanding for all that would not bee forced to yeeld, but diſcharged their chaine-ſhot to cut aſunder their Cables and Cordage of the Galleaſſes, with many other ſuch Stratagemes. They were nowe conſtrained to ſend their men on land for a newe ſupplie of Gunne-powder, whereof they were in great ſkarcitie, by reaſon they had ſo frankely ſpent the greater part in the former conflicts.

The 24. of Iuly.

The ſame day, a Counſell being aſſembled, it was decreed that the Engliſh Fleete ſhould bee deuided into foure ſquadrons: the principall whereof was committed vnto the lord Admirall: the ſecond, to Sir Francis Drake: the third, to Captaine Hawkins: the fourth, to Captaine Frobiſher.

The Spaniards in their ſailing obſerued very diligent and good order, ſayling three and foure, and ſometimes more ſhips in a ranke, and folowing cloſe vp one after another, and the ſtronger and greater ſhips protecting the leſſer.

The fiue and twentie of Iuly when the Spaniardes were come ouer-againſt the Iſle of Wight, the lord Admirall of England being accompanied with his beſt ſhips, (namely the Lion, Captaine whereof was the lord Thomas Howard: The Elizabeth Ionas vnder the commandement of Sir Robert Southwel ſonne in lawe vnto the lord Admirall: the Beare vnder the lord Sheffield nephewe vnto the lord Admirall: the Victorie vnder Captaine Barker: and the Galeon Leiceſter vnder the forenamed Captaine George Fenner) with great valour and dreadfull thundering of ſhot, encountered the Spaniſh Admiral being in the very midſt of all his Fleet. Which when the Spaniard perceiued, being aſſiſted with his ſtrongeſt ſhips, he came forth and entered a terrible combate with the Engliſh: for they beſtowed each on other the broad ſides, and mutually diſcharged all their Ordinance, being within one hundred, or an hundred and twentie yards one of another.

The 25. of Iuly.

At length the Spaniardes hoiſed vp their ſayles, and againe gathered themſelues vp cloſe into the forme of a roundel. In the meane while Captaine Frobiſher had engaged himſelfe into a moſt dangerous conflict. Whereupon the lord Admirall comming to ſuccour him, found that hee had valiantly and diſcreetly behaued himſelfe, and that hee had wiſely and in good time

ouer the ſight, becauſe that after ſo great a batterie he had ſuſtained no damage.

The 26. of Iuly. For which cauſe the day following, being the ſixe and twentie of Iuly, the lord Admirall rewarded him with the order of knighthood, together with the lord Thomas Howard, the lord Sheffield, M. Iohn Hawkins and others.

The ſame day the lord Admirall receiued intelligence from Newhauen in France, by certaine of his Pinnaſſes, that all things were quiet in France, and that there was no preparation of ſending aide vnto the Spaniards, which was greatly feared from the Guiſian faction, and from the Leaguers: but there was a falſe rumour ſpread all about, that the Spaniards had conquered England.

The 27. of Iuly. The Spaniards ancre before Caleis. The ſeuen and twentie of Iuly, the Spaniards about the ſunne-ſetting were come ouer-againſt Douer, and rode at ancre within the ſight of Caleis, intending to hold on for Dunkerk, expecting there to ioyne with the duke of Parma his forces, without which they were able to doe litle or nothing.

Likewiſe the Engliſh Fleete following vp hard vpon them, ancred iuſt by them within culuering-ſhot. And here the lord Henry Seymer vnited himſelfe vnto the lord Admiral with his fleete of 30. ſhips which road before the mouth of Thames.

As the Spaniſh nauie therefore lay at ancre, the duke of Medina ſent certaine meſſengers vnto the duke of Parma, with whom vpon that occaſion many Noblemen and Gentlemen went to refreſh themſelues on land: and amongſt the reſt the prince of Aſcoli, being accounted the kings baſe ſonne, and a very proper and towardly yong gentleman, to his great good, went on ſhore, who was by ſo much the more fortunate, in that hee had not opportunitie to returne on boord the ſame ſhip, out of which he was departed, becauſe that in returning home it was caſt away vpon the Iriſh coaſt, with all the perſons contained therein.

The duke of Parma being aduertiſed of the Spaniſh Fleetes arriuall vpon the coaſt of England, made all the haſte hee could to bee preſent himſelfe in this expedition for the performance of his charge: vainely perſwading himſelfe that nowe by the meanes of Cardinall Allen, hee ſhould be crowned king of England, and for that cauſe hee had reſigned the gouernement of the Lowe countries vnto Count Manſfeld the elder. And hauing made his vowes vnto S. Mary of Hall in Henault (whom he went to viſite for his blind deuotions ſake) hee returned toward Bruges the 28. of Iuly. The 28. of Iuly.

The 29. of Iuly. The next day trauelling to Dunkerk hee heard the thundering Ordinance of either Fleet: and the ſame euening being come to Dixmud, hee was giuen to vnderſtand the hard ſucceſſe of the Spaniſh Fleete.

The 30. of Iuly. Vpon Tueſday which was the thirtieth of Iuly, about high noone, hee came to Dunkerk, when as all the Spaniſh Fleete was now paſſed by: neither durſt any of his ſhips in the meane ſpace come foorth to aſſiſt the ſayd Spaniſh Fleete for feare of fiue and thirtie warrelike ſhips of Holland and Zeland, which there kept watch and warde vnder the conduct of the Admirall Iuſtin of Naſſau.

The foreſayd fiue and thirtie ſhippes were furniſhed with moſt cunning mariners and olde expert ſouldiers, amongſt the which were twelue hundred Muſketiers, whom the States had choſen out of all their gariſons, and whom they knew to haue bene heretofore experienced in ſea-fights.

This nauie was giuen eſpecially in charge not to ſuffer any ſhippe to come out of the Hauen, nor to permit any Zabraes, Pataches or other ſmall veſſels of the Spaniſh Fleete (which were more likely to aide the Dunkerkers) to enter thereinto, for the greater ſhips were not to be feared by reaſon of the ſhallow ſea in that place. Howbeit the prince of Parma his forces being as yet vnreadie, were not come on boord his ſhippes, onely the Engliſh Fugitiues being ſeuen hundred in number vnder the conduct of Sir William Stanley, came in fit time to haue bene embarked, becauſe they hoped to giue the firſt aſſault againſt England. The reſidue ſhewed themſelues vnwilling and loath to depart, becauſe they ſawe but a few mariners, who were by conſtraint drawne into this expedition, and alſo becauſe they had very bare prouiſion of bread, drinke, and other neceſſary victuals.

Moreouer, the ſhippes of Holland and Zeland ſtood continually in their ſight, threatening ſhot and powder, and many inconueniences vnto them: for feare of which ſhippes, the Mariners and Sea-men ſecretly withdrew themſelues both day and night, leaſt that the duke of Parma his ſouldiers ſhould compell them by maine force to goe on boord, and to breake through the Hollanders Fleete, which all of them iudged to bee impoſſible by reaſon of the ſtraightneſſe of the Hauen.

But it ſeemeth that the Duke of Parma and the Spaniards grounded vpon a vaine and preſumptuous expectation, that all the ſhips of England and of the Low countreys would at the firſt ſight of the Spaniſh and Dunkerk Nauie haue betaken themſelues to flight, yeelding them ſea roome, and endeuouring onely to defend themſelues, their hauens, and ſea coaſts from inuaſion. Wherefore their intent and purpoſe was, that the Duke of Parma in his ſmall and flat-bottomed ſhippes, ſhould as it were vnder the ſhadow and wings of the Spaniſh fleet, conuey ouer all his troupes, armour, and warlike prouiſion, and with their forces ſo vnited, ſhould inuade England; or while the Engliſh fleet were buſied in fight againſt the Spaniſh, ſhould enter vpon any part of the coaſt, which he thought to be moſt conuenient. Which inuaſion (as the captiues afterward confeſſed) the Duke of Parma thought firſt to haue attempted by the riuer of Thames; vpon the bankes whereof hauing at his firſt arriuall landed twenty or thirty thouſand of his principall ſouldiers, he ſuppoſed that he might eaſily haue woonne the Citie of London; both becauſe his ſmall ſhippes ſhould haue followed and aſſiſted his land-forces, and alſo for that the Citie it-ſelfe was but meanely fortified and eaſie to ouercome, by reaſon of the Citizens delicacie and diſcontinuance from the warres, who with continuall and conſtant labour might be vanquiſhed, if they yeelded not at the firſt aſſault. They were in good hope alſo to haue mette with ſome rebels againſt her Maieſtie, and ſuch as were diſcontented with the preſent ſtate, as Papiſts, and others. Likewiſe they looked for ayde from the fauourers of the Scottiſh Queene, who was not long before put to death; all which they thought would haue ſtirred vp ſeditions and factions.

Whenas therefore the Spaniſh fleet rode at anker before Caleis, to the end they might conſult with the Duke of Parma what was beſt to be done according to the Kings commandement, and the preſent eſtate of their affaires, and had now (as we will afterward declare) purpoſed vpon the ſecond of Auguſt being Friday, with one power and conſent to haue put their intended buſineſſe in practiſe; the L. Admirall of England being admoniſhed by her Maieſties letters from the Court, thought it moſt expedient either to driue the Spaniſh fleet from that place, or at leaſtwiſe to giue them the encounter: and for that cauſe (according to her Maieſties preſcription) he tooke forthwith eight of his worſt & baſeſt ſhips which came next to hand, & diſburthening them of all things which ſeemed to be of any value, filled them with gun-powder, pitch, brimſtone, and with other combuſtible and fiery matter; and charging all their ordinance with powder, bullets, and ſtones, he ſent the ſayd ſhips vpon the 28 of July being Sunday, about two of the clocke after midnight, with the winde and tide againſt the Spaniſh fleet: which when they had proceeded a good ſpace, being forſaken of the Pilots, and ſet on fire, were directly carried vpon the King of Spaines Nauie: which fire in the dead of the night put the Spaniards into ſuch a perplexity and horrour (for they feared leſt they were like vnto thoſe terrible ſhips, which Frederic Ienebelli three yeeres before, at the ſiege of Antwerpe, had furniſhed with gun-powder, ſtones, and dreadfull engines, for the diſſolution of the Duke of Parma his bridge, built vpon the riuer of Scheld) that cutting their cables whereon their ankers were faſtened, and hoiſing vp their ſailes, they betooke themſelues very confuſedly vnto the maine ſea.

The 28 of July.

In this ſudden confuſion, the principall and greateſt of the foure galliaſſes falling fowle of another ſhip, loſt her rudder: for which cauſe when ſhe could not be guided any longer, ſhe was by the force of the tide caſt into a certaine ſhowld vpon the ſhore of Caleis, where ſhe was immediatly aſſaulted by diuers Engliſh pinaſſes, hoyes, and drumblers.

The galliaſſe of Hugo de Moncada caſt vpon the ſhowlds before Caleis.

And as they lay battering of her with their ordinance, and durſt not boord her, the L. Admirall ſent thither his long boat with an hundreth choiſe ſouldiers vnder the command of Captaine Amias Preſton. Vpon whoſe approch their fellowes being more emboldened, did offer to boord the galliaſſe: againſt whom the gouernour thereof and Captaine of all the foure galliaſſes, Hugo de Moncada, ſtoutly oppoſed himſelfe, fighting by ſo much the more valiantly, in that he hoped preſently to be ſuccoured by the Duke of Parma. In the meane ſeaſon, Moncada, after he had endured the conflict a good while, being hitte on the head with a bullet, fell downe ſtarke dead, and a great number of Spaniards alſo were ſlaine in his company. The greater part of the reſidue leaping ouer-boord into the ſea, to ſaue themſelues by ſwimming, were moſt of them drowned. Howbeit there eſcaped among others Don Anthonio de Manriques, a principall officer in the Spaniſh fleet (called by them their Veador generall) together with a few Spaniards beſides: which Anthonio was the firſt man that carried certaine newes of the ſucceſſe of their fleet into Spaine.

But

The Spaniards vaine opinion concerning their owne fleet.

But it ſeemeth that the Duke of Parma and the Spaniards grounded vpon a vaine and preſumptuous expectation, that all the ſhips of England and of the Low countreys would at the firſt ſight of the Spaniſh and Dunkerk Nauie haue betaken themſelues to flight, yeelding them ſea roome, and endeuouring onely to defend themſelues, their hauens, and ſea coaſts from inuaſion. M. Amias Preſton valiantly boordeth the galliaſſe.

And as they lay battering of her with their ordinance, and durſt not boord her, the L. Admirall ſent thither his long boat with an hundreth choiſe ſouldiers vnder the command of Captaine Amias Preſton. Vpon whoſe approch their fellowes being more emboldened, did offer to boord the galliaſſe: againſt whom the gouernour thereof and Captaine of all the foure galliaſſes, Hugo de Moncada, ſtoutly oppoſed himſelfe, fighting by ſo much the more valiantly, in that he hoped preſently to be ſuccoured by the Duke of Parma. In the meane ſeaſon, Moncada, after he had endured the conflict a good while, being hitte on the head with a bullet, fell downe ſtarke dead, and a great number of Spaniards alſo were ſlaine in his company. At length when the ſlaues were releaſed out of their fetters, the Engliſh men would haue ſet the ſayd ſhip on fire, which Monſieur Gourdon the gouernor of Caleis, for feare of the damage which might thereupon enſue to the Towne and Hauen, would not permit them to do, but draue them from thence with his great ordinance.

The great fight before Greueling the 29 of Iuly.

Vpon the 29 of Iuly in the morning, the Spaniſh Fleet after the foreſayd tumult, hauing arranged themſelues againe into order, were, within ſight of Greueling, moſt brauely and furiouſly encountered by the Engliſh; where they once againe got the winde of the Spaniards: who ſuffered themſelues to be depriued of the commodity of the place in Caleis rode, and of the aduantage of the winde neere vnto Dunkerk, rather then they would change their array or ſeparate their forces now conioyned and vnited together, ſtanding onely vpon their defence.

And albeit there were many excellent and warlike ſhips in the Engliſh fleet, yet ſcarſe were there 22 or 23 among them all which matched 90 of the Spaniſh ſhips in bigneſſe, or could conueniently aſſault them. Wherefore the Engliſh ſhippes vſing their prerogatiue of nimble ſtirrage, whereby they could turne and wield themſelues with the winde which way they liſted, came often times very neere vpon the Spaniards, and charged them ſo ſore, that now and then they were but a pikes length aſunder: & ſo continually giuing them one broad ſide after another, they diſcharged all their ſhot both great and ſmall vpon them, ſpending one whole day from morning till night in that violent kinde of conflict, vntill ſuch time as powder and bullets failed them. In regard of which want they thought it conuenient not to purſue the Spaniards any longer, becauſe they had many great vantages of the Engliſh, namely for the extraordinary bigneſſe of their ſhips, and alſo for that they were ſo neerely conioyned, and kept together in ſo good array, that they could by no meanes be fought withall one to one. The Engliſh thought therefore, that they had right well acquited themſelues, in chaſing the Spaniards firſt from Caleis, and then from Dunkerk, and by that meanes to haue hindered them from ioyning with the Duke of Parma his forces, and getting the winde of them, to haue driuen them from their owne coaſts.

The Spaniards that day ſuſtained great loſſe and damage hauing many of their ſhippes ſhot thorow and thorow, and they diſcharged likewiſe great ſtore of ordinance againſt the Engliſh; who indeed ſuſtained ſome hinderance, but not comparable to the Spaniards loſſe: for they loſt not any one ſhippe or perſon of account. For very diligent inquiſition being made, the Engliſh men all that time wherein the Spaniſh Nauy ſayled vpon their ſeas, are not found to haue wanted aboue one hundreth of their people: albeit Sir Francis Drakes ſhippe was pierced with ſhot aboue forty times, and his very cabben was twiſe ſhot thorow, and about the concluſion of the fight, the bedde of a certaine gentleman lying weary thereupon, was taken quite from vnder him with the force of a bullet. Likewiſe, as the Earle of Northumberland and Sir Charles Blunt were at dinner vpon a time, the bullet of a demi-culuering brake thorow the middeſt of their cabbin, touched their feet, and ſtrooke downe two of the ſtanders by, with many ſuch accidents befalling the Engliſh ſhippes, which it were tedious to rehearſe. Whereupon it is moſt apparant, that God miraculouſly preſerued the Engliſh nation. For the L. Admirall wrote vnto her Maieſtie that in all humane reaſon, and according to the iudgement of all men (euery circumſtance being duly conſidered) the Engliſh men were not of any ſuch force, whereby they might, without a miracle, dare once to approch within ſight of the Spaniſh Fleet: inſomuch that they freely aſcribed all the honour of their victory vnto God, who had confounded the enemy, and had brought his counſels to none effect.

Three Spaniſh ſhippes ſuncke in the fight.

The ſame day the Spaniſh ſhips were ſo battered with Engliſh ſhot, that that very night and the day following, two or three of them ſuncke right downe: and among the reſt a certaine great ſhip of Biſcay, which Captaine Croſſe aſſaulted, which periſhed euen in the time of the conflict, ſo that very few therein eſcaped drowning; who reported that the gouernours of the ſame ſhippe ſlew one another vpon the occaſion following: one of them which would haue yeelded the ſhippe was ſuddenly ſlaine; the brother of the ſlaine party in reuenge of his death ſlew the murtherer, and in the meane while the ſhip ſuncke.

Two galeons taken and caried into Zeland.

The ſame night two Portugall galeons of the burthen of ſeuen or eight hundreth tunnes a piece, to wit the Saint Philip and the Saint Matthew, were forſaken of the Spaniſh Fleet, for they were ſo torne with ſhotte, that the water entred into them on all ſides. In the galeon of Saint Philip was Francis de Toledo, brother vnto the Count de Orgas, being Colonell ouer two and thirty bands: beſides other gentlemen; who ſeeing their maſt broken with ſhotte, they ſhaped their courſe, aſwell as they could, for the coaſt of Flanders: whither when they could not attaine, the principall men in the ſhip committing themſelues to their ſkiffe, arriued at the next towne, which was Oſtend; and the ſhip it ſelfe being left behinde with the reſidue of their company, was taken by the Vliſhingers.

In the other galeon, called the S. Matthew, was embarked Don Diego Pimentelli another camp-maſter and colonell of 32 bands, being brother vnto the marques of Tamnares, with many other gentlemen and captaines. Their ſhip was not very great, but exceeding ſtrong, for of a great number of bullets which had batterd her, there were ſcarſe 20 wherewith ſhe was pierced or hurt: her vpper worke was of force ſufficient to beare off a musket ſhot: this ſhippe was ſhot thorow and pierced in the fight before Greueling; inſomuch that the leakage of the water could not be ſtopped: whereupon the duke of Medina ſent his great ſkiffe vnto the gouernour thereof, that he might ſaue himſelfe and the principal perſons that were in his ſhip: which he, vpon a hault courage, refuſed to do: wherefore the Duke charged him to ſaile next vnto himſelfe: which the night following he could not performe, by reaſon of the great abundance of water which entered his ſhip on all ſides; for the auoiding wherof, and to ſaue his ſhip from ſincking, he cauſed 50 men continually to labor at the pumpe, though it were to ſmall purpoſe. And ſeeing himſelfe thus forſaken & ſeparated from his admirall, he endeuored what he could to attaine vnto the coaſt of Flanders: where, being eſpied by 4 or 5 men of warre, which had their ſtation aſſigned them vpon the ſame coaſt, he was admoniſhed to yeeld himſelfe vnto them. Which he refuſing to do, was ſtrongly aſſaulted by them altogether, and his ſhip being pierced with many bullets, was brought into farre worſe caſe then before, and 40 of his ſouldiers were ſlaine. By which extremity he was enforced at length to yeeld himſelfe vnto Peter Banderdueſs & other captaines, which brought him and his ſhip into Zeland; and that other ſhip alſo laſt before mentioned: which both of them, immediatly after the greater and better part of their goods were vnladen, ſuncke right downe.

For the memory of this exploit, the foreſayd captaine Banderdueſs cauſed the banner of one of theſe ſhippes to be ſet vp in the great Church of Leiden in Holland, which is of ſo great a length, that being faſtened to the very roofe, it reached downe to the ground.

About the ſame time another ſmall ſhip being by neceſſity driuen vpon the coaſt of Flanders, about Blankenberg, was caſt away vpon the ſands, the people therein being ſaued. Thus almighty God would haue the Spaniards huge ſhips to be preſented, not onely to the view of the Engliſh, but alſo of the Zelanders; that at the ſight of them they might acknowledge of what ſmall ability they had beene to reſiſt ſuch impregnable forces, had not God endued them with courage, prouidence, and fortitude, yea, and fought for them in many places with his owne arme.

A ſmall ſhippe caſt away about Blankenberg.

The 29 of July the Spaniſh fleet being encountered by the Engliſh (as is aforeſayd) and lying cloſe together vnder their fighting ſailes, with a Southweſt winde ſailed paſt Dunkerk, the Engliſh ſhips ſtil following the chaſe. Of whom the day following when the Spaniards had got ſearoome, they cut their maine ſailes; whereby they ſufficiently declared that they meant no longer to fight but to flie. For which cauſe the L. Admirall of England diſpatched the L. Henrie Seymer with his ſquadron of ſmall ſhips vnto the coaſt of Flanders, where, with the helpe of the Dutch ſhips, he might ſtop the prince of Parma his paſſage, if perhaps he ſhould attempt to iſſue forth with his army. And he himſelfe in the meane ſpace purſued the Spaniſh fleet vntill the ſecond of Auguſt, becauſe he thought they had ſet ſaile for Scotland. And albeit he followed them very neere, yet did he not aſſault them any more, for want of powder and bullets. But vpon the fourth of Auguſt, the winde ariſing, when as the Spaniards had ſpread all their ſailes, betaking themſelues wholly to flight, and leauing Scotland on the left hand, trended toward Norway, (whereby they ſufficiently declared that their whole intent was to ſaue themſelues by flight, attempting for that purpoſe, with their battered and crazed ſhips, the moſt dangerous nauigation of the Northren ſeas) the Engliſh ſeeing that they were now proceeded vnto the latitude of 57 degrees, and being vnwilling to participate that danger whereinto the Spaniards plunged themſelues, and becauſe they wanted things neceſſary, and eſpecially powder & ſhot, returned backe for England; leauing behinde them certaine pinaſſes onely, which they enioyned to follow the Spaniards aloofe, and to obſerue their courſe. And ſo it came to paſſe that the fourth of Auguſt, with great danger and induſtry, the Engliſh arriued at Harwich: for they had bene toſſed vp and downe with a mighty tempeſt for the ſpace of two or three dayes together, which it is likely did great hurt vnto the Spaniſh fleet, being (as I ſayd before) ſo maimed and battered. The Engliſh now going on ſhore, prouided themſelues foorthwith of victuals, gunne-powder, and other things expedient, that they might be ready at all aſſayes to entertaine the Spaniſh fleet, if it chanced any more to returne. But being afterward more certainely informed of the Spaniards courſe, they thought it beſt to leaue them vnto thoſe boiſterous and vncouth Northren ſeas, and not there to hunt after them.

The diſhonourable flight of the Spaniſh nauy: and the prudent aduice of the L. Admirall.

The Engliſh returne home from the purſuite of ẏ Spaniards the 4 of Auguſt.

The Spaniards ſeeing now that they wanted foure or fiue thouſand of their people and hauing diuers maimed and ſicke perſons, and likewiſe hauing loſt 10 or 12 of their principall ſhips, they conſulted among themſelues, what they were beſt to doe, being now eſcaped out of the hands of the Engliſh, becauſe their victuals failed them in like ſort, and they began alſo to want cables, cordage, ankers, maſts, ſailes, and other naual furniture, and vtterly deſpaired of the Duke of Parma his aſſiſtance (who verily hoping and vndoubtedly expecting the returne of the Spaniſh Fleet, was continually occupied about his great preparation, commanding abundance of ankers to be made, & other neceſſary furniture for a Nauy to be prouided) they thought it good at length, ſo ſoone as the winde ſhould ſerue them, to fetch a compaſſe about Scotland and Ireland, and ſo to returne for Spaine.

The Spaniards conſult to ſaile round about Scotland and Ireland, and ſo to returne home.

For they well vnderſtood, that commandement was giuen throwout all Scotland, that they ſhould not haue any ſuccour or aſſiſtance there. Neither yet could they in Norway ſupply their wants. Wherefore, hauing taken certaine Scotiſh and other fiſherboats, they brought the men on boord their owne ſhips, to the end they might be their guides and Pilots. Fearing alſo leaſt their freſh water ſhould faile them, they caſt all their horſes and mules ouer-boord: and ſo touching no where vpon the coaſt of Scotland, but being carried with a freſh gale betweene the Orcades and Faar-Iſles, they proceeded farre North, euen vnto 61 degrees of latitude, being diſtant from any land at the leaſt 40 leagues. Heere the Duke of Medina generall of the Fleet commanded all his followers to ſhape their courſe for Biſcay: and he himſelfe with twenty or fiue and twenty of his ſhips which were beſt prouided of freſh water and other neceſſaries, holding on his courſe ouer the maine Ocean, returned ſafely home. The reſidue of his ſhips being about forty in nember, and committed vnto his Vice-admirall, fell neerer with the coaſt of Ireland, intending their courſe for Cape Clare, becauſe they hoped there to get freſh water, and to refreſh themſelues on land. But after they were driuen with many contrary windes, at length, vpon the ſecond of September, they were caſt by a tempeſt ariſing from the Southweſt vpon diuers parts of Ireland, where many of their ſhips periſhed. And amongſt others, the ſhippe of Michael de Oquendo, which was one of the great Galliaſſes: and two great ſhips of Venice alſo, namely, la Ratta and Belanzara, with other 36 or 38 ſhips more, which periſhed in ſundry tempeſts, together with moſt of the perſons contained in them.

The ſhippewracke of the Spaniardes vpon the Iriſh coaſt.

Likewiſe ſome of the Spaniſh ſhips were the ſecond time carried with a ſtrong Weſt winde into the chanell of England, whereof ſome were taken by the Engliſh vpon their coaſt, and others by the men of Rochel vpon the coaſt of France.

Moreouer, there arriued at Newhauen in Normandy, being by tempeſt inforced ſo to doe, one of the foure great Galliaſſes, where they found the ſhips with the Spaniſh women which followed the Fleet at their ſetting forth. Two ſhips alſo were caſt away vpon the coaſt of Norway, one of them being of a great burthen; howbeit all the perſons in the ſayd great ſhip were ſaued: inſomuch that of 134 ſhips, which ſet ſaile out of Portugall, there returned home 53 onely ſmall and great: namely of the foure galliaſſes but one, and but one of the foure gallies. Of the 91 great galleons and hulks there were miſſing 58, and 33 returned: of the pataches and zabraes 17 were miſſing, and 18 returned home. In briefe, there were miſſing 81 ſhips, in which number were galliaſſes, gallies, galeons, and other veſſels both great and ſmall. And amongſt the 53 ſhips remaining, thoſe alſo are reckoned which returned home before they came into the Engliſh chanell. Two galeons of thoſe which were returned, were by miſfortune burnt as they rode in the hauen; and ſuch like miſhaps did many others vndergo. Of 30000 perſons which went in this expedition, there periſhed (according to the number and proportion of the ſhips) the greater and better part; and many of them which came home, by reaſon of the toiles and inconueniences which they ſuſtained in this voyage, died not long after their arriuall. The Duke of Medina immediatly vpon his returne was depoſed from his authority, commanded to his priuate houſe, and forbidden to repaire vnto the Court; where he could hardly ſatiſfie or yeeld a reaſon vnto his malicious enemies and backbiters. Many honourable perſonages and men of great renowme deceaſed ſoone after their returne; as namely Iohn Martines de Ricalde, with diuers others. A great part alſo of the Spaniſh Nobility and Gentry employed in this expedition periſhed either by fight, diſeaſes, or drowning, before their arriual; & among the reſt Thomas Perenot of Granduell a Dutchman, being earle of Cantebroi, and ſonne vnto Cardinall Granduell his brother.

Of 134 ſhips of the Spaniſh fleet, there returned home but 53.

Vpon the coaſt of Zeland Don Diego de Pimentell, brother vnto the Marques de Tamnares, and kinſeman vnto the earle of Beneuentum & Calua, and Colonell ouer 32 bands with many other in the ſame ſhip was taken and detained as priſoner in Zeland.

Into England (as we ſayd before) Don Pedro de Valdez, a man of ſingular experience, and greatly honoured in his countrey, was led captiue, being accompanied with Don Vaſquez de Silua, Don Alonzo de Sayas, and others.

Likewiſe vpon the Scotiſh Weſterne Iſles of Lewis, and Ila, and about Cape Cantyre vpon the maine land, there were caſt away certaine Spaniſh ſhippes, out of which were ſaued diuers Captaines and Gentlemen, and almoſt foure hundred ſouldiers, who for the moſt part, after their ſhipwracke, were brought vnto Edenborough in Scotland, and being miſerably needy and naked, were there clothed at the liberality of the King and the Marchants, and afterward were ſecretly ſhipped for Spaine; but the Scottiſh fleet wherein they paſſed touching at Yarmouth on the coaſt of Norfolke, were there ſtayed for a time vntill the Councels pleaſure was knowen; who in regard of their manifolde miſeries, though they were enemies, wincked at their paſſage.

Vpon the Iriſh coaſt many of their Noblemen and Gentlemen were drowned; and diuers ſlaine by the barbarous and wilde Iriſh. Howbeit there was brought priſoner out of Ireland, Don Alonzo de Luçon, Colonell of two and thirtie bandes, commonly called a terza of Naples; together with Rodorigo de Laſſo, and two others of the family of Cordoua, who were committed vnto the cuſtodie of Sir Horatio Palauicini, that Monſieur de Teligny the ſonne of Monſieur de la Noüe (who being taken in fight neere Antwerpe, was detained priſoner in the Caſtle of Turney) might be raunſomed for them by way of exchange. To conclude, there was no famous nor worthy family in all Spaine, which in this expedition loſt not a ſonne, a brother, or a kinſeman.

For the perpetuall memorie of this matter, the Zelanders cauſed newe coine of Siluer and braſſe to be ſtamped: which on the one ſide contained the armes of Zeland, with this inſcription: GLORY TO GOD ONELY: and on the other ſide, the pictures of certeine great ſhips, with theſe words: THE SPANISH FLEET: and in the circumference about the ſhips: IT CAME, WENT, AND WAS. Anno 1588. That is to ſay, the Spaniſh fleet came, went, and was vanquiſhed this yere; for which, glory be giuen to God onely.

New coines ſtamped for the memory of the Spaniards ouerthrow.

Likewiſe they coined another kinde of money; vpon the one ſide whereof was repreſented a ſhip fleeing, and a ſhip ſincking: on the other ſide foure men making prayers and giuing thanks vnto God vpon their knees; with this ſentence: Man purpoſeth; God diſpoſeth. 1588. Alſo, for the laſting memory of the ſame matter, they haue ſtamped in Holland diuers ſuch like coines, according to the cuſtome of the ancient Romans.

While this woonderfull and puiſſant Nauie was ſayling along the Engliſh coaſtes, and all men did now plainely ſee and heare that which before they would not be perſwaded of, all people thorowout England proſtrated themſelues with humble prayers and ſupplications vnto God: but eſpecially the outlandiſh Churches (who had greateſt cauſe to feare, and againſt whom by name, the Spaniards had threatened moſt grieuous torments) enioyned to their people continuall faſtings and ſupplications, that they might turne away Gods wrath and fury now imminent vpon them for their ſinnes: knowing right well, that prayer was the onely refuge againſt all enemies, calamities, and neceſſities, and that it was the onely ſolace and reliefe for mankinde, being viſited with affliction and miſery. Likewiſe ſuch ſolemne dayes of ſupplication were obſerued thorowout the vnited Prouinces.

The people of England and of the vnited prouinces, pray, faſt, and giue thanks vnto God.

Alſo a while after the Spaniſh Fleet was departed, there was in England, by the commandement of her Maieſtie, and in the vnited Prouinces, by the direction of the States, a ſolemne feſtiuall day publikely appointed, wherein all perſons were enioyned to reſort vnto the Church, and there to render thanks and praiſes vnto God: and the Preachers were commanded to exhort the people thereunto. The foreſayd ſolemnity was obſerued vpon the 29 of Nouember; which day was wholly ſpent in faſting, prayer, and giuing of thanks.

Likewiſe, the Queenes Maieſtie herſelfe, imitating the ancient Romans, rode into London in triumph, in regard of her owne and her ſubiects glorious deliuerance. For being attended vpon very ſolemnely by all the principall eſtates and officers of her Realme, ſhe was carried thorow her ſayd City of London in a tryumphant chariot, and in robes of triumph, from her Palace vnto the Cathedrall Church of Saint Paul, out of the which the enſignes and colours of the vanquiſhed Spaniards hung diſplayed. And all the Citizens of London in their Liueries ſtood on either ſide the ſtreet, by their ſeuerall Companies, with their enſignes and banners: and the ſtreets were hanged on both ſides with Blew cloth, which, together with the foreſayd banners, yeelded a very ſtately and gallant proſpect. Her Maieſtie being entered into the Church, together with her Clergie and Nobles gaue thanks vnto God, and cauſed a publike Sermon to be preached before her at Pauls croſſe; wherein none other argument was handled, but that praiſe, honour, and glory might be rendered vnto God, and that Gods name might be extolled by thankſgiuing. And with her owne princely voice ſhe moſt Chriſtianly exhorted the people to doe the ſame: whereupon the people with a loud acclamation wiſhed her a moſt long and happy life, to the confuſion of her foes.

Thus the magnificent, huge, and mighty fleet of the Spaniards (which themſelues termed in all places inuincible) ſuch as ſayled not vpon the Ocean ſea many hundreth yeeres before, in the yeere 1588 vaniſhed into ſmoake; to the great confuſion and diſcouragement of the authours thereof. In regard of which her Maieſties happy ſucceſſe all her neighbours and friends congratulated with her, and many verſes were penned to the honour of her Maieſty by learned men, whereof ſome which came to our hands we will here annexe.

The ſame in Engliſh.

The Spaniſh Fleet did flote in narrow Seas,
And bend her ſhips againſt the Engliſh ſhore,
With ſo great rage as nothing could appeaſe,
And with ſuch ſtrength as neuer ſeene before:
    And all to ioyne the kingdome of that land
    Vnto the kingdomes that he had in hand.
Now if you aſke what ſet this king on fire,
To practiſe warre when he of peace did treat,
It was his Pride, and neuer quencht deſire,
To ſpoile that Iſlands wealth, by peace made great:
    His Pride which farre aboue the heauens did ſwell,
    And his deſire as vnſuffic'd as hell.
But well haue windes his prowd blaſts ouerblowen,
And ſwelling waues alayd his ſwelling heart,
Well hath the Sea with greedie gulfs vnknowen,
Deuoured the deuourer to his ſmart:
    And made his ſhips a pray vnto the ſand,
    That meant to pray vpon anothers land.
And now, O Queene, aboue all others bleſt,
For whom both windes and waues are preſt to fight,
So rule your owne, ſo ſuccour friends oppreſt,
(As farre from pride, as ready to do right)
    That England you, you England long enioy,
    No leſſe your friends delight, then foes annoy.

ANNO 1599.

TO THE RIGHT HONORABLE Sir Robert Cecil Knight, principall Secretarie to her Maieſtie, maſter of the Court of Wardes and Liueries, and one of her Maieſties moſt honourable priuie Counſell.

Right honorable hauing newly finiſhed a Treatiſe of the long Voyages of our Nation made into the Leuant within the Streight of Gibraltar, & from thence ouer-land to the South and Southeaſt parts of the world, all circumſtances conſidered, I found none to whom I thought it fitter to bee preſented then to your ſelfe: wherein hauing begun at the higheſt Antiquities of this realme vnder the gouernment of the Romans; next vnder the Saxons; and thirdly ſince the conqueſt vnder the Normans, I haue continued the hiſtories vnto theſe our dayes. The time of the Romans affoordeth ſmall matter. But after that they were called hence by forren inuaſions of their Empire, and the Saxons by degrees became lords in this Iland, and ſhortly after receiued the Chriſtian faith, they did not onely trauell to Rome, but paſſed further vnto Ieruſalem, and therewith not contented, Sigelmus biſhop of Shireburne in Dorcetſhire caried the almes of king Alfred euen to the Sepulcher of S. Thomas in India, (which place at this day is called Maliapor) and brought from thence moſt fragrant ſpices, and rich iewels into England: which iewels, as William of Malmesburie in two ſundry treatiſes writeth, were remaining in the aforeſayd Cathedrall Church to be ſeene euen in his time. And this moſt memorable voyage into India is not onely mentioned by the aforeſayd Malmesburie, but alſo by Florentius Wigornienſis, a graue and woorthy Author which liued before him, and by many others ſince, and euen by M. Foxe in his firſt volume of his Acts and Monuments in the life of king Alfred. To omit diuers other of the Saxon nation, the trauels of Alured biſhop of Worceſter through Hungarie to Conſtantinople, and ſo by Aſia the leſſe into Phœnicia and Syria, and the like courſe of Ingulphus, not long afterward Abbot of Croiland, ſet downe particularly by himſelfe, are things in mine opinion right worthy of memorie. After the comming in of the Normans, in the yeere 1096, in the reigne of William Rufus, and ſo downward for the ſpace of aboue 300 yeeres, ſuch was the ardent deſire of our nation to viſite the Holy land, and to expell the Saracens and Mahumetans, that not onely great numbers of Erles, Biſhops, Barons, and Knights, but euen Kings, Princes, and Peeres of the blood Roiall, with incredible deuotion, courage and alacritie intruded themſelues into this glorious expedition. A ſufficient proofe hereof are the voiages of prince Edgar the nephew of Edmund Ironſide, of Robert Curtois brother of William Rufus, the great beneuolence of king Henry the 2. and his vowe to haue gone in perſon to the ſuccour of Ieruſalem, the perſonall going into Paleſtina of his ſonne king Richard the firſt, with the chiualrie, wealth, and ſhipping of this realme; the large contribution of king Iohn, and the trauels of Oliuer Fitz-Roy his ſonne, as is ſuppoſed, with Ranulph Glanuile Erle of Cheſter to the ſiege of Damiata in Ægypt: the proſperous voyage of Richard Erle of Cornwall, elected afterward king of the Romans, and brother to Henry the 3, the famous expedition of prince Edward, the firſt king of the Norman race of that name; the iourney of Henry Erle of Derbie, duke of Hereford, and afterward king of this realme, by the name of Henry the 4 againſt the citie of Tunis in Africa, and his preparation of ſhips and gallies to go himſelfe into the Holy land, if he had not on the ſudden bene preuented by death; the trauel of Iohn of Holland brother by the mothers ſide to king Richard the 2 into thoſe parts. All theſe, either Kings, Kings ſonnes, or Kings brothers, expoſed themſelues with inuincible courages to the manifeſt hazard of their perſons, liues, and liuings, leauing their eaſe, their countries, wiues and children, induced with a Zelous deuotion and ardent deſire to protect and dilate the Chriſtian faith. Theſe memorable enterpriſes in part concealed, in part ſcattered, and for the moſt part vnlooked after, I haue brought together in the beſt Method and breuitie that I could deuiſe. Whereunto I haue annexed the loſſe of Rhodes, which although it were originally written in French, yet maketh it as honourable and often mention of the Engliſh natiō, as of any other Chriſtians that ſerued in that moſt violent ſiege. After which enſueth the princely promiſe of the bountifull aide of king Henry the 8 to Ferdinando newly elected king of Hungarie, againſt Solyman the mortall enemie of Chriſtendome. Theſe and the like Heroicall intents and attempts of our Princes, our Nobilitie, our Clergie, & our Chiualry, I haue in the firſt place expoſed and ſet foorth to the view of this age, with the ſame intention that the old Romans ſet vp in wax in their palaces the Statuas or images of their worthy anceſtors; whereof Saluſt in his treatiſe of the warre of Iugurtha, writeth in this maner: Sæpe audiui ego Quintum maximum, Publium Scipionem, præterea ciuitatis noſtræ præclaros viros ſolitos ita dicere, cum maiorum imagines intuerentur, vehementiſſimè animum ſibi ad virtutem accendi. Scilicet non ceram illam, neq; figuram, tantam vim in ſeſe habere, ſed memoria rerum geſtarum flammam eam egregijs viris in pectore creſcere, neq; prius ſedari, quàm virtus eorum famam & gloriam adæquauerit. I haue often heard (quoth he) how Quintus maximus, Publius Scipio, and many other worthy men of our citie were woont to ſay, when they beheld the images and portraitures of their anceſtors, that they were moſt vehemently inflamed vnto vertue. Not that the ſayd wax or portraiture had any ſuch force at all in it ſelfe, but that by the remembring of their woorthy actes, that flame was kindled in their noble breaſts, and could neuer be quenched, vntill ſuch time as their owne valure had equalled the fame and glory of their progenitors. So, though not in wax, yet in record of writing haue I preſented to the noble courages of this Engliſh Monarchie, the like images of their famous predeceſſors, with hope of like effect in their poſteritie. And here by the way if any man ſhall think, that an vniuerſall peace with our Chriſtian neighbours will cut off the emploiment of the couragious increaſing youth of this realme, he is much deceiued. For there are other moſt conuenient emploiments for all the ſuperfluitie of euery profeſſion in this realme. For, not to meddle with the ſtate of Ireland, nor that of Guiana, there is vnder our noſes the great & ample countrey of Virginia; the In-land whereof is found of late to bee ſo ſweete and holeſome a climate, ſo rich and abundant in ſiluer mines, ſo apt and capable of all commodities, which Italy, Spaine, and France can affoord, that the Spaniards themſelues in their owne writings printed in Madrid 1586, and within few moneths afterward reprinted by me in Paris, and in a ſecret mappe of thoſe partes made in Mexico the yeere before for the king of Spaine, (which originall with many others is in the cuſtodie of the excellent Mathematician M. Thomas Hariot) as alſo in their intercepted letters come vnto my hand, bearing date 1595. they acknowledge the In-land to be a better and richer countrey then Mexico and Nueua Spania it ſelfe. And on the other ſide their chiefeſt writers, as Peter Martyr ab Angleria, and Francis Lopez de Gomara, the moſt learned Venetian Iohn Baptiſta Ramuſius, and the French Geographers, as namely, Popiliniere and the reſt, acknowledge with one conſent, that all that mightie tract of land from 67. degrees

Northward to the latitude almoſt of Florida was firſt diſcouered out of England, by the commaundement of king Henry the ſeuenth, and the South part thereof before any other Chriſtian people of late hath bene planted with diuers Engliſh Colonies by the royal conſent of her ſacred Maieſtie vnder the broad ſeale of England, whereof one as yet remaineth, for ought we know, aliue in the countrey. Which action, if vpon a good & godly peace obtained, it ſhal pleaſe the Almighty to ſtirre vp her Maieſties heart to continue with her fauourable countenance (as vpon the ceaſing of the warres of Granada, hee ſtirred vp the ſpirite of Iſabella Queene of Caſtile, to aduaunce the enterpriſe of Columbus) with tranſporting of one or two thouſand of her people, and ſuch others as vpon mine owne knowledge will moſt willingly at their owne charges become Aduenturers in good numbers with their bodies and goods; ſhe ſhall by Gods aſſiſtance, in ſhort ſpace, worke many great and vnlooked for effects, increaſe her dominions, enrich her cofers, and reduce many Pagans to the faith of Chriſt. The neglecting hitherto of which laſt point our aduerſaries daily in many of their bookes full bitterly lay vnto the charge of the profeſſors of the Goſpell. No ſooner ſhould we ſet footing in that pleaſant and good land, and erect one or two conuenient Fortes in the Continent, or in ſome Iland neere the maine, but euery ſtep we tread would yeeld vs new occaſion of action, which I wiſh the Gentrie of our nation rather to regard, then to follow thoſe ſoft vnprofitable pleaſures wherein they now too much conſume their time and patrimonie, and hereafter will doe much more, when as our neighbour warres being appeaſed, they are like to haue leſſe emploiment then nowe they haue, vnleſſe they bee occupied in this or ſome other the like expedition. And to this ende and purpoſe giue me leaue (I beſeech you) to impart this occurrent to your honourable and prouident cōſideration: that in the yere one thouſand fiue hundred eighty and ſeuen, when I had cauſed the foure voyages of Ribault, Laudonniere, and Gourges to Florida, at mine owne charges to bee printed in Paris, which by the malice of ſome too much affectioned to the Spaniſh faction, had bene aboue twentie yeeres ſuppreſſed, aſſoone as that booke came to the view of that reuerend and prudent Counſeller Monſieur Harlac the lord chiefe Iuſtice of France, and certaine other of the wiſeſt Iudges, in great choler they asked, who had done ſuch intollerable wrong to their whole kingdome, as to haue concealed that woorthie worke ſo long? Proteſting further, that if their Kings and the Eſtate had throughly followed that action, France had bene freed of their long ciuill warres, and the variable humours of all ſortes of people might haue had very ample and manifold occaſions of good and honeſt emploiment abroad in that large and fruitfull Continent of the Weſt Indies. The application of which ſentence vnto our ſelues I here omit, haſtening vnto the ſummarie recapitulation of other matters contained in this worke. It may pleaſe your Honour therefore to vnderſtand, that the ſecond part of this firſt Treatiſe containeth our auncient trade and traffique with Engliſh ſhipping to the Ilands of Sicilie, Candie, and Sio, which by good warrant herein alleaged, I find to haue bene begun in the yeere 1511. and to haue continued vntill the yeere 1552. and ſomewhat longer. But ſhortly after (as it ſeemeth) it was intermitted, or rather giuen ouer (as is noted in maſter Gaſpar Campions diſcreet letters to maiſter Michael Lock and maiſter William Winter inſerted in this booke) firſt by occaſiō of the Turkes expelling of the foure and twentie Mauneſes or gouernours of the Genouois out of the Ile of Sio, and by taking of the ſayd Iland wholie into his owne hand in Aprill, 1566. ſending thither Piali Baſha with fourescore gallies for that purpoſe; and afterward by his growing ouer mightie and troubleſome in thoſe Seas, by the cruell inuaſion of Nicoſia and Famaguſta, and the whole Ile of Cyprus by his lieutenant Generall Muſtapha Baſha. Which lamentable Tragedie I haue here againe reuiued, that the poſteritie may neuer forget what truſt may bee giuen to the oath of a Mahumetan, when hee hath aduauntage and is in his choler.

Laſtly, I haue here put downe at large the happie reuiuing and much increaſing of our interrupted trade in all the Leuant, accompliſhed by the great charges and ſpeciall induſtrie of the worſhipfull and worthy Citizens, Sir Edward Osborne Knight, M. Richard Staper, and M. William Hareborne, together with the league for traffike onely betweene her Maieſtie and the Grand Signior, with the great priuileges, immunities, and fauours obteyned of his imperiall Highneſſe in that behalfe, the admiſſions and reſidencies of our Ambaſſadours in his ſtately Porch, and the great good and Chriſtian offices which her Sacred Maieſtie by her extraordinary fauour in that Court hath done for the king and kingdome of Poland, and other Chriſtian Princes: the traffike of our Nation in all the chiefe Hauens of Africa and Egypt: the ſearching and haunting the very bottome of the Mediterran Sea to the ports of Tripoli and Alexandretta, of the Archipelagus, by the Turkes now called The white ſea, euen to the walles of Conſtantinople: the voyages ouer land and by riuer through Aleppo, Birrha, Babylon and Balſara, and downe the Perſian gulfe to Ormuz, and thence by the Ocean ſea to Goa, and againe ouer-land to Biſnagar, Cambaia, Orixa, Bengala, Aracan, Pegu, Malacca, Siam, the Iangomes, Quicheu, and euen to the Frontiers of the Empire of China: the former performed diuerſe times by ſundry of our nation, and the laſt great voyage by M. Ralph Fitch, who with M. Iohn Newbery and two other conſorts departed from London with her Maieſties letters written effectually in their fauour to the kings of Cambaia and China in the yere 1583, who in the yeere 1591. like another Paulus Venetus returned home to the place of his departure, with ample relation of his wonderfull trauailes, which he preſented in writing to my Lord your father of honourable memorie.

Now here if any man ſhall take exception againſt this our new trade with Turkes and misbeleeuers, he ſhall ſhew himſelfe a man of ſmall experience in old and new Hiſtories, or wilfully lead with partialitie, or ſome worſe humour. * For who knoweth not, that king Salomon of old, entred into league vpon neceſſitie with Hiram the king of Tyrus, a gentile? Or who is ignorant that the French, the Genouois, Florentines, Raguſeans, Venetians, and Polonians are at this day in league with the Grand Signior, and haue beene theſe many yeeres, and haue vſed trade and traffike in his dominions? Who can deny that the Emperor of Chriſtendome hath had league with the Turke, and payd him a long while a penſion for a part of Hungarie? And who doth not acknowledge, that either hath trauailed the remote parts of the world, or read the Hiſtories of this later age, that the Spaniards and Portugales in Barbarie, in the Indies, and elſewhere, haue ordinarie confederacie and traffike with the Moores, and many kindes of Gentiles and Pagans, and that which is more, doe pay them penſions, and vſe them in their ſeruice and warres? Why then ſhould that be blamed in vs, which is vſuall and common to the moſt part of other Chriſtian nations? Therefore let our neighbours, which haue found moſt fault with this new league and traffike, thanke themſelues and their owne fooliſh pride, whereby we were vrged to ſeeke further to prouide vent for our naturall commodities. And herein the old Greeke prouerbe was moſt truely verified, That euill counſaile proueth worſt to the author and deuiſer of the ſame.

1.King.cap.5.
2.Chron.cap.2.

Hauing thus farre intreated of the chiefe contents of the firſt part of this ſecond Volume, it remayneth that I briefly acquaint your Honor with the chiefe contents of the ſecond part. It may therefore pleaſe you to vnderſtand, that herein I haue likewiſe preſerued, diſpoſed, and ſet in order ſuch Voyages, Nauigations, Traffikes, and Diſcoueries, as our Nation, and eſpecially the worthy inhabitants of this citie of London, haue painefully performed to the South and Southeaſt parts of the world, without the Streight of Gibraltar, vpon the coaſts of Africa, about the Cape of Buona Sperança, to and beyonde the Eaſt India. To come more neere vnto particulars, I haue here ſet downe the very originals and infancie of our trades to the Canarian Ilands, to the kingdomes of Barbarie, to the mightie riuers of Senega and Gambra, to thoſe of Madrabumba, and Sierra Leona, and the Iſles of Cape Verde, with twelue ſundry voyages to the ſultry kingdomes of Guinea and Benin, to the Iſle of San Thomé, with a late and true report of the weake eſtate of the Portugales in Angola, as alſo the whole courſe of the Portugale Caracks from Lisbon to the barre of Goa in India, with the diſpoſition and qualitie of the climate neere and vnder the Equinoctiall line, the ſundry infallible markes and tokens of approching vnto, and doubling of The Cape of good Hope, the great variation of the compaſſe for one point and an halfe towards the Eaſt betweene the Meridian of S. Michael one of the Iſlands of the Azores, and the aforeſaid Cape, with the returne of the needle againe due North at the Cape Das Agulias, and that place being paſſed outwardbound, the ſwaruing backe againe thereof towards the Weſt, proportionally as it did before, the two wayes, the one within and the other without the Iſle of S. Laurence, the dangers of priuie rockes and quickſands, the running ſeas, and the perils thereof, with the certaine and vndoubted ſignes of land. All theſe and other particularities are plainly and truely here deliuered by one Thomas Steuens a learned Engliſhman, who in the yeere 1579 going as a paſſenger in the Portugale Fleete from Lisbon into India, wrote the ſame from Goa to his father in England: Whereunto I haue added the memorable voyage of M. Iames Lancaſter, who doth not onely recount and confirme moſt of the things aboue mentioned, but alſo doth acquaint vs with the ſtate of the voyage beyond Cape Comori, and the Iſle of Ceilon, with the Iſles of Nicubar and Gomes Polo lying within two leagues of the rich Iſland Samatra, and thoſe of Pulo Pinaom, with the maine land of Iunçalaon and the ſtreight of Malacca. I haue likewiſe added a late intercepted letter of a Portugall reuealing the ſecret and moſt gainefull trade of Pegu, which is alſo confirmed by Cæſar Fredericke a Venetian, and M. Ralph Fitch now liuing here in London.

And becauſe our chiefe deſire is to find out ample vent of our wollen cloth, the naturall cōmoditie of this our Realme, the fitteſt places, which in al my readings and obſeruations I find for that purpoſe, are the manifold Iſlands of Iapan, & the Northern parts of China, & the regions of the Tartars next adioyning (whereof I read, that the countrey in winter is Aſſi fria como Flandes, that is to ſay, as cold as Flanders, & that the riuers be ſtrongly ouerfrozen) and therefore I haue here inſerted two ſpeciall Treatiſes of the ſayd Countries, the one beginning pag. 68, the other, pag. 88: which laſt diſcourſe I hold to be the moſt exact of thoſe parts that is yet come to light, which was printed in Latine in Macao a citie of China, in China-paper, in the yeere a thouſand fiue hundred and ninetie, and was intercepted in the great Carack called Madre de Dios two yeeres after, incloſed in a caſe of ſweete Cedar wood, and lapped vp almoſt an hundred fold in fine calicut-cloth, as though it had beene ſome incomparable iewell.

But leauing abruptly this diſcourſe, I thinke it not impertinent, before I make an end, to deliuer ſome of the reaſons, that moued me to preſent this part of my trauailes vnto your Honour. The reuerend antiquitie in the dedication of their workes made choyſe of ſuch patrons, as eyther with their reputation and credite were able to countenance the ſame, or by their wiſedome and vnderſtanding were able to cenſure and approoue them, or with their abilitie were likely to ſtand them or theirs in ſteade in the ordinarie neceſſities and accidents of their life. Touching the firſt, your deſcent from a father, that was accounted Pater patriæ, your owne place and credite in execution of her Maieſties inward counſailes and publike ſeruices, added to your well diſcharging your forren imployment (when the greateſt cauſe in Chriſtendome was handled) haue not onely drawen mens eyes vpon you, but alſo forcibly haue moued many, and my ſelfe among the reſt to haue our labours protected by your authoritie. For the ſecond point, when it pleaſed your Honour in ſommer was two yeeres to haue ſome conference with me, and to demaund mine opinion touching the ſtate of the Country of Guiana, and whether it were fit to be planted by the Engliſh: I then (to my no ſmall ioy) did admire the exact knowledge which you had gotten of thoſe matters of Indian Nauigations: and how carefull you were, not to be ouertaken with any partiall affection to the Action, appeared alſo, by the ſound arguments which you made pro & contra, of the likelihood and reaſon of good or ill ſucceſſe of the ſame, before the State and common wealth (wherein you haue an extraordinarie voyce) ſhould be farther engaged. In conſideration whereof I thinke my ſelfe thriſe happie to haue theſe my trauailes cenſured by your Honours ſo well approued iudgement. Touching the third and laſt motiue I cannot but acknowledge my ſelfe much indebted for your fauourable letters heretofore written in my behalfe in mine honeſt cauſes. Whereunto I may adde , that when this worke was to paſſe vnto the preſſe, your Honour did not onely intreate a worthy knight, a perſon of ſpeciall experience , as in many others ſo in marine cauſes, to ouerſee and peruſe the ſame, but alſo vpon his good report with your moſt fauourable letters did warrant , and with extraordinarie commendation did approue and allow my labours, and deſire to publiſh the ſame. Wherefore to conclude , ſeeing they take their life and light from the moſt cheerefull and benigne aſpect of your fauour, I thinke it my bounden dutie in all humilitie and with much baſhfulneſſe to recommend my ſelfe and them vnto your right Honorable and fauourable protection, and your Honour to the mercifull tuition of the moſt High. From London this 24. of October. 1599.

Your Honors moſt humble to be commanded,

Richard Hakluyt preacher.

THE SECOND VOLVME OF THE principall Nauigations, Voyages, Traffiques, and *Diſcoueries of the Engliſh nation, made to the South and South-*eaſt quarters of the world, within the Straight of Gibraltar, with the Directions, Letters, Priuiledges, Diſcourſes, and Obſeruations incident to the ſame.

That the Brittons were in Italie and Greece with the Cimbrians and Gaules, before the incarnation of Chriſt. M. Wil. Camden, pag. 33.

B*Ritannos autem cum Cimbris & Gallis permiſtos* fuiſſe in expeditionibus illis in Italiam & Græciam videtur. Nam præter nomen commune in Britannico Triadum libro vetuſtiſſimo, vbi tres maximi exercitus, qui è Britannis conſcripti erant, memorantur, proditum eſt, exterum quendam ducem longè maximum exercitum hinc contraxiſſe, qui, populata magna Europæ parte, tandem ad Græcum mare (forſitan Gallatiam innuit) conſederit. Triadum liber.

Britomarum item ducem inter illos militarem, cuius meminit Florus & Appianus, Britonem fuiſſe nomē euincit, quod Britonem magnum ſignificat. Nec torquebo illud Strabonis, qui Brennum natione Prauſum fuiſſe ſcribit, vt natione Britonem faciam.

The ſame in Engliſh.

IT is not vnlike that the Britons accompanied the Cimbrians and Gaules in thoſe expeditions to Italy and Greece. For beſides the common name, it is recorded in that moſt ancient Britiſh booke called Liber Triadum, (wherein alſo mention is made of three huge armies that were leuied out of Britaine) that a certaine outlandiſh Captaine gathered from hence a mightie armie; who hauing waſted a great part of Europe, at length tooke vp his abode (perhaps the Author meaneth in Gallatia) neere vnto the ſea of Greece.

Likewiſe, that the warrelike captaine Britomarus (of whom Florus and Appian doe make report) was himſelfe a Briton, his very name doeth teſtifie, which ſignifieth A great Briton. Neither will I wreſt that teſtimonie of Strabo (who reporteth Brennus to haue bene a Prauſe by birth) that I may prooue him alſo to haue bene a Briton borne.

The trauaile of Helena.

H*Elena Flauia Auguſta* ſereniſſimi Coeli Britannici Regis Hæres, & vnica filia, Magni Conſtantini Cæſaris mater, incomparabili decôre, fide, religione, bonitate, ac magnificentiâ piâ, Euſebio etiam teſte, per totum reſplenduit orbem: Inter omnes ætatis ſuæ fœminas, nulla inueniebatur eâ in liberalibus artibus doctior, nulla in inſtrumentis muſicis peritior, aut in linguis nationum copioſior. Innatam habebat ingenij claritudinem, oris facundiam, ac morum ornatiſſimam compoſitionem: Hebraicè, Græcè, & Latinè erudita. Caruerat pater alia ſobole (inquit Virunnius) quæ Regni ſolio potiretur. Illam propterea his inſtrui fecit per optimos præceptores, vt eò commodius Regni tractaret negotia. Vnde ob incredibilem eius pulchritudinem, atque alias eximias animi & corporis dotes, Conſtantius Chlorus Cæſar illam duxit in vxorem, atque ex eâ filium in Britanniâ genuit Conſtantinum Magnum. Sed eo tandem Eboraci defuncto, cum Annâ illâ Euangelicâ, in ſanctâ viduitate perdurauit ad vltimum vitæ diem, tota Chriſtianæ religioni dedita. Sunt enim authores, qui narrent per iſtam, ceſſante perſecutione, pacem Eccleſijs datam: Ad tantam cœleſtis Philoſophiæ cognitionem eam ferunt poſt agnitum Euangelium perueniſſe, vt olim multos ediderit libros, & carmina quædam Græca, quæ hucúſque à Pontico ſupereſſe perhibentur. Viſionibus admonita Hieroſolymam petijt, & omnia ſaluatoris loca perluſtrauit. Romæ tandem octogenaria fœliciter in Chriſto quieuit. 15. Kalendas Septembris, filio adhuc ſuperſtite, anno ſalutis humanæ 337. Regnante apud Britannos Octauio. Huius corpus non minimâ nunc curâ Venetijs ſeruatur.

The ſame in Engliſh.

HElena Flauia Auguſta, the heire and onely daughter of Coelus ſometime the moſt excellent king of Britaine, the mother of the Emperour Conſtantine the great, by reaſon of her ſingular beautie, faith, religion, goodneſſe and godly Maieſtie (according to the teſtimonie of Euſebius) was famous in all the world. Amongſt all the women of her time, there was none either in the liberall arts more learned, or in inſtruments of muſike more ſkilfull, or in the diuers languages of nations more abundant then herſelfe. She had a naturall quickneſſe or excellency of wit, eloquence of ſpeech, and a moſt notable grace in all her behauiour. She was ſeene in the Hebrew, Greeke and Latine tongues.

Her father (as Virumnius reporteth) had no other childe to ſucceed in the kingdome after him but her, and therefore cauſed her to be inſtructed in theſe things by the beſt teachers, that thereby ſhe might the better in time gouerne the Realme: ſo that by reaſon of her paſſing beautie, and other her excellent giftes of body and minde, Conſtantius Chlorus the Emperour married her, and had by her a ſonne called Conſtantine the great, while hee remained in Britaine. Who at length deceaſing at Yorke, this Helena (no otherwiſe then Anna of whom mention is made in the new Teſtament) continued a vertuous and holy widow to the end of her life.

There are ſome writers which doe affirme, that perſecution ceaſed, and peace was granted to the Chriſtian Churches by her good meanes.

After the light and knowledge of the Goſpel, ſhe grewe ſo ſkilfull in diuinitie, that ſhee wrote and compoſed diuers bookes, and certaine Greeke verſes alſo, which (as Ponticus reporteth) are yet extant. Being warned by ſome viſions ſhe went to Ieruſalem, and viſited all the places there, which Chriſt had frequented. She liued to the age of foureſcore yeeres, and then died at Rome the 15. day of Auguſt, in the yeere of our redemption 337. Octauius being then king of Britaine, and her ſonne Conſtantine the Emperour then alſo liuing, and her body is to this day very carefully preſerued at Venice.

¶ The ſame in Engliſh.

FLauius Conſtantine,ſurnamed the great,king of the Britaines after his father,and Emperor of the Romanes,borne in Britanie of Helena his mother,and there created Emperour,made his natiue countrey partaker of his ſingular glory and renoume.

Hauing conquered and put to flight the Almanes, Spaniards, Frenchmen, and their Kings for a ſpectacle throwen out to wild beaſts,he held France it ſelfe as ſubiect vnto him:and hauing happily deliuered the Italians from the tyrannie of Maxentius,he preferred three of his mothers vncles,all Britaines,namely,Leoline,Trahere,and Marius,whom in all his actions he had found more faithfull vnto him then any others,to be of the order of the Romane Senators.

Eutropius reporteth, that he infinitely excelled in the vertues both of the mind and body alſo, and that hauing a pleaſure in the practiſe of warre, and in the iuſt commendation of Martiall prowesſe,he neuer pitched his field but his ſucceſſe in the battel was allwayes victorious. His mother Helena hauing inſtructed him in the faith of Chriſt,although hee made much of all men that were learned in the Greeke and Latine tongues, yet he yeelded ſpeciall honor to thoſe that ſpent their time in the ſtudie of Diuinitie,which he called Chriſtian Philoſophie: ſo that beginning at the furtheſt part of the Ocean ſea,which then was taken to be his owne natiue ſoyle of Britaine, and truſting in the aſſiſtance of God,when the darkenes of ſuperſtition was moſt thicke,then hee vndertooke a care of Religion,ſtirring vp innumerable nations from the Weſt as farre as India it ſelfe,to the hope of eternall life.

Hee paſſed many nightes without ſleepe, hauing his minde occupied in diuine ſtudies : and whenſoeuer his laiſure from greater affaires did permit him, his vacant times ſhould be ſpent in the vſe of writing and other good exerciſes, aſſuring himſelfe that his kingdomes and Empire were to be continued and ſtrengthened to him by prayer and holy workes : and oftentimes taking vpon him as it were the perſon of a notable preacher of Chriſtian diſcipline, he would teach his children and nobilitie,that godlineſſe was to be preferred before riches, yea, before the Monarchie of all the world.

He ouerthrew the falſe gods of the heathens,and by many lawes often reuiued, he abrogated the worſhipping of Images in all the countries of Greece, Ægypt, Perſia, Aſia, and the whole Romane Empire,commanding Chriſt onely by his Edicts to be worſhipped, the ſacred Goſpell to be preached,the Miniſters thereof to be honoured and relieued, and the temples of Idoles euery where to be deſtroyed.

Whitherſoeuer he went hee cauſed the booke of the Goſpell of Chriſt to be ſtill caried before him,that thereby it might appeare to be a forme of faith to all men, and to appertaine generally to all nations.

He was the firſt that appointed an Imperiall Diademe,or Crowne to the Kings of Britaine.

He was moſt beneficiall to all Churches, beſtowing vpon them lands and fields, and vpon the poore,ſicke perſons,widowes and orphanes, corne and wood, being as carefull of them as if hee had bene their naturall father.

He vſed learned men moſt familiarly, as Euſebius, Lactantius and others, and they are witneſſes that this was his vſuall prayer to God, O Lord we know thee to be the onely God, we are ſure that thou art the onely King,and we call vpon thee as our helper: through thee we haue gotten the victorie,and by thee we haue ouerthrowen the enemie.

Sextus Aurelius reporteth,that it was his greateſt delight to imbrace the ſtudie of learning, to fauour good Arts,to read,write and meditate, and that he compoſed many bookes and Epiſtles both in the Greeke and Latine tongues.

He died at Nicomedia,being then 66.yeres of age,in the 32.yere of his reigne,and in the 339. yeere after the Incarnation of Chriſt, and was buried at Conſtantinople, Octauius being then King of Britaine: whoſe life Euſebius biſhop of Cæſarea hath written in Greeke in 4. bookes, which afterwards were tranſlated into the Latine tongue by Iohn Portes a Frenchman.

¶ The life and trauailes of Pelagius borne in Wales.

PElagius Cambrius ex ea Britanniæ parte oriundus, famati illius Collegij Bannochorenſis a Ceſtria non procul, præpoſitus erat, in quo Chriſtianorum philoſophorum duo millia ac centum, ad plebis in Chriſto commoditatem militabant, manuum ſuarum laboribus, iuxta Pauli doctrinam victitantes. Poſt quam plures exhibitos, pro Chriſtiana Repub. labores, vir eruditione inſignis, & tum Græcè, tum Latinè peritus, vt Tertullianus alter, quorundam Clericorum laceſſitus iniurijs, grauatim tulit, ac tandem a fide defecit.

Peragratis igitur deinceps Gallijs, in Aegyptum, & Syriam aliáſque orientis Regiones demum peruenit. Vbi ex earum partiũ Monacho præſul ordinatus, ſui nominis hæreſim fabricabat: aſſerens hominem ſine peccato naſci, ac ſolo voluntatis imperio ſine gratia ſaluari poſſe, vt ita nefarius baptiſmum ac fidem tolleret. Cum his & conſimilibus impoſtricis doctrinæ fœcibus in patriam ſuam reuerſus, omnem illam Regionem, Iuliano & Cæleſtino Pſeudoepiſcopis fautoribus, conſpurcabat. Verum ante lapſum ſuum ſtudia tractabat honeſtiſſima, vt poſt Gennadium, Bedam, & Honorium alij ferunt authores, compoſuitq; multos libros ad Chriſtianam vtilitatem. At poſtquam eſt Hereticus publicatus, multo plures edidit hæreſi ſuccurrentes, & ex diametro cum vera pietate pugnantes, vnde erat a ſuis Britannis in exilium pulſus, vt in Epiſtola ad Martinum 5. Valdenus habet. Claruit anno poſt Chriſtum incarnatum, 390. ſub Maximo Britannorum Rege.

PElagius, borne in that part of Britaine which is called Wales, was head or gouernour of the famous Colledge of Bangor, not farre from Cheſter, wherein liued a Societie of 2100. Diuines, or Students of Chriſtian philoſophie, applying themſelues to the profite of the Chriſtian people, and liuing by the labours of their owne handes, according to Pauls doctrine. He was a man excellently learned, and ſkilfull both in the Greeke and Latine tongues, and as it were another Tertullian, after his long and great trauailes for the good of the Chriſtian common wealth, ſeeing himſelfe abuſed, and iniuriouſly dealt withall by ſome of the Clergie of that time, he tooke the matter ſo grieuouſly, that at the laſt he relapſed from the faith.

Whereupon he left Wales, and went into France, and hauing gone through France, hee went therehence into Egypt, Syria, & other Countries of the Eaſt, and being made Prieſt by a certaine Monke of thoſe partes, he there hatched his hereſie, which according to his name was called the hereſie of the Pelagians: which was, that man was borne without ſinne, and might be ſaued by the power of his owne will without grace, that ſo the miſerable man might take away faith and baptiſme. With this and the like dregges of falſe doctrine, hee returned againe into Wales, and there by the meanes of the two falſe Prelates Iulian and Celeſtine, who fauoured his hereſie, hee infected the whole Countrey with it. But before his fall and Apoſtaſie from the faith, he exerciſed himſelfe in the beſt ſtudies, as Gennadius, Beda, Honorius, and other authors doe report of him, and wrote many bookes ſeruing not a litle to Chriſtian vtilitie: but being once fallen into his hereſie, hee wrote many more erroneous bookes, then he did before honeſt, and ſincere: whereupon, at the laſt his owne Countreymen baniſhed him, as Walden teſtifieth in his Epiſtle to Pope Martine the fift. He flouriſhed in the yere after the Incarnation, 390. Maximus being then King of Britaine.

¶ Certaine Engliſhmen ſent to Conſtantinople by the French King to Iuſtinian the Emperor, about the yeere of Chriſt, 500. out of the fourth booke of Procopius de Bello Gothico.

THe Iſle of Britaine is inhabited by three moſt populous nations, euery of which is gouerned by a ſeuerall king. The ſayd nations are named Angili, Friſones, and Britones, which laſt are called after the name of the Iſland. In this Iſle there are ſuch ſwarmes of people, that euery yeere they goe foorth in great numbers with their wiues and children into France. And the Frenchmen right willingly receiue them into their lande, which ſeemeth very deſolate for want of inhabitants. Whereupon it is ſayd that the French doe challenge the foreſayd Iſland vnto themſelues. For not long ſince, when the king of the Frankes ſent certaine of his ſubiects ambaſſadours to Conſtantinople vnto Iuſtinian the Emperour, he ſent Engliſh men alſo, ambitiouſly boaſting, as though the ſayd Iſle had bene vnder his iuriſdiction.

A teſtimonie of the ſending of Sighelmus Biſhop of Shirburne, by King Alphred, vnto Saint Thomas of India in the yeare of our Lord 883, recorded by William of Malmesburie, in his ſecond booke and fourth Chapter de geſtis regum Anglorum.

ELeemoſynis intentus priuilegia eccleſiarum, ſicut pater ſtatuerat, roborauit; & trans mare Romam, & ad ſanctum Thomam in Indiam multa munera miſit. Legatus in hoc miſſus Sighelmus Shirburnenſis Epiſcopus cum magna proſperitate, quod quiuis hoc ſeculo miretur, Indiam penetrauit; inde rediens exoticos ſplendores gemmarum, & liquores aromatum, quorum illa humus ferax eſt, reportauit.

KIng Alphred being addicted to giuing of almes, confirmed the priuileges of Churches as his father had determined; and ſent alſo many giftes beyond the ſeas vnto Rome, and vnto S. Thomas of India. His meſſenger in this buſineſſe was Sighelmus biſhop of Schirburne; who with great proſperitie (which is a matter to be wondered at in this our age) trauailed thorough India, and returning home brought with him many ſtrange and precious vnions and coſtly ſpyces, ſuch as that countrey plentifully yeeldeth.

S*Ighelmus* trans mare, cauſa eleemoſynarum regis, & etiam ad Sanctum Thomam in Indiam miſſus, mira proſperitate, quod quiuis in hoc ſeculo miretur, Indiam penetrauit; indequè rediens exotici generis gemmas, quarum illa humus ferax eſt, reportauit. IOhn Erigene a Britane, deſcended of honourable parents, and borne in the Towne of S. Dauid in Wales, ſeeing the Engliſhmen to be oppreſſed with the warres and rapines of the cruell Danes, and all the land in a hurlie burlie, he in the meane time undertooke a long iourney, euen as farre as Athens, and there ſpent many yeres in the ſtudie of the Greeke, Chaldie, and Arabian tongues: he there frequented all the places and ſchooles of the Philoſophers, and the oracle alſo of the Sunne, which Aeſculapius had built vnto himſelfe. And hauing found at length that which he had with long trauell ſearched, he returned againe into Italie, and France, where for his ſingular learning, he was much fauoured of the two Kings Charles and Lewes, and in his being there, he tranſlated into Latine the bookes of Dionyſius Areopagita concerning the Heauenly Hierarchie, which were ſent from Conſtantinople in the yeere 858. After this hee came backe againe into his owne Countrey, and was ſchoolemaſter vnto Alphred then King of England, and his ſonnes: and vpon his requeſt, at his times of leaſure, he tranſlated Ariſtotles Morals, of the Secrets of Secrets, or of the right gouernement of Princes, out of Greeke into theſe three tongues, Chaldie, Arabian, and Latine, which he did very exquiſitely. At the laſt, being in the Abbie of Malmſburie, whither he went for his recreation, and there according to his manner diſputing, and reading to the Students, ſome of them miſliking and hating him, roſe againſt him, and ſlue him in the yeere of Chriſt, 884.

ANdræas Leucander aliàs Whiteman (iuxta Lelandum) Monachus, & Abbas Rameſienſis Cænobij tertius fuit. Hic bonis artibus ſtudio quodam incredibili noctes atque dies inuigilabat, & operæ præcium ingens inde retulit. Acceſſit præterea & ardens quoddam deſiderium, ea proprijs & apertis oculis videndi loca, in quibus Seruator Chriſtus redemptionis noſtræ myſteria omnia conſummauit, quorum prius ſola nomina ex ſcripturarum lectione nouerat: vnde & ſacram Hieroſolymorum vrbem, miraculorum, prædicationis, ac paſſionis eius teſtem inuiſit, atque domum rediens factus eſt Abbas. ANdrew Leucander otherwiſe called Whiteman (as Leland reporteth) was by profeſſion a Monke, and the third Abbat of the Abbey of Ramſie: he was exceedingly giuen to the ſtudie of good artes, taking paines therein day & night, and profited greatly thereby. And amongſt all other things, he had an incredible deſire to ſee thoſe places with his eyes, wherein Chriſt our Sauiour performed and wrought all the myſteries of our redemption, the names of which places he onely knew before by the reading of the Scriptures. Whereupon he began his iourney, and went to Ieruſalem a witneſſe of the miracles, preaching, and paſſion of Chriſt, and being againe returned into his countrey, he was made the aforeſayd Abbat. He flouriſhed in the yere of Chriſt 1020. vnder Canutus the Dane.

SWanus being of a peruerſe diſpoſition, and faithleſſe to the king, often times diſagreed with his father and his brother Harold: and afterwards prouing a pirate, he ſtained the vertues of his anceſtours with his robberies vpon the ſeas. Laſt of all, being guilty vnto himſelfe of the murther of his kinſeman Bruno, and (as ſome do report) of his owne brother, he trauailed vnto Ieruſalem: and in his returne home, being taken by the Saracens, was beaten, and wounded vnto death.

VPon Eaſter day king Edward the Confeſſour being crowned with his kingly diademe, and accompanied with diuers of his nobles, ſate at dinner in his pallace at Weſtminſter. And when others, after their long abſtinence in the Lent, refreſhed themſelues with dainty meats, and fed thereupon very earneſtly, he lifting vp his mind from earthly matters and meditating on heauenly viſions (to the great admiration of thoſe which were preſent) brake forth into an exceeding laughter: and no man preſuming to enquire the cauſe of his mirth, they all kept ſilence til dinner was ended. But after dinner, as he was in his bed-chamber putting off his ſolemne roabes, three of his Nobles, to wit earle Harold, an Abbot, and a Biſhop, being more familiar with him then the reſidue followed him in, and boldly aſked him what was the occaſion of his laughter: for it ſeemed very ſtrange vnto them all, what ſhould moue him at ſo ſolemne a time and aſſembly, while others kept ſilence, to laugh ſo exceſſiuely. I ſaw (quoth he) admirable things, and therefore laughed I not without occaſion. Then they (as it is the common guiſe of all men) demaunded and enquired the cauſe more earneſtly, humbly beſeeching him that hee would vouchſafe to impart that ſecret vnto them. Whereupon muſing a long while vnto himſelfe, at length he told them wonderfull things: namely that ſeuen Sleepers had reſted in mount Cælius two hundred yeeres, lying vpon their right ſides; but in the very houre of his laughter, that they turned themſelues on their left ſides; and that they ſhould continue ſo lying for the ſpace of 74. yeeres after; being a diſmal ſigne of future calamitie vnto mankinde. For all things ſhould come to paſſe within thoſe 74. yeeres, which, as our Sauiour Chriſt foretold vnto his diſciples, were to be fulfilled about the ende of the world; namely that nation ſhould riſe againſt nation, and kingdome againſt kingdome, and then there ſhould bee in many places earthquakes, peſtilence, and famine, terrible apparitions in the heauens, and great ſignes, together with alterations of kingdomes, warres of infidels againſt the Chriſtians, and victories of the Chriſtians againſt the infidels. And as they wondered at theſe relations, he declared vnto them the paſſion of the ſeuen Sleepers, with the proportion and ſhape of eache of their bodies (which things no man liuing had as then committed vnto writing) and that ſo plainely and diſtinctly, as if he had conuerſed a long time in their company. Hereupon the earle ſent a knight, the biſhop a clearke, and the abbot a monke vnto Maniches the Emperour of Conſtantinople, with the letters and gifts of their King. Who giuing them friendly entertainment, ſent them ouer vnto the biſhop of Epheſus; and wrote his letters vnto him giuing him charge, that the Engliſh Ambaſſadours might be admitted to ſee the true, and material habiliments of the ſeuen Sleepers. And it came to paſſe that King Edwards viſion was approued by all the Greekes, who proteſted they were aduertiſed by their fathers, that the foreſaid ſeuen Sleepers had alwayes before that time reſted vpon their right ſides; but after the Engliſhmen were entered into the caue, thoſe Sleepers confirmed the trueth of the outlandiſh propheſie, vnto their countreymen. Neither were the calamities foretold, any long time delayed: for the Agarens, Arabians, Turkes and other vnbeleeuing nations inuading the Chriſtians, harried and ſpoiled Syria, Lycia, the leſſer Aſia, and many cities of Aſia the greater, and amongſt the reſt Epheſus, yea, and Ieruſalem alſo.

IN the yere of our Lord 1058. Alured biſhop of Worceſter, very ſolennely dedicated a Church (which himſelfe had founded and built in the citie of Gloceſter) vnto the honour of S. Peter the chiefe Apoſtle: and afterward by the kings permiſſion ordained Wolſtan a Monke of Worceſter of his owne choice, to be Abbate in the ſame place. And then hauing left his Biſhopricke which was committed vnto him ouer the Church of Wilton, and hauing reſigned the ſame vnto Hermannus aboue mentioned, paſſed ouer the ſeas, and trauailed through Hungarie vnto Ieruſalem, &c.

The voyage of Ingulphus Abbat of Croiland vnto Ieruſalem, performed (according to Florentius Wigornienſis) in the yeere of our Lord, 1064, and deſcribed by the ſaid Ingulphus himſelfe about the concluſion of his briefe Hiſtorie.

A.D.1064. EGo Ingulphus humilis miniſter Sancti Guthlaci Monaſterijq; ſui Croilandenſis, natus in Anglia, & a parentibus Anglicis, quippè vrbis pulcherrimæ Londoniarum, pro literis addiſcendis in teneriori ætate conſtitutus, primum Weſtmonaſterio, poſtmodum Oxonienſi ſtudio traditus eram. The ſame in Engliſh.

I Ingulphus an humble ſeruant of reuerend Guthlac and of his monaſtery of Croiland, borne in England, and of Engliſh parents, at the beautifull citie of London, was in my youth, for the attaining of good letters, placed firſt at Weſtminſter, and afterward ſent to the Vniuerſitie of Oxford. And hauing excelled diuers of mine equals in learning of Ariſtotle, I inured my ſelfe ſomewhat vnto the firſt & ſecond Rhethorique of Tullie. And as I grew in age, diſdayning my parents meane eſtate, and forſaking mine owne natiue ſoyle, I affected the Courts of kings and princes, and was deſirous to be clad in ſilke, and to weare braue and coſtly attire. And loe, at the ſame time William our ſoueraigne king now, but then Erle of Normandie, with a great troup of followers and attendants came vnto London, to conferre with king Edward the Confeſſour his kinſman. Into whoſe company intruding my ſelfe, and proffering my ſeruice for the performance of any ſpeedy or weightie affayres, in ſhort time, after I had done many things with good ſucceſſe, I was knowen and moſt entirely beloued by the victorious Erle himſelfe, and with him I ſayled into Normandie. And there being made his ſecretarie, I gouerned the Erles Court (albeit with the enuie of ſome) as my ſelfe pleaſed, yea whom I would I abaſed, and preferred whom I thought good. When as therefore, being carried with a youthfull heat and luſtie humour, I began to be wearie euen of this place, wherein I was aduanced ſo high aboue my parentage, and with an inconſtant minde, and affection too too ambitious, moſt vehemently aſpi-red at all occaſions to climbe higher: there went a report throughout all Normandie, that diuers Archbiſhops of the Empire, and ſecular princes were deſirous for their ſoules health, and for deuotion ſake, to goe on pilgrimage to Ieruſalem. Wherefore out of the family of our lorde the Earle, ſundry of vs, both gentlemen and clerkes (principall of whom was my ſelfe) with the licence and good will of our ſayd lord the earle, ſped vs on that voiage, and trauailing thirtie horſes of vs into high Germanie, we ioyned our ſelues vnto the Archbiſhop of Mentz. And being with the companies of the Biſhops ſeuen thouſand perſons ſufficiently prouided for ſuch an expedition, we paſſed proſperouſly through many prouinces, and at length attained vnto Conſtantinople. Where doing reuerence vnto the Emperour Alexius, we ſawe the Church of Sancta Sophia, and kiſſed diuers ſacred reliques. Departing thence through Lycia, we fell into the hands of the Arabian theeues: and after we had bene robbed of infinite ſummes of money, and had loſt many of our people, hardly eſcaping with extreame danger of our liues, at length wee ioyfully entered into the moſt wiſhed citie of Ieruſalem. Where we were receiued by the moſt reuerend, aged, and holy patriarke Sophronius, with great melodie of cymbals and with torch-light, and were accompanied vnto the moſt diuine Church of our Sauiour his ſepulchre with a ſolemne proceſſion aſwell of Syrians as of Latines. Here, how many prayers we vttered, what abundance of teares we ſhed, what deepe ſighs we breathed foorth, our Lord Ieſus Chriſt onely knoweth. Wherefore being conducted from the moſt glorious ſepulchre of Chriſt to viſite other ſacred monuments of the citie, we ſaw with weeping eyes a great number of holy Churches and oratories, which Achim the Souldan of Egypt had lately deſtroyed. And ſo hauing bewailed with ſadde teares, and moſt ſorowful and bleeding affections, all the ruines of that moſt holy city both within and without, and hauing beſtowed money for the reedifying of ſome, we deſired with moſt ardent deuotion to go forth into the countrey, to waſh our ſelues in the moſt ſacred riuer of Iordan, and to kiſſe all the ſteppes of Chriſt. Howbeit the theeuiſh Arabians lurking vpon euery way, would not ſuffer vs to trauell farre from the city, by reaſon of their huge and furious multitudes. Wherefore about the ſpring there arriued at the port of Ioppa a fleet of ſhips from Genoa. In which fleet (when the Chriſtian merchants had exchanged all their wares at the coaſt townes, and had likewiſe viſited the holy places) wee all of vs embarked, committing our ſelues to the ſeas: and being toſſed with many ſtormes and tempeſts, at length wee arriued at Brunduſium: and ſo with a proſperous iourney trauelling thorow Apulia towards Rome, we there viſited the habitations of the holy apoſtles Peter and Paul, and did reuerence vnto diuers monuments of holy martyrs in all places thorowout the city. From thence the archbiſhops and other princes of the empire trauelling towards the right hand for Alemain, and we declining towards the left hand for France, departed aſunder, taking our leaues with vnſpeakable thankes and courteſies. And ſo at length, of thirty horſemen which went out of Normandie fat, luſty, and frolique, we returned thither ſkarſe twenty poore pilgrims of vs, being all footmen, and conſumed with leanneſſe to the bare bones.

Hol. pag. 22. vol. 2.

POpe Vrbane calling a councell at Clermont in Auuergne, exhorted the Chriſtian princes ſo earneſtly to make a iourney into the Holy land, for the recouery thereof out of the Saracens hands, that the ſaide great and generall iourney was concluded vpon to be taken in hand, wherein many noble men of Chriſtendome went vnder the leading of Godfrey of Bouillon & others, as in the Chronicles of France, of Germanie, and of the Holy land doeth more plainely appeare. There went alſo among other diuers noble men foorth of this Realme of England, ſpecially that worthily bare the ſurname of Beauchampe.

¶ The voyage of Gutuere an Engliſh Lady maried to Balduine brother of Godfreide duke of Bouillon, toward Ieruſalem about 1097. And the 11. yeere of William Rufus King of England.

THe Chriſtian armie of Godfrie of Bouillon paſſing the citie of Iconium, alias Agogna in the countrey of Licaonia, and from thence by the city of Heraclia, came at length vnto the citie of Maraſia, where they encamped, and ſoiourned there three whole dayes, becauſe of the wife of Balduine brother germane of the duke of Loraigne. Which Lady being long time vexed with a grieuous malady, was in extremitie, where at length paying the debt due to nature, ſhe changed this tranſitorie life, for life eternall; Who, in her life time, was a very worthy and vertuous Lady, borne in England, and deſcended of moſt noble parentage named Gutuere; Which, according to her degree, was there moſt honourably enterred, to the great griefe of all the whole armie. As reporteth William Archbiſhop of Tyre, lib.3.cap.17.hiſt.belli ſacri. The ſame author in the 10. booke & firſt chapter of the ſame hiſtorie concerning the ſame Engliſh Lady, writeth further as followeth. Baldwine hauing folowed the warres for a time, gaue his minde to marriage, ſo that being in England he fell in loue with a very honourable and noble Lady named Gutuere, whom he married and caried with him in that firſt happy expedition, wherin he accompanied his brethren the Lords, duke Godfrey and Euſtace, perſons very commendable in all vertues and of immortall memorie. But he had hard fortune in his iourney, becauſe his foreſaid wife, being wearied with a long ſicknes finiſhed her life with a happie end neere the citie of Maraſia, before the Chriſtian armie came vnto Antioch, where ſhe was honourably buried, as we haue declared before.

¶ Chronicon Hieroſolymitanum in lib.3.cap.27. maketh alſo mention of this Engliſh Lady, which he calleth Godwera in this maner.

HAc in regione Mareſch vxor Baldewini nobiliſſima, quam de regno Anglię eduxit, diutina corporis moleſtia aggrauata, & duci Godefrido commendata, vitam exhalauit, ſepulta Catholicis obſequijs; cuius nomen erat Godwera.

The ſame in Engliſh.

IN this prouince of Mareſch the moſt noble wife of Baldwine, which he caried with him out of England being viſited with dayly ſickneſſes and infirmities of body, and commended to the cuſtody of duke Godfrey, departed out of this life, and was buried after the Chriſtian maner. Her name was Godwera.

¶ The voyage of Edgar the ſonne of Edward which was the ſonne of Edmund ſurnamed Ironſide, brother vnto K. Edward the confeſſor, (being accompanied with valiant Robert the ſonne of Godwin) vnto Ieruſalem, in the yeere of our Lord 1102. Recorded by William of Malmesburie, lib.3.hiſt.fol.58.

SVbſequenti tempore cum Roberto filio Godwini milite audaciſſimo Edgarus Hieroſolymam pertendit. A.D.1102. Illud fuit tempus quo Turci Baldwinum regem apud Ramas obſederunt: qui cum obſidionis iniuriam ferre nequiret, per medias hoſtium acies effugit, ſolius Roberti opera liberatus præeuntis, & euaginato gladio dextra leuaque Turcos cædentis. Sed cum ſucceſſu ipſo truculentior, alacritate nimia procurreret, enſis manu excidit. Ad quem recolligendum cum ſe inclinaſſet, omnium incurſu oppreſſus, vinculis palmas dedit. Inde Babyloniam (vt aiunt) ductus, cum Chriſtum abnegare nollet, in medio foro ad ſignum poſitus, & ſagittis terebratus, martyrium conſecrauit. Edgarus amiſſo milite regreſſus, multaque beneficia ab Imperatoribus Græcorum, & Alemannorum adeptus (quippè qui etiam eum retinere pro generis amplitudine tentaſſent) omnia pro natalis ſoli deſiderio ſpreuit. Quoſdam enim profectò fallit amor patriæ, vt nihil eis videatur iucundum, niſi conſuetum hauſerint cœlum. Vndè Edgarus fatua cupidine illuſus Angliam redijt, vbi (vt ſuperius dixi) diuerſo fortunæ ludicro rotatus, nunc remotus & tacitus, canos ſuos in agro conſumit.

The ſame in Engliſh.

AFterward Edgar being ſonne vnto the nephewe of Edward the confeſſour, traueiled with Robert the ſonne of Godwin a moſt valiant knight, vnto Ieruſalem. And it was at the ſame time when the Turkes beſieged king Baldwin at Rama: who not being able to endure the ſtraight ſiege, was by the helpe of Robert eſpecially, going before him, and with his drawen ſword making a lane, and ſlaying the Turkes on his right hande and on his left, deliuered out of that danger, and eſcaped through the midſt of his enemies campe. But vpon his happie ſucceſſe being more eager and fierce, as hee went forward ſomewhat too haſtily, his ſworde fell out of his hand. Which as he ſtouped to take vp, being oppreſſed with the whole multitude, hee was there taken and bound. From whence (as ſome ſay) being carried vnto Babylon or Alcair in Egypt, when he would not renounce Chriſt, he was tyed vnto a ſtake in the midſt of the market place, and being ſhot through with arrowes, died a martyr. Edgar hauing loſt his knight returned, and being honoured with many rewards both by the Greekiſh and by the Germaine Emperour (who both of them would right gladly haue entertained him ſtil for his great nobilitie) contemned all things in reſpect of his natiue ſoile. For in very deede ſome are ſo inueagled with the loue of their countrey, that nothing can ſeeme pleaſant vnto them, vnleſſe they breath in the ſame aire where they were bred. Wherefore Edgar being miſledde with a fond affection, returned into England; and afterward being ſubiect vnto diuers changes of fortune (as we haue aboue ſignified) he ſpendeth * now his extreeme olde age in an obſcure and priuate place of the countrey.

When the author was writing of this hiſtory.

¶ Mention made of one Godericus, a valiant Engliſhman, who was with his ſhips in the voyage vnto the Holy land in the ſecond yeere of Baldwine King of Ieruſalem, in the third yere of Henry the firſt of England.

CHronicon Hieroſolymitanum lib. 9. cap. 9. BUt ſeuen dayes afterward, the King comming out of the towne of Aſſur entred into a ſhippe called a Buſſe, and one Godericke a pirate of the kingdome of England with him, and faſtening his banner on the toppe of a ſpeare, and holding it vp aloft in the aire againſt the beames of the Sunne, ſailed vnto Iaphet with a ſmall company; That the Chriſtian Citizens there ſeeing this his banner, might conceiue hope that the King was yet liuing, and being not eaſily terrified with the threates of the enemies might ſhamefully runne away, or be conſtrained to yeeld vp the citie. For hee knew that they were very much out of hope of his life and ſafetie. The Saracens ſeeing and knowing this his banner, that part of them which enuironed the Citie by water made towards him with twentie Gallies and thirteene ſhippes, which they commonly cal Cazh, ſeeking to incloſe the Kings ſhippe. But, by Gods helpe the billowes of the Sea ſwelling and raging againſt them, and the Kings ſhippe gliding and paſſing through the waues with an eaſie and nimble courſe arriued ſuddenly in the hauen of Ioppa, the enemies fruſtrated of their purpoſe; and ſixe of the Saracens were hurt and wounded by ſhot out of the Kings ſhippe. So that the King entering into the Citie, and nowe appearing in ſafetie in all their ſightes, the ſpirits of all them that mourned for him, and vntil then lamented as though hee had bene dead, reuiued, becauſe that the head and King of the Chriſtians, and prince of Ieruſalem was yet aliue, and come againe vnto them in perfect health.

¶ Mention made of one Hardine of England one of the chiefeſt perſonages, and a leader among other of two hundred ſaile of ſhips of Chriſtians that landed at Ioppa in the yeere of our Lord God 1102.

WHile the Sarazens continued their ſiege againſt Ioppa, two hundred ſaile of Chriſtian ſhips arriued at Ioppa, that they might performe their deuotions at Hieruſalem. The chiefe men and leaders of theſe Chriſtians are reported to haue bene: Bernard Witrazh of the land of Galatia, Hardine of England, Otho of Roges, Haderwerck one of the chiefe noble men of Weſtphalia, &c. This Chriſtian power through Gods ſpeciall prouiſion, arriued here for the ſuccour and reliefe of the diſtreſſed & beſieged Chriſtians in Ioppa, the third day of Iuly, 1102. and in the ſecond yeere of Baldwine king of Ieruſalem. Whereupon the multitude of the Sarazens, ſeeing that the Chriſtian power ioyned themſelues boldly, cloſe by them euen face to face in a lodging hard by them, the very next night at midnight, remooued their tents, and pitched them more then a mile off, that they might the next morning bee aduiſed whether they ſhould returne to Aſcalon, or by often aſſaults vexe the citizens of Iaphet.

Chronicon Hieroſolymitanum, eodem libro 9. cap. 12. continueth this hiſtorie of theſe two hundreth ſaile of ſhips, and ſheweth how by their prowesse chiefly, the multitude of the Sarazens were in ſhort ſpace vanquiſhed and ouerthrowen: The words are theſe; Ab ipſo verò die tertiæ feriæ dum ſic in ſuperbia & elatione ſuæ multitudinis immobiles Saraceni perſiſterent, & multis armorum terroribus Chriſtianum populum vexarent, ſexta feria appropinquante, Rex Baldwinus in tubis & cornibus a Iaphet egrediens, in manu robuſta equitum & peditum virtutem illorum crudeli bello eſt aggreſſus, magnis hinc & hinc clamoribus intonantes. Chriſtiani quoque qui nauigio appulſi ſunt horribili pariter clamore cum Rege Baldwino, & graui ſtrepitu vociferantes, Babylonios vehementi pugna ſunt aggreſſi, ſæuiſſimis atq; mortiferis plagis eos affligẽtes, donec bello fatigati, & vltra vim non ſuſtinentes fugam verſus Aſcalonem inierunt. Alij verò ab inſecutoribus eripi exiſtimantes, & mari ſe credentes, intolerabili procellarum fluctuatione abſorpti ſunt. Et ſic ciuitas Ioppe cum habitatoribus ſuis liberata eſt. Ceciderunt hac die tria millia Sarracenorum: Chriſtianorum verò pauci periјſſe inuenti ſunt.

The ſame in Engliſh.

YEt notwithſtanding, after the ſaid third day of Iuly, the Sarazens perſiſted high minded and inſolent, by reaſon of their great multitude, and much annoied the Chriſtian people with their many forceable and terrible weapons; whereupon, on the ſixt day of Iuly early in the morning king Baldwine iſſued out of Iaphet, his trumpets and cornets yeelding a great and lowd ſound, and with a very ſtrong armie as well of horſemen as footemen, who on euery ſide making great ſhoutes and outcries, with fierce and ſharpe battell ſet on the maine power of their enemies. The Chriſtians alſo who arriued in the nauie, rearing great clamours and noyſes, with loud voices and ſhoutings in horrible wiſe together, with king Baldwine aſſaulted likewiſe with ſtrong battell the Babylonians, and afflicted them with moſt ſore and deadly wounds, vntill the Sarazens being wearied with fighting, nor able longer to endure and hold out againſt the valure of the Chriſtians, fled towards Aſcalon. And other of them hoping to eſcape from them that purſued them, lept into the ſea, and were ſwalowed vp in the waues thereof. And ſo the citie of Ioppa with the inhabitants thereof were freed of their enemies. There were ſlaine this day three thouſand Sarazens, and but a few of the Chriſtians periſhed.

¶ A Fleete of Engliſhmen, Danes, and Flemmings, arriued at Ioppa in the Holy land, the ſeuenth yeere of Baldwine the ſecond king of Hieruſalem. Written in the beginning of the tenth booke of the Chronicle of Hieruſalem, in the 8. yeere of Henry the firſt of England.

Cap. 1.

AT the ſame time alſo in the ſeuenth yeere of the raigne of Baldwine the Catholike king of Hieruſalem, a very great warrelike Fleete of the Catholike nation of England, to the number of about ſeuē thouſand, hauing with them more men of warre of the kingdom of Denmarke, of Flanders and of Antwerpe, arriued with ſhips which they call Buſſes, at the hauen of the citie of Iaphet, determining there to make their abode, vntill they hauing obtained the kings licence and ſafeconduct, might ſafely worſhip at Hieruſalem. Of which nauie the chiefeſt and beſt ſpoken repairing to the king, ſpake to him in this maner. Chriſt preſerue the Kings life, and proſper his kingdome from day to day; Wee, being men and ſouldiours of Chriſtian profeſſion, haue, through the helpe of God, ſayled hither through mightie and large ſeas, from the farre countreys of England, Flanders, and Denmarke, to worſhip at Ieruſalem, and to viſit the ſepulchre of our Lord. And therefore we are aſſembled to intreat your clemency touching the matter, that by your fauour and ſafe conduct we may peaceably goe vp to Ieruſalem, and worſhip there, and ſo returne.

Chap. 2.

The king fauourably hearing their whole petition, granted vnto them a ſtrong band of men to conduct them, which brought them ſafely from all aſſaults and ambuſhes of the Gentiles by the knowen wayes vnto Ieruſalem and all other places of deuotion. After that theſe pilgrims, & new Chriſtian ſtrangers were brought thither, they offering vnto our Lord their vowes in the temple of the holy ſepulchre, returned with great ioy, and without all let vnto Ioppa; where finding the king, they vowed that they would aſſiſt him in all things, which ſhould ſeeme good vnto him: who, greatly commending the men, and commanding them to be well entertained with hoſpitality, anſwered that he could not on the ſudden anſwere to this point, vntill that after he had called his nobles together, he had conſulted with my lord the Patriarch what was moſt meet and conuenient to be done, and not to trouble in vaine ſo willing an army. And therefore after a few dayes, calling vnto him my lord the Patriarch, Hugh of Tabaria, Gunfride the keeper and lieutenant of the tower of Dauid, and the other chiefeſt men of warre, he determined to haue a meeting in the city of Rames, to conſult with them what was beſt to be done.

Chap. 3.

Who, being aſſembled at the day appointed, and propoſing their diuers opinions & iudgements, at length it ſeemed beſt vnto the whole company to beſiege the city Sagitta, which is alſo called Sidon, if peraduenture, through Gods helpe, and by the ſtrength of this new army, by land and ſea it might be ouercome. Whereupon all they which were there preſent, and required that this city ſhould be beſieged, becauſe it was one of thoſe cities of the Gentiles which continually rebelled, were commended, and admoniſhed of the king euery one to go home, and to furniſh themſelues with things neceſſary, and armour for this expedition. Euery one of them departed home; likewiſe Hugh of Tabaria departed, being a chiefe man of warre againſt the inuaſions of the enemies, which could neuer be wearied day nor night in the countie of the Pagans, in purſuing them with warre and warlike ſtratagemes all the dayes of his life. Immediatly after this conſultation the king ſent ambaſſadours to all the multitude of the Engliſh men, requiring them not to remoue their campe nor fleet from the city of Iaphet, but quietly to attend the kings further commandement. The ſame ambaſſadours alſo declared vnto the whole army, that the king and all his nobility had determined to beſiege and aſſault the city Sagitta by ſea and by land, and that their helpe and forces would there be needfull: and that for this purpoſe, the king and the patriarch were comming downe vnto the city of Acres, and that they were in building of engins, and warlike inſtruments, to inuade the walles and inhabitants thereof: and that in the meane ſeaſon they were to remaine at Iaphet, vntill the kings further commandement were knowen. Whereupon they all agreed that it ſhould ſo be done according to the kings commandement; and anſwered that they would attend his directions in the hauen of Iaphet, & would in all points be obedient vnto him vnto the death.

Chap. 4.

The king came downe to Acres with the patriarch, and all his family, building, and making there by the ſpace of fortie dayes engins, and many kindes of warlike inſtruments: and appointing all things to be made perfectly ready, which ſeemed to be moſt conuenient for the aſſaulting of the city. Aſſoone as this purpoſe and intent of the king was come vnto the eares of the inhabitants of Sagitta, and that an inuincible power of men of warre was arriued at Iaphet to helpe the king, they were greatly aſtonied, fearing that by this meanes, they ſhould be conſumed and ſubdued by the king by dint of ſword, as other cities, to wit, Cæſaria, Aſſur, Acres, Cayphas, and Tabaria were vanquiſhed and ſubdued. And therefore laying their heads together, they promiſed to the king by ſecret mediatours, a mighty maſſe of money of a coyne called Byzantines: and that further they would yeerely pay a great tribute, vpon condition that ceaſing to beſiege and inuade their city, he would ſpare their liues. Whereupon theſe buſineſſes were handled from day to day betweene the king and the citizens, and they ſollicited the king for the ranſomming both of their city and of their liues, proffering him from time to time more greater gifts. And the king for his part, being carefull and perplexed for the payment of the wages which he ought vnto his ſouldiers, harkened wholy vnto this offer of money. Howbeit becauſe he feared the Chriſtians, leaſt they ſhould lay it to his charge as a fault, he durſt not as yet meddle with the ſame.

Chap. 5.

IN the meane ſpace Hugh of Tabaria being ſent for, accompanied with the troopes of two hundred horſemen and foure hundred footmen, inuaded the countrey of the Groſſe Carle called Suet, very rich in gold and ſiluer moſt abundant in cattle frontering vpon the countrie of the Damaſcenes, where hee tooke a pray of ineſtimable riches and cattle, which might haue ſuffiſed him for the beſiege of Sagitta, whereof he ment to impart liberally to the king, and his companie. This pray being gathered out of ſundry places thereabout, and being led away as farre as the citie of Belinas, which they call Cæſaria Philippi, the Turkes which dwelt at Damaſcus, together with the Saracens inhabitants of the countrie perceiuing this, flocking on all partes together by troopes, purſued Hughes companie to reſcue the pray, and paſſed forth as farre as the mountaines, ouer which Hughes footemen did driue the pray. There beganne a great ſkirmiſh of both partes, the one ſide made reſiſtance to keepe the pray, the other indeuoured with all their might to recouer it, vntill at length the Turkes and Saracens preuailing, the pray was reſcued and brought backe againe: which Hugh and his troopes of horſemen, ſuddenly vnderſtanding, which were on the ſide of the mountaines, incontinently rid backe vpon the ſpurre, among the ſtraight and craggie rockes, ſkirmiſhing with the enemies, and ſuccouring their footemen, but as it chanced they fought vnfortunately. For Hugh, being vnarmed, and immediatly ruſhing into the middeſt of all dangers, and after his wonted manner inuading and wounding the infidels, being behinde with an arrowe ſhot through the backe which pierced thorough his liuer and breſt, he gaue vp the ghoſt in the handes of his owne people. Hereupon the troopes of the Gentiles being returned with the recouered pray, and being deuided through the ſecret and hard paſſages of the craggie hilles, the ſouldiers brought the dead bodie of Hugh, which they had put in a litter, into the citie of Nazareth, which is by the mount Thaber, where with great mourning and lamentation, ſo worthie a prince, and valiant champian was honourably and Catholikely interred. The brother of the ſaid Hugh named Gerrard, the ſame time lay ſicke of a grieuous diſeaſe. Which hearing of the death of his brother, his ſickneſſe of his body increaſing more vehemently through griefe, he alſo deceaſed within eight dayes after, and was buried by his brother, after Chriſtian maner.

Chap. 6.

AFter the lamentable burials of theſe ſo famous Princes, the King, taking occaſion of the death of theſe principall men of his armie, agreed, making none priuie thereto, to receiue the money which was offered him for his differring off the ſiege of the citie of Sagitta, yet diſſembling to make peace with the Saracens, but that he ment to go through with the worke, that he had begunne. Whereupon ſending a meſſage vnto Iaphet, hee aduiſed the Engliſh ſouldiers to come downe to Acres with their fleete, and to conferre and conſult with him touching the beſieging and aſſaulting of the citie of Sagitta, which riſing immediatly vpon the kings commandement, and forthwith hoyſing vp the ſayles of their ſhippes aloft with pendants and ſtremers of purple, and diuerſe other glorious colours, with their flagges of ſcarlet colour and ſilke, came thither, and caſting their ancres, rode hard by the citie. The king the next day calling vnto him ſuch as were priuie & acquainted with his dealings, opened his griefe vnto the chiefe Captaines of the Engliſh men and Danes, touching the ſlaughter of Hugh, and the death of his brother, and what great confidence he repoſed in them concerning theſe warres: and that nowe therefore they being departed and dead, he muſt of neceſſity differre the beſieging of Sagitta, & for this time diſmiſſe the armie aſſembled. This reſolution of the king being ſpred among the people, the armie was diſſolued, and the Engliſhmen, Danes and Flemings, with ſailes and oares going aboard their fleete, ſaluted the king, and returned home vnto their natiue countries.

Eodem anno Manuel Conſtantinopolitanus imperator, habito prælio campeſtri cum Soltano Iconij & illo deuicto, in hac forma ſcripſit Domino regi Angliæ.

Manuel in Chriſto deo Porphyrogenitus, diuinitùs coronatus, ſublimis, potens, excelſus, ſemper Auguſtus, & moderator Romanorum, Comnenus, Henrico nobiliſſimo regi Angliæ, chariſſimo amico ſuo, ſalutem & omne bonum. Cum imperium noſtrum neceſſarium reputet notificare tibi, vt dilecto amico ſuo, de omnibus quæ ſibi obueniunt; ideò & de his quæ nunc acciderunt ei, opportunum iudicauit declarare tuæ voluntati. Igitur a principio coronationis noſtræ imperium noſtrum aduerſus dei inimicos Perſas noſtrum odium in corde nutriuit, dum cerneret illos in Chriſtianos gloriari, eleuarique in nomen dei, & Chriſtianorum dominari regionibus. Quocirca & alio quidem tempore indifferentèr inuaſit eos, & prout deus ei conceſſit, ſic & fecit. Et quæ ab ipſo frequenter patrata ſunt ad contritionem ipſorum & perditionem, imperium noſtrum credit nobilitatem tuam non latere. Quoniam autem & nunc maximum exercitum contra eos ducere propoſuit, & bellum contra omnem Perſidem mouere, quia res cogebat. Et non vt voluit multum aliquem apparatum fecit, ſicut ei viſum eſt. Veruntamen prout tempus dabat & rerum ſtatus, potentèr eos inuaſit. Collegit ergo circa ſe imperium noſtrum potentias ſuas: ſed quia carpenta ducebat armorum, & machinarum, & aliorum inſtrumentorum conferentium ciuitatum expugnationibus, pondera portantia: idcircò nequaquam cum feſtinatione iter ſuum agere poterat. Ampliùs autem dum adhuc propriam regionem peragraret, antequam barbarorum aliquis aduerſus nos militaret in bellis aduerſarius, ægritudo difficillima fluxus ventris inuaſit nos, qui diffuſus per agmina imperij noſtri pertranſibat, depopulando & interimendo multos, omni pugnatore grauior. Et hoc malũ inualeſcens maximè nos contriuit. Ex quo verò fines Turcorum inuaſimus, bella quidem primum frequentia concrepabant, & agmina Turcorum cum exercitibus imperij noſtri vndique dimicabant. Sed Dei gratia ex toto à noſtris in fugam vertebantur barbari. Poſt verò vbi ei qui illic adjacet anguſtiæ loci, quæ à Perſis nominatur Cibrilcimam, propinquauimus, tot Perſarum turmæ peditum & equitum, quorum pleræque ab interioribus partibus Perſidis occurrerant in adiutorium contribulium ſuorum, exercitui noſtro ſuperuenerunt, quot penè noſtrorum excederent numerum. Exercitu itaque imperij noſtri propter viæ omnino anguſtiam & difficultatem, vſq; ad decem milliaria extenſo; & cum neque qui præibant poſſent poſtremos defendere, neque verſa vice rurſus poſtremi poſſent præeuntes iuuare, non mediocritèr ab inuicem hos diſtare accidit. Sanè primæ cohortes permultùm ab acie imperij noſtri diuidebantur, poſtremarum oblitæ, illas non præſtolantes. Quoniam igitur Turcorum agmina ex iam factis prælijs cognouerant, non conferre ſibi à fronte nobis repugnare, loci anguſtiam bonum ſubuentorem cum inueniſſent, poſteriora ſtatuerunt inuadere agmina, quod & fecerunt. Arctiſſimo igitur vbique loco exiſtente, inſtabant barbari vndique, à dextris & à ſiniſtris, & aliundè dimicantes, & tela ſuper nos quaſi imbres deſcendentia interimebant viros & equos complures. Ad hæc itaque imperium noſtrũ vbi malum ſuperabundabat, reputans ſecum oportunũ iudicabat retrò expectare, atque illos qui illic erant adiuuare, expectando vtiquè contra infinita illa Perſarum agmina bellum ſuſtinuit. Quanta quidem, dum ab his circundaretur, patrauerit, non opus eſt ad tempus ſermonibus pertexere, ab illis autem qui interfuerunt, forſitan diſcet de his tua nobilitas. Inter hæc autem exiſtente imperio noſtro, & omne belli grauamen in tantum ſuſtinente, poſtremæ cohortes vniuerſæ Græcorum & Latinorum, & reliquorum omnium generum conglobatæ, quæ iaciebantur ab inimicis tela non ſuſtinentes, impactione vtuntur, & ita violentèr ferebantur, dùm ad adiacentem ibi collem quaſi ad propugnaculum feſtinarent: ſed precedentes impellunt nolentes. Multo autem eleuato puluere, ac perturbante oculos, & neminem permittente videre quæ circa pedes erant, in præcipitium quod aderat profundiſſimæ vallis alius ſuper alium homines & equi ſic incontinentèr portati corruerunt, quòd alij alios conculcantes ab inuicem interemerunt non ex gregarijs tantum, ſed ex clariſſimis & intimis noſtris conſanguineis. Quis enim inhibere poterat tantæ multitudinis importabilem impulſum? At verò imperium noſtrum tot & tantis confertum barbaris ſaucians, ſauciatúmque, adeò vt non modicam in eos moueret perturbationem, obſtupentes perſeuerantiam ipſius, & non remittebatur, benè iuuante deo, campum obtinuit. Neque locum illum ſcandere aduerſarios permiſit, in quo dimicauit cum barbaris. Nec quidem equum ſuum illorum timore incitauit, celerius aliquando ponere veſtigia. Sed congregando omnia agmina ſua, & de morte eripiendo ea, collocauit circa ſe: & ſic primos attigit, & ordinatim proficiſcens ad exercitus ſuos acceſſit. Ex tunc igitur videns Soltanus, quòd poſt tanta quæ acciderant exercitibus noſtris, imperium noſtrum, ſicut oportunum erat, rem huiuſmodi diſpenſauit, vt ipſum rursùm inuaderet: mittens ſupplicauit imperio noſtro, & deprecatorijs vſus eſt ſermonibus, & requiſiuit pacem illius, promittens omnem imperij noſtri adimplere voluntatem, & ſeruitium ſuum contra omnem hominem dare, & omnes qui in regno ſuo tenebantur captiuos abſoluere, & eſſe ex toto voluntatis noſtræ. Ibidem ergo per duos dies integros, in omni poteſtate morati ſumus, & cognito quòd nihil poterat fieri contra ciuitatem Iconij, perditis teſtudinibus & machinis bellicis, eo quòd boues cecidiſſent a telis in modo pluuiæ iactis, qui eas trahebant: Simul autem eo quòd & vniuerſa animalia noſtra irruente in illa difficillima ægritudine laborabant, ſuſcepit Soltani deprecationem & fœdera & iuramenta peracta ſub vexillis noſtris, & pacem ſuam ei dedit. Inde ingreſſum imperium noſtrum in regionem ſuam regreditur, tribulationem habens non mediocrem ſuper his quos perdidit conſanguineis, maximas tamen Deo gratias agens, qui per ſuam bonitatem & nunc ipſum honorauit: Gratum autem habuimus, quòd quoſdam nobilitatis tuæ principes accidit intereſſe nobiſcum, qui narrabũt de omnibus quæ acciderant, tuæ voluntati ſeriem. Cæterùm autem, licèt contriſtati ſimus propter illos qui ceciderunt: oportunum tamen duximus, de omnibus quæ acciderant, declarare tibi, vt dilecto amico noſtro, & vt permultùm coniuncto imperio noſtro, per puerorum noſtrorum intimam conſanguinitatem. Vale. Data menſe Nouembris, indictione tertia.

The ſame in Engliſh.

IN the yeere 1177, Manuel the emperour of Conſtantinople hauing fought a field with the Soldan of Iconium, and vanquiſhed him, wrote vnto Henry the ſecond king of England in maner following.

Manuel Comnenus in Chriſt the euerliuing God a faithful emperour, deſcended of the linage of Porphyrie, crowned by Gods grace, high, puiſſant, mighty, alwayes moſt ſoueraigne, and gouernour of the Romans; vnto Henry the moſt famous king of England, his moſt deare friend, greeting and all good ſucceſſe. Whereas our imperiall highneſſe thinketh it expedient to aduertiſe you our welbeloued friend of all our affaires: We thought it not amiſſe to ſignifie vnto your royall Maieſtie certaine exploits at this preſent atchieued by vs. From the beginning therefore of our inauguration our imperiall highnes hath mainteined moſt deadly feod and hoſtility againſt Gods enemies the Perſians, ſeeing them ſo to triumph ouer Chriſtians, to exalt thēſelues againſt the name of God, and to vſurpe ouer Chriſtian kingdomes. For which cauſe our imperiall highneſſe hath in ſome ſort encountered them heretofore, and did as it pleaſed God to giue vs grace. And we ſuppoſe that your Maieſtie is not ignorant, what our imperiall highneſſe hath often performed for their ruine and ſubuerſion. For euen now, being vrged thereunto, we haue determined to leade a mighty army againſt them, and to wage warre againſt all Perſia. And albeit our forces be not ſo great as we could wiſh they were, yet haue we according to the time, and the preſent ſtate of things, ſtrongly inuaded them. Wherefore our Maieſtie imperiall hath gathered our armies together: but becauſe we had in our army ſundry carts laden with armour, engines, & other inſtruments for the aſſault of cities, to an exceeding weight we could not make any great ſpeed in our iourney. Moreouer, while our imperiall highneſſe was yet marching in our owne dominions, before any barbarous enemy had fought againſt vs: our people were viſited with the moſt grieuous diſeaſe of the fluxe, which being diſperſed in our troups deſtroyed and ſlew great numbers, more then the ſword of the enemy would haue done. Which miſchiefe ſo preuailing, did woonderfully abate our forces. But after we had inuaded the Turkiſh frontiers, we had at the firſt very often and hot ſkirmiſhes, and the Turks came ſwarming to fight againſt our imperiall troups. Howbeit by Gods aſſiſtance thoſe miſcreants were altogether ſcattered and put to flight by our ſouldiers. But as we approched vnto that ſtraight paſſage which is called by the Perſians Cibrilcimam, ſo many bands of Perſian footemen and horſemen (moſt whereof came from the innermoſt parts of Perſia, to ſuccour their Allies) encountred our army, as were almoſt ſuperiour vnto vs in number. Wherefore the army of our Imperiall highneſſe, by reaſon of the ſtraightneſſe and difficultie of the way, being ſtretched ten miles in length; and the firſt not being able to helpe the laſt, nor yet contrarywiſe the laſt to reſcue the firſt, it came to paſſe that they were very farre diſtant aſunder. And in very deed the foremoſt troupes were much ſeparated from the guard of our imperiall perſon, who forgetting their fellowes behind, would not ſtay any whit for them. Becauſe therefore the Turkiſh bands knew full well by their former conflicts that it was bootleſſe for them to aſſaile the forefront of our battell, and perceiuing the narrowneſſe of the place to be a great aduantage, they determined to ſet vpon our rereward, and did ſo. Wherefore our paſſage being very ſtraight, and the infidels aſſayling vs vpon the right hand and vpon the left, and on all ſides, and diſcharging their weapons as thicke as haileſtones againſt vs, ſlew diuers of our men and horſes. Hereupon, the ſlaughter of our people ſtill encreaſing our maieſtie imperiall deemed it requiſite to ſtay behind, and to ſuccour our bands in the rereward, and ſo expecting them we ſuſtained the fierce encounter of many thouſand Perſians. What exploits our Imperiall perſon atchieued in the ſame ſkirmiſh, I hold it needleſſe at this time to recount: your maieſtie may perhaps vnderſtand more of this matter by them which were there preſent. Howbeit our Imperiall highneſſe being in the middeſt of this conflict, and enduring the fight with ſo great danger, all our hindermoſt troups, both Greekes, Latines, and other nations, retiring themſelues cloſe together, and not being able to ſuffer the violence of their enemies weapons, preſſed on ſo hard, and were caried with ſuch maine force, that haſtening to aſcend the next hill for their better ſafegard, they vrged on them which went before, whether they would or no. Whereupon, much duſt being raiſed, which ſtopped our eyes and vtterly depriued vs of ſight, and our mē and horſes preſſing ſo ſore one vpon the necke of another, plunged themſelues on the ſudden into ſuch a ſteepe and dangerous valley, that treading one vpon another, they quelled to death not onely a multitude of the common ſouldiours, but diuers moſt honourable perſonages, & ſome of our neere kinſmen. For who could reſtraine the irreſiſtable throng of ſo huge a multitude? Howbeit our Imperiall highneſſe being enuironed with ſuch ſwarmes of Infidels, and giuing and receiuing wounds (inſomuch that the miſcreants were greatly diſmaied at our conſtancie) we gaue not ouer, but by Gods aſſiſtance wonne the field. Neither did we permit the enemie to aſcend vnto that place, from whence we ſkirmiſhed with him. Neither yet ſpurred wee on our horſe any faſter for all their aſſaults. But marſhalling all our troupes together, and deliuering them out of danger, we diſpoſed them about our Imperial perſon; and ſo we ouertooke the foremoſt, and marched in good order with our whole army. Nowe the Soldan perceiuing that notwithſtanding the great damages which we had ſuſtained, our Imperial highnes prouided to giue him a freſh encounter, humbly ſubmitting himſelfe vnto vs, and vſing ſubmiſſe ſpeaches, made ſuite to haue peace at our hands, and promiſed to fulfill the pleaſure of our maieſtie Imperiall, to doe vs ſeruice againſt all commers, to releaſe all our ſubiects which were captiues in his realme, and to reſt wholy at our command. Here therefore we remained two dayes with great authoritie; and conſidering that wee could attempt nought againſt the citie of Iconium, hauing loſt all our warrelike engines both for defence and for batterie, for that the oxen which drew them were ſlaine with the enemies weapons, falling as thicke as haileſtones: and alſo for becauſe all our beaſts in a maner were moſt grieuouſly diſeaſed; our maieſtie Imperial accepted of the Soldans petition, league, and oath being made and taken vnder our enſignes, and granted our peace vnto him. Then returned we into our owne dominions, being greatly grieued for the loſſe of our deere kinſmen, and yeelding vnto God moſt humble thanks, who of his goodneſſe had euen now giuen vs the victory. We are right glad likewiſe that ſome of your maieſties princes and nobles accompanied vs in this action, who are able to report vnto you all things which haue happened. And albeit we were exceedingly grieued for the loſſe of our people; yet thought it we expedient to ſignifie vnto you the ſucceſſe of our affaires, as vnto our welbeloued friend, & one who is very neerly allied vnto our highneſſe Imperial, by reaſon of the conſanguinitie of our children. Farewell. Giuen in the moneth of Nouember, and vpon the tenth Indiction.

The citie of Iconium intended to haue bene beſieged.

Certaine noble men of the king of England were with the Emperor in his battell againſt the Soldan of Iconium.

¶ The woorthy voiage of Richard the firſt, K. of England into Aſia, for the recouerie of Ieruſalem out of the hands of the Saracens, drawen out of the booke of Acts and Monuments of the Church of England, written by M. Iohn Foxe.

King Richard the firſt of that name, for his great valure ſurnamed Ceur de Lion, the ſonne of Henry the ſecond, after the death of his father remembring the rebellions that he had vndutifully raiſed againſt him, ſought for abſolution of his treſpaſſe, and in part of ſatiſfaction for the ſame, agreed with Philip the French king to take his voiage with him for the recouerie of Chriſtes patrimonie, which they called the Holy land: whereupon the ſayd king Richard immediately after his Coronation, to prepare himſelfe the better towards his iourney, vſed diuers meanes to take vp ſummes of money, and exacted a tenth of the whole Realme, the Chriſtians to make threeſcore and ten thouſand pounds, and the Iewes which then dwelt in the Realme threeſcore thouſand.

Hauing thus gotten ſufficient money for the exploite, he ſent certaine Earles and Barons to Philip the French king in the time of his Parliament at S. Denis, to put him in mind of his promiſe made for the recouerie of Chriſts holy patrimonie out of the Saracens hands: To whom he ſent word againe in the moneth of December, that he had bound himſelfe by ſolemne othe, depoſing vpon the Euangeliſts, that he the yeere next following, about the time of Eaſter, had certainly prefixed to addreſſe himſelfe toward that iourney, requiring him likewiſe not to faile, but to bee ready at the terme aboue limited, appointing alſo the place where both the Kings ſhould meete together.

In the yeere therfore 1190. King Richard hauing committed the gouernment of this realme in his abſence to the biſhop of Ely then Chancellor of England, aduanced forward his iourney, and came to Turon to meet with Philip the French king, & after that went to Vizeliac, where the French king & he ioyning together, for the more continuance of their iourney, aſſured themſelues by ſolemne othe, ſwearing fidelitie one to the other: the forme of whoſe oth was this.

¶ The oth of fidelitie betwixt King Richard, and the French king.

That either of them ſhould defend and maintaine the honour of the other, and beare true fidelitie vnto him, of life, members & worldly honor, and that neither of them ſhould faile one the other in their affaires: but the French King ſhould aide the King of England in defending his land and dominions, as he would himſelfe defend his owne Citie of Paris if it were beſieged: and that Richard king of England likewiſe ſhould aide the French king in defending his land and Dominions, no otherwiſe then he would defend his owne Citie of Roan if it were beſieged, &c.

Concerning the lawes and ordinances appointed by K. Richard for his Nauie, the forme thereof was this.

The diſcipline and orders of the king.

1. That who ſo killed any perſon on ſhipboord, ſhould be tied with him that was ſlaine, and throwen into the ſea.

2. And if he killed him on the land, he ſhould in like maner be tied with the partie ſlaine, and be buried with him in the earth.

3. He that ſhalbe conuicted by lawfull witnes to draw out his knife or weapon to the intent to ſtrike any man, or that hath ſtriken any to the drawing of blood, ſhall looſe his hand.

4. Alſo he that ſtriketh any perſon with his hand without effuſion of blood, ſhall be plunged three times in the ſea.

5. Item, who ſo ſpeaketh any opprobrious or contumelious wordes in reuiling or curſing one another, for ſo oftentimes as he hath reuiled, ſhall pay ſo many ounces of ſiluer.

6. Item, a thiefe or felon that hath ſtollen being lawfully conuicted, ſhal haue his head ſhorne, and boyling pitch powred vpon his head, and feathers or downe ſtrawed vpon the ſame, whereby he may be knowen, and ſo at the firſt landing place they ſhall come to, there to be caſt vp.

Theſe things thus ordered, king Richard ſending his Nauie by the Spaniſh ſeas, and by the ſtreights of Gibraltar, betweene Spaine and Africa, to meete him at Marſilia, hee himſelfe went as is ſaid to Vizeliac to the French king. Which two kings from thence went to Lions, where the bridge ouer the flood Rhodanus with preaſſe of people brake, and many both men and women were drowned: by occaſion whereof the two kings for the combrance of their traines, were conſtrained to diſſeuer themſelues for time of their iourney, appointing both to meet together in Sicily: and ſo Philip the French king tooke his way to Genua, and king Richard to Marſilia, where he remained 8. dayes, appointing there his Nauie to meete him. From thence croſſing ouer to Genua where the French king was, he paſſed forward by the coaſts of Italy, and entred into Tiber not farre from Rome.

King Richard ſtaying in Marſilia 8. dayes for his Nauie which came not, he there hired 20. Gallies, and ten great barkes to ſhip ouer his men, and ſo came to Naples, and ſo partly by horſe and wagon, and partly by the ſea, paſſing to Falernum, came to Calabria, where after that he had heard that his ſhips were arriued at Meſſana in Sicilie, he made the more ſpeed, and ſo the 23. of September entred Meſſana with ſuch a noyſe of Trumpets and Shalmes, with ſuch a rout and ſhew, that it was to the great wonderment and terror both of the Frenchmen, and of all other that did heare and behold the ſight.

To the ſaid towne of Meſſana the French king was come before the 16. of the ſame moneth of September, and had taken vp the pallace of Tancredus king of Sicily for his lodging: to whom king Richard after his arriuall eftſoones reſorted, and when the two kings had communed together, immediately the French king tooke ſhipping and entred the ſeas, thinking to ſaile towards the land of Ieruſalem: but after he was out of the hauen, the winde riſing contrary againſt him, returned him backe againe to Meſſana. Then king Richard (whoſe lodging was prepared in the ſuburbs without the Citie) after he had reſorted againe and talked with the French king, and alſo had ſent to Tancredus king of Sicily, for deliuerance of Ioane his ſiſter (who had bin ſomtimes Queene of Sicily) and had obtained her to be ſent vnto him, the laſt day of September paſſed ouer the ſtreight del Fare, and there getting a ſtrong hold called de la Baguare, or le Bamare, and there placing his ſiſter with a ſufficient garriſon, he returned againe to Meſſana.

The 2. of October king Richard wan another ſtrong hold, called Monaſterium Griffonum, ſituated in ẏ midſt of the ſtreight del Fare, betweene Meſſana & Calabria, from whence ẏ Monks being expulſed, he repoſed there all his ſtore and prouiſion of victuals, which came from England or other places.

The Citizens of Meſſana ſeeing that the king of England had wonne the caſtle and Iſland de la Baguare, and alſo the Monaſterie of the Griffons, and doubting leaſt the king would extend his power further to inuade their Citie, & get if he could the whole Iſle of Sicilie, began to ſtirre againſt the Kings armie, and to ſhut the Engliſhmen out of the gates, and kept their walles againſt them. The Engliſhmen ſeeing that, made to the gates, and by force would haue broken them open, inſomuch that the King riding amongſt them with his ſtaffe, and breaking diuers of their heads, could not aſſwage their fierceneſſe, such was the rage of the Engliſhmen agaynſt the citizens of Meſſana. The King ſeeing the furie of his people to be ſuch that hee could not ſtay them, tooke boate, and went to the pallace of king Tancred, to talke of the matter with the French king, in which meane time the matter was ſo taken vp by the wiſe handling of the ancients of the citie, that both parts laying downe their armour, went home in peace.

The fourth day of the ſayd moneth of October, came to king Richard the Archbiſhop of Meſſana with two other Archbiſhops alſo with the French king, and ſundry other Earles, Barons, and Biſhops, to intreat of peace, who as they were together conſulting, and had almoſt concluded vpon the peace, the Citizens of Meſſana iſſuing out of the towne, ſome went vp vpon the mountains, ſome with open force inuaded the manſion or lodging of Hugh Brune an Engliſh captaine. The noyſe whereof comming to the eares of the King, hee ſuddenly breaking off talke with the French king and the reſt, departed from them, and comming to his men, commanded them forthwith to arme themſelues. Who then with certaine of his ſouldiours making vp to the top of the mountaine (which ſeemed to paſſe their power to climbe) there put the Citizens to flight, chaſing them downe the mountaines, vnto the very gates of the citie, whom alſo certaine of the kings ſeruants purſued into the citie, of whom fiue valiant ſouldiers & twentie of the kings ſeruants were ſlaine, the French King looking vpon, and not once willing to reſcue them, contrary to his othe, and league before made with the king of England: for the French king with his men being there preſent, rode in the midſt of them ſafely, and without any harme too and fro, and might well haue eaſed the Kings partie, more then he, if it had ſo liked him.

This being knowen to the Engliſh hoſte how their fellowes were ſlaine, and the Frenchmen permitted in the citie, and that they were excluded and the gates barred againſt them, being alſo ſtopped from buying of victuall, & other things, they vpon great indignation gathered themſelues in armes, braſt open the gates, and ſcaled the wals, and ſo winning the citie, ſet vp their flags with the Engliſh armes vpon the wals: which when the French King did ſee, he was mightily offended, requiring the King of England that the Armes of France might alſo be ſet vp, & ioyned with his: but King Richard to that would in no caſe agree, notwithſtanding to ſatiſfie his minde, he was contented to take downe his Armes, and to commit the cuſtodie of the citie to the Hoſpitalaries and Templaries of Ieruſalem, till the time that Tancred king of Sicily and he ſhould agree together vpon conditions.

Meſſana won by the Engliſh

These things being done the fift and ſixt day of October, it followed then vpon the eight day of the ſame, that peace was concluded among the kings. In which peace, firſt king Richard, & Philip the French king renewed againe their oth and league before made, concerning their mutual aide and ſocietie, during the time of that peregrination.

Secondly, peace alſo was concluded betweene king Richard and Tancred king of Sicily aforeſaide, with conditions, that the daughter of Tancrede in caſe king Richard ſhould die without iſſue, ſhould be married to Arthur Duke of Britaine the kings Nephew and next heire to his crowne, whereof a formall charte was drawen, and letters ſent thereof to Pope Clement being dated the ninth of Nouember.

From this time vntill Februarie the next yeere, theſe two kings kept ſtill at Meſſana, either for lacke of winde and weather, or for the repairing of their ſhippes. And in the aforeſayde Februarie, in the yeere 1191. King Richard ſent ouer his gallies to Naples, there to meete his mother Elinore, and Berengaria the daughter of Zanctius king of Nauarre, whom he was purpoſed to marry, who by that time were come to Brunduſium, vnder the conduct of Philip Earle of Flanders, and ſo proceeding vnto Naples, they found the kings ſhippes wherein they ſayled to Meſſana.

In this meane ſpace, king Richard ſhewed himſelfe exceeding bounteous and liberall to all men: to the French king firſt he gaue diuers ſhippes, vpon others likewiſe he beſtowed riche rewardes, and of his treaſure and goods he deſtributed largely to his ſouldiers and ſeruants about him, of whom it was reported, that he diſtributed more in one moneth, then any of his predeceſſors did in a whole yeere: by reaſon whereof he purchaſed great loue and fauour, which not onely redounded to the aduancement of his fame, but alſo to his ſingular vſe and profite, as the ſequele afterward prooued.

The firſt day of March following, he left the citie of Meſſana, where the French King was, and went to Cathneia, a citie where Tancredus king of Sicily then lay, where he was honorably receiued, and there remained with king Tancredus three dayes and three nights. On the fourth day when he ſhould depart, the aforeſaid Tancredus offred him many rich preſents in gold and ſiluer, and precious ſilkes, whereof king Richard would receiue nothing, but one little ring for a token of his good will: for the which king Richard gaue againe vnto him a riche ſworde. At length when king Richard ſhould take his leaue, king Tancred would not let him ſo depart, but needes would giue him 4. great ſhippes, and 15. gallies, and furthermore hee himſelfe would needes accompanie him the ſpace of two dayes iourney, to a place called Tauernium.

Then the next morning when they ſhould take their leaue, Tancredus declared vnto him the meſſage, which the French King a little before had ſent vnto him by the Duke of Burgundie, the contents whereof were theſe: That the King of England was a falſe Traytour, & would neuer keepe the peace that was betweene them: and if the ſayd Tancredus would warre againſt him, or ſecretly by night would inuade him, he with all his power would aſſiſt him, to the deſtruction o[illegible]m and all his armie. To whom Richard the King proteſted againe, that he was no traytour, nor neuer had bene: and as touching the peace begun betwixt them, the ſame ſhould neuer be broken through him: neither could he beleeue that the French King being his good lord, and his ſworne Compartner in that voyage, would vtter any ſuch wordes by him. Which when Tancredus heard, he bringeth foorth the letters of the French King, ſent to him by the Duke of Burgundie, affirming moreouer, that if the Duke of Burgundie would denie the bringing of the ſaid letters, he was readie to trie it with him by any of his Dukes. King Richard receiuing the letters, and muſing not a little vpon the ſame, returneth againe to Meſſana. The ſame day that King Richard departed, the French king came to Tauernium to ſpeake with Tancred, and there abode with him that night, and on the morowe returned to Meſſana againe.

From that time King Richard mooued in ſtomacke againſt King Philip, neuer ſhewed any gentle countenance of peace & amitie, as he before was woont: whereat the French king greatly marueiling, and enquiring earneſtly what ſhould be the cauſe thereof, word was ſent him againe by Philip earle of Flanders from king Richard, what wordes he had ſent to the king of Sicily, and for teſtimony thereof the letters were ſhewed, which he wrote by the duke of Burgundie to the king of Sicily: which when the French king vnderſtood, firſt he held his peace as guilty in his conſcience, not knowing well what to anſwere. At length turning his tale to another matter, he began to quarrell with king Richard, pretending as though he ſought cauſes to breake with him, and to maligne him: and therfore he forged (ſayd he) theſe lies vpon him, and all becauſe he by that meanes would auoid to marry with Aliſe his ſiſter, according as he had promiſed. Adding moreouer that if he would ſo do, and would not marry the ſaid Aliſe his ſiſter according to his oth, he would be an enemy to him, and to his, while he liued.

To this king Richard ſayd againe, that he could by no meanes marry that woman, forſomuch as his father had carnall copulation with her, and alſo had by her a ſonne: for proofe whereof he had there preſently to bring forth diuers & ſundry witneſſes to the kings face, to teſtifie with him.

In concluſion, through counſell and perſwaſion of diuers about the French king, agreement at laſt was made, so that king Philip did acquite king Richard from this bond of marrying his ſiſter, and king Richard againe ſhould be bound to pay to him euery yeere for the ſpace of fiue yeeres, two thouſand markes, with certaine other conditions beſides, not greatly materiall for this place. And thus peace being betweene them concluded the 28 day of the ſayd moneth of March, the French king lanching out of the hauen of Meſſiana, the 22 day after in the Eaſter weeke, came with his armie to the ſiege of Achon.

The Nauie of king Richard.

After the departure of the French king from Meſſana, king Richard with his armie yet remaining behinde, arriued Queene Alinor the kings mother, bringing with her Berengaria the king of Nauars daughter, to be eſpouſed to king Richard: which being done, king Richard in April following, about the 20 day of the ſayd moneth, departed from the hauen of Meſſana with 150 great ſhips, and 53 great gallies well manned and appointed, and tooke his iourney toward Achon: who being vpon the Seas on Good friday about the ninth houre, roſe a mighty South winde with a tempeſt, which diſſeuered and ſcattered all his Nauie, ſome to one place, and ſome to another. The king with a few ſhips was driuen to the Ile of Creta, and there before the hauen of Rhodes caſt anker. The ſhips that caried the kings ſiſter, queene of Sicily, and Berengaria the king of Nauars daughter, with two ſhips were driuen to the Ile of Cyprus.

The king making great mone for the ſhips of his ſiſter, and Berengaria his wife that ſhould be, not knowing where they were become, after the tempeſt was ouerblowen, ſent forth his gallies diligently to ſeeke the reſt of his Nauie diſperſed, but eſpecially the ſhippe wherein his ſiſter was, and the maiden whom he ſhould marry, who at length were found ſafe and merry at the port of Lymſzem in the Ile of Cyprus, notwithſtanding the two other ſhips, which were in their company before in the ſame hauen, were drowned with diuers of the kings ſeruants and men of worſhip, among whom was M. Roger, called Malus Catulus, the kings Vicechancellour, who was found with the kings ſeale hanging about his necke.

The king of Cyprus was then Iſakius (called alſo the Emperour of the Gryffons) who tooke and impriſoned all Engliſh men, which by ſhipwracke were caſt vpon his land, alſo inuegled into his hands the goods and priſes of them which were found drowned about his coaſtes, neither would ſuffer the ſhips wherein the two ladies were to enter within the port.

The tidings of this being brought to king Richard, he in great wrath gathering his gallies and ſhips together, boordeth the land of Cyprus, where he firſt in gentle wiſe ſignifieth to king Iſakius, how he with his Engliſh men, comming as ſtrangers to the ſupportation of the holy land, were by diſtreſſe of weather driuen vpon his bounds, and therefore with all humble petition beſought him in Gods behalfe, and for reuerence of the holy croſſe, to let go ſuch priſoners of his as he had in captiuitie, and to reſtore againe the goods of them that were drowned, which he [illegible]eined in his hands, to be employed for the behoofe of their ſoules. And this the king once, twiſe, and thriſe deſired of the Emperour: but he proudly anſwering againe, ſent the king word, that he neither would let the captiues go, nor render the goods of them which were drowned.

When king Richard heard this, how light the Emperour Iſakius made of his ſo humble and honeſt petition, & how that nothing could be gotten without violent force, eftſoones giueth commandement thorowout all his hoſte to put themſelues in armour and follow him, to reuenge the iniuries receiued of that proud and cruell king of Cyprus, willing them to put their truſt in God, and not to miſdoubt but that the Lord would ſtand with them, and giue them the victory. The Emperour in the meane time with his people ſtood warding the Sea coaſts, where the Engliſh men ſhould arriue, with ſwords, billes, and lances, and ſuch other weapons as they had, ſetting boordes, ſtooles, and cheſtes before them as a wall: few of them were harneſſed, and for the moſt part all vnexpert and vnſkilfull in the feates of warre.

Then king Richard with his ſouldiers iſſuing out of their ſhips, firſt ſet his bowemen before, who with their ſhot made a way for others to followe. The Engliſhmen thus winning the land vpon them, ſo fiercely preſſed vpon the Gryffons, that after long fighting and many blowes, at laſt the Emperour was put to flight, whom king Richard valiantly purſued, and ſlue many, and diuers he tooke aliue, and had gone neere alſo to take the Emperour, had not the night come on and parted the battell. And thus king Richard with much ſpoyle, and great victory, returning to the port Towne of Lymſzem, which the Towneſmen had left for feare, found there great abundance of corne, wine, oyle and victuals.

The day after the victory gotten, Ioanna the Kings ſiſter, and Berengaria the mayden, entred the Porte and Towne of Lymſzem, with 50. great ſhips, and 14. galliots: ſo that all the whole Nauie there meeting together, were 254. tall ſhippes, and aboue threeſcore galliots. Then Iſakius the Emperour, ſeeing no way for him to eſcape by Sea, the ſame night pitched his tentes fiue miles off from the Engliſh army, ſwearing that the third day after, he would ſurely giue battell to king Richard: but he preuenting him before, ſuddenly the ſame morning before the day of battell ſhould be, ſetteth vpon the tentes of the Gryffons early in the morning, they being vnwares and a ſleepe, and made of them a great ſlaughter, inſomuch that the Emperour was faine to runne away naked, leauing his tents and pauilions to the Engliſhmen, full of horſes and rich treaſure, alſo with the Imperial ſtanderd, the lower part whereof with a coſtly ſtreamer was couered, and wrought all with golde.

King Richard returning with victorie and triumph to his ſiſter and Berengaria, ſhortly after in the moneth of May next following, and the 12. day of the ſaid moneth, married the ſaid Berengaria daughter of Zanctius, king of Nauarre, in the yle of Cyprus at Lymſzem.

The king of Cyprus ſeeing himſelfe ouermatched, was driuen at length to yeelde himſelfe with conditions to giue king Richard 20000. markes in golde for amends of ſuch ſpoyles as he had gotten of them that were drowned, alſo to reſtore all the captiues againe to the king: and furthermore, he in his owne perſon to attend vpon the king to the lande of Ieruſalem, in Gods ſeruice and his, with 400. horſemen, and 500. footemen: in pledge whereof he would giue to his hands his caſtles, and his onely daughter, and would hold his kingdome of him.

This done, and the Emperour ſwearing fidelitie to king Richard before Guido king of Ieruſalem, and the prince of Antioche (who were come thither to king Richard a little before) peace was taken, and Iſakius committed to the warde of certaine keepers. Notwithſtanding ſhortly after he breaking from his keepers, was againe at defiance with the King: whereupon king Richard beſetting the Iland of Cyprus round about with ſhippes and gallies, did in ſuch ſort preuaile, that the ſubiects of the land were conſtrained to yeelde themſelues to the King, and at laſt the daughter of the Emperour, and the Emperour himſelfe, whom king Richard cauſed to be kept in fetters of gold and ſiluer, and to be ſent to the citie of Tripolis.

These things thus done, and all ſet in order touching the poſſeſſion of the Ile of Cyprus, the keeping whereof he committed to Radulphe ſonne of Godfrey Lord Chamberlaine, being then the firſt day of Iune vpon the fift of the ſaide moneth, king Richard departed from the Ile of Cyprus, with his ſhippes and gallies toward the ſiege of Achon, and on the next morrowe came to Tyrus, where by procurement of the French king he was reſtrained by the Citizens to enter. The next day after, which was the firſt day of Iune, croſſing the ſeas, he met with a great carak fraught with ſouldiers and men of warre to the number of a thouſand and fiue hundred, which pretending to be Frenchmen, and ſetting foorth their flagge with the French armes, were indeede Saracens, ſecretly ſent with wilde fire and certaine barrels of vnknowen ſerpents to the defence of the towne of Achon, which king Richard at length perceiuing, eftſoones ſet vpon them and ſo vanquiſhed them, of whom the moſt were drowned and ſome taken aliue: which being once knowen in the citie of Achon, as it was a great diſcomfort to them, ſo it was a great helpe to the Chriſtians for winning the citie.

The next day after which was the ſeuenth of Iune, king Richard came to Achon, which at that time had bene long beſieged by the Chriſtians. After whoſe comming it was not long, but the Pagans within the citie, ſeeing their wals to be vndermined and towers ouerthrowen, were driuen by compoſition to eſcape with life and limme, to ſurrender the citie to the two kings.

King Richard arriued at Achon.

Another great helpe to the Chriſtians in winning the citie, was this. In the ſaid city of Achon there was a ſecret Chriſtian among the Saracens, who in time of the ſiege thereof vſed at ſundry times to caſt ouer the wals into the campe of the Chriſtians, certaine bils written in Hebrue, Greeke, and Latine, wherein he diſcloſed to the Chriſtians from time to time, the doings and counſels of the enemies, aduertiſing them how and what way they ſhould worke, and what to beware, and alwayes his letters began thus. In nomine Patris, & Filij, & Spiritus ſancti Amen. By reaſon whereof the Chriſtians were much aduantaged in their proceedings: but this was a great heauines vnto them, that neither he would vtter his name, nor when the citie was got did they euer vnderſtand who he was.

To make of a long ſiege a ſhort narration. Vpon the twelfth day of Iuly the yeere aforeſaid, the Princes and Captaines of the Pagans, vpon agreement reſorted to the tent of the Templaries to commune with the two kings touching peace, and giuing vp of their citie: the forme of which peace was thus.

1 That the Kings ſhould haue the citie of Achon freely and fully deliuered vnto them, with all which was therein.

2 That 500. captiues of the Chriſtians ſhould be reſtored to them, which were in Achon.

3 That the holy croſſe ſhould be to them rendred, and a thouſand Chriſtian captiues with two hundreth horſemen, whoſoeuer they themſelues would choſe out of all them which were in the power of the Saladine.

4 That they would giue vnto the Kings two hundreth thouſand Byſants, ſo that they themſelues ſhould remaine as pledges in the Kings hands, for the performance hereof, that if in fortie daies, the aforeſayd couenants were not accompliſhed, they ſhould abide the Kings mercie touching life and limme.

The forme of peace concluded betweene the Kings and the Princes of Achon.

Theſe couenants being agreed vpon, the Kings ſent their ſouldiers and ſeruants into the citie, to take a hundreth of the richeſt & beſt of the city, to cloſe them vp in towers vnder ſtrong keeping, & the reſidue they committed to be kept in houſes and in ſtreetes, miniſtring vnto them according to their neceſſities: to whom notwithſtanding this they permitted, that ſo many of them as would be baptized and receiue the faith of Chriſt, ſhould be free to goe whither they would: wherupon many there were of the Pagans, which for feare of death pretended to be baptized, but afterward ſo ſoone as they could, reuolted againe to the Saladine: for the which it was afterward commaunded by the Kings, that none of them ſhould be baptized againſt their wils.

The thirteenth day of the ſaid moneth of July, King Philip of France, and king Richard, after they had obteined the poſſeſſion of Achon, deuided betweene them all things therein conteined as well the people as golde and ſiluer, with all other furniture whatſoeuer was remaining in the citie: who in deuiding the ſpoyle, were ſo good caruers to themſelues that the Knights and Barons had but litle to their ſhare, whereupon they began to ſhew themſelues ſomewhat diſcontented, which being knowen of the kings, they ſent them anſwere that their wils ſhould be ſatiſfied.

The twentieth day of July, king Richard ſpeaking with the French King, deſired him that they two with their armies, would binde themſelues by othe to remaine there ſtil in the land of Ieruſalem the ſpace of 3. yeeres, for the winning and recouering againe of thoſe countreys: but he ſayd he would ſweare no ſuch othe, and ſo the next day after king Richard with his wife and ſiſter entred into the citie of Achon, and there placed himſelfe in the kings pallace: The French king remayning in the houſes of the Templaries, where he continued till the end of that moneth.

About the beginning of the moneth of Auguſt, Philip the French king after that he and King Richard had made agreement betweene Guido & Conradus the Marques, about the kingdome of Ieruſalem, went from Achon to Tyrus, notwithſtanding king Richard & all the Princes of the Chriſtian armie with great intreatie deſired him to tary, ſhewing what a ſhame it were for him to come ſo farre, and now to leaue vndone that for which he came, and on the 3. day of Auguſt departed from Tyrus, leauing the halfe part of the Citie of Achon, in the hands of the aforeſayd Conradus Marques.

The French kings ſhamefull returne home.

After his departure the Pagans refuſed to keepe their couenants made, who neither would reſtore the holy Croſſe nor the money, nor their captiues, ſending word to king Richard, that if he beheaded the pledges left with him at Achon, they would choppe off the heads of ſuch captiues of the Chriſtians, as were in their hands.

Shortly after this the Saladine ſending great gifts to king Richard, requeſted the time limited for beheading of the captiues to be proroged, but the king refuſed to take his gifts, and to graunt his requeſt, whereupon the Saladine cauſed all the Chriſtian captiues within his poſſeſſion forthwith to be beheaded, which was the 28. of Auguſt: which albeit king Richard vnderſtood, yet would not he preuent the time before limited for the execution of his priſoners, being the 20. day of Auguſt: vpon which day he cauſed the priſoners of the Saracens openly in the ſight of the Saladines armie to looſe their heads: the number of whom came to two thouſand and fiue hundreth, ſaue onely that certaine of the principal of them he reſerued for purpoſes and conſiderations, ſpecially to make exchange for the holy Croſſe, and certaine other of the Chriſtian captiues.

The captiues of the Saracens ſlaine by King Richard,

After this king Richard purpoſed to beſiege the Citie of Ioppe, where by the way betwene Achon and Ioppe, neere to a towne called Aſſur, Saladine with a great multitude of his Saracens came fiercely againſt the kings rereward, but through Gods mercifull grace in the ſame battell, the kings warriers acquited themſelues ſo well, that the Saladine was put to flight, whom the Chriſtians purſued the ſpace of 3. miles, & he loſt that ſame day many of his Nobles & Captaines, in ſuch ſort (as it was thought) that the Saladine was not put to ſuch confuſion 40. yeres before, and but one Chriſtian Captaine called Iames Auernus in that conflict was ouerthrowen.

A notable victorie againſt the Saladine.

From thence king Richard proceeding further went to Ioppe, and then to Aſcalon, where he found firſt the citie of Ioppe forſaken of the Saracens, who durſt not abide the kings comming: Aſcalon the Saladine threw downe to the ground, & likewiſe forſooke the whole land of Syria, through all which land the king had free paſſage without reſiſtance: neither durſt the Saracens Prince encounter after that with K. Richard. Of all which his atchieuances the ſayd K. Richard ſent his letters of certificate as well into England, as alſo to the Abbot of Clara valle in France, well hoping ẏ he God willing ſhould be able to make his repaire againe to them by Eaſter next.

King Richard in poſſeſſion of Syria,

Many other famous acts were done in this voyage by theſe two Kings, and moe ſhould haue bene, had not they falling into diſcorde diſſeuered themſelues, by reaſon whereof Philip the French king returned home againe within ſhort ſpace: who being returned againe eftſoones inuaded the countrey of Normandy, exciting alſo Iohn the brother of king Richard, to take on him the kingdome of Englande in his brothers abſence: who then made league vpon the ſame with the French king, and did homage vnto him, which was about the fourth yeere of king Richard. Who then being in Syria, and hearing thereof, made peace with the Turkes for three yeeres: and not long after, king Richard the next ſpring following returned alſo, who in his returne driuen by diſtreſſe of weather about the parts of Hiſtria, in a towne called Synaca, was there taken by Lympold, Duke of the ſame countrey, and ſo ſolde to the Emperour for ſixtie thouſand Markes: who for no ſmall ioy thereof, writeth to Philip the French king, theſe letters here following.

The letter of the Emperour to Philip the French king, concerning the taking of King Richard.

Henricus Dei gratia Romanorum Imperator, & ſemper Auguſtus, Dilecto & ſpeciali amico ſuo, Philippo illuſtri Francorum Regi ſalutem, & ſinceræ dilectionis affectum. Quoniam Imperatoria Celſitudo non dubitat Regalem Magnificentiam tuam lætiorem effici, de vniuerſis quibus omnipotentia creatoris noſtri nos ipſos, & Romanum Imperium honorauerit & exaltauerit, nobilitati tuæ tenore præſentium declarare duximus, quod inimicus Imperij noſtri, & turbator Regni tui Rex Angliæ, quum eſſet in tranſeundo mare ad partes ſuas reuerſurus, accidit vt ventus rupta naui ſua, in qua ipſe erat, induceret eum in partes Hiſtriæ ad locum qui eſt inter Aquileiam, & Venetias. Vbi Rex, Dei permiſſione paſſus naufragium cum paucis euaſit.

Quidam itaq; fidelis noſter Comes, Maynardus de Groexce, & populus regionis illius, audito quod in terra erat, & conſiderato diligentiùs, qualem nominatus Rex in terra promiſſionis proditionem & traditionem, & perditionis ſuæ cumulum exercuerat, inſecuti ſunt, intendentes eum captiuare. Ipſo autem Rege in fugam conuerſo, ceperunt de ſuis octo milites: Poſtmodum proceſſit Rex ad Burgum in Archiepiſcopatu Salſeburgenſi, qui vocatur Friſorum, vbi Fridericus de Beteſow, Rege cum tribus tantum verſus Auſtriam properante, noctu ſex milites de ſuis cepit: Dilectus autem Conſanguineus noſter Lympoldus Dux Auſtriæ, obſeruata ſtrata ſæpè, dictum Regem iuxta Denam in villa viciniori in domo deſpecta captiuauit.

Cum itaq; in noſtra nunc habeatur Poteſtate, & ipſe ſemper tuæ moleſtauit, & turbationis operam præſtiterit, ea quæ præmiſimus, nobilitati tuæ inſinuare curauimus: ſcientes ea dilectioni tuæ beneplacita exiſtere, animo tuo vberrimam importare lætitiam. Datum apud Ritheometum 5. Kalendas Ianua.

King Richard being thus traiterouſly taken, and ſolde to the Emperour by the Duke of Auſtridge for 60000. markes, was there kept in cuſtodie a yeere and 3. moneths.

In ſome ſtories it is affirmed, that King Richard returning out of Aſia, came to Italy with proſperous winde, where he deſired of the Pope to be abſolued of an othe made againſt his will and could not obteine it: and ſo ſetting out from thence towards England, paſſing by the Countrey of Conradus the Marques, whoſe death (he being ſlaine a litle before) was falſly imputed by the French king to the king of England, there traiterouſly was taken (as is aforeſayde) by Limpoldus duke of Auſtridge.

Albeit in another ſtorie I finde the matter more credibly ſet forth: which ſaith thus. That king Richard ſlewe the brother of this Limpoldus, playing with him at Cheſſe in the French Kings Court: and Limpoldus taking his vantage, was more cruel againſt him and deliuered him (as is ſayde) to the Emperour. In whoſe cuſtodie he was deteined during the time aboue mentioned, a yeere & 3. moneths. During which time of the kings endurance, the French king in the meane ſeaſon ſtirred warre in Normandie: and Earle Iohn the Kings brother, made ſtirre and inuaded England, but the Barons and Biſhops of the land mightily withſtood him.

At length it was ſo agreed and concluded with the Emperour, that king Richard ſhould be releaſed for a hundreth and foure thouſand pound: of which money part ſhould remaine to the Duke of Auſtridge, the reſt ſhould be the Emperours. The ſumme of which money was here gathered and made in England of chalices, croſſes, ſhrines, candleſtickes and other Church plate, alſo with publike contribution of Friers, Abbots, and other ſubiects of the Realme: whereof part was preſently paid, and for the reſidue remaining, hoſtages and pledges were taken, which was about the ſixt yeere of his reigne: and then it was obteined of the Pope, that Prieſts might celebrate with Chalices of latten and tinne.

At what time this aforeſaide money was payde, and the hoſtages giuen for the ranſome of the King, I haue an olde hiſtorie which ſaith, that the aforeſaid Duke of Auſtridge was ſhortly after plagued by God, with 5. ſundry plagues.

The iuſt iudgement of God vpon the Duke of Auſtria.

First, with the burning of his chiefe Townes.

2 With drowning of tenne thouſand of his men in a flood happening no man can tell how.

3 By turning all the eares of his corne fieldes into wormes.

4. By taking away almoſt all the Nobles of his land by death.

5. By breaking his owne leg falling from his horſe, which leg he was compelled to cut off with his owne hands, and afterwards died of the ſame: who then at his death is reported to forgiue K. Richard 50000. marks, and ſent home the hoſtages that were with him. And further a certaine booke intituled Eulogium declareth, that the ſayd Limpoldus duke of Auſtrich fell in diſpleaſure with the biſhop of Rome, and died excommunicate the next yeere after, Anno 1196.

But thus, as you haue heard, Richard the King was ranſomed & deliuered from the couetous captiuitie of the Emperor, and returning home made an ende of his voyage for Aſia, which was both honourable to himſelfe and to all Chriſtian ſtates, but to the Saracens the enemies of Chriſtianitie, terrible and diſhonourable.

This hiſtorie of King Richards voiage to Ieruſalem is very excellently and largely written in Latine by Guilielmus Neobrigenſis, and Roger Houeden.

The life and trauailes of Baldwinus Deuonius, ſometime Archbiſhop of Canterbury.

Baldwinus Deuonius, tenui loco Exceſtriæ natus, vir ore facundus, exactus Philoſophus, & ad omne ſtudiorum genus per illos dies aptiſſimus inueniebatur. Scholarum rector primùm erat, tum poſtea Archidiaconus, eruditione ac ſapientia in omni negotio celebris: fuit prætereà Ciſtercienſis Monachus, & Abbas Fordenſis Cœnobij, magnus ſuorum æſtimatione, ac vniuerſæ eorum ſocietati quaſi Anteſignanus: fuit deinde Wigornienſis præſul, fuit & mortuo demùm Richardo Cantuariorum Archiepiſcopus, ac totius Angliæ Primas. Baldwine a Deuonſhire man borne in Exceter of meane parentage, was a very eloquent man, an exact Philoſopher, and in thoſe dayes very excellent in all kind of ſtudies. He was firſt of all a Schoolemaſter; afterwards he became an Archdeacon, very famous for his learning & wiſdom in all his doings. He was alſo a Ciſtercian Monke and Abbot of Foord Monaſterie, and the chiefe of all thoſe that were of his order: he grew after this to be biſhop of Worceſter, and at laſt after the death of Archb. Richard he was promoted & made Archbiſhop of Canterbury, and Primate of all England. In the diſcharge of which place he being very vigilant, ſhewed himſelfe a worthy Paſtor, ſowing the ſeed of Gods word in euery place as farre forth as the iniquitie of that time permitted. In his time king Richard with all indeuour prepared a Fleet and all things neceſſary for waging of warre againſt the Infidels at Ieruſalem, taking with him the ſtanderd and enſignes of the kingdome. This Baldwine eftſoones followed the king into Syria and Paleſtina, as one deſirous to be partaker of his trauailes, paines, and perils in ſo holy a voyage. Hee was Archbiſhop of Canterburie almoſt ſixe yeres: but hauing followed the king into Syria, in the yeere 1190. he died at Tyre, where he was alſo buried.

❡ An annotation concerning the trauailes of the ſayd Baldwine, taken out of Giraldus Cambrenſis, in his Itinerarium Cambriæ, lib. 2. Cap. 14. Fol. 229.

Inter primos Thomæ Becketi ſucceſſor hic ſecundus, audita Saluatoris & ſalutiferæ Crucis iniuria noſtris (proh dolor) diebus per Saladinum irrogata, crucesignatus, in eiuſdem obſequijs, tam remotis finibus quàm propinquis, prædicationis officium viriliter aſſumpſit. Et poſtmodum iter accipiens, nauigióque fungens apud Maſſiliam, tranſcurſo tandem pelagi profundo, in portu Tyrenſi incolumis applicuit: & inde ad exercitum noſtrum obſidentem pariter & obſeſſum Aconem tranſiuit: vbi multos ex noſtris inueniens, & ferè cunctos principum defectu, in ſumma deſolatione iam poſitos, & deſperatione, alios quidem longa expectatione fatigatos, alios fame & inopia grauiter afflictos, quoſdam verò aëris inclementia diſtemperatos, diem fœliciter in terra ſacra clauſurus extremum, ſingulos pro poſſe vinculo charitatis amplectens, ſumptibus & impenſis, verbis, & vitæ meritis confirmauit.

This Baldwine being the ſecond ſucceſſor vnto Thomas Becket, after he had heard ẏ wrong which was done to our Sauiour, and the ſlight of the Croſſe by Saladine the Sultan of Egypt, taking vpon him the Lords Character, he couragiouſly performed his office of preaching in the obedience thereof, as well in farre diſtant Countreis as at home. And afterwards taking his iourney and imbarking himſelfe at Marſeils, hauing at length paſſed ẏ Leuant ſea, he arriued ſafely in the Hauen of Tyrus, and from thence went ouer to Achon vnto our armie, beſieging the Towne, and yet (as it were) beſieged it ſelfe: where finding many of our Countreymen, and almoſt all men remaining in wonderfull penſiueneſſe and deſpaire, through the withdrawing of the Princes, ſome of them tyred with long expectation, others grieuouſly afflicted with hunger and pouertie, and others diſtempered with the heate of the weather, being ready happily to ende his dayes in the Holy land, embracing euery one according to his abilitie in the bond of loue, he ayded them at his coſtes and charges, and ſtrengthened them with his wordes and good examples of life.

❡ A note drawen out of a very ancient booke remaining in the hands of the right worſhipfull M. Thomas Tilney Eſquire, touching Sir Frederike Tilney his anceſtor, knighted at Acon in the Holy land for his valour, by K. Richard the firſt, as foloweth.

This booke pertained in times paſt vnto Sir Frederick Tilney of Boſton in the Countie of Lincolne, who was knighted at Acon in the land of Iurie, in the third yeere of the reigne of king Richard the firſt. This knight was of a tall ſtature, and ſtrong of body, who reſteth interred with his forefathers at Tirrington, neere vnto a towne in Marſhland called by his owne name Tilney. The iuſt height of this knight is there kept in ſafe cuſtody vntill this very day. Alſo, after this mans deceaſe, the inheritance of his landes fell ſucceſſiuely vnto ſixteene ſundry knights called all by the name of Tilney, who dwelt alwayes, one after another, at the towne of Boſton aforeſayd, vntill ſuch time as the poſſeſſions of the elder brother fell vnto an heire generall, which was maried vnto Iohn duke of Northfolke. The laſt knight of that name was ſir Philip Tilney late of Shelleigh in the Countie of Suffolke, predeceſſor and father vnto Thomas Tilney of Hadleigh in the Countie aforeſayd Eſquire, vnto whom the ſayd booke of late appertained, In the yeere of his age 64, and in the yeere of our Lord, 1556.

Richardus Canonicus ad Trinitatis fanum Londini Regularis, ab ipſa pueritia, bonarum artium literas impenſè amauit, excoluit, ac didicit. Qui ex continuo labore atque exercitatione longa, talis tandem euaſit orator, & Poeta, qualem ea ætas rariſſimos nutriebat. Ob id Richardo Anglorum tunc Regi charus, longam cum eo peregrinationem in Palæſtinam ac Syriam, dum expugnaret Turcas, ſuſcepit. Vnde in Angliam tum demum reuerſus, omnia quæ præſens vidit in vrbibus, agris, ac militum caſtris, fideli narratione, tam carmine quàm proſa deſcripſit. Neque interim omiſit eiuſdem Regis mores, & formam, per omnia corporis lineamenta deſignare, addiditque præclaro ſuo operi hoc aptiſſimum pro titulo nomen, ſcilicet, Itinerarium Regis Richardi. Claruit anno redemptionis noſtræ 1200, ſub Ioanne Anglorum Rege.

The ſame in Engliſh.

Richard ſurnamed Canonicus an obſeruant Frier of Trinitie Church in London, was in great loue with the ſtudies of good Artes, and tooke paines in them and learned them. And at laſt by his continuall endeuour and long exerciſe therein, hee grewe to bee ſuch an Oratour and Poet, as fewe were in that age liuing: by reaſon whereof hee grewe in fauour with Richard then King of England, and undertooke that long voyage with him into Paleſtina and Syria againſt the Turkes. From whence being returned againe into England, hee faithfully deſcribed both in Verſe and Proſe all ſuch things as hee had ſeene in the Cities, fieldes and tents of the ſouldiours, where hee was preſent, and omitted not to note the behauiour, forme, and proportion of body in the foreſayd king, giuing to his notable worke this moſt apt name for the title, The Iournall of King Richard. He flouriſhed in the yeere of our Redemption 1200, under Iohn King of England.

¶ The trauailes of Gulielmus Peregrinus.

Gvlielmus Peregrinus, Poeta quidem per eam ætatem excellens, genere Anglus florebat, literarum, vt multi tunc erant, amator maximus, & qui bona tempora melioribus impenderat ſtudijs. Hic cum accepiſſet, expeditionem in Saracenos per Regem Richardum parari, accinxit ſe ad iter illud, non tantum vt miles, ſed etiam peregrinus. Vidit ea quæ in Mari Hiſpanico fiebant, vidit quæ in Syria & Palæſtina commiſſa fuerunt, in Sultanum Babyloniæ Regem, ac perfidos Saracenos. Omnia hæc ſcripſit, & viuis depinxit coloribus, ita vt quaſi præ oculis, totum poneret negotium, idémque Argumentum cum Richardo Canonico non infœliciter, Heroico pertractauit carmine, opúſq; iam abſolutum Huberto Cantuariorum Archiepiſcopo, & Stephano Turnhamo Capitaneo rerum bellicarum expertiſſimo dedicauit, addito hoc titulo, Odeporicon Richardi Regis. Multáque alia edidiſſe Poetam talem non dubito, ſed num extent illa eius ſcripta, mihi non conſtat. Hoc tamen ſatis conſtat, eum fuiſſe in pretio, Anno à ſalutifero virginis partu 1200. ſub Anglorum Rege Ioanne.

William the Pilgrime, a very excellent Poet in thoſe dayes and an Engliſhman borne, was of great fame, being much giuen to good letters, (as many then were) and beſtowed his good time in the beſt kinde of ſtudies. Hee underſtanding of the preparation of king Richard againſt the Saracens, prepared himſelfe alſo for the ſame voyage, not onely as a Souldiour, but as a Pilgrime alſo. He ſawe thoſe things which happened in the Spaniſh Seas, and which were done in Syria and Paleſtina, againſt the Sultan the king of Babylon, and the trecherous Saracens. All which things he wrote and expreſſed them as it were in liuely colours, as if they had bene ſtill in doing before his eyes, and handled the ſame Argument in Heroicall verſe which the forenamed Richard Canonicus did. And hauing finiſhed his worke he dedicated it to Hubert Archbiſhop of Canterburie, and to Stephen Turneham a moſt expert Captaine of the warres, giuing it this Title, The expedition of King Richard. And I doubt not but that ſo good a Poet as hee was publiſhed many other things, but whether they be extant yea or no, I know not: but this I know, that he was a man well accounted of, and flouriſhed in the yeere after the birth of Chriſt 1200, under king Iohn.

AT the ſame time alſo the kings of France and England gaue large money towards the maintenance of the army which at this preſent went foorth vnder the leading of the earle of Flanders and other, to warre againſt the enemies of the Chriſtian faith at the inſtance of pope Innocent. There was furthermore granted vnto them the fortieth part of all the reuenues belonging vnto eccleſiaſticall perſons, towards the ayd of the Chriſtians then being in the Holy land: and all ſuch aſwel of the nobility, as other of the weaker ſort, which had taken vpon them the croſſe, and ſecretly layed it downe, were compelled eftſoones to receiue it now againe.

Cum ex Palæſtina rediens, audiret in Sicilia, quod idem Richardus in inimicorum manus incidiſſet, omiſſo itinere incœpto, ad eum curſim diuertebat: Quem & ille ſtatim in Angliam miſit, vt illic regij Senatus authoritate, indicto pro eius redemptione tributo pecuniam colligeret, quod & induſtrius fecit ac regem liberauit. HVbert Walter biſhop of Sariſburie, a vertuous man, and famous for his good wit and piety, was one of the chiefeſt of them that followed king Richard into Syria going againſt the Saracens. As he returned from Palæſtina and came in his iourney into Sicilia, he there heard of the ill fortune of the king being fallen into his enemies handes, and thereupon leauing his iourney homewards, he went preſently and in all haſte to the place where the king was captiued, whom the king immediatly vpon his comming ſent into England, that by the authority of the councell, a tribute might be collected for his redemption: which this Hubert performed with great diligence, and deliuered the king. After this he was made Archbiſhop of Canterburie, and after the death of king Richard he ſhewed the like duties of fidelitie and truſt to his brother Iohn that ſucceeded him. For by a long oration he perſwaded the whole nation of the Engliſh men, that he was a very circumſpect man, vertuous, valiant, borne of noble parentage, and moſt worthy of the crowne. Whereupon he was ſo receiued of all the people and crowned king. He wrote certaine books, and died at the laſt with very great griefe of minde, in the yeere 1205, hauing beene archbiſhop the ſpace of 11 yeres 8 moneths and ſixe dayes, by reaſon of the ciuil diſcords abroad, whereby all things went topſie turuy, and in the reigne of king Iohn.

Robert Curſon deſcended of a noble family of England, vſed great diligence aſwell in prophane as in diuine ſtudies in the famous Vniuerſity of Oxford (as I coniecture.) He had there the beſt ſcholemaſters that were to be gotten, and was moſt induſtrious in the arts and continual exerciſes of learning: by meanes whereof he grew to be of great renowme where he liued. Afterward thinking of greater matters he went to Paris, and thence to Rome it ſelfe, and at Paris he proceeded doctor of Diuinity, at Rome he was made cardinall: whereupon both Matthew Paris & Matthew of Weſtminſter produce this teſtimony of him, the one in his ſecond booke, the other in his eight booke of Chronicles. Ranulph Glanuile earle of Cheſter, a man of a very noble houſe, and learned in both the Lawes, deſerues of merite to be here placed by me in the catalogue of worthy and notable men. He applied ſo well all the yeeres of his youth to the ſtudy of humane and diuine Lawes, that he came not ſo ſoone to the age of a man, as he had purchaſed to himſelfe by reaſon of his ſingular learning, renowme and honour. When the noble men of France went to Ptolomais, vpon the counſell of Iohn Brenne king of Ieruſalem, they reſolued to beſiege Damiata a city of Egypt, in the yeere 1218. And then Henry the king vpon the motion of Honorius the third, biſhop of Rome, ſent thither this earle Ranulph with a great power of armed ſouldiers, to further the enterpriſe of the Chriſtians: whoſe valure in that warre (by the teſtimonie of Polidor Virgil) was marueilouſly commended of all men. After the end of which buſineſſe, he being returned into his countrey, wrote a booke of the lawes of England. It is alſo reported that he wrote other books, but time the deſtroyer of many memorials, hath taken them from vs. He flouriſhed in the yeere after the natiuity of Chriſt 1230, being very aged, and in the reigne of K. Henry the third.

The honourable and proſperous voyage of Richard earle of Cornewall, brother to king Henry the third, accompanied with William Longeſpee earle of Sariſburie, and many other noble men into Syria.

IN the 24 yeere of king Henry the third, Richard earle of Cornwall the kings brother, with a nauy of ſhips ſailed into Syria, where in the warres againſt the Saracens he greatly aduanced the part of the Chriſtians. There went ouer with him the earle of Sarisburie, William Longſpee, and William Baſſet, Iohn Beauchampe, Geoffrey de Lucie, Iohn Neuel, Geoffrey Beauchampe, Peter de Brenſe, and William Furniuall. 1240.

Simon Montfort earle of Leiceſter went ouer alſo the ſame time: but whereas the earle of Cornwall tooke the ſea at Marſeils, the earle of Leiceſter paſſed thorow Italy, and tooke ſhipping at Brindize in Apulia: and with him went theſe perſons of name, Thomas de Furniual with his brother Gerard de Furniuall, Hugh Wake, Almerike de S. Aumond, Wiſcard Leder, Punchard de Dewin, and William de Dewin that were brethren, Gerard Peſmes, Fouke de Baugie, and Peter de Chauntenay.

Shortly after alſo Iohn earle of Albemarle, William Fortis, and Peter de Mallow a Poictouin, men for their valiancy greatly renowmed, went thither, leading with them a great number of Chriſtian ſouldiers. Matth. Paris. Matth. Weſt. Holenſh. pag. 225. col. 2.

‖ Or, Long-ſword.

LEwis the French king being recouered of his ſickeneſſe which he fell into, in the yere 1234, vowed thereupon for a free will ſacrifice to God, that he (if the Councell of his realme would ſuffer him) would in his owne perſon viſit the Holy land: which matter was opened and debated in the Parliament of France held in the yeere 1247. Where at length it was concluded, that the king according to his vow ſhould take his iourney into Aſia, and the time thereof was alſo prefired, which ſhould be after the feaſt of S. Iohn Baptiſt the next yeere enſuing.

At which time William Longeſpee a worthie warrior, with the biſhop of Worceſter and certaine other great men in the Realme of England (mooued with the example of the Frenchmen) prepared themſelues likewiſe to the ſame iourney.

It fell out in this enterpriſe, that about the beginning of October, the French king aſſaulted and tooke Damiata, being the principall fort or hold of the Saracens in all Egypt, Anno 1249. and hauing fortified the Citie with an able garriſon left with the Duke of Burgundie, he remooued his tents from thence to goe Eaſtward. In whoſe armie followed William Longeſpee, accompanied with a piked number of Engliſh warriors retaining vnto him. But ſuch was the diſdaine of the Frenchmen againſt this William Longeſpee and the Engliſhmen that they could not abide them, but flouted them after an opprobrious maner with Engliſh tailes, inſomuch that the French king himſelfe had much adoe to keepe peace betweene them.

The originall cauſe of this grudge betweene them began thus. There was not farre from Alexandria in Egypt a ſtrong fort or caſtle repleniſhed with great Ladies and rich treaſure of the Saracens: which hold it chanced the ſayd William Longeſpee with his company of Engliſh ſoldiers to get, more by politique dexteritie then by open force of armes, wherwith he & his retinue were greatly enriched. When the Frenchmen had knowledge hereof (they not being made priuie hereto) began to conceiue an heart burning againſt the Engliſh ſouldiers, & could not ſpeake well of them after that.

A fort won by the Engliſhmen.

It hapned againe not long after, that the ſayd William had intelligence of a company of rich merchants among the Saracens going to a certaine Faire about the parts of Alexandria, hauing their camels, aſſes and mules, richly loden with ſilkes, precious iewels, ſpices, gold, & ſiluer, with cart loades of other wares, beſide victuall and other furniture, whereof the ſouldiers then ſtood in great need: he hauing ſecret knowledge hereof, gathered all the power of Engliſhmen vnto him that he could, and ſo by night falling vpon the merchants, ſome he ſlew with their guides and conducters, ſome hee tooke, ſome hee put to flight: the carts with the driuers, and with the oxen, camels, aſſes and mules, with the whole cariage and victuals he tooke & brought with him, loſing in all the ſkirmiſh but one ſouldier, and eight of his ſeruitors: of whom notwithſtanding ſome he brought home wounded to be cured.

A rich bootie alſo gotten by the Engliſhmen.

This being knowen in the Campe, foorth came the Frenchmen which all this while loytered in their pauillions, and meeting this cariage by the way, tooke all the foreſayd praie whole to themſelues, rating the ſaid William and the Engliſhmen for aduenturing and iſſuing out of the Campe without leaue or knowledge of their Generall, contrary to the diſcipline of warre. William ſaid againe he had done nothing but he would anſwere to it, whoſe purpoſe was to haue the ſpoyle deuided to the behoofe of the whole armie.

The iniurie of the Frenchmen to our Engliſh.

When this would not ſerue, hee being ſore grieued in his minde ſo cowardly to be ſpoyled of that which he ſo aduenturouſly had trauailed for, went to the King to complaine: But when no reaſon nor complaint would ſerue by reaſon of the proude Earle of Artoys the Kings brother, which vpon ſpight and diſdaine ſtood agaynſt him, he bidding the King farewell ſayd hee would ſerue him no longer: and ſo William de Longeſpee with the reſt of his company breaking from the French hoſte went to Achon. Vpon whoſe departure the earle of Artoys ſayd, Now is the army of French men well rid of theſe tailed people, which words ſpoken in great deſpight were ill taken of many good men that heard them.

Will. Longſpee iuſtly forſaketh ẏ French king.

But not long after, when the keeper of Cayro & Babylonia, bearing a good mind to the Chriſtian religion, and being offended alſo with the Souldan, promiſed to deliuer the ſame to the French king, inſtructing him what courſe was beſt for him to take to accompliſh it, the king hereupon in all haſte ſent for William Longeſpee, promiſing him a full redreſſe of all his iniuries before receiued: who at the kings requeſt came to him againe, and ſo ioyned with the French power.

After this, it happened that the French king paſſing with his armie towardes Cayro aforeſayd, came to the great riuer Nilus, on the further part whereof the Soldan had pitched himſelfe to withſtand his comming ouer: there was at this time a Saracen lately conuerted to Chriſt, ſeruing the earle Robert the French kings brother, who told him of the abſence of the Soldan from his tents, and of a ſhallow foord in the riuer where they might eaſily paſſe ouer. Whereupon the ſayd earle Robert & the Maſter of the Temple with a great power, eſteemed to the third part of the army iſſued ouer the riuer, after whom followed W. Longſpee with his band of Engliſh ſouldiers. Theſe being ioyned together on the other ſide of the water, encountered the ſame day with the Saracens remaining in the tents & put them to the worſt. Which victory being gotten, the French earle ſurpriſed with pride and triumph, as though hee had conquered the whole earth, would needs forward, diuiding himſelfe from the maine hoſte, thinking to winne the ſpurres alone. To whom certaine ſage men of the Temple, giuing him contrary counſell, aduiſed him not to do ſo, but rather to returne and take their whole company with them, and ſo ſhould they be more ſure againſt all deceits and dangers, which might be layed priuily for them. The maner of that people (they ſayd) they better knew, and had more experience thereof then he: alledging moreouer their wearied bodies, their tired horſes, their famiſhed ſouldiers, and the inſufficiency alſo of their number, which was not able to withſtand the multitude of the enemies, eſpecially at this preſent brunt, in which the aduerſaries did well ſee the whole ſtate of their dominion now to conſiſt either in winning all or loſing all.

Which when the proud earle did heare, being inflated with no leſſe arrogancy then ignorance, with opprobrious taunts reuiled them, calling them cowardly daſtards, & betrayers of the whole countrey, obiecting vnto them the common report of many, which ſayd, that the land of the holy croſſe might ſoone be woon to Chriſtendome, were it not for rebellious Templaries, with the Hoſpitalaries, and their followers.

To theſe contumelious rebukes, when the maſter of the Temple anſwered againe for him and his fellowes, bidding him diſplay his enſigne when he would, and where he durſt, they were as ready to follow him, as he to goe before them. Then began William de Longeſpe the worthy knight to ſpeake, deſiring the earle to giue eare to thoſe men of experience, who had better knowledge of thoſe countreyes and people then had he, commending alſo their counſell to be diſcreet and wholeſome, and ſo turning to the maſter of the Temple, began with gentle wordes to mittigate him likewiſe. The knight had not halfe ended his talke, when the Earle taking his wordes out of his mouth, began to fume and ſweare, crying out of thoſe cowardly Engliſhmen with tailes: What a pure armie (ſayde he) ſhould we haue here, if theſe tailes and tailed people were purged from it, with other like words of villany, and much diſdaine: whereunto the Engliſh knight anſwering againe, well, Earle Robert (ſaid he) whereſoeuer you dare ſet your foote, my ſtep ſhall go as farre as yours, and (as I beleeue) we goe this day where you ſhall not dare to come neere the taile of my horſe, as in deede in the euent it prooued true: for Earle Robert would needes ſet forward, weening to get all the glory to himſelfe before the comming of the hoſte, and firſt inuaded a litle village or caſtle, which was not farre off, called Manſor. The countrey Boores and Pagans in the villages, ſeeing the Chriſtians comming, ranne out with ſuch a maine cry and ſhout, that it came to the Soldans hearing, who was neerer then our men did thinke. In the meane time, the Chriſtians inuading and entring into the munition incircumſpectly, were pelted and paſhed with ſtones by them which ſtood aboue, whereby a great number of our men were loſt, and the armie ſore maymed, and almoſt in deſpaire.

The worthy anſwere of William Longſpe to Earle Robert.

Then immediatly vpon the ſame, commeth the Soldan with all his maine power, which ſeeing the Chriſtian armie to be deuided, and the brother ſeparated from the brother, had that which he long wiſhed for, and ſo incloſing them round about, that none ſhould eſcape, had with them a cruell fight.

Then the earle began to repent him of his heady raſhnes, but it was too late, who then ſeeing William the Engliſh knight doughtily fighting in the chiefe brunt of the enemies, cried vnto him moſt cowardly to flie, ſeeing God (ſaith he) doth fight againſt vs: To whom the Knight anſwering againe, God forbid (ſayth he) that my fathers ſonne ſhould runne away from the face of a Saracene. The Earle then turning his horſe, fled away, thinking to auoid by the ſwiftnes of his horſe, and ſo taking the riuer Thafnis, oppreſſed with harneſſe, was there ſunken and drowned.

The cowardly flight of Earle Robert.

Thus the Earle being gone, the Frenchmen began to diſpaire and ſcatter. Then William de Longeſpe bearing all the force of the enemies, ſtoode againſt them as long as he could, wounding and ſlaying many a Saracen, till at length his horſe being killed, and his legges maymed, he could no longer ſtande, who yet notwithſtanding as he was downe, mangled their feete and legges, and did the Saracens much ſorrow, till at laſt after many blowes and wounds, being ſtoned of the Saracens, he yeelded his life. And after the death of him, the Saracens ſetting vpon the reſidue of the armie, whom they had compaſſed on euery ſide, deuoured and deſtroyed them all, inſomuch that ſcarce one man remained aliue, ſauing two Templaries, one Hoſpitaler, and one poore raſcall ſouldier, which brought tidings hereof to the King.

The valiant ende of William Longeſpe.

And thus by the imprudent and fooliſh hardines of that French Earle, the Frenchmen were diſcomfited, and that valiant Engliſh Knight ouermatched, to the griefe of all Chriſtian people, the glory of the Saracens, and the vtter deſtruction and ruine of the whole French armie, as afterwards it appeared.

The

¶ The Voyage of Prince Edward the ſonne of king Henry the third into Aſia, in the yeere 1270.

About the yeere of our Lord, 1267. Octobonus the Popes Legate being in England, prince Edward the ſonne of king Henry, and diuers other Noble men of England tooke vpon them the croſſe vpon S. Iohn Baptiſts day, by the ſayd Legates hands at Northhampton, to the reliefe of the Holy land, and the ſubuerſion of the enemies of the croſſe of Chriſt. For which purpoſe, and for the better furniſhing of the prince towards the iourney, there was granted him a ſubſidie throughout all the realme, and in the moneth of May, in the yeere of our Lord 1270. he began to ſet forward.

At Michaelmas following he with his company came to Eguemortes, which is from Marſilia eight leagues Weſtward, and there taking ſhip againe (hauing a mery and proſperous wind) within ten dayes arriued at Tunez, where he was with great ioy welcommed, and entertained of the Chriſtian princes that there were to this purpoſe aſſembled, as of Philip the French King, whoſe father Lodouicus died a litle before, of Carolus the king of Sicilia, and the two kings of Nauarre and Arragon, and as this lord Edward came thither for his father the king of England, thither came alſo Henry the ſonne of the king of Almaine for his father, who at his returne from the voyage was ſlaine in a chappell at Viterbium.

When prince Edward demaunded of theſe kings and princes what was to be done, they anſwered him againe, and ſayd, the prince of this citie and the prouince adioyning to the ſame hath bene accuſtomed to pay tribute vnto the king of Sicily euery yere: and now for that the ſame hath bene for the ſpace of ſeuen yeeres vnpaied and more, therefore we thought good to make inuaſion vpon him. But the king knowing the ſame tribute to be but iuſtly demaunded, hath now according to our owne deſire ſatiſfied for the time paſt, and alſo paied his tribute before hand.

Then ſayd he, My Lords, what is this to the purpoſe? are we not here all aſſembled, & haue taken vpon vs the Lords Character to fight againſt the infidels & enemies of Chriſt? What meane you then to conclude a peace with them? God forbid we ſhould do ſo, for now the land is plaine and hard, ſo that we may approch to ye holy city Ieruſalẽ. Then ſaid they, now haue we made a league with them, neither is it lawful for vs to breake the ſame. But let vs returne againe to Sicilia, and when the winter is paſt we may well take ſhipping to Acra. But this counſel nothing at all liked him, neither did he ſhew himſelfe wel pleaſed therewith: but after hee had made them a princely banket, he went into his cloſet or priuy chamber from amongſt them, neither would be partaker of any of that wicked money which they had taken. They notwithſtanding continuing their purpoſe, at the next mery wind tooke ſhipping, and for want of ſhips left 200. of their men a ſhore, crying out, and pitiouſly lamenting for the peril and hazard of death that they were in: wherewith prince Edward being ſomewhat mooued to compaſſion, came backe againe to the land, and receiued and ſtowed them in his owne ſhips, being the laſt that went aboord.

Within ſeuen dayes after, they arriued in the kingdom of Sicilia, ouer agaynſt the Citie Trapes, caſting their ankers a league from thence within the ſea, for that their ſhippes were of great burden, and throughly fraught: and from the hauen of the citie they ſent out barges and boates to receiue and bring ſuch of the Nobilitie to land as would, but their horſes for the moſt part, and all their armour they kept ſtill within boord.

At length towards the euening the ſea began to be rough, & increaſed to a great tempeſt and a mightie: inſomuch that their ſhips were beaten one againſt anothers ſides, and drowned there was of them at that tempeſt lying at anker more then 120. with all their armour and munition, with innumerable ſoules beſides, and that wicked money alſo which they had taken before, likewiſe periſhed, and was loſt.

But the tempeſt hurt not ſo much as one ſhip of prince Edwards, who had in number 13. nor yet had one man loſt thereby, for that (as it may be preſuppoſed) he conſented not to the wicked counſell of the reſt.

When in the morning the princes and kings came to the ſea ſide, and ſaw all their ſhips drowned, and ſaw their men and horſes in great number caſt vpon the land drowned, they had full heauie hearts, as well they might, for of all their ſhips and mariners, which were in number 1500. beſides the common ſouldiers, there was no more ſaued then the mariners of one onely ſhip, and they in this wiſe.

There was in that ſhip a good & wiſe Matrone, a Counteſſe or an Erles wife, who perceiuing the tempeſt to grow, & fearing her ſelfe, called to her the M. of the ſhip, & aſked him whether in attempting to the ſhoare it were not poſſible to ſaue thẽſelues: he anſwered, that to ſaue the ſhip it was impoſſible: howbeit the men that were therein by Gods helpe he doubted not. Then ſayd the counteſſe, for the ſhip force no whit, ſaue the ſoules therein, and haue to thee double the value of the ſhippe: who immediatly hoiſing the ſailes with all force, ran the ſhippe aground ſo nere the ſhore as was poſſible, ſo that with the vehemency of the weather ẏ force he came withall, he braſt the ſhip and ſaued all that was within the ſame, as he had ſhewed, and ſayd before.

Then the kings and princes (altering their purpoſe after this ſo great a ſhipwracke) returned home againe euery one vnto their owne lands: onely Edward the ſonne of the king of England, remained behinde with his men and ſhips, which the Lord had ſaued and preſerued.

Then prince Edward renouating his purpoſe, tooke ſhipping againe, and within fifteene daies after Eaſter arriued he at Acra, and went aland, taking with him a thouſand of the beſt ſouldiers and moſt expert, and taried there a whole moneth, refreſhing both his men and horſes, and that in this ſpace he might learne and know the ſecrets of the land. After this he tooke with him ſixe or ſeuen thouſand ſouldiers, and marched forward twenty miles from Acra, and tooke Nazareth, and thoſe that he found there he ſlew, and afterward returned againe to Acra. But their enemies following after them, thinking to haue ſet vpon them at ſome ſtreit or other aduantage, were eſpied by the prince, and returning againe vpon them gaue a charge, and ſlew many of them, and the reſt they put to flight.

The arriuall of prince Edward at Acra.

Nazareth taken by the prince.

After this, about Midſummer, when the prince had vnderſtanding that the Saracens began to gather at Cakow which was forty miles from Acra, he marching thither, ſet vpon them very earely in the morning, and ſlew of them more then a thouſand, the reſt he put to flight, and tooke rich ſpoiles, marching forward till they came to a caſtle named Caſtrum peregrinorum, ſituate vpon the ſea coaſt, and taried there that night, and the next day they returned againe toward Acra.

A victorie againſt the Saracens, wherein 1000 of thē were ſlaine.

In the meane ſeaſon the king of Ieruſalem ſent vnto the noble men of Cyprus, deſiring them to come with ſpeed to ayd the Chriſtians, but they would not come, ſaying they would keepe their owne land, and go no further. Then prince Edward ſent vnto them, deſiring that at his requeſt they would come and ioyne in ayd with him: who immediatly thereupon came vnto him with great preparation ẏ furniture for the warres, ſaying, that at his commandement they were bound to do no leſſe, for that his predeceſſors were ſometimes the gouernors of that their land, and that they ought alwayes to ſhew their fidelity to the kings of England.

The princes of Cyprus acknowledge obedience to the kings of England.

Then the Chriſtians being herewith animated, made a third voyage or road, and came as farre as the fort called Vincula ſancti Petri, and to S. Georgius, and when they had ſlain certaine there, not finding any to make reſiſtance againſt them, they retired againe from whence they came: when thus the fame of prince Edward grew amongſt his enemies, and that they began to ſtand in doubt of him, they deuiſed among themſelues how by ſome pollicy they might circumuent him, and betray him. Whereupon the prince and admirall of Ioppa ſent vnto him, faining himſelfe vnder great deceit willing to become a Chriſtian, and that he would draw with him a great number beſides, ſo that they might be honorably entertained and vſed of the Chriſtians. This talke pleaſed the prince well, and perſwaded him to finiſh the thing he had ſo well begun by writing againe, who alſo by the ſame meſſenger ſent and wrote backe vnto him diuers times about the ſame matter, whereby no miſtruſt ſhould ſpring.

This meſſenger (ſayth mine author) was one ex caute nutritis, one of the ſtony hearted, that neither feared God nor dreaded death.

The fift time when this meſſenger came, and was of the princes ſeruants ſearched according to the maner and cuſtome what weapon and armour he had about him, as alſo his purſe, that not ſo much as a knife could be ſeene about him, he was had vp into the princes chamber, and after his reuerence done, he pulled out certaine letters, which he deliuered the prince from his lord, as he had done others before. This was about eight dayes after Whitſuntide, vpon a Tueſday, ſomewhat before night, at which time the prince was layed vpon his bed bare headed, in his ierkin, for the great heat and intemperature of the weather.

When the prince had read the letters, it appeared by them, that vpon the Saturday next following, his lord would be there ready to accompliſh all that he had written and promiſed. The report of theſe newes by the prince to the ſtanders by, liked them well, who drew ſomewhat backe to conſult thereof amongſt themſelues. In the meane time, the meſſenger kneeling, and making his obeiſance to the prince (queſtioning further with him) put his hand to his belt, as though he would haue pulled out ſome ſecret letters, and ſuddenly he pulled out an inuenomed knife, thinking to haue ſtroken the prince into the belly therewith as he lay: but the prince lifting vp his hand to defend the blow, was ſtriken a great wound into the arme, and being about to fetch another ſtroke at him, the prince againe with his foot tooke him ſuch a blow, that he feld him to the ground: with that the prince gate him by the hand, and with ſuch violence wraſted the knife from him, that he hurt himſelfe therewith on the forehead, and immediatly thruſt the ſame into the belly of the meſſenger and ſtriker, and ſlew him.

The princes ſeruants being in the next chamber not farre off, hearing the buſling, came with great haſte running in, and finding the meſſenger lying dead in the floore, one of them tooke vp a ſtoole, and beat out his braines: whereat the prince was wroth for that he ſtroke a dead man, and one that was killed before.

But the rumour of this accident, as it was ſtrange, ſo it went ſoone thorowout all the Court, and from thence among the common people, for which they were very heauy, and greatly diſcouraged. To him came alſo the Captaine of the Temple, and brought him a coſtly and precious drinke againſt poiſon, leaſt the venime of the knife ſhould penetrate the liuely blood, and in blaming wiſe ſayd vnto him: did I not tell your Grace before of the deceit and ſubtilty of this people? Notwithſtanding, ſayd he, let your Grace take a good heart, you ſhall not die of this wound, my life for yours. But ſtraight way the Surgions and Phyſicians were ſent for, and the prince was dreſſed, and within few dayes after, the wound began to putrifie, and the fleſh to looke dead and blacke: wherupon they that were about the prince began to mutter among themſelues, and were very ſad and heauy.

Which thing he himſelf perceiuing, ſaid vnto them: why mutter you thus among your ſelues: what ſee you in me, can I not be healed? tell me the trueth, be ye not afrayd. Whereupon one ſayd vnto him, and it like your Grace you may be healed, we miſtruſt not, but yet it will be very painfull for you to ſuffer. May ſuffering (ſayd he againe) reſtore health? yea ſayth the other, on paine of loſing my head. Then ſayd the prince, I commit my ſelfe vnto you, doe with me what you thinke good.

Then ſayd one of the Phyſicians, is there any of your Nobles in whom your Grace repoſeth ſpecial truſt? to whom the prince anſwered Yea, naming certeine of the Noble men that ſtood about him. Then ſayd the Phyſician to the two, whom the prince firſt named, the Lord Edmund, and the lord Iohn Voiſie, And doe you alſo faithfully loue your Lord and Prince? Who anſwered both, Yea vndoubtedly. Then ſayth he, take you away this gentlewoman and lady (meaning his wife) and let her not ſee her lord and huſband, till ſuch time as I will you thereunto. Whereupon they tooke her from the princes preſence, crying out, and wringing her hands. Then ſayd they vnto her, Be you contented good Lady & Madame, it is better that one woman ſhould weepe a little while, then that all the realme of England ſhould weepe a great ſeaſon.

This lord Edmund was the prince his brother.

Then on the morrow they cut out all the dead and inuenimed fleſh out of the princes arme, and threw it from them, and ſayd vnto him: how cheereth your Grace, we promiſe you within theſe fifteene dayes you ſhall ſhew your ſelfe abroad (if God permit) vpon your horſebacke, whole and well as euer you were. And according to the promiſe he made the prince, it came to paſſe, to the no little comfort and admiration of all his ſubiects.

When the great Souldan heard hereof, and that the prince was yet aliue, he could ſcarſely beleeue the ſame, and ſending vnto him three of his Nobles and Princes, excuſed himſelfe by them, calling his god to witneſſe that the ſame was done neither by him nor his conſent. Which princes and meſſengers ſtanding aloofe off from the kings ſonne, worſhipping him, fell flat vpon the ground: you (ſayd the prince) do reuerence me, but yet you loue me not. But they vnderſtood him not, becauſe he ſpake in Engliſh vnto them, ſpeaking by an Interpreter: neuertheleſſe he honourably entertained them, and ſent them away in peace.

Thus when prince Edward had beene eighteene moneths in Acra, he tooke ſhipping about the Aſſumption of our Lady, as we call it, returning homeward, and after ſeuen weekes he arriued in Sicilia at Trapes, and from thence trauailed thorow the middes of Apulia, till he came to Rome, where he was of the Pope honorably entertained.

From thence he came into France, whoſe fame and noble proweſſe was there much bruted among the common people, and enuied of the Nobility, eſpecially of the earle of Chalons, who thought to haue intrapped him and his company, as may appeare in the ſtory: but Prince Edward continued foorth his iourney to Paris, and was there of the French king honourably entertained: and after certaine dayes he went thence into Gaſcoine, where he taried till that he heard of the death of the king his father, at which time he came home, and was crowned king of England, in the yere of our Lord 1274.

Robertus Turneham Franciſcanus, Theologiæ profeſſor inſignis, Lynnæ celebri Irenorum ad ripas Iſidis emporio, collegio ſuorum fratrum magnificè præfuit. Edwardus Princeps, cognomento Longus, Henrici tertij filius, bellicam expeditionem contra Saracenos Aſſyriam incolentes, anno Dom. 1268. parabat. Ad quam profectionem quæſitus quoque Orator vehemens, qui plebis in cauſa religionis animos excitaret, Turnehamus principi viſus vel digniſſimus eſt, qui munus hoc obiret. Sic tanquam ſignifer conſtitutus Aſſyrios vnà cum Anglico exercitu petijt, ac ſuum non ſine laude præſtitit officium. Claruit anno ſaluțiferi partus, 1280, varia componens, ſub eodem Edwardo eius nominis primo poſt Conqueſtum.

Robert Turneham Franciſcan, a notable profeſſour of Diuinity, was with great dignity Prior of the Colledge of his Order in the famous Mart towne of Linne, ſituate vpon the riuer of Iſis in Norfolke. Prince Edward ſurnamed the Long, the ſonne of Henry the third, prepared his warlike voyage againſt the Saracens dwelling in Syria, in the yeere of our Lord, 1268. For the which expedition ſome earneſt preacher was ſought to ſtir vp the peoples minds in the cauſe of religion. And this Turneham ſeemed to the Prince moſt worthy to performe that office: ſo that he being appointed as it were a ſtanderd bearer, went into Syria with the Engliſh army, and performed his duety with good commendation. He flouriſhed in the yeere of Chriſt 1280, ſetting foorth diuers works vnder the ſame king Edward the firſt of that name after the Conqueſt.

Anthony Beck biſhop of Duriſme was elected Patriarch of Hieruſalem, and confirmed by Clement the fift biſhop of Rome: in the 34 yere of Edward the firſt, Lelandus.

ANtonius Beckus epiſcopus Dunelmenſis fuit, regnante Edwardo eius appellationis ab aduentu Gulielmi magni in Angliam primo. Electus eſt in patriarcham Hieroſolomitanum anno Chriſti 1305, & a Clemente quinto Rom. pontifice confirmatus. Splendidus erat ſupra quàm decebat epiſcopum. Conſtruxit caſtrum Achelandæ, quatuor paſſuum millibus a Dunelmo in ripa Vnduglesſi fluuioli. Elteſhamum etiam vicinum Grencuico, ac Somaridunum caſtellum Lindianæ prouinciæ, ædificijs illuſtria reddidit. Deinde & palatium Londini erexit, quod nunc Edwardi principis eſt. Tandem ex ſplendore nimio, & potentia conflauit ſibi apud nobilitatem ingentem inuidiam, quam viuens nunquam extinguere potuit. Sed de Antonio, & eius ſcriptis fuſius in opere, cuius titulus de pontificibus Britannicis, dicemus. Obijt Antonius anno a nato in ſalutem noſtram Chriſto, 1310, Edwardo ſecundo regnante. 1305.

The ſame in Engliſh.

ANthony Beck was biſhop of Duriſme in the time of the reigne of Edward the firſt of that name after the inuaſion of William the great into England. This Anthony was elected patriarch of Ieruſalem in the yeere of our Lord God 1305, and was confirmed by Clement the fift, pope of Rome. He was of greater magnificence then for the calling of a biſhop. He founded alſo the caſtle of Acheland foure miles from Duriſme, on the ſhore of a prety riuer called Vndugleſme. He much beautified with new buildings Eltham mannor being nere vnto Greenwich, and the caſtle Somaridune in the county of Lindſey. And laſtly, he built new out of the ground the palace of London, which now is in the poſſeſſion of prince Edward. Inſomuch, that at length, through his ouer great magnificence and power he procured to himſelfe great enuy among the nobility, which he could not aſſwage during the reſt of his life. But of this Anthony & of his writings we will ſpeake more at large in our booke intitled of the Britain biſhops. This Anthony finiſhed his life in the yere of our Lord God 1310, and in the reigne of king Edward the ſecond.

Incipit Itinerarium fratris Odorici fratrum minorum de mirabilibus Orientalium Tartarorum.

PLicet multa & varia de ritibus & conditionibus huius mundi enarrentur a multis, ego tamen frater Odoricus de foro Iulij de portu Vahonis, volens ad partes infidelium transfretare, magna & mira vidi & audiui, quæ poſſum veracitèr enarrare. Primò tranſiens Mare Maius me de Pera iuxta Cõſtantinopolim tranſtuli Trapeſundam, quæ antiquitus Pontus vocabatur: Hæc terra benè ſituata eſt, ſicut ſcala quædam Perſarum & Medorum, & eorum qui ſunt vltra mare. In hac terra vidi mirabile quod mihi placuit, ſcilicèt hominem ducentem ſecum pluſquam 4000 perdicum. Homo autem per terram gradiebatur, perdices vero volabant per aëra, Armenia maior.

quas ipſe ad quoddam caſtrum dictum Zauena duxit, diſtans à Trapeſunda per tres dietas: Hæ perdices illius conditionis erant, cùm homo ille quieſcere voluit, omnes ſe aptabant circa ipſum, more pullorum gallinarum, & per illum modum duxit eas vſque ad Trapeſundam, & vſque ad palatium imperatoris, qui de illis ſumpſit quot voluit, & reſiduas vir ille ad locum vnde venerat, adduxit. In hac ciuitate requieſcit corpus Athanaſij ſupra portam ciuitatis. Vltra tranſiui vſque in Armeniam maiorem, ad quandam ciuitatem quæ vocatur Azaron, quæ erat multùm opulenta antiquitùs, ſed Tartari eam pro magna parte deſtruxerunt: In ea erat abundantia panis & carnium, & aliorum omniũ victualium preterquam vini & fructuum. Hæc ciuitas eſt multũ frigida, & de illa dicitur quòd altius ſituatur quàm aliqua alia in hoc mundo: hæc optimas habet aquas, nam venæ illarum aquarum oriri videntur & ſcaturire à flumine magno Euphrate quod per vnam dietã ab ciuitate diſtat: hæc ciuitas via media eundi Tauriſium. Vltra progreſſus ſum ad quendam montem dictum Sobiſſacalo. In illa contrata eſt mons ille ſupra quem requieſcit arca Noe; in quem libenter aſcendiſſem, ſi ſocietas meâ me præſtolare voluiſſet: A gente tamen illius contratæ dicitur quòd nullus vnquam illum montem aſcendere potuit, quia vt dicitur, hoc Deo altiſſimo non placet. Vltra veni Tauris ciuitatem magnam & regalem, quæ antiquitùs Suſis dicta eſt. Hæc ciuitas melior pro mercenarijs reputatur, quàm aliqua quæ ſit in mundo, nam nihil comeſtibile, nec aliquid quod ad mercimonium pertinet, reperitur, quod illic in bona copia non habetur. Hæc ciuitas multum benè ſituatur: Nam ad eam quaſi totus mundus pro mercimonijs confluere poteſt: De hac dicunt Chriſtiani qui ibi ſunt, quòd credunt Imperatorem plus de ea accipere, quàm Regem Franciæ de toto regno ſuo: Iuxta illam ciuitatem eſt mons ſalinus præbens ſal ciuitati, & de illo ſale vnuſquiſque tantum accipit, quantum vult, nihil ſoluendo alicui. In hac ciuitate multi Chriſtiani de omni natione commorantur, quibus Saraceni in omnibus dominantur. Vltra iui per decem dietas ad ciuitatem dictam Soldania, in qua imperator Perſarum tempore æſtiuo commoratur; In hyeme autem vadit ad ciuitatem aliam ſitam ſupra mare vocatam Bakuc: Prædicta autem ciuitas magna eſt, & frigida, in ſe habens bonas aquas, ad quam multa mercimonia portantur. Vltra cum quadam ſocietate Carauanorum iui verſus Indiam ſuperiorem, ad quam dum tranſiſſem per multas dietas perueni ad ciuitatem trium Magorum quæ vocatur Caſſan, quæ regia ciuitas eſt & nobilis, niſi quod Tartari eam in magna parte deſtruxerunt: hæc abundat pane, vino, & alijs bonis multis. Ab hac ciuitate vſque Ieruſalem quo Magi iuerunt miraculoſè, ſunt L. dietæ, & multa mirabilia ſunt in hac ciuitate quæ pertranſeo. Indè receſſi ad quandam ciuitatem vocatam Geſt à qua diſtat mare arenoſum per vnam dietam, quod mirè eſt mirabile & periculoſum: In hac ciuitate eſt abundantia omnium victualium, & ficuum potiſſimè, & vuarum ſiccarum & viridium, plus vt credo quàm in alia parte mundi. Hæc eſt tertia ciuitas melior quam Rex Perſarum habet in toto regno ſuo: De illa dicunt Saraceni, quod in ea nullus Chriſtianus vltra annum viuere vnquam poteſt. Vltra per multas dietas iui ad quandam ciuitatem dictam Comum quæ maxima ciuitas antiquitùs erat, cuius ambitus erat ferè L. miliaria, quæ magna damna intulit Romanis antiquis temporibus. In ea ſunt palatia integra non habitata, tamen multis victualibus abundat. Vltra per multas terras tranſiens, perueni ad terram Iob nomine Hus quæ omnium victualium pleniſſima eſt, & pulcherrimè ſituata; iuxta eam ſunt montes in quibus ſunt paſcua multa pro animalibus: Ibi manna in magna copia reperitur. Ibi habentur quatuor perdices pro minori, quàm pro vno groſſo: In ea ſunt pulcherrimi ſenes, vbi homines nent & filant, & fœminæ non: hæc terra correſpondet Chaldeæ verſus tranſmontana.

De moribus Chaldæorum, & de India.

INdè iui in Chaldæam quæ eſt regnum magnum, & tranſiui iuxta turrim Babel: Hæc regio ſuam linguam propriam habet, & ibi ſunt homines formoſi, & fœminæ turpes: & homines illius regionis vadunt compti crinibus, & ornati, vt hîc mulieres, & portant ſuper capita ſua faſciola aurea cum gemmis, & margaritis; mulieres verò ſolum vnam vilem camiſiam attingentem vſque ad genua, habentem manicas longas & largas, quæ vſque ad terram protenduntur: Et vadunt diſcalciatæ portantes Serablans vſque ad terram. Triceas non portant, ſed capilli earum circumquaque diſperguntur: & alia multa & mirabilia ſunt ibidem. Indè veni in Indiam quæ infra terram eſt, quam Tartari multum deſtruxerunt; & in ea vt plurimum homines tantum dactilos comedunt, quarum xlij. libræ habentur pro minori quam pro vno groſſo. Vltra tranſiui per multas dietas ad

Thana.

mare oceanum, & prima terra, ad quam applicui, vocatur Ormes, quæ eſt optimè murata, & multa mercimonia & diuitiæ in ea ſunt; in ea tantus calor eſt, quod virilia hominum exeunt corpus, & deſcendunt vſque ad mediam tibiarum: ideò homines illius terræ volentes viuere, faciunt vnctionem, & vngunt illa, & ſic vncta in quibuſdam ſacculis ponunt circa ſe cingentes, & aliter morerentur: In hac terra homines vtuntur nauigio quæ vocatur Iaſe, ſutum ſpatto. Ego autem aſcendi in vnum illorum in quo nullum ferrum potui reperire, & in viginti octo dietis perueni ad ciuitatem Thana, in qua pro fide Chriſti quatuor de fratribus noſtris martyrizati ſunt. Hæc terra eſt optimè ſituata, & in ea abundantia panis & vini, & aliorum victualium. Hæc terra antiquitùs fuit valdè magna, & fuit regis Pori, qui cum rege Alexandro præliũ magnum commiſit. Huius terræ populus Idolatrat, adorans ignem, ſerpentes, & arbores: Et iſtam terram regunt Saraceni, qui violenter eam acceperunt, & ſubiacent imperio regis Daldili. Ibi ſunt diuerſa genera beſtiarum, leones nigri in maxima quantitate: Sunt & ibi ſimiæ, gatimaymones, & noctuæ magnæ ſicut hic habentur columbæ; ibi mures magni ſunt, ſicut ſunt hic ſcepi, & ideò canes capiunt ibi mures, quia murelegi non valent. Ad hæc, In illa terra quilibet homo habet ante domum ſuam vnum pedem faſciculorum, ita magnum ſicut eſſet vna columna, & pes ille non deſiccatur, dummodò adhibeatur ſibi aqua. Multæ nouitates ſunt ibi, quas pulcherrimum eſſet audire.

Martyrium autem quatuor fratrum noſtrorum in illa ciuitate Thana fuit per iſtũ modum; dum prædicti fratres fuerant in Ormes, fecerunt pactum cum vna naui, vt nauigarent vſque Polumbrum, & violentèr deportati ſunt vſque Thanam vbi ſunt 15. domus Chriſtianorum, qui Neſtoriani ſunt & Schiſmatici, & cùm illic eſſent, hoſpitati ſunt in domo cuiuſdam illorum; contigit dum ibi manerent litem oriri inter virum domus, & vxorem eius, quam ſerò vir fortitèr verberauit, quæ ſuo Kadi. i. Epiſcopo conqueſta eſt; à qua interrogauit Kadi, vtrum hoc probari poſſet? quæ dixit, quòd ſic; quia 4. Franchi. i. viri religioſi erant in domo hoc videntes, ipſos interrogate, qui dicent vobis veritatem: Muliere autem ſic dicente, Ecce vnus de Alexandria pręſens rogauit Kadi vt mitteret pro eis, dicens eos eſſe homines maximæ ſcientiæ & ſcripturas benè ſcire, & ideò dixit bonum eſſe cum illis de fide diſputare: Qui miſit pro illis, & adducti ſunt iſti quatuor, quorum nomina ſunt frater de Tolentino de Marchia, frater Iacobus de Padua, frater Demetrius Laicus, Petrus de Senis. Dimiſſo autem fratre Petro, vt res ſuas cuſtodiret, ad Kadi pertexerunt, qui cœpit cum illis de fide noſtra diſputare; dicens Chriſtum tantùm hominem eſſe & non Deum. E contrà frater Thomas rationibus & exemplis Chriſtum verum Deum & hominem eſſe euidenter oſtendit, & in tantum confudit Kadi, & infideles qui cum eo tenuerunt, quòd non habuerunt quid rationabiliter contradicere: Tunc videns Kadi ſe ſic confuſum, incepit clamare ſic; Et quid dicis de Machometo? Reſpondit frater Thomas: Si tibi probauimus Chriſtum verum Deum & hominem eſſe, qui legem poſuit inter homines, et Machometus è contrario venit, & legem contrariam docuit, ſi ſapiens ſis optimè ſcire poteris, quid de eo dicendum ſit. Iterum Kadi & alij Saraceni clamabant, Et tu quid iterum de Machometo dicis? Tunc frater T. reſpondit: vos omnes videre poteſtis, quid dico de eo. Tum ex quo vultis quòd planè loquar de eo, dico, quòd Machometus veſter filius perditionis eſt, & in inferno cum Diabolo patre ſuo. Et non ſolùm ipſe, ſed omnes ibi erunt qui tenent legem hanc, quia ipſa tota peſtifera eſt, & falſa, & contra Deum, & contra ſalutem animæ. Hoc audientes Saraceni, cœperunt clamare, moriatur, moriatur ille, qui ſic contra Prophetam locutus eſt. Tunc acceperunt fratres & in ſole vrente ſtare permiſerunt, vt ex calore ſolis aduſti, dira morte interirent. Tantus enim eſt calor ſolis ibi, quòd ſi homo in eo per ſpacium vnius miſſæ perſiſteret, moreretur: fratres tamen illi ſani & hilares à tertia vſque ad nonam laudantes & glorificantes dominum in ardore ſolis permanſerunt, quod videntes Saraceni ſtupefacti ad fratres venerunt, & dixerunt, volumus ignem accendere copioſum, & in illum vos proijcere, & ſi fides veſtra ſit vt dicitis, ignis non poterit vos comburere: ſi autem vos combuſſerit, patebit quòd fides veſtra nulla ſit. Reſponderunt fratres; parati ſumus pro fide noſtra ignem, carcerem, & vincula, & omnium tormentorum genera tolerare: veruntamen ſcire debetis, quòd ſi ignis poteſtatem habeat comburendi nos hoc non erit propter fidem noſtram, ſed propter peccatã noſtra: fides enim noſtra perfectiſſima & veriſſima eſt, & non eſt alia in mundo in qua animæ hominum poſſunt ſaluæ fieri. Dum autem ordinaretur quòd fratres cõburerentur, rumor inſonuit per totã ciuitatem, de qua omnes ſenes, & iuuenes, viri & mulieres, qui ire poterant, accurrerunt ad illud ſpectaculum intuendum. Fratres autem ducti fuerunt ad plateam ciuitatis, vbi accenſus eſt ignis copioſus, in quem frater Thomas voluit ſe proijcere, ſed quidam Saracenus cepit eum per caputium, & retraxit, dicens;

Non vadas tu cum ſis ſenex, quia carmen aliquod vel experimentum habere poſſes ſuper te, quare te ignis non poſſet lædere, ſed alium ire in ignem permittas. Tunc 4 Saraceni ſumentes fratrem Iacobum, eum in ignem proijcere volebant; quibus ille, permittatis me, quia libenter pro fide mea ignem intrabo: Cui Saraceni non adquieſcentes eum violentèr in ignem proiecerunt: ignis autem ita accenſus erat, quòd nullus eum videre poterat, vocem tamen eius audierunt, inuocantem ſemper nomen virginis glorioſæ; Igne autem totalitèr conſumpto ſtetit frater Iacobus ſuper prunas illæſus, & lętus, manibus in modum crucis eleuatis, in cœlū reſpiciens, & Deū laudans & glorificans, qui ſic declarat et fidem ſuam: nihil autem in eo nec pannus, nec capillus læſus per ignem inuentus eſt; Quod videns populus vnanimitèr conclamare cœpit, ſancti ſunt, ſancti ſunt, nefas eſt offendere eos, modò videmus quia fides eorum bona & ſancta eſt. Tunc clamare cœpit Kadi: ſanctus non eſt ille, quia combuſtus non eſt, quia tunica quam portat eſt de lana terræ Habraæ, & ideò nudus exſpolietur, & in ignem proijciatur, & videbitur ſi comburetur vel non. Tunc Saraceni peſſimi ad præceptum Kadi ignem in duplo magis quàm priùs accenderunt, & fratrem Iacobum nudantes, corpus ſuum abluerunt, & oleo abundantiſſimè vnxerunt, inſuper & oleum maximum in ſtruem lignorum ex quibus ignis fieret, ſuderunt, & igne accenſo fratrem in ipſum proiecerunt. Frater autem Thomas, & frater Demetrius extra populum in loco ſeparato flexis genibus orantes cum lachrymis deuotioni ſe dederunt. Frater autem Iacobus iterum ignem exiuit illæſus ſicut prius fecerat: quod videns omnis populus clamare cœpit, peccatum eſt, peccatum eſt, offendere eos, quià ſancti ſunt. Hoc autem tantum miraculum videns Melich, i. poteſtas ciuitatis, vocauit ad ſe fratrem Iacobum, & fecit eum ponere indumenta ſua, & dixit, videre fratres, Ite cum gratia Dei, quia nullum malum patiemini a nobis, modò benè videmus vos ſanctos eſſe, & fidem veſtram bonam ac veram eſſe; & ideo conſulimus vobis, vt de iſta terra exeatis, quàm citiùs poteritis, quia Kadi pro peſſe ſuo vobis nocere curabit, quia ſic confudiſtis eum: Hora autem tunc erat quaſi completorij, & dixerunt illi de populo, attoniti, admirati, & ſtupefacti, tot & tanta mirabilia vidimus ab iſtis hominibus, quòd neſcimus quid tenere & obſeruare debemus. Melich verò fecit duci illos tres fratres vltra vnum paruum brachium maris in quendam Burgum modicum ab illa ciuitate diſtantem: ad quem etiam ille in cuius iam domo fuerant hoſpitati aſſociauit eos, vbi in domo cuiuſdam idolatri recepti ſunt. Dùm hæc agerentur, Kadi iuit ad Melich, dicens quid facimus? Lex Machometi deſtructa eſt, veruntamen hoc ſcire debes, quod Machomet pręcepit in ſuo Alcorano, quod ſi quis vnum Chriſtianum interficeret, tantū mereretur, ac ſi in Mecha ad ipſum peregrinaretur. Eſt enim Alkoranus lex Saracenorum ſicut Euangelium, Mecha verò eſt locus vbi iacet Machomet. Quem locum ita viſitant Saraceni, ſicut Chriſtiani ſepulchrum Chriſti, Tunc Melich reſpondet, vade & fac ſicut vis: quo dicto ſtatim Kadi accepit quatuor homines armatos vt irent, & illos fratres interficerent, qui cùm aquam tranſijſſent, facta eſt nox, & illo ſero eos non inuenerunt, ſtatim Melich omnes Chriſtianos in ciuitate capi fecit, & incarcerauit, media autem nocte fratres ſurrexerunt dicere matutinum, quos illi Saraceni qui miſſi fuerant, inuenerunt, & extra burgum, ſub quadam arbore adduxerunt, dixerunt eis. Sciatis fratres nos mandatum habere a Kadi & Melich interficere vos, quod tamen faciemus inuiti, quia vos eſtis boni homines & ſancti, ſed non audemus aliter facere; quia ſi iuſſa ſua non perficeremus, & nos cum liberis noſtris & vxoribus moreremur. Tunc fratres reſponderunt, vos qui hûc veniſtis, & tale mandatum recepiſtis, vt per mortem temporalem vitam æternam adipiſcamur, quod vobis iniunctum eſt perficite; quia pro amore domini noſtri Ieſu Chriſti, qui pro nobis crucifigi & mori dignatus eſt, & pro fide noſtra, parati ſumus omnia tormenta, & etiam mortem libenter ſuſtinere. Chriſtianus autem qui fratres comitabatur, multum cum illis quatuor armatis altercatus eſt dicens, quod ſi gladium haberet, vel eos à nece tam ſanctorum hominum impediret, vel ipſe cum eis interfectus eſſet. Tunc armati fecerunt fratres ſe exſpoliare, & frater Thomas primus iunctis manibus in modū crucis genu flectens capitis abſciſſionē ſuſcepit: Fratrem verò Iacobum vnus percuſſit in capite, & eum vſque ad oculos ſcidit, & alio ictu totum caput abſcidit. Frater autem Demetrius primò percuſſus eſt cum gladio in pectore, & ſecundò caput ſuum abſciſſum eſt: Statim vt fratres ſuum martyrium compleuerunt, aër ita lucidus effectus eſt, quod omnes admirati ſunt, & luna maximam claritatem oſtendit. Statim quaſi ſubito tanta tonitrua, & fulgura, & coruſcationes, & obſcuritas fiebant, quòd omnes mori crediderunt: Nauis etiam illa quæ illos debuerat deportaſſe ſubmerſa eſt cum omnibus quæ in ſe habuit, ita quod nùnquam de illa poſteà aliquid ſcitum eſt. Facto mane miſit Kadi pro rebus fratrum prædictorum noſtrorum, & tunc inuentus eſt frater Petrus de Senis quartus ſocius fratrum prædictorum, quem ad Kadi duxerunt: Cui Kadi, & alij Saraceni maxima promittentes perſuaſerunt quòd fidem ſuam renueret, & legem machometi confiteretur, & teneret. Frater autem Petrus de illis truffabat, eos multum deridendo, quem de mane vſque ad meridiem diuerſis pænarum ac tormentorum generibus afflixerunt ipſo ſemper conſtantiſſimè in fide, & in Dei laudibus perſiſtente, & fidem illorum Machometi deridente & deſtruente. Videntes autem Saraceni eum nõ poſſe a ſuo propoſito euelli, eum ſuper quandam arborẽ ſuſpenderunt, in qua de nona vſq; ad noctem viuus & illæſus pependit: nocte verò ipſum de arbore ſumpſerunt, & videntes illum lætũ, viuum, & illæſum per medium ſuum corpus diuiſerunt, mane autẽ facto nihil de corpore eius inuentum eſt; vni tamen perſonæ fide dignæ reuelatum eſt, quod Deus corpus eius occultauerat reuelandũ in certo tempore, quandò Deo placuerit Sanctorum corpora manifeſtare. Vt autem Deus oſtenderet animas ſuorum martyrum iam in cœlis conſiſtere, & congaudere cum Deo & Angelis & alijs Sanctis eius, die ſequenti poſt martyriũ fratrum prædictorũ Melich dormitioni ſe dedit, & ecce aparuerunt ſibi iſti fratres glorioſi, & ſicut Sol, lucidi, ſingulos enſes tenentes in manibus, & ſupra eum eos ſic vibrantes, quod vt ſi eum perfodere ac diuidere vellent: qui excitatus horribilitèr exclamauit, ſic, quòd totã familiã terruit: quæ ſibi accurrens quæſiuit, quid ſibi eſſet? quibus ille, Illi Raban Franchi quos interfici iuſſi, venerunt huc ad me cum enſibus, volentes me interficere. Et ſtatim Melich miſit pro Kadi, referens ſibi viſionẽ, & petens conſilium, & conſolationem, quia timuit per eos finaliter interire. Tunc Kadi ſibi conſuluit, vt illis maximas eleemoſynas faceret, ſi de manibus interfectorũ euadere vellet. Tunc miſit pro Chriſtianis quos in carcere intrudi præceperat: A quibus cum ad eum veniſſent indulgentiam petijt pro facto ſuo, dicens ſe eſſe amodò ſocium eorũ, & confratrem: Præcepit autem & legem ſtatuit, quòd pro tempore ſuo, ſi quis aliquẽ Chriſtianũ offenderet, ſtatim moreretur, & ſic omnes illæſos, & indemnes abire permiſit, Pro illis autẽ quatuor fratribus interfectis quatuor moſquetas (.i.) Eccleſias ædificari fecit, quas per Sacerdotes Saracenorum inhabitari fecit, Audiens autem imperator Dodſi iſtos tres fratres talem ſententiam ſubijſſe, miſit pro Melich, vt vinctus ad eum duceretur, A quo cùm adductus eſſet, quæſiuit imperator, quare ita crudelitèr illos fratres iuſſerat interfici, reſpondit, quia ſubuertere volebant legem noſtram, & malum & blaſphemiam de propheta noſtro dicebant: & imperator ad eum; O crudeliſſime canis, cùm videres quod Deus omnipotens bis ab igne eos liberauerit, quo modo auſus fuiſti illis mortem inferre tam crudelem. Et edicta ſententia, ipſum Melich cum tota ſua familia per medium ſcindi fecit, ſicut ipſe talem mortem fratri inflixerat, Kadi verò audiens, de terra illa, & etiam de imperatoris illius dominio clàm fugit, & ſic euaſit.

De miraculis quatuor fratrum occiſorum.

ESt autem conſuetudo in terra illa, quòd corpora mortua non traduntur ſepulturæ, ſed in campis dimittuntur, & ex calore Solis citò reſoluuntur, & ſic conſumuntur: Corpora autem triũ fratrũ prędictorum per 14. dies illic in feruore Solis iacuerunt, & ita recentia & redolentia inuenta fuerunt ſicut illa die quandò martirizati erant: quod videntes Chriſtiani qui in illa terra habitabant, prædicta corpora ceperunt, & honorificè ſepelierunt. Ego autem Odoricus audiens factum & martyrium illorũ fratrum, iui illuc, & corpora eorũ effodi, & oſſa omnia mecum accepi, & in pulchris towallijs colligaui, & in Indiam ſuperiorem ad vnũ locũ fratrum noſtrorũ ea deportaui, habens mecum ſocium, & vnũ famulũ. Cum autẽ eſſemus in uia, hoſpitabamus in domo cuiuſdã hoſpitarij, & ipſa oſſa capiti meo ſuppoſui, & dormiui: Et dùm dormirem domus illa à Saracenis ſubitò accendebatur, vt me cum domo comburerent. Domo autẽ ſic accenſa, ſocius meus & famulus de domo exierunt, & me ſolum cum oſſibus dimiſerunt, qui videns ignem ſupra me, oſſa accepi & cum illis in angulos domus recollegi. Tres autem anguli domus ſtatim cõbuſti fuerunt, angulo in quo ſteti cũ oſſibus ſaluo remanente: Supra me autẽ ignis ſe tenuit in modũ aëris lucidi, nec deſcendit quamdiu ibi perſiſtebam; quàm citò autẽ cum oſſibus exiui, ſtatim tota pars illa ſicut aliæ priores igne conſumpta eſt, & multa alia loca circumadiacentia cõbuſta ſunt, Aliud miraculũ contigit, me cum oſſibus per mare proficiente ad ciuitatẽ Polumbrũ vbi piper naſcitur abũdantèr, quia nobis ventus totaliter defecit: quapropter venerunt Idolatræ adorantes Deos ſuos pro vento proſpero, quẽ tamen nõ obtinuerunt: Tunc Saraceni ſuas inuocationes, & adorationes laborioſe fecerũt, ſed nihil profecerũt; Et præceptũ eſt mihi & ſocio meo vt orationes funderemus Deo noſtro: Et dixit rector nauis in Armenico mihi, quod alij nõ intelligerent: quòd niſi poſſemus ventũ proſperũ à Deo noſtro impetrare, nos cum oſſibus in mare proijcerẽt: Tunc ego & ſocius fecimus orationes, vouentes multas miſſas de beata virgine celebrare, ſic quòd ventũ placeret ſibi nobis impetrare, Cum autẽ tẽpus tranſiret, & ventus non veniret, accepi vnũ de oſſibus, & dedi famulo, vt ad caput nauis iret, & clàm in mare proijceret; quo proiecto ſtatim affuit ventus proſper qui nunquã nobis defecit, vſquequò peruenimus ad portũ, meritis iſtorũ martyrũ cum ſalute. Deinde aſcendimus aliã nauẽ vt in Indiam ſuperiorẽ iremus; Et venimus ad quandã ciuitatem vocatã Carchan In qua ſunt duo loca fratrum noſtrorum, & ibi reponere iſtas reliquias volebamus, In naui autem illa erant plus 700. mercatores & alij: Nunc illi Idolatræ iſtam conſuetudinem habebant,quòd ſemper antequàm ad portum applicuerint,totam nauem perquirerent, ſi iſti aliqua oſſa mortuorum animalium inuenirent, qui reperta ſtatim in mare proijcerent,& per hoc bonum portum attingere, & mortis periculũ euadere crederent. Cùm autem frequentèr perquirerent,& illa oſſa frequenter tangerent,ſemper oculi deluſi fuerunt, ſic quòd illa non perpenderunt;& ſic ad locum fratrum deportauimus cum omni reuerentia, vbi in pace requieſcunt; vbi etiã inter idolatras Deus continuè miracula operatur. VT autem videatur quo modo habetur piper, ſciendum quòd in quodam imperio ad quod applicui,nomine* Minibar,naſcitur,& in nulla parte mundi tantum,quantum ibi; Nemus enim in quo naſcitur, continet octodecim dietas,& in ipſo nemore ſunt duæ ciuitates vna nomine Flandrina, alia nomine Cyncilim : In Flandrina habitant Iudęi aliqui & aliqui Chriſtiani,inter quos eſt bellum frequenter,ſed Chriſtiani vincunt Iudæos ſemper: In iſto nemore habetur piper per iſtum modum.Nam primò naſcitur in folijs olerum,quę iuxta magnas arbores plantantur,ſicut nos ponimus vites; & producunt fructum,ſicut racemi noſtri producunt vuas; ſed quandò matureſcunt ſunt viridis coloris, & ſic vindemiantur vt inter nos vindemiãtur vuæ,& ponuntur grana ad ſolem vt deſiccentur: quę deſiccata reponuntur in vaſis terreis,& ſic fit piper,& cuſtoditur. In iſto autẽ nemore ſunt flumina multa in quibus ſunt Crocodili multi, & multi alij ſerpentes ſunt in illo nemore, quos homines per ſtupam & paleas comburunt, & ſic ad colligendum piper ſecurè accedunt. A capite illius nemoris verſus meridiem eſt ciuitas Polumbrum in qua maxima mercimonia cuiuſcunque generis reperiuntur. Omnes autem de terra illa bouem viuum ſicut Deum ſuum adorant,quem 6. annis faciunt laborare,& in ſeptimo faciunt ipſum quieſcere ab omni opere; ponentes ipſum in loco ſolemni,& communi, & dicentes ipſum eſſe animal ſanctum. Hunc autem ritum obſeruant: quolibet mane accipiunt duas pelues de auro,vel de argento,& vnam ſubmittunt vrinæ bouis,& aliam ſtercori,de vrina lauant ſibi faciem & oculos, & omnes 5. ſenſus: de ſtercore verò ponunt in vtróque oculo,poſteà liniunt ſummitates genarum,& tertiò pectus,& ex tunc dicunt ſe ſanctificatos pro toto die illo: & ſicut facit populus,ita etiam facit rex & regina. Iſti etiam aliud idolum mortuum adorant,quod in medietate vna ſuperior eſt homo,& in alia eſt bos,& illud idolum dat eis reſponſa,& aliquotiẽs pro ſtipendio petit ſanguinẽ,40,virginum: & ideò homines illius regionis ita vouent filias ſuas & filios,ſicut Chriſtiani aliqui alicui religioni,vel ſancto in cœlis.Et per iſtum modum immolant filios & filias, & multi homines per iſtum ritum moriuntur ante idolum illud,& multa alia abominabilia facit populus iſte beſtialis,& multa mirabilia vidi inter eos quæ nolui hic inſerere. Aliam conſuetudinem viliſſimam habet gens illa: Nam quãdo homo moritur,comburunt ipſum mortuum,& ſi vxorẽ habet,ipſam comburunt viuam,quia dicunt quòd ipſa ibit in aratura, & cultura cum viro ſuo in alio mundo: Si autem vxor illa habeat liberos ex viro ſuo,poteſt manere cum eis ſi velit ſine verecundia & improperio, communiter tamen omnes præeligunt comburi cum marito; ſi autem vxor præmoriatur viro, lex illa non obligat virum,ſed poteſt aliã vxorem ducere. Aliam conſuetudinem habet gens illa,quòd fœminę ibi bibunt vinum,& homines non: fœminæ etiã faciunt ſibi radi cilia,& ſupercilia,& barbam,& homines non: & ſic de multis alijs vilibus contra naturam ſexus eorum, Ab iſto regno iui decem dietas ad aliud regnum dictum Mobar,quod habet in ſe multas ciuitates,& in illo requieſcit in vna eccleſia corpus beati Thomæ Apoſtoli,& eſt eccleſia illa plena idolis,& in circuitu eccleſiæ ſimul Canonici viuunt in 15.domibus Neſtoriani,id eſt,mali Chriſtiani,& ſchiſmatici.

De quodam idolo mirabili,& de quibuſdam ritibus eorum.

IN hoc regno eſt vnum Idolum mirabile,quod omnes Indi reuerentur: & eſt ſtatura hominis ita magni,ſicut noſter Chriſtophorus depictus,& eſt totum de auro puriſſimo & ſplendidiſſimo,& circa collum habet vnam chordulam ſericam cum lapidibus pretioſiſſimis,quorũ aliquis valet plus quàm vnum regnum: Domus idoli eſt tota de auro,ſcilicet in tecto,& pauimento,& ſuperficie parietum interius & exterius. Ad illud idolum peregrinantur Indi,ſicut nos ad S.Petrum: Alij veniunt cum chorda ad collum, alij cum manibus retrò ligatis,alij cum cultello in brachio vel tibia defixo, & ſi poſt peregrinationẽ fiat brachium marcidum,illum reputant ſanctum,& benè cum Deo ſuo. Iuxta eccleſiam illius idoli eſt lacus vnus manufactus, & manifeſtus,in quem peregrini proijciunt aurum & argentum,& lapides pretioſos in honorem Idoli,& ad ædificationem eccleſiæ ſuæ,& ideò quando aliquid debet ornari,vel reparari,vadunt homines ad hunc lacum, & proiecta extrahunt: die autem annua conſtructionis illius idoli, rex & regina cum toto populo & omnibus peregrinis accedunt, & ponunt illud idolum in vno curru pretioſiſſimo ipſum de eccleſia educentes cum Canticis, & omni genere muſicorum, & multæ virgines antecedunt ipſum binæ & binæ, proceſſionaliter combinatæ modulantes: Peregrini etiam multi ponunt ſe ſub curru, vt tranſeat Deus ſupra eos; & omnes ſuper quos currus tranſit, comminuit, & per medium ſcindit, & interficit, & per hoc reputant ſe mori pro deo ſuo ſanctè & ſecurè: & in omni anno hoc modo moriuntur in via ſub idolo pluſquam 500 homines, quorum corpora comburuntur, & cineres ſicut reliquiæ cuſtodiuntur, quia ſic pro Deo ſuo moriuntur. Alium ritum habent, quando aliquis homo offert ſe mori pro deo ſuo, conueniunt omnes amici eius & parentes cum hiſtrionibus multis, facientes ſibi feſtum magnum, & poſt feſtum appendunt collo eius 5 cultellos acutiſſimos ducentes eum ante idolum, quò cum peruenerit, ſumit vnum ex cultellis, & clamat alta voce, pro deo meo incido mihi de carne mea, & fruſtum inciſum proijcit in faciem idoli: vltima verò inciſione per quam ſeipſum interficit, dicit, me mori pro deo meo permitto, quo mortuo corpus eius comburitur, & ſanctum fore ab omnibus creditur. Rex illius regionis eſt ditiſſimus in auro & argento, & gemmis pretioſis; ibi etiam ſunt margaritæ pulchriores de mundo. Indè tranſiens iui per mare oceanum verſus meridiem per 50 dietas ad unam terram vocatam Lammori, in qua ex immenſitate caloris, tam viri quam fœminæ omnes incedunt nudi in toto corpore: Qui videntes me veſtitum, deridebant me, dicentes Deum, Adam & Euam feciſſe nudos. In illa regionè omnes mulieres ſunt communes, ita quòd nullus poteſt dicere, hæc eſt vxor mea, & cùm mulier aliqua parit filium vel filiam dat cui vult de hijs qui concubuerunt: Tota etiam terra illius regionis habetur in communi, ita quòd non meum & tuum in diuiſione terrarũ, domos tamen habent ſpeciales: Carnes humanę quando homo eſt pinguis ita benè comeduntur, ſicut inter nos bouinæ: & licet gens ſit peſtifera, tamen terra optima eſt, & abundat in omnibus bonis, carnibus, bladis, riſo, auro, argento, & lignis Aloe, canfari, & multis alijs. Mercatores autem cum accedunt ad hanc regionem ducunt ſecum homines pingues vendentes illos genti illius regionis, ſicut nos vendimus porcos, qui ſtatim occidunt eos & comedunt. In hac inſula verſus meridiem eſt aliud regnum vocatũ Symolcra, in quo tam viri quam mulieres ſignant ſe ferro calido in facie, in 12. partibus, Et hij ſemper bellant cum hominibus nudis in alia regione. Vltra tranſiui ad aliam inſulam quæ vocatur Iaua cuius ambitus per mare eſt trium milliũ milliarium, & rex illius inſulæ habet ſub ſe 7. reges coronatos, & hæc inſula optimè inhabitatur, & melior ſecunda de mundo reputatur. In ea naſcũtur in copia garyophylli, cubibeæ, & nuces muſcatę: & breuiter omnes ſpecies ibi ſunt, & maxima abundantia omniũ victualium præterquam vini. Rex illius terræ habet palatium nobiliſſimũ inter omnia quæ vidi altiſſimè ſtat, & gradus & ſcalas habet altiſſimos, quorum ſemper vnus gradus eſt aureus, alius argenteus; Pauimentum verò vnum laterem habet de auro, aliũ de argẽto. Parietes verò omnes interius ſunt laminati laminis aureis, in quibus ſculpti ſunt Equites de auro habentes circa caput circulum aureum plenum lapidibus pretioſis: Tectum eſt de auro puro. Cum iſto rege ille magnus Canis de Katay frequenter fuit in bello: Quem tamen ſemper ille Rex vicit & ſuperauit.

De arboribus dantibus farinam, & mel, & venenum.

IVxta iſtam Inſulam eſt alia contrata vocata Panten, vel alio nomine Tathalamaſim, & Rex illius contratæ multas inſulas habet ſub ſe. In illa terra ſunt arbores dantes farinam, & mel, & vinum, & etiam venenum periculoſius quod ſit in mundo, quia contra illud non eſt remedium, niſi vnum ſolum, & eſt illud. Si aliquis illud venenum ſumpſiſſet, ſi velit liberari, ſumat ſtercus hominis & cum aqua temperet, & in bona quantitate bibat, & ſtatim fugat venenũ faciens exirę per inferiores partes. Farinam autem faciunt arbores hoc modo, ſunt magnæ & baſſæ, & quandò inciduntur cum ſecuri propè terram, exit de ſtipite liquor quidam ſicut gummæ, quem accipiunt homines & ponunt in ſacculis de folijs factis, & per quindecim dies in ſole dimittunt, & in fine decimi quinti diei ex iſto liquore deſiccato fit farina, quã primò ponunt in aqua maris, poſteà lauant eam cum aqua dulci, & fit paſta valdè bona & odorifera, de qua faciunt cibos vel panes ſicut placet eis. De quibus panibus ego comedi, & eſt panis exterius pulcher, ſed interius aliquantulum niger. In hac contrata eſt mare mortuum quod ſemper currit verſus meridiem, in quod ſi homo ceciderit, nunquam poſteà comparet. In contrata illa inueniũtur Cannæ longiſſimæ plures paſſus habentes quàm 60. & ſunt magnæ vt arbores. Aliæ etiã Cannæ ſunt ibi quæ vocantur Caſſan quæ per terrã diriguntur vt gramen, & in quolibet nodo earũ ramuli producuntur qui etiam prolongantur ſuper terram per vnum miliare ferè: in hijs Cannis reperiuntur lapides, quorum ſi quis vnum ſuper ſe portauerit, non poterit incidi aliquo ferro, De multitudine Piſcium, qui ſe proijciunt in aridam.

IN hac contrata vnũ mirabile valdè reperitur, quòd vnaquæq; generatio piſcium in mari ad iſtã contratam venit in tanta quantitate, quòd per magnũ ſpatium maris nil videtur niſi dorſa piſcium, & ſuper aridam ſe proijciunt quando propè ripam ſunt, & permittũt homines per tres dies venire, & de illis ſumere quantum placuerint, & tunc redeũt ad mare: Poſt illã ſpeciem per illum modum venit alia ſpecies, & offert ſe, & ſic de omnibus ſpeciebus, ſemel tamen tantum hoc faciunt in anno. Et quæſiui à gente illa quomodo & qualiter hoc poſſit fieri? reſponderunt quòd hoc modo piſces per naturã docentur venire, & imperatorem ſuum reuereri. Ibi etiã ſunt teſtitudines ita magnę ſicut eſt vnus furnus, & multa alia vidi quę incredibilia forent, niſi homo illa vidiſſet. In illa etiã contrata homo mortuus cõburitur, & vxor viua cùm eo, ſicut ſuperius de alia cõtrata dictũ eſt, quia dicunt homines illi quòd illa vadit ad alium mundum ad morandum cum eo, ne ibi aliam vxorẽ accipiat. Vltra tranſiui per mare Oceanum verſus meridiem, & tranſiui per multas contratas & inſulas, quarum vna vocatur Moumoran, & habet in circuitu 2000. milliaria, in qua homines portãt facies caninas & mulieres ſimilitèr, & vnũ bouem adorant pro Deo ſuo, & ideò quilibet vnũ bouẽ aureum vel argenteũ in fronte portat: Homines illius cõtratæ & mulieres vadunt totaliter nudi, niſi quòd vnum pannum lineum portant ante verenda ſua. Homines illius regionis ſunt maximi & fortiſſimi, & quiá vadunt nudi, quando debent bellare, portant vnum ſcutum de ferro, quod cooperit eos à capite vſq; ad pedes, & ſi contingat eos aliquem de aduerſarijs capere in bello qui pecunia non poſſit redimi, ſtatim comedunt eum; ſi autem poſſit ſe redimere pecunia, illum abire permittunt: Rex eorum portat 300. margaritas ad collum ſuum maximas & pulcherrimas, & 300. orationes omni die dicit Deo ſuo: Hic etiam portat in digito ſuo vnum lapidem longitudinis vnius ſpanſæ, & dum habet illũ videtur ab alijs quaſi vna flãma ignis, & ideò nullus audet ſibi appropinquarè, & dicitur quòd non eſt lapis in mundo pretioſior illo. TRanſiui per aliam inſulam vocatam Ceilan, quæ habet in ambitu pluſquã duo millia milliaria, in qua ſunt ſerpentes quaſi infiniti, & maxima multitudo leonum, vrſarum, & omnium animalium rapacium, & ſilueſtrium, & potiſſimè elephantũ. In illa contrata eſt mons maximus, in quo dicunt gentes illius regionis quòd Adam planxit Abel filium ſuum 500 annis. In medio illius montis eſt planicies pulcherrima, in qua eſt lacus paruus multum habens de aqua, & homines illi dicunt aquam illam fuiſſe de lachrymis Adæ & Euæ, ſed probaui hoc falſum eſſe, quia vidi aquam in lacu ſcaturire: hæc aqua plena eſt hirudinibus & ſanguiſugis, & lapidibus pretioſis; iſtos lapides rex non accipit ſibi, ſed ſemel vel bis in anno permittit pauperes ſub aqua ire pro lapidibus, & omnes quot poſſunt colligere illis concedit, vt orent pro anima ſua, Vt autẽ poſſint ſub aqua ire accipiunt lymones, & cum illis vngunt ſe valdè benè, & ſic nudos ſe in aquam ſubmergunt, & ſanguiſugæ illis nocere non poſſunt. Ab iſto lacu aqua exit & currit vſq; ad mare, & in tranſitu quandò retrahit ſe, fodiuntur Rubiæ, & adamantes, & margaritæ, & aliæ gemmæ pretioſæ: vndè opinio eſt quod rex ille magis abundat lapidibus pretioſis, quàm aliquis in mundo. In contrata illa ſunt quaſi omnia genera animalium & auium; & dixerunt mihi gentes illæ, quòd animalia illa nullũ forenſem inuadunt, nec offendunt, ſed tantũ homines illius regionis. peſſimi homines, qui comedunt carnes crudas, & omnem immunditiã faciunt quæ quaſi excogitari nõ poterit; nam pater comedit filium, & filius patrẽ, & maritus vxorem, & è contrario, & hoc per hunc modum: ſi pater alicuius infirmetur, filius vadit ad Aſtrologum ſacerdotem, ſcz: rogans eum quòd conſulat Deum ſuum, ſi pater de tali infirmitate euadet, vel non. Tunc ambo vadunt ad idolum aureum, vel argenteum, faciẽtes orationes in hac forma. Domine, tu es Deus noſter, te adoramus, & rogamus vt nobis reſpondeas, debetnè talis à tali infirmitate mori vel liberari? Tunc Dęmon reſpõdet, & ſi dicat, viuet, filius vadit & miniſtrat illi vſq; ad plenã conualeſcentiã: Si autẽ dicat, morietur, Sacerdos ibit ad eum, & vnum pannum ſuper os eius ponet, & ſuffocabit eum, & ipſum mortuum incidet in fruſta, & inuitabuntur omnes amici, & parentes eius ad comedendum eum cum canticis, & omni lætitia, oſſa tamen eius honorificè ſepelient. Ego autem coram Deo nihil hîc refero, niſi illud de quo certus ſum ſicut homo certificari poterit. De iſta inſula inquiſiui à multis expertis, qui omnes vno ore reſponderunt mihi, dicentes, quod iſta India 4400, inſulas continet ſub ſe, ſiue in ſe, in qua etiam ſunt 64. reges coronati, & etiam dicunt quod maior pars illius inſulæ benè inhabitatur. Et hîc iſtius Indiæ facio finem.

De India ſuperiori, & de Prouincia Manci.

INprimis refero, quòd cum tranſirem per mare Oceanum per multas dietas verſus Orientem, perueni ad illam magnã prouinciam Manci, quę India vocatur à Latinis. De iſta India ſuperiori inquiſiui à Chriſtianis, Saracenis, idolatris, & omnibus, qui officiales ſunt domini Canis magni, qui omnes vno ore reſponderunt, quòd hæc prouincia Manci habet pluſquam 2000. magnarũ ciuitatum, & in ipſa eſt maxima copia omniũ victualium, puta, panis, vini, riſi, carniũ, piſciũ, &c. Omnes homines iſtius prouinciæ ſunt artifices & mercatores, qui pro quacunq; penuria, dummodo proprijs manibus iuuare ſe poſſent per labores, nunquã ab aliquo eleemoſynã peterent. Viri iſtius prouinciæ ſunt ſatis formoſi, ſed pallidi, & raſas & paruas barbas habentes; fœminę verò ſunt pulcherrimę inter omnes de mundo. Prima ciuitas ad quam veni de iſta India vocatur Ceuskalon, & diſtat à mari per vnã dietam, poſitáq; eſt ſuper flumen, cuius aqua propè mare cui contignatur, aſcendit ſuper terram per 12. dietas. Totus populus illius Indiæ idolatrat. Iſta autem ciuitas tantum nauigiũ habet, quod incredibile foret niſi videnti. In hac ciuitate vidi quod 300. libræ de bono & recenti zinzibero habentur pro minori quàm pro vno groſſo: Ibi ſunt anſeres groſſiores & pulchriores, & maius forũ de illis, quàm ſit in mundo, vt credo, & ſunt albiſſimi ſicut lac, & habent vnum os ſuper caput quantitatis oui, & habet colorem ſanguineũ, ſub gula habent vnã pellem pendentem ſemipedalem: Pinguiſſimi ſunt, & optimi fori: & ita eſt de anatibus, & gallinis, quæ magnæ ſunt valdè in illa terra pluſquam duæ de noſtris. Ibi ſunt ſerpentes maximi, & capiuntur & à gente illa comeduntur: vnde qui faceret feſtũ ſolemne, & non daret ſerpẽtes, nihil reputaret ſe facere: breuitèr in hac ciuitate ſunt omnia victualia in maxima abundantia. Indè tranſiui per ciuitates multas, & veni ad ciuitatẽ nomine Kaitan, in qua fratres Minores habent duo loca, ad quæ portaui de oſſibus fratrũ noſtrorum pro fide Chriſti interfectorum, de quibus ſupra. In hac eſt copia omnium victualium pro leuiſſimo foro, hæc ciuitas ita magna eſt, ſicut bis Bouonia, & in ea multa monaſteria religioſorum, qui omnes idolis ſeruiũt. In vno autem iſtorũ monaſteriorum ego fui, & dictum eſt mihi quòd inerant 3000. religioſorum habentiũ 11000. idolorum, & vnum illorum, quod quaſi paruũ inter cętera mihi videbatur, eſt ita magnũ ſicut Chriſtophorus noſter. Iſti religioſi omni die paſcunt Deos ſuos, vnde ſemel iui ad videndũ comeſtionem illam, & vidi quòd illa quę detulerunt ſibi comeſtibilia ſunt, & calidiſſima, & multũ fumigãtia, ita quòd fumus aſcendit ad idola, & dixerũt Deos illo fumo recreari. Totum autẽ cibum illi reportauerũt & comederũt, & ſic de fumo tantũ Deos ſuos pauerunt.

De Ciuitate Fuko.

VLtra verſus Orientem veni ad ciuitatem quę vocatur Fuko, cuius circuitus cõtinet 30. milliaria, in qua ſunt Galli maximi & pulcherrimi, & gallinæ omnes ita albæ ſicut nix, lanam ſolum pro pennis habentes ſicut pecudes. Hæc ciuitas pulcherrima eſt, & ſita ſupra mare. Vltra iui per 18. dietas, & pertranſij multas terras & ciuitates, & in tranſitu veni ad quendam montem magnum, & vidi quòd in vno latere montis omnia animalia erant nigra vt carbo, & homines & mulieres diuerſum modum viuendi habent: ab alio autem latere omnia animalia erant alba ſicut nix, & homines totaliter diuerſè ab alijs vixerunt. Ibi omnes fœminæ quæ ſunt deſponſatæ portant in ſignum quòd habent maritos vnum magnum barile de cornu in capite. Inde tranſiui per 18. dietas alias, & veni ad quoddã magnum flumen, & intraui ciuitatem vnã, quæ tranſuerſum illius fluminis habet pontem maximũ, & hoſpitabar in domo vnius hoſpitarij, qui volens lens mihi complacere, dixit mihi: ſi velis videre piſcari, veni mecum; & duxit me ſuper pontem, & vidi in brachijs ſuis mergos ligatos ſuper perticas, ad quorum gulã vbi ille ligauit vnũ filum, ne illi capientes piſces, comederent eos: Poſtea in brachio vno poſuit 3, ciſtas magnas, & tunc diſſoluit mergos de perticis, qui ſtatim in aquã intrauerunt, & piſces ceperunt, & ciſtas illas repleuerunt in parua hora, quibus repletis vir ille diſſoluit fila à collis eorũ, & ipſi reintrantes flumen ſe de piſcibus recreauerũt, & recreati ad perticas redierunt, & ſe ligari ſicut prius permiſerunt: Ego autẽ de illis piſcibus comedi, & optimi mihi videbãtur. Inde tranſiens per multas dietas veni ad vnã ciuitatem quæ vocatur *Kanaſia, quæ ſonat in lingua noſtra ciuitas cœli: Nunquam ita magnã ciuitatem vidi, Circuitus enim eius cõtinet 100. milliaria, nec in ea vidi ſpatiũ quin benè inhabitaretur; Imò vidi multas domus habentes 10. vel 12. ſolaria vnũ ſupra aliud: hæc habet ſuburbia maxima continentia maiorẽ populum quàm ipſa ciuitas contineat, 12. portas habet principales, & in via de qualibet illarũ portarum ad 8. milliaria ſunt ciuitates fortè maiores vt æſtimo, quàm eſt ciuitas Venetiarũ, & Padua, Hæc ciuitas ſita eſt in aquis quæ ſemper ſtant, & nec fluunt, nec refluunt, vallum tamẽ habet propter ventum ſicut ciuitas Venetiarum, In ea ſunt plus decem mille & 2. pontium, quorum multos numeraui & tranſiui, & in quolibet ponte ſtant cuſtodes ciuitatis continuè cuſtodientes ciuitatem pro magno Cane imperatore Catai. Vnum mandatum dicunt gentes illius ciuitatis a domino ſe recepiſſe. Nam quilibet ignis ſoluit vnũ balis, i. 5. cartas bombicis, qui vnum florenũ cum dimidio valent, & 10. vel 12. ſupellectiles facient vnum ignem, & ſic pro vno igne ſoluent. Iſti ignes ſunt benè 85. Thuman, cum alijs 4. Saracenorum quæ faciunt 89. Thuma verò vnum decem milia ignium facit, reliqui autem de populo ciuitatis ſunt alij Chriſtiani, alij mercatores, & alij tranſeuntes per terram, vndè maximè fui miratus quo modo tot corpora hominũ poterant ſimul habitare: In ea eſt maxima copia victualium, ſcz. panis & vini, & carnium de porco præcipuè cum alijs neceſſarijs.

IN illa ciuitate 4. fratres noſtri conuerterant vnum potentem ad fidẽ Chriſti, in cuius hoſpitio continuè habitabã, dum fui ibi, qui ſemel dixit mihi, Ara, i. pater, vis tu venire & videre ciuitatem iſtã; & dixi quòd ſic, & aſcendimus vnã barcham, & iuimus ad vnũ monaſterium maximũ, de quo vocauit vnũ religioſum ſibi notũ, & dixit ſibi de me, Iſte Raban Frãcus, i. religioſus venit deindè vbi ſol occidit, & nunc vadit Cambaleth, vt deprecetur vitã pro magno Cane, & ideò oſtendas ſibi aliquid, quòd ſi reuertatur ad contratas ſuas poſſit referre quòd tale quid nouũ vidi in Canaſia ciuitate: tunc ſumpſit ille religioſus duos maſtellos magnos repletos reliquijs quæ ſupererant de menſa, & duxit me ad vnã percluſam paruam, quam aperuit cum claue, & aparuit viridarium gratioſum & magnũ in quod intrauimus, & in illo viridario ſtat vnus monticulus ſicut vnũ campanile, repletus amœnis herbis & arboribus, & dum ſtaremus ibi, ipſe ſumpſit cymbalũ, & incœpit percutere ipſum ſicut percutitur quandò monachi intrant refectoriũ, ad cuius ſonitũ multa animalia diuerſa deſcenderunt de monte illo, aliqua vt ſimiæ, aliqua vt Cati, Maymones, & aliqua faciem hominis habentia, & dum ſic ſtarem congregauerunt ſe circa ipſum, 4000. de illis animalibus, & ſe in ordinibus collocauerunt, coram quibus poſuit paropſidem & dabat eis comedere, & cum comediſſent iterum cymbalum percuſſit, & omnia ad loca propria redierunt. Tunc admiratus inquiſiui quæ eſſent animalia iſta? Et reſpondit mihi quod ſunt animæ nobilium virorũ, quas nos hîc paſcimus amore Dei, qui regit orbẽ, & ſicut vnus homo fuit nobilis, ita anima eius poſt mortem in corpus nobilis animalis intrat. Animæ verò ſimpliciũ & ruſticorũ, corpora vilium animaliũ intrant. Incœpi iſtã abuſionẽ improbare, ſed nihil valuit ſibi, nõ enim poterat credere, quòd aliqua anima poſſet ſine corpore manere, Indè tranſiui ad quandam ciuitatem nomine Chilenſo, cuius muri per 40. milliaria circuerunt. In iſta ciuitate ſunt 360. pontes lapidei pulchriores quàm vnquam viderim, & benè inhabitatur, & nauigiũ maximum habet, & copiã omnium victualiũ, & aliorum bonorũ. Inde iui ad quoddã flumen dictũ Thalay, quod vbi eſt ſtrictius habet in latitudine 7. milliaria, & illud flumen per medium terræ Pygmæorum tranſit, quorum ciuitas vocatur Kakam, quæ de pulchrioribus ciuitatibus mũdi eſt. Iſti Pigmæi habent longitudinẽ trium ſpanſarum mearũ, & faciunt maiora & meliora goton, & bombicinã quàm aliqui homines in mundo. Indè per illud flumen tranſiens, veni ad vnam ciuitatẽ Ianzu, in qua eſt vnus locus fratrum noſtrorũ, & ſunt in ea tres eccleſiæ Neſtorianorũ: hæc ciuitas nobilis eſt, & magna, habens in ſe 48. Thuman ignium, & in ea omnia victualia, & animalia in magna copia, de quo Chriſtiani viuunt: Dominus iſtius ciuitatis ſolum de ſale habet in redditibus 50. Thuman Baliſi, & valet baliſus vnum florenũ cum dimidio: Ita quòd vnum Thuman facit 15. millia florenorum, vnã tamen gratiam facit dominus populo, quia dimittit ei, ne ſit cariſtia in eo, 200. Thuman. Habet hęc ciuitas conſuetudinem, quòd quando vnus vult facere conuiuium amicis ſuis, ad hoc ſunt hoſpitia deputata, & vbi ille circuit per hoſpites, ſpites, dicens ſibi tales amicos meos habebis, quos feſtabis nomine meo, & tãtum in feſto volo expendere, & per illum modum meliùs conuiuant amici in pluribus hoſpitijs quàm facerent in vno. Per 10. milliaria ab iſta ciuitate in càpite fluminis Thalay eſt vna ciuitas vocata Montu, Montu. quæ maius nauigium habet, quàm viderim in toto mundo; Et omnes naues ibi ſunt albæ ſicùt nix, & in ipſis ſunt hoſpitia, & multa alia quæ nullus homo crederet niſi viderentur.

De ciuitate Cambaleth.

INdè tranſiui per 8. dietas per multas terras & ciuitates, & veni tandèm per aquàm dulcem àd quãdam ciuitatem nomine Leneyn, quæ eſt poſita ſuper flumen vocatum Caramoran, quod Caramoran. per medium Catai tranſit, & magnum damnum ſibi infert, quando erumpit. Indè tranſiens per flumen verſus Orientem per multas dietas & ciuitates, veni ad vnam ciuitatem nomine Sumacoso, quæ maiorem copiam habet de ſerico, quàm aliqua ciuitas in mundo; Quando enim eſt maior cariſtia Serici, ibi 40. libræ habentur pro minori quàm pro 8. groſſis. In ea eſt copia omnium mercimoniorũ, & omnium victuallium, panis, vini, carnium, piſcium, & omnium ſpecierum electarum. Inde tranſiui verſus Orientem per multas ciuitates, & veni ad illam nobilem, & nominatam Cambaleth quæ eſt ciuitas multum antiqua, & eſt in prouincia Catai, & eam ceperunt Tartari: Cambalet. Et iuxta eam ad dimidium miliare aliam ciuitatem fecerunt, quæ vocatur Caido & hæc 12. portas habet, & ſemper inter vnam & aliam ſunt duo miliaria, & medium inter illas ciuitates benè inhabitatur, ita quòd faciunt quaſi vnam ciuitatem; Et ambitus iſtarum duarum ciuitatum eſt pluſquàm 40. milliaria. In hac ciuitate magnus imperator Canis habet ſedem Mandeuil cap. 33. ſuam principalem, & ſuum magnum palatium, cuius muri benè 4. milliaria continent; & infra illud palatium ſunt multa alia palatia dominorum de familia ſua. In palatio etiam illo eſt vnus mons pulcherrimus cõſitus arboribus, propter quod mons viridis nominatur, & in monte palatium amœniſſimum in quo communitèr Canis reſidet: A latere autem montis eſt vnus lacus magnus, ſupra quem pons pulcherrimus eſt factus, & in illo lacu eſt magna copia anſerum & anatum, & omnium auium aquaticarum; & in ſilua montis copia omnium auium & ferarum ſilueſtrium, & ideò quandò dominus Canis vult venari non oportet eum exire palatium ſuum. Palatium verò principale, in quo ſedes ſua eſt, eſt magnum valdè, & habet interius 14. columnas aureas, & omnes muri eius cooperti ſunt pellibus rubeis quæ dicuntur nobiliores pelles de mundo: Et in medio palatij eſt vna pigna altitudinis duorum paſſuum, quę tota eſt de vno lapide pretioſo nomine merdochas; & eſt tota circumligata auro, & in quolibet angulo eius eſt vnus ſerpens de auro qui verberat os fortiſſimè: Habet etiam hęc pigna retia de margaritis, & per iſtam pignam defertur potus per meatus & conductus qui in curia regis habetur; & iuxta eam pendent multa vaſa aurea cum quibus volentes bibere poſſunt. In hoc autem palatio ſunt multi pauones de auro; & cùm aliquis Tartarus facit feſtum domino ſuo, tunc quando conuiuantes collidunt manus ſuas prę gaudio & lætitia, pauones emittunt alas ſuas, & expandunt caudas, & videntur tripudiare; Et hoc credo factũ arte Magica, vel aliqua cautela ſubterranea.

De gloria magni Canis.

QVando autem magnus ille Imperator Canis in ſede ſua imperiali reſidet, tunc a ſiniſtro latere ſedet Regina, & per vnum gradum inferius duo mulieres quas ipſe tenet pro ſe, quando non poteſt ad Reginam accedere: In infimo autem gradu reſident omnes dominæ de ſua parentela. Omnes autem mulieres nuptæ portant ſupra caput ſuum vnum pedem hominis, longitudinis vnius brachij cum dimidio; & ſubter illum pedem ſunt pennę gruis, & totus ille pes ornatur maximis margaritis. A latere verò dextro ipſius Canis reſidet filius eius primogenitus, regnaturus poſt ipſum, & inferius ipſo omnes qui ſunt de ſanguine regio: Ibi etiam ſunt 4. ſcriptores ſcribentes omnia verba quæ dicit rex; Ante cuius conſpectum ſunt Barones ſui, & multi alij nobiles cum ſua gente maxima, quorum nullus audet loqui niſi à domino licentia petatur exceptis fatuis & hiſtrionibus, qui ſuum dominum conſolari habent; Illi etiam nihil audent facere, niſi ſecundum quod Dominus voluerit eis legem imponere. Ante portam palatij ſunt Barones cuſtodientes, nè aliquis limen portæ tangat. Cùm autem ille Canis voluerit facere conuiuium, habet ſecum 14000. Barones portantes circulos, & coronulas in capite, & domino ſuo ſeruientes; Et quilibet portat vnam veſtem de auro & margaritis tot quot valent plus quàm decies millies florenorum. Curia eius optime ordinatur per denarios, centenarios, & millenarios, & talitèr quòd quilibet in ſuo ordine peragit officium ſibi deputatum, nec aliquis defectus reperitur. Ego frater Odoricus fui ibi per tres annos, & multotiens in iſtis feſtis ſuis fui, quià nos fratres minores in ſua curia habemus locum nobis deputatum, & oportet nos ſempèr ire, & dare ſibi noſtram benedictionem: Et inquiſiui ab illis de curia, de numero illorum qui ſunt in curia domini, & reſponderunt mihi quòd de hiſtrionibus ſunt bene 18. Thuman; Cuſtodes autem canum & beſtiarum, & auium ſunt 15. Thuman; Medici verò pro corpore Regis ſunt 400. Chriſtiani autem 8. & vnus Saracenus. Et ego quando fui ibi, hij omnes omnia neceſſaria tam ad victum, quam ad veſtitum habebant de curia domini Canis. Quando autē vult equitare de vna terra ad aliam, habet 4. exercitus equitum, & vnus per vnam dietam ipſum antecedit, ſecundus aliam, & tertius ſimilitèr, & quartus; ita quòd ſemper ipſe ſe tenet in medio in modum crucis; & ita omnes exercitus habent omnes dietas ſuas ordinatas, quòd inueniunt omnia victualia parata ſine defectu. Illémet autem dominus Canis per illum modum vadit; Sedet in curru cùm duabus rotis in quo facta eſt pulcherrima ſella tota de lignis Aloe, & auro ornata, & margaritis maximis, & lapidibus pretioſis; & 4. Elephantes benè ordinati ducunt iſtum currum, quos præcedunt 4. equi altiſſimi optimè cooperti. Iuxta currum à lateribus ſunt 4. Barones tenentes currum, nè aliquis appropinquet domino ſuo. Supra currum ſedent duo Gerfalcones albiſſimi, & dùm videt aues quos vult capere, dimittit Falcones volare, & capiunt eas; Et ſic habet ſolatium ſuum equitando, & per iactum vnius lapidis nullus audet appropinquare currui niſi populus aſſignatus: vndè incredibile eſſet homini qui non vidiſſet de numero gentis ſuæ, & reginæ, & primogeniti ſui. Iſte dominus Canis imperium ſuum diuiſit in 12. partes, & vna habet ſub ſe 200. magnarum ciuitatum: vndè ita latum & longum eſt ſuum imperium, quòd ad quamcunq; partem iret, ſatis haberet facere in ſex menſibus, exceptis inſulis, quæ ſunt bene 5000.

De hoſpitijs paratis per totum imperium pro tranſeuntibus.

ISte dominus, vt tranſeuntes habeant omnia neceſſaria ſua per totum ſuum imperium, fecit hoſpitia præparari vbique per vias; in quibus ſunt omnia parata quæ ad victualia pertinent: Cum autem aliqua nouitas oritur in imperio ſuo, tunc ſi diſtat, ambaſſiatores ſuper equos vel dromedarios feſtinant, & cùm laſſantur in curſu, pulſant cornu, & proximum hoſpitium parat vnum ſimilitèr equum, qui quando alius venit feſſus accipit literam, & currit ad hoſpitium, & ſic per hoſpitia, & per diuerſos curſores rumor per 30. dietas, vno die naturali venit ad imperarorem; & ideò nihil ponderis poteſt fieri in imperio ſuo, quin ſtatim ſcitur ab eo. Cum autem ipſe Canis vult ire venatum; iſtum modum habet; Extra Cambaleth ad 20. dietas, eſt vna foreſta quæ 6. dietas continet in ambitu; in qua ſunt tot genera animalium & auium quòd mirabile eſt dicere: Ad illud nemus vadit in fine trium annorum vel quatuor cum tota gente, cum qua ipſum circuit, & canes intrare permittit, qui animalia, ſcilicet leones, ceruos, & alia animalia reducunt ad vnam planitiem pulcherrimam in medio nemoris, quia ex clamoribus canum maximè tremunt omnes beſtiæ ſyluæ. Tunc accedit magnus Canis ſuper tres elephantes & 5. ſagittas mittit in totam multitudinem animalium, & poſt ipſum omnes Barones, & poſt ipſos alij de familia ſua emittunt ſagittas ſuas; & omnes ſagittæ ſunt ſignatæ certis ſignis & diuerſis: Tunc vadit ad animalia interfecta, dimittens viua nemus reintrare vt aliâs habeat ex eis venationem ſuam, & quilibet illud animal habebit in cuius corpore inuenit ſagittam ſuam quam iaciebat.

De quatuor feſtis quæ tenet in anno Canis in curia.

QVatuor magna feſta in anno facit Dominus Canis, ſcilicet feſtum natiuitatis, feſtum circumciſionis, coronationis, & deſponſationis ſuæ; & ad iſta feſta conuocat omnes Barones, & hiſtriones, & omnes de parentela ſua. Tunc domino Cane in ſuo throno ſedente, accedunt Barones cum circulis & coronis in capite, veſtiti vario modo, quia aliqui de viridi, ſcilicet primi, ſecundi de ſanguineo, & tertij de croceo, & tenent in manibus vnam tabulam eburneam de dentibus Elephantum, & cinguntur cingulis aureis vno ſemiſſe latis, & ſtant pedibus ſilentium tenentes. Circa illos ſtant hiſtriones cum ſuis inſtrumentis: In vno autem angulo cuiuſdā magni palatij reſident Philoſophi omnes ad certas horas, & puncta attendentes; & cùm deuenitur ad punctū & horam petitam à philoſopho, vnus præco clamat valentèr. Inclinetis vos omnes imperatori veſtro: tunc omnes Barones cadunt ad terram; & iterum clamat, Surgite omnes, & illi ſtatim ſurgunt. Iterum Philoſophi ad aliud punctum attendunt, & cùm peruentum fuerit, iterum præco clamat; ponite digitum in aurem, & ſtatim dicit, extrahite ipſum; iterùm ad aliud punctum clamat, Buratate farinam: & multa alia faciunt, quæ omnia dicunt certam ſignificationē habere, quæ ſcribere nolui, nec curaui, quia vana ſunt & riſu digna. Cùm autem peruentū fuerit ad horam hiſtrionum, tunc Philoſophi dicunt, facite feſtum domino, & omnes pulſant inſtrumenta ſua, & faciunt maximum ſonitum; & ſtatim alius clamat; Taceant omnes, & omnes tacent: Tunc accedunt hiſtrionatrices ante dominum dulcitèr modulantes, quod mihi plus placuit. Tunc veniunt leones, & faciunt reuerentiam domino Cani; Et tunc hiſtriones faciunt ciphos aureos plenos vino volare per aërem, & ad ora hominum ſe applicare vt bibant. Hæc & multa alia mirabilia in curia illius Canis vidi, quæ nullus crederet niſi videret; & ideò dimitto ea. De alio mirabili audiui à fide dignis, quòd in vno regno iſtius Canis in quo ſunt montes Kapſei (& dicitur illud regnum Kalor) naſcuntur pepones maximi, qui quando ſunt maturi aperiuntur, & intùs inuenitur vna beſtiola ſimilis vni agnello: ſicut audiui quòd in mari Hybernico ſtant arbores ſupra ripam maris & portant fructum ſicut eſſent cucurbitæ, quæ certo tempore cadunt in aquam & fiunt aues vocatæ Bernakles, & illud eſt verum.

De diuerſis Prouincijs & ciuitatibus.

DE iſto imperio Katay receſſi poſt tres annos, & tranſiui 50. dietas verſus Occidentẽ; & tandem veni ad terram Pretegoani, cuius ciuitas principalis Koſan vocatur, quæ multas habet ſub ſe ciuitates. Vltra per multas dietas iui, & perueni ad vnam prouinciam vocatam Kaſan; & hæc eſt ſecunda melior prouincia mundi, vt dicitur, & eſt optimè habitata: Sic quod quando exitur à porta vnius ciuitatis, videntur portæ alterius ciuitatis, ſicut egomet vidi de multis. Latitudo Prouinciæ eſt 50. dietarum, & longitudo pluſquam 60. In ea eſt maxima copia omnium victualium, & maximè caſtaneorum; & hæc eſt vna de 12. prouincijs magni Canis. Vltra veni ad vnum regnum vocatum Tibek quod eſt ſubiectum Cani, in quo eſt maior copia panis & vini, quam ſit in toto mundo vt credo. Gens illius terræ moratur communiter in tentorijs factis ex feltris nigris: Principalis ciuitas ſua murata eſt pulcherrimè ex lapidibus albiſſimis, & nigerrimis interſcalariter diſpoſitis & curioſè compoſitis, & omnes viæ eius optimè pauatæ. In iſta contrata nullus audet effundere ſanguinem hominis, nec alicuius animalis, ob reuerentiam vnius Idoli. In iſta ciuitate moratur Abaſſi 1. Papa eorum, qui eſt caput & princeps omnium Idolatrarum; quibus dat & diſtribuit beneficia ſecundum morem eorum; ſicut noſter Papa Romanus eſt caput omnium Chriſtianorum. Fœminæ in hoc regno portant pluſquam centum tricas, & habent duos dentes in ore ita longos ſicut apri. Quando etiam pater alicuius moritur, tunc filius conuocat omnes ſacerdotes & hiſtriones, & dicit ſe velle patrem ſuum honorare, & facit eum ad campum duci ſequentibus parentibus omnibus, amicis, & vicinis, vbi ſacerdotes cum magna ſolemnitate amputant caput ſuum, dantes illud filio ſuo, & tunc totum corpus in fruſta concidunt, & ibi dimittunt, cum orationibus cum coredeuntes; Tunc veniunt vultures, de monte aſſuefacti ad huiuſmodi, & carnes omnes aſportant: Et ex tunc currit fama de eo quòd ſanctus eſt, quia angeli domini ipſum portant in paradiſum: Et iſte eſt maximus honor, quem reputat filius poſſe fieri patri ſuo mortuo: Tunc filius ſumit caput patris, & coquit ipſum, & comedit, de teſta eius faciens ciphum in quo ipſe cum omnibus de domo & cognatione eius bibunt cum ſolemnitate & lætitia in memoriam patris comeſti. Et multa vilia & abominabilia facit gens illa quæ non ſcribo, quia non valent, nec homines crederent niſi viderent.

Eadem hiſtoria de eodem populo apud Guilielmũ de Rubricis.

De diuite qui paſcitur à 50. Virginibus.

DVm fui in prouicia Manzi tranſiui iuxta palatium vnius hominis popularis, qui habuit 50. domicellas virgines ſibi continuè miniſtrantes, in omnibus paſcentes eum ſicut auis auiculas, & habet ſemper 5. fercula triplicata; & quando paſcunt eum, continuè cantant dulciſſimè: Iſte habet in redditibus Tagaris tiſi 30. Thuman, quorũ quodlibet decies millies facit: vnũ autem Tagar pondus eſt aſini. Palatium ſuum duo milliaria tenet in ambitu; cuius pauimentum ſemper vnum laterem habet aureum, alium argenteum: Iuxta ambitum iſtius palatij eſt vnus monticulus artificialis de auro & argento, ſuper quo ſtant Monaſteria, & campanilia, & alia delectabilia pro ſolatio illius popularis; Et dictum fuit mihi, quòd quatuor tales homines ſunt in regno illo. Nobilitas virorum eſt longos habere vngues in digitis, præcipuè pollicis quibus circueunt ſibi manus: Nobilitas autem & pulchritudo mulierum eſt paruos habere pedes: Et ideò matres quando filiæ ſuæ ſunt tenellæ ligant pedes earum, & non dimittunt creſcere. Vltra tranſiens verſus meridiem applicui ad quandam contratam, quæ vocatur Mileſtorite, quæ pulchra eſt valdè & fertilis; Et in iſta cõtrata erat vnus vocatus Senex de monte, qui inter duos montes fecerat ſibi vnum murum circumeuntem iſtos montes. Infra iſtum murum erant fontes pulcherrimi de mundo; Et iuxta fontes erant pulcherrimæ virgines in maximo numero, & equi pulcherrimi, & omne illud quod ad ſuauitatem, & delectationem corporis fieri poterit, & ideò illum locum vocant homines illius contratæ Paradiſum. Iſte Senex cùm viderit aliquẽ iuuenem formoſum & robuſtum, poſuit eum in illo paradiſo; Per quoſdam autem conductus deſcendere facit vinum & lac abundantèr. Iſte Senex cùm voluerit ſe vindicare, vel interficere regem aliquem vel Baronem, dicit illi qui præerat illi paradiſo vt aliquem de notis illius regis, vel Baronis introduceret in paradiſum illum, & illum delicijs frui permitteret, & tunc daret ſibi potionem vnam, quæ ipſum ſopiebat in tantum, quòd inſenſibilem redderet, & ipſum ſic dormientem faceret extra paradiſum deportari: qui excitatus & ſe extra paradiſum conſpiciens, in tanta triſtitia poſitus foret, quòd neſciret quid faceret: Tunc ad illum ſenem iret, rogans eum, vt iterùm in paradiſum introduceretur; qui ſibi dicit, tu illic introduci non poteris, niſi talem vel talem interficias; & ſiue interfeceris, ſiue non, reponam te in paradiſo, & ibidem poteris ſemper manere; Tunc ille ſic faceret, & omnes ſeni odioſos interficeret; Et ideò omnes reges orientales illum ſenem timuerunt, & ſibi tributum magnum dederunt.

De morte Senis de monte.

CVm autem Tartari magnam partem mundi cepiſſent, venerunt ad iſtum Senem, & dominium illius Paradiſi ab eo abſtulerunt, qui multos ſicarios de Paradiſo illo emiſit, & nobiliores Tartarorum interfici fecit. Tartari autem hoc videntes ciuitatem, in qua erat ſenex obſederunt, eum ceperunt, & peſſima morte interfecerunt. Hanc gratiam habent fratres ibidem, quòd citiſſimè per virtutem nominis Chriſti Ieſu, & in virtute illius ſanguinis pretioſi, quem effudit in cruce pro ſalute generis humani, dæmonia ab obſeſſis corporibus expellunt; Et quia multi ibidem ſunt obſeſſi, ducuntur per decem dietas ad fratres ligati, qui liberati ſtatim credunt in Chriſtum, qui liberauit eos habentes ipſum pro Deo ſuo, & baptizati ſunt, & idola ſua, & pecorum ſuorum ſtatim dant fratribus, quæ ſunt communitèr de feltro, & de crinibus mulierum: & fratres ignem in communi loco faciunt ad quem populus confluit, vt videat Deos vicinorum ſuorum comburi, & fratres coram populo Idola in ignem projiciunt; Et prima vice de igne exierunt; Tunc fratres ignem cum aqua benedicta conſperſerunt, & iterùm Idola in ignem proiecerunt, & dęmones in effigie fumi nigerrimi fugerunt, & Idola remanſerunt, & combuſta ſunt. Poſteà auditur clamor per aërem talis, vide, vide, quo modo de habitatione mea expulſus ſum. Et per iſtum modum fratres maximam multitudinem baptizant, qui citò recidiuant ad idola pecorum: qui fratres continuò quaſi ſtent cum illis, & illos informent. Aliud terribile fuit quod ego vidi ibi. Nam cùm irem per vnam vallem, quæ ſita eſt iuxta fluuium deliciarum, multa corpora mortua vidi, & in illa valle audiui ſonos muſicos dulces & diuerſos, & maximè de cytharis, vndè multum timui. Hæc vallis habet longitudinem ſeptem, vel octo milliarium ad plus, in quam ſi quis intrat, moritur, & nunquam viuus poteſt tranſire per medium illius vallis, & ideò omnes de contrata declinant à latere: Et tentatus eram intrare, & videre, quid hoc eſſet. Tandem orans & Deo me recommendans, & cruce ſignans, in nomine Ieſu intraui, & vidi tot corpora mortua ibi, quòd nullus crederet niſi videret. In hac valle ab vno eius latere, in vno ſaxo vnam faciem hominis vidi, quæ ita terribilitèr me reſpexit, quòd omninò credidi ibi fuiſſe mortuus: Sed ſemper hoc verbum (verbum caro factum eſt & habitauit in nobis) protuli, & cruce me ſignaui, nec propiùs quàm per 7. paſſus, vel 8. accedere capiti auſus fui: Iui autem fugiens ad aliud caput vallis, & ſuper vnum monticulum arenoſum aſcendi, in quo vndique circumſpiciens nihil vidi niſi cytharas illas, quas per ſe (vt mihi videbatur) pulſari & reſonare mirabiliter audiui. Cùm verò fui in cacumine montis, inueni ibi argentum in maxima quantitate, quaſi fuiſſent ſquamæ piſcium. Congregans autem inde in gremio meo pro mirabili oſtendendo, ſed ductus conſcientia, in terram proieci, nihil mecum reſeruans, & ſic per gratiam dei liber exiui. Cùm autem homines illius contratæ ſciuerunt me viuum exiſſe, reuerebantur me multum, dicentes me baptizatum & ſanctum; & corpora illa fuiſſe dæmonum infernalium qui pulſant cytharas vt homines alliciant intrare, & interficiant. Hæc de viſis certudinalitèr ego frater Odoricus hîc inſcripſi; & multa mirabilia omiſi ponere, quia homines non credidiſſent niſi vidiſſent.

De honore & reuerentia factis Domino Cani.

VNum tantùm referam de magno Cane quod vidi. Conſuetudo eſt in partibus illis quòd quando prędictus dominus per aliquam contratam tranſit, homines ante oſtia ſua accendunt ignem & apponunt aromata, et faciunt fumum, vt dominus tranſiens ſuauem ſentiat odorem, & multi obuiam ſibi vadunt. Dum autem ſemel veniret in Cambeleth, & fama vndique diuulgaretur de ſuo aduentu, vnus noſter Epiſcopus, & aliqui noſtri minores fratres & ego iuimus obuiàm ſibi benè per duas dietas: Et dum appropinquaremus ad eum, poſuimus crucem ſuper lignum, & ego habebam mecum in manu thuribulum, & incepimus cantare alta voce dicentes: Veni creator ſpiritus: Et dum ſic cantaremus audiuit voces noſtras, fecitque nos vocari, ac iuſſit nos ad eum accedere; cùm vt ſuprà dictum eſt, nullus audeat appropinquare currui ſuo ad iactum lapidis, niſi vocatus, exceptis illis qui currum cuſtodiunt. Et dum iuiſſemus ad eum, ipſe depoſuit galerum ſuum, ſiue capellū ineſtimabilis quaſi valoris, &

Anno Domini 1331, decima quarta die menſis Ianuarij obijt in Chriſto Beatus Odoricus ordinis fratrum Minorum, cuius precibus omnipotens Deus multa, & varia miracula demonſtrauit; quæ ego Guetelus notarius communis Vtini, filius domini Damiani de portu Gruario, de mandato & voluntate nobilis viri Domini Conradi de Buardigio Caſtaldionis, & conſilij Vtini, ſcripſi, ſicut potui, bona fide, & fratribus Minoribus exemplum dedi; ſed non de omnibus, quià ſunt innumerabilia, & mihi difficilia ad ſcribendum.

¶ Here beginneth the iournall of Frier Odoricus, one of the order of the Minorites, concerning ſtrange things which hee ſawe among the Tartars of the Eaſt.

Albeit many and ſundry things are reported by diuers authors concerning the faſhions and conditions of this world: notwithſtanding I frier Odoricus of Friuli, de portu Vahonis being deſirous to trauel vnto the forrein and remote nations of infidels, ſawe and heard great and miraculous things, which I am able truely to auouch. Firſt of al therefore ſayling from Pera by Conſtantinople, I arriued at Trapeſunda. This place is right commodiouſly ſituate, as being an hauen for the Perſians and Medes, and other countreis beyonde the ſea. In this lande I behelde with great delight a very ſtrange ſpectacle, namely a certaine man leading about with him more then foure thouſande partriges. The man himſelfe walked vpon the ground, and the partriges flew in the aire, which he ledde vnto a certaine caſtle called Zauena, being three dayes iourney diſtant from Trapeſunda. The ſaide partriges were ſo tame, that when the man was deſirous to lie downe and reſt, they would all come flocking about him like chickens. And ſo hee led them vnto Trapeſunda, and vnto the palace of the Emperour, who tooke as many of them as he pleaſed, and the reſt the ſaide man carried vnto the place from whence he came. In this citie lyeth the body of Athanaſius, vpon the gate of the citie. And then I paſſed on further vnto Armenia maior, to a certaine citie called Azaron, which had bene very rich in olde time, but nowe the Tartars haue almoſt layed it waſte. In the ſaide citie there was abundance of bread and fleſh, and of all other victuals except wine and fruites. This citie alſo is very colde, and is reported to be higher ſituated, then any other city in the world. It hath moſt holeſome and ſweete waters about it: for the veines of the ſaid waters ſeeme to ſpring and flow from the mighty riuer of Euphrates, which is but a dayes iourney from the ſaide city. Alſo, the ſaid citie ſtands directly in the way to Tauris. And I paſſed on vnto a certaine mountaine called Sobiſſacalo. In the foreſaide countrey there is the very ſame mountaine whereupon the Arke of Noah reſted: vnto the which I would willingly haue aſcended, if my company would haue ſtayed for me. Howbeit the people of that countrey report, that no man could euer aſcend the ſaid mountaine, because (ſay they) it pleaſeth not the higheſt God. And I trauailed on further vnto Tauris that great and royal city, which was in old time called Suſis. This city is accompted for traffique of marchandize the chiefe city of the world: for there is no kinde of victuals, nor any thing elſe belonging vnto marchandize, which is not to be had there in great abundance. This city ſtands very commodiouſly: for vnto it all the nations of the whole worlde in a maner may reſort for traffique. Concerning the ſaid citie, the Chriſtians in thoſe parts are of opinion, that the Perſian Emperour receiues more tribute out of it, then the King of France out of all his dominions. Neare vnto the ſaid city there is a ſalt-hill yeelding ſalt vnto the city: and of that ſalt ech man may take what pleaſeth him, not paying ought to any man therefore. In this city many Chriſtians of all nations do inhabite, ouer whom the Saracens beare rule in all things. Then I traueiled on further vnto a city called * Soldania, wherein the Perſian Emperour lieth all Sommer time: but in winter hee takes his progreſſe vnto another city ſtanding vpon the Sea called *Baku. Alſo the foreſaid city is very great and colde, hauing good and holeſome waters therein, vnto the which alſo ſtore of marchandize is brought. Moreouer I trauelled with a certaine company of Carauans toward vpper India: and in the way, after many dayes iourney, I came vnto the citie of the the three wiſemen called *Caſſan, which is a noble and renowmed city, ſauing that the Tartars haue deſtroyed a great part thereof: and it aboundeth with bread, wine, and many other commodities. From this city vnto Ieruſalem (whither the three foreſaid wiſemen were miraculouſly led) it is fiftie dayes iourney. There be many wonders in this citie alſo, which, for breuities ſake, I omit. From thence I departed vnto a certaine city called *Geſte, whence the Sea of Sand is diſtant, one dayes iourney, which is a moſt wonderfull and dangerous thing. In this city there is abundance of all kinds of victuals, and eſpecially of figs, reiſins, and grapes; more (as I ſuppoſe) then in any part of the whole world beſides. This is one of the three principall cities in all the Perſian Empire. Of this city the Saracens report, that no Chriſtian can by any meanes liue therein aboue a yeere. Then paſſing many dayes iourney on forward, I came vnto a certaine citie called *Comum, which was an huge and mightie city in olde time, conteyning well nigh fiftie miles in circuite, and hath done in times paſt great damage vnto the Romanes. In it there are ſtately palaces altogether deſtitute of inhabitants, notwithſtanding it aboundeth with great ſtore of victuals. From hence traueiling through many countreys, at length I came vnto the land of Iob named Hus, which is full of all kinde of victuals, and very pleaſantly ſituated. Thereabouts are certaine mountaines hauing good paſtures for cattell vpon them. Here alſo Manna is found in great aboundance. Foure partriges are here ſolde for leſſe then a groat. In this countrey there are moſt comely olde men. Here alſo the men ſpin and card, and not the women. This land bordereth vpon the North part of Chaldęa.

Of the maners of the Chaldæans, and of India.

The tower of Babel.

FRom thence I traueled into Chaldęa, which is a great kingdome, and I paſſed by the tower of Babel. This region hath a language peculiar vnto it ſelfe, and there are beautifull men, and deformed women. The men of the ſame countrey vſe to haue their haire kempt, and trimmed like vnto our women: and they weare golden turbants vpon their heades richly ſet with pearle, and pretious ſtones. The women are clad in a courſe ſmock onely reaching to their knees, and hauing long ſleeues hanging downe to the ground. And they goe bare-footed, wearing breeches which reach to the ground alſo. They weare no attire vpon their heads, but their haire hangs diſheueled ueled about their eares: and there be many other ſtrange things alſo. From thence I came into the lower India, which the Tartars ouerran and waſted. And in this countrey the people eat dates for the moſt part, whereof 42. li. are there ſold for leſſe then a groat. I paſſed further alſo many dayes iourney vnto the Ocean ſea, and the firſt land where I arriued, is called *Ormes, being well fortified, and hauing great ſtore of marchandize and treaſure therein. Such and ſo extreme is the heat in that countrey, that the priuities of men come out of their bodies and hang downe euen vnto their mid-legs. And therefore the inhabitants of the ſame place, to preſerue their owne liues, do make a certaine ointment, and anointing their priuie members therewith, do lap them vp in certaine bags faſtened vnto their bodies, for otherwiſe they muſt needs die. Here alſo they vſe a kinde of Bark or ſhippe called Iaſe being compact together onely with hempe. And I went on bourd into one of them, wherein I could not finde any yron at all, and in the ſpace of 28. dayes I arriued at the city of Thana, wherein foure of our Friers were martyred for the faith of Chriſt. This countrey is well ſituate, hauing abundance of bread and wine, and of other victuals therein. This kingdome in olde time was very large and vnder the dominion of king Porus, who fought a great battel with Alexander the great. The people of this countrey are idolaters worſhipping fire, ſerpents and trees. And ouer all this land the Saracens do beare rule, who tooke it by maine force, and they themſelues are in ſubiection vnto king Daldilus. There be diuers kinds of beaſts, as namely blacke lyons in great abundance, and apes alſo, and monkeis, and battes as bigge as our doues. Alſo there are miſe as bigge as our countrey dogs, and therefore they are hunted with dogs, becauſe cats are not able to incounter them. Moreouer, in the ſame countrey euery man hath a bundle of great boughs ſtanding in a water-pot before his doore, which bundle is as great as a piller, and it will not wither, ſo long as water is applied thereunto: with many other nouelties and ſtrange things, the relation whereof would breed great delight.

Ormus.

Thana, whereof Frederick Cæſar maketh mention.

How peper is had: and where it groweth.

MOreouer, that it may be manifeſt how peper is had, it is to be vnderſtood that it groweth in a certaine kingdome whereat I my ſelfe arriued, being called *Minibar, and it is not ſo plentifull in any other part of the worlde as it is there. For the wood wherein it growes conteineth in circuit 18. dayes iourney. And in the ſaid wood or forreſt there are two cities, one called *Flandrina, and the other Cyncilim. In Flandrina both Iewes and Chriſtians doe inhabite, betweene whom there is often contention and warre: howbeit the Chriſtians ouercome the Iewes at all times. In the foreſaid wood pepper is had after this maner: firſt it groweth in leaues like vnto pot-hearbs, which they plant neere vnto great trees as we do our vines, and they bring forth pepper in cluſters, as our vines doe yeeld grapes, but being ripe, they are of a greene colour, and are gathered as we gather grapes, and then the graines are layed in the Sunne to be dried, and being dried are put into earthen veſſels: and thus is pepper made and kept. Now, in the ſame wood there be many riuers, wherein are great ſtore of Crocodiles, and of other ſerpents, which the inhabitants thereabout do burne vp with ſtraw and with other dry fewel, and ſo they go to gather their pepper without danger. At the South end of the ſaid forreſt ſtands the city of Polumbrum, which aboundeth with marchandize of all kinds. All the inhabitants of that countrey do worſhip a liuing oxe, as their god, whom they put to labour for ſixe yeres, and in the ſeuenth yere they cauſe him to reſt from al his worke, placing him in a ſolemne and publique place, and calling him an holy beaſt. Moreouer they vſe this fooliſh ceremonie; Euery morning they take two baſons, either of ſiluer, or of gold, and with one they receiue the vrine of the oxe, and with the other his dung. With the vrine they waſh their face, their eyes, and all their fiue ſenſes. Of the dung they put into both their eyes, then they annoint the bals of their checks therewith, and thirdly their breaſt: and then they ſay that they are ſanctified for all that day; And as the people doe, euen ſo doe their King and Queene. This people worſhippeth alſo a dead idole, which, from the nauel vpward, reſembleth a man, and from the nauel downeward an oxe. The very ſame Idol deliuers oracles vnto them, and ſometimes requireth the blood of fourtie virgins for his hire. And therefore the men of that region do conſecrate their daughters and their ſonnes vnto their idols, euen as Chriſtians do their children vnto ſome Religion or Saint in heauen. Likewiſe they ſacrifice their ſonnes and their daughters, and ſo, much people is put to death before the ſaid Idol by reaſon of that accurſed ceremony. Alſo, many other hainous and abominable villanies doeth that brutiſh beaſtly people commit: and I ſawe many moe ſtrange things among them which I meane not here to inſert. Another moſt vile cuſtome the foreſaide nation doeth retaine: for when any man dieth they burne his dead corps to aſhes: and if his wife ſuruiueth him, her they burne quicke, becauſe (ſay they) ſhe ſhall accompany her huſband in his tilthe and huſbandry, when he is come into a new world. Howbeit the ſaid wife hauing children by her huſband, may if ſhe will, remaine ſtill aliue with them, without ſhame or reproch: notwithſtanding, for the moſt part, they all of them make choice to be burnt wᵗ their huſbands. Now, albeit the wife dieth before her huſband, that law bindeth not the huſband to any ſuch incõuenience, but he may mary another wife alſo. Likewiſe, yͤ ſaid nation hath another ſtrange cuſtome, in that their women drink wine, but their men do not. Alſo the women haue the lids & brows of their eyes & beards ſhauen, but the men haue not: with many other baſe & filthy faſhions which the ſaid women do vſe contrary to the nature of their ſexe. Frõ that kingdom I trauelled 10. daies iourney vnto another kingdom called Mobar, which containeth many cities. Within a certaine church of the ſame countrey, the body of S. Thomas the Apoſtle is interred, the very ſame church being full of idols: and in 15. houſes round about the ſaid Church, there dwell certaine prieſts who are Neſtorians, that is to ſay, falſe, and bad Chriſtians, and ſchiſmatiques.

Of a ſtrange and vncouth idole: and of certaine cuſtomes and ceremonies.

Perhaps he meaneth Comori,

Sumatra,

Iaua,

IN the ſaid kingdome of Mobar there is a wonderfull ſtrang idole, being made after the ſhape and reſemblance of a man, as big as the image of our Chriſtopher, & conſiſting all of moſt pure and glittering gold. And about the neck thereof hangeth a ſilke riband, ful of moſt rich & precious ſtones, ſome one of which is of more value then a whole kingdome. The houſe of this idol is all of beaten gold, namely the roofe, the pauement, and the ſieling of the wall within and without. Vnto this idol the Indians go on pilgrimage, as we do vnto S. Peter. Some go with halters about their necks, ſome with their hands bound behind them, ſome other with kniues ſticking on their armes or legs: and if after their peregrination, the fleſh of their wounded arme feſtereth or corrupteth, they eſteeme that limme to be holy, & thinke that their God is wel pleaſed with them. Neare vnto the temple of that idol is a lake made by the hands of men in an open & common place, whereinto the pilgrimes caſt gold, ſiluer, & precious ſtones, for the honour of the idol and the repairing of his temple. And therfore when any thing is to be adorned or mended, they go vnto this lake taking vp the treaſure which was caſt in. Moreouer at euery yerely feaſt of the making or repairing of the ſaid idol, the king and queene, with the whole multitude of the people, & all the pilgrimes aſſemble themſelues, & placing the ſaid idol in a moſt ſtately & rich chariot, they cary him out of their temple with ſongs, & with all kind of muſical harmonie, & a great company of virgins go proceſſion-wiſe two and two in a rank ſinging before him. Many pilgrims alſo put themſelues vnder the chariot wheeles, to the end that their falſe god may go ouer them: and al they ouer whom the chariot runneth, are cruſhed in pieces, & diuided aſunder in the midſt, and ſlaine right out. Yea, & in doing this, they think themſelues to die moſt holily & ſecurely, in the ſeruice of their god. And by this meanes euery yere, there die vnder the ſaid filthy idol, mo then 500. perſons, whoſe carkaſes are burned, and their aſhes are kept for reliques, becauſe they died in that ſort for their god. Moreouer they haue another deteſtable ceremony. For when any man offers to die in the ſeruice of his falſe god, his parents, & all his friends aſſemble themſelues together with a conſort of muſicians, making him a great & ſolemne feaſt: which feaſt being ended, they hang 5. ſharpe kniues about his neck carying him before the idol, & ſo ſoone as he is come thither, he taketh one of his kniues crying with a loud voice, For the worſhip of my god do I cut this my fleſh, and then he caſteth the morſel which is cut, at yͤ face of his idol: but at the very laſt wound wherewith he murthereth himſelfe, he vtterth theſe words: Now do I yeeld my ſelf to death in the behalfe of my god, and being dead, his body is burned, & is eſteemed by al men to be holy. The king of the ſaid region is moſt rich in gold, ſiluer, and precious ſtones, & there be the faireſt vnions in al the world. Traueling from thence by the Ocean ſea 50. daies iourney ſouthward, I came vnto a certain land named Lammori, where, in regard of extreeme heat, the people both men and women go ſtark-naked from top to toe: who ſeeing me apparelled ſcoffed at me, ſaying, that God made Adam & Eue naked. In this countrey al women are common, ſo that no man can ſay, this is my wife. Alſo when any of the ſaid women beareth a ſon or a daughter, ſhe beſtowes it vpon any one that hath lien with her, whõ ſhe pleaſeth. Likewiſe al the land of that region is poſſeſſed in cõmon, ſo that there is not mine & thine, or any propriety of poſſeſſion in the diuiſion of lands: howbeit euery man hath is owne houſe peculiar vnto himſelfe. Mans fleſh, if it be fat, is eaten as ordinarily there, as beefe in our country. And albeit the people are moſt lewd, yet the cõtry is exceeding good, abounding with al cõmodities, as fleſh, corne, riſe, ſiluer, gold, wood of aloes, Campheir, and many other things. Marchants comming vnto this region for traffique do vſually bring wᵗ them fat men, ſelling them vnto the inhabitants as we ſel hogs, who immediatly kil & eat them. In this iſland towards the ſouth, there is another kingdome called Simoltra, where both men and women marke themſelues with red-hot yron in 12. ſundry ſpots of their faces: and this nation is at cõtinual warre with certaine naked people in another region. Then I traueled further vnto another iſland called Iaua, the compaſſe whereof by ſea is 3000. miles. The king of this Iland hath 7. other crowned kings vnder his iuriſdiction. The ſaid Iland is throughly inhabited, & is thought to be one of the principall Ilands of yͤ whole world. In the ſame Iland there groweth great plenty of cloues, cubibez, and nutmegs, and in a word all kinds of ſpices are there to be had, and great abundance of all victuals except wine. The king of the ſaid land of Iaua hath a moſt braue and ſumptuous pallace, the moſt loftily built, that euer I ſaw any, & it hath moſt high greeſes & ſtayers to aſcend vp to the roomes therin contained, one ſtayre being of ſiluer, & another of gold, throughout the whole building. Alſo the lower roomes were paued all ouer with one ſquare plate of ſiluer, & another of gold. All the wals vpon the inner ſide were ſeeled ouer with plates of beaten gold, wherupon were ingrauen yͤ pictures of knights, hauing about their temples, ech of them a wreath of golde, adorned with precious ſtones. The roofe of the palace was of pure gold. With this king of Iaua the great Can of Catay hath had many conflictes in war: whom notwithſtanding the ſaid king hath alwayes ouercome & vanquiſhed.

Of certaine trees yeelding meale, hony, and poyſon.

NEere vnto the ſaid Iland is another countrey called Panten, or Tathalamaſin. And the king of the ſame country hath many Ilands vnder his dominion. In this land there are trees yeelding meale, hony, & wine, & the moſt deadly poiſon in all yͤ whole world: for againſt it there is but one only remedy: & that is this: if any man hath taken of yͤ poyſon, & would be deliuered from the danger therof, let him temper the dung of a man in water, & ſo drinke a good quantity thereof, & it expels the poyſon immediatly, making it to auoid at the fundement. Meale is produced out of the ſaid trees after this maner. They be mighty huge trees, and when they are cut with an axe by the ground, there iſſueth out of the ſtocke a certain licour like vnto gumme, which they take and put into bags made of leaues, laying them for 15 daies together abroad in the ſun, & at the end of thoſe 15 dayes, when the ſaid licour is throughly parched, it becõmeth meale. Then they ſteepe it firſt in ſea water, waſhing it afterward with freſh water, and ſo it is made very good & ſauorie paſte, whereof they make either meat or bread, as they thinke good. Of which bread I my ſelfe did eate, & it is fayrer without & ſomewhat browne within. By this countrey is the ſea called Mare mortuũ, which runneth continually Southward, into yͤ which whoſoeuer falleth is neuer ſeene after. In this countrey alſo are found canes of an incredible length, namely of 60 paces high or more, & they are as bigge as trees. Other canes there be alſo called Caſſan, which ouerſpread the earth like graſſe, & out of euery knot of them ſpring foorth certaine branches, which are continued vpon the ground almoſt for the ſpace of a mile. In the ſayd canes there are found certaine ſtones, one of which ſtones, whoſoeuer carryeth about with him, cannot be wounded with any yron: & therefore the men of that countrey for the moſt part, carry ſuch ſtones with them, whitherſoeuer they goe. Many alſo cauſe one of the armes of their children, while they are yong, to be launced, putting one of the ſaid ſtones into the wound, healing alſo, and cloſing vp the ſaid wound with the powder of a certaine fiſh (the name whereof I do not know) which powder doth immediatly conſolidate and cure the ſaid wound. And by the vertue of theſe ſtones, the people aforeſaid doe for the moſt part triumph both on ſea and land. Howbeit there is one kind of ſtratageme, which the enemies of this nation, knowing the vertue of the ſayd ſtones, doe practiſe againſt them: namely, they prouide themſelues armour of yron or ſteele againſt their arrowes, & weapons alſo poiſoned with the poyſon of trees, & they carry in their hands wooden ſtakes moſt ſharpe & hard-pointed, as if they were yron: likewiſe they ſhoot arrowes without yron heads, and ſo they confound & ſlay ſome of their vnarmed foes truſting too ſecurely vnto the vertue of their ſtones. Alſo of the foreſayd canes called Caſſan they make ſayles for their ſhips, and litle houſes, and many other neceſſaries. From thence after many dayes trauell, I arriued at another kingdome called Campa, a moſt beautiful and rich countrey, & abounding with all kind of victuals: the king whereof, at my being there, had ſo many wiues & concubines, that he had 300 ſonnes & daughters by thẽ. This king hath 10004 tame Elephants, which are kept euen as we keepe droues of oxen, or flocks of ſheepe in paſture.

A ſea running ſtill Southward.

Of the abundance of fiſhes, which caſt thẽſelues vpon the ſhore.

IN this countrey there is one ſtrange thing to be obſerued, yͭ euery ſeuerall kind of fiſhes in thoſe ſeas come ſwimming towards the ſaid countrey in ſuch abundance, that, for a great diſtance into the ſea, nothing can be ſeene but yͤ backs of fiſhes: which, caſting thẽſelues vpon the ſhore when they come neere vnto it, do ſuffer men, for the ſpace of 3. daies, to come & to take as many of thẽ as they pleaſe, & then they returne againe vnto the ſea. After that kind of fiſhes comes another kind, offering it ſelfe after the ſame maner, and ſo in like ſort all other kinds whatſoeuer: notwithſtanding they do this but once in a yere. And I demaunded of the inhabitants there, how, or by what meanes this ſtrange accident could come to paſſe? They anſwered, that fiſhes were taught, euen by nature, to come & to do homage vnto their Emperour. There be Tortoiſes alſo as bigge as an ouen.

Tortoiſes.

ouen. Many other things I ſaw which are incredible, vnleſſe a man ſhould ſee them with his own eies. In this country alſo dead men are burned, & their wiues are burned aliue with them, as in the city of Polumbrum aboue mentioned: for the men of that country ſay that ſhe goeth to accompany him in another world, that he ſhould take none other wife in mariage. Moreouer I traueled on further by the ocean-ſea towards the ſouth, & paſſed through many countries and iſlands, whereof one is called Moumoran, & it cõtaineth in compaſſe ii. M. miles, wherin men & women haue dogs faces, and worſhip an oxe for their god: and therefore euery one of them cary the image of an oxe of gold or ſiluer vpon their foreheads. The men and the women of this country go all naked, ſauing that they hang a linen cloth before their priuities. The men of the ſaid country are very tall and mighty, and by reaſon that they goe naked, when they are to make battell, they cary yron or ſteele-targets before them, which do couer and defend their bodies from top to toe: and whomſoeuer of their foes they take in battel not being able to ranſom himſelfe for money, they preſently deuoure him: but if he be able to redeeme himſelfe for money, they let him go free. Their king weareth about his necke 300. great and moſt beautifull vnions, and ſaith euery day 300. prayers vnto his god. He weareth vpon his finger alſo a ſtone of a ſpan long, which ſeemeth to be a flame of fire, and therefore when he weareth it, no man dare once approch vnto him: and they ſay that there is not any ſtone in the whole world of more value then it. Neither could at any time the great Tartarian Emperour of Katay either by force, money, or policie obtaine it at his hands: notwithſtanding that he hath done the vtmoſt of his indeuour for this purpoſe.

Moumoran,

Of the iſland of Sylan: and of the mountaine where Adam mourned for his ſonne Abel.

I Paſſed alſo by another iſland called Sylan, which conteineth in cõpaſſe aboue ii. M. miles: wherin are an infinite number of ſerpents, & great ſtore of lions, beares, & al kinds of rauening & wild beaſts, and eſpecially of elephants. In the ſaid country there is an huge mountaine, whereupon the inhabitants of that regiõ do report that Adam mourned for his ſon Abel yͤ ſpace of 500. yeres. In the midſt of this moũtain there is a moſt beautiful plain, wherin is a litle lake cõteining great plẽty of water, which water yͤ inhabitants report to haue proceeded frõ the teares of Adam & Eue: howbeit I proued that to be falſe, becauſe I ſaw the water flow in the lake. This water is ful of horſ-leeches, & blood-ſuckers, & of precious ſtones alſo: which precious ſtones the king taketh not vnto his owne vſe, but once or twiſe euery yere he permitteth certaine poore people to diue vnder the water for yͤ ſaid ſtones, & al that they can get he beſtoweth vpon them, to the end they may pray for his ſoule. But yͭ they may with leſſe danger diue vnder the water, they take limons which they pil, anointing themſelues throughly with the iuice therof, & ſo they may diue naked vnder yͤ water, the horſ-leeches not being able to hurt them. From this lake the water runneth euen vnto the ſea, and at a low ebbe the inhabitants dig rubies, diamonds, pearls, & other precious ſtones out of the ſhore: whervpon it is thought, that yͤ king of this iſland hath greater abũdance of precious ſtones, then any other monarch in the whole earth beſids. In the ſaid country there be al kinds of beaſts and foules: & the people told me, that thoſe beaſts would not inuade nor hurt any ſtranger, but only the natural inhabitants. I ſaw in this iſland fouls as big as our country geeſe, hauing two heads, and other miraculous things, which I will not here write off. Traueling on further toward the ſouth, I arriued at a certain iſland called Bodin, which ſignifieth in our language vnclean. In this iſland there do inhabit moſt wicked perſons, who deuour & eat raw fleſh cõmitting al kinds of vncleannes & abominations in ſuch ſort, as it is incredible. For the father eateth his ſon, & the ſon his father, the huſband his owne wife, & the wife her huſband: and that after this maner. If any mans father be ſick, the ſon ſtraight goes vnto the ſooth-ſaying or prognoſticating prieſt, requeſting him to demand of his god, whether his father ſhall recouer of that infirmity or no: Then both of them go vnto an idol of gold or of ſiluer, making their praiers vnto it in maner folowing: Lord, thou art our god, & thee we do adore, beſeeching thee to reſolue vs, whether ſuch a man muſt die, or recouer of ſuch an infirmity or no? Then the diuel anſwereth out of yͤ foreſaid idol: if he ſaith (he ſhal liue) then returneth his ſon and miniſtreth things neceſſary vnto him, til he hath attained vnto his former health: but if he ſaith (he ſhal die) then goes yͤ prieſt vnto him, & putting a cloth into his mouth doth ſtrangle him therewith: which being done, he cuts his dead body into morſels, & al his friends and kinſfolks are inuited vnto the eating thereof, with muſique and all kinde of mirth: howbeit his bones are ſolemnely buried. And when I found fault with that cuſtome demanding a reaſon thereof, one of them gaue me this anſwere: this we doe, leaſt the wormes ſhould eat his fleſh, for then his ſoule ſhould ſuffer great torments, neither could I by any meanes remooue them from that errour. Many other nouelties and ſtrange things there bee in this countrey, which no man would credite, vnles he ſaw them with his owne eyes. Howbeit, I (before almighty God) do here make relation of nothing but of that only, whereof I am as ſure, as a man may be ſure. Concerning the foreſaid iſlands I inquired of diuers wel-experienced perſons, who al of them, as it were with one conſent, anſwered me ſaying, That this India contained 4400. iſlands vnder it, or within it: in which iſlands there are ſixtie and foure crowned kings: and they ſay moreouer, that the greater part of thoſe iſlands are wel inhabited. And here I conclude cõcerning that part of India.

Of the vpper India: and of the prouince of Mancy.

Or, China.

First of al therefore, hauing traueled many dayes iourney vpõ the Ocean-ſea toward the Eaſt, at length I arriued at a certaine great prouince called Mancy, being in Latine named India. Concerning this India I inquired of Chriſtians, of Saracens, & of Idolaters, and of al ſuch as bare any office vnder the great Can. Who all of them with one conſent anſwered, that this prouince of Mancy hath mo then 2000. great cities within the precincts thereof, & that it aboundeth with all plenty of victuals, as namely with bread, wine, riſe, fleſh, and fiſh. All the men of this prouince be artificers & marchants, who, though they be in neuer ſo extreme penurie, ſo long as they can helpe themſelues by the labor of their hands, wil neuer beg almes of any man. The men of this prouince are of a faire and comely perſonage, but ſomewhat pale, hauing their heads ſhauen but a litle: but the women are the moſt beautiful vnder the ſunne. The firſt city of ẏ ſaid India which I came vnto, is called Ceuskalon, which being a daies iourney diſtant frõ the ſea, ſtands vpon a riuer, the water whereof, nere vnto the mouth, where it exonerateth it ſelfe into the ſea, doth ouerflow the land for the ſpace of 12. daies iourney. All the inhabitants of this India are worſhippers of idols. The forſaid city of Ceuskalon hath ſuch an huge nauy belonging thereunto, that no man would beleeue it vnleſſe he ſhould ſee it. In this city I ſaw 300. li. of good & new ginger ſold for leſſe then a groat. There are the greateſt, and the faireſt geeſe, & moſt plenty of them to be ſold in al the whole world, as I ſuppoſe: they are as white as milke, and haue a bone vpon the crowne of their heads as bigge as an egge, being of the colour of blood: vnder their throat they haue a ſkin or bag hanging downe halfe a foot. They are exceeding fat & wel ſold. Alſo they haue ducks and hens in that country, one as big as two of ours. There be mõſtrous great ſerpents likewiſe, which are taken by the inhabitants & eaten: whereupon a ſolemne feaſt among them without ſerpents is nought ſet by: and to be briefe, in this city there are al kinds of victuals in great abundance. From thence I paſſed by many cities, & at length I came vnto a city named Caitan, wherin ẏ friers Minorites haue two places of aboad, vnto the which I tranſported the bones of the dead friers, which ſuffred martyrdom for the faith of Chriſt, as it is aboue mentioned. In this city there is abundance of al kind of victuals very cheap. The ſaid city is as big as two of Bononia, & in it are many monaſteries of religious perſons, al which do worſhip idols. I my ſelfe was in one of thoſe Monaſteries, & it was told me, that there were in it iii. M. religious men, hauing xi. M. idols: and one of ẏ ſaid idols which ſeemed vnto me but litle in regard of the reſt, was as big as our Chriſtopher. Theſe religious men euery day do feed their idol-gods: wherupon at a certaine time I went to behold the banquet: and indeed thoſe things which they brought vnto them were good to eat, & fuming hote, inſomuch that the ſteame of the ſmoke thereof aſcended vp vnto their idols, & they ſaid that their gods were refreſhed with the ſmoke: howbeit, all the meat they conueyed away, eating it vp their owne ſelues, and ſo they fed their dumb gods with the ſmoke onely.

Of the citie Fuco.

Traueling more eaſtward, I came vnto a city named Fuco, which conteineth 30. miles in circuit, wherin be exceeding great & faire cocks, and al their hens are as white as the very ſnow, hauing wol in ſtead of feathers, like vnto ſheep. It is a moſt ſtately & beautiful city & ſtandeth vpon the ſea. Then I went 18. daies iourney on further, & paſſed by many prouinces & cities, and in the way I went ouer a certain great mountaine, vpon ẏ one ſide whereof I beheld al liuing creatures to be as black as a cole, & the men and women on that ſide differed ſomwhat in maner of liuing frõ others: howbeit, on the other ſide of the ſaid hil euery liuing thing was ſnow-white, & the inhabitants in their maner of liuing, were altogether vnlike vnto others. There, all maried women cary in token that they haue husbands, a great trunke of horne vpon their heads. From thence I traueiled 18. dayes iourney further, and came vnto a certaine great riuer, and entered alſo into a city, whereunto belongeth a mighty bridge to paſſe the ſaid riuer. And mine hoſte with whom I ſoiourned, being deſirous to ſhew me ſome ſport, ſaid vnto me: Sir, if you will ſee any fiſh taken, goe with me. Then hee led me vnto the foreſaid bridge, carying in his armes with him certaine diue-doppers or water-foules, bound vnto a company of poles, and about euery one of their necks he tied a threed, leaſt they ſhould eat the fiſh as faſt as they tooke them: and he caried 3. great baskets with him alſo: then looſed he the diue-doppers from the poles, which preſently went into the water, & within leſſe then the ſpace of one houre, caught as many fiſhes as filled the 3. baskets: which which being full, mine hoſte vntyed the threeds from about their neckes, and entering the ſecond time into the riuer they fed themſelues with fiſh, and being ſatiſfied they returned and ſuffered themſelues to be bound vnto the ſaide poles as they were before. And when I did eate of thoſe fiſhes, me thought they were exceeding good. Trauailing thence many dayes iourneys, at length I arriued at another city called *Canaſia, which ſignifieth in our language, the city of heauen. Neuer in all my life did I ſee ſo great a citie: for it conteineth in circuit an hundreth miles: neither ſawe I any plot thereof, which was not throughly inhabited: yea, I ſawe many houſes of tenne or twelue ſtories high, one aboue another. It hath mightie large ſuburbs containing more people then the citie it ſelfe. Alſo it hath twelue principall gates: and about the diſtance of eight miles, in the high way vnto euery one of the ſaide gates ſtandeth a city as big by eſtimation as Venice, and Padua. The foreſaid city of Canaſia is ſituated in waters or marſhes, which alwayes ſtand ſtill neither ebbing nor flowing: howbeit it hath a defence for the winde like vnto Venice. In this citie there are mo then 10002. bridges, many whereof I numbred and paſſed ouer them: and vpon euery of thoſe bridges ſtand certaine watchmen of the citie, keeping continuall watch and ward about the ſaid city, for the great Can the Emperour of Catay. The people of this countrey ſay, that they haue one duetie inioyned vnto them by their lord: for euery fire payeth one Balis in regard of tribute: and a Balis is fiue papers or pieces of ſilke, which are worth one floren and an halfe of our coine. Tenne or twelue houſholds are accompted for one fire, and ſo pay tribute but for one fire onely. Al thoſe tributary fires amount vnto the number of 85. Thuman, with other foure Thuman of the Saracens, which make 89. in al; And one Thuman cõſiſteth of 10000. fires. The reſidue of the people of the city are ſome of them Chriſtians, ſome marchants, and ſome traueilers through the countrey: whereupon I marueiled much howe ſuch an infinite number of perſons could inhabite and liue together. There is great aboundance of victuals in this citie, as namely of bread and wine, and eſpecially of hogſ-fleſh, with other neceſſaries.

* Or Cansai, or Quinzai.

The Italian copy in Ramuſius, hath 11000. bridges.

Of a Monaſtery where many ſtrange beaſtes of diuers kindes doe liue vpon an hill.

IN the foreſaide citie foure of our friers had conuerted a mighty and riche man vnto the faith of Chriſt, at whoſe houſe I continually abode, for ſo long time as I remained in the citie. Who vpon a certaine time ſaide vnto me: Ara, that is to ſay, Father, will you goe and beholde the citie? And I ſaid, yea. Then embarqued we our ſelues, and directed our courſe vnto a certaine great Monaſtery: where being arriued, he called a religious perſon with whom he was acquainted, ſaying vnto him concerning me: this Raban Francus, that is to ſay, this religious Frenchman commeth from the Westerne parts of the world, and is now going to the city of Cambaleth to pray for the life of the great Can, and therefore you muſt ſhew him ſome rare thing, that when hee returnes into his owne countrey, he may ſay, this ſtrange ſight or nouelty haue I ſeene in the city of Canaſia. Then the ſaid religious man tooke two great baſkets full of broken reliques which remained of the table, and led me vnto a little walled parke, the doore whereof he vnlocked with his key, and there appeared vnto vs a pleaſant faire greene plot, into the which we entred. In the ſaid greene ſtands a litle mount in forme of a ſteeple, repleniſhed with fragrant herbes, and fine ſhady trees. And while we ſtood there, he tooke a cymball or bell, and rang therewith, as they vſe to ring to dinner or beuoir in cloiſters, at the ſound whereof many creatures of diuers kinds came downe from the mount, ſome like apes, ſome like cats, ſome like monkeys; and ſome hauing faces like men. And while I ſtood beholding of them, they gathered themſelues together about him, to the number of 4200. of thoſe creatures, putting themſelues in good order, before whom he ſet a platter, and gaue them the ſaid fragments to eate. And when they had eaten he rang vpon his cymbal the ſecond time, and they al returned vnto their former places. Then, wondring greatly at the matter, I demanded what kind of creatures thoſe might be? They are (quoth he) the ſoules of noble men which we do here feed, for the loue of God who gouerneth the world: and as a man was honorable or noble in this life, ſo his ſoule after death, entreth into the body of ſome excellent beaſt or other, but the ſoules of ſimple and ruſticall people do poſſeſſe the bodies of more vile and brutiſh creatures. Then I began to refute that foule error: howbeit my ſpeach did nothing at all preuaile with him: for hee could not be perſwaded that any ſoule might remaine without a body. From thence I departed vnto a certaine citie named Chilenfo, the walls whereof conteined 40. miles in circuit. In this city there are 360. bridges of ſtone, the faireſt that euer I ſaw: and it is wel inhabited, hauing a great nauie belonging thereunto, & abounding with all kinds of victuals and other commodities. And thence I went vnto a certaine riuer called Thalay, which, where it is moſt narrow, is 7. miles broad: and it runneth through the midſt of the land of Pygmæi, whoſe chiefe city is called Cakam, and is one of the goodlieſt cities in the world. Theſe Pigmæans are three of my ſpannes high, and they make larger and better cloth of cotten and ſilke, then any other nation vnder the ſunne. And coaſting along by the ſaide riuer, I came vnto a certaine citie named Iamzu, in which citie there is one receptacle for the Friers of our order, and there be alſo three Churches of the Neſtorians. This Iamzu is a noble and great citie, containing 48 Thuman of tributarie fires, and in it are all kindes of victuals, and great plenty of ſuch beaſtes, foules and fiſhes, as Chriſtians doe vſually liue vpon. The lord of the ſame citie hath in yeerely reuenues for ſalt onely, fiftie Thuman of Balis, and one balis is worth a floren and a halfe of our coyne: inſomuch that one Thuman of balis amounteth vnto the value of fifteene thouſand florens. Howbeit the ſayd lord fauoureth his people in one reſpect, for ſometimes he forgiueth them freely two hundred Thuman, leaſt there ſhould be any ſcarcitie or dearth among them. There is a cuſtome in this citie, that when any man is determined to banquet his friends, going about vnto certaine tauernes or cookes houſes appointed for the ſame purpoſe, he ſayth vnto euery particular hoſte, you ſhall haue ſuch, and ſuch of my friendes, whom you muſt intertaine in my name, and ſo much I will beſtowe vpon the banquet. And by that meanes his friends are better feaſted at diuerſe places, then they ſhould haue beene at one. Tenne miles from the ſayde citie, about the head of the foreſayd riuer of Thalay, there is a certaine other citie called Montu, which hath the greateſt nauy that I ſaw in the whole world. All their ſhips are as white as ſnow, and they haue banqueting houſes in them, and many other rare things alſo, which no man would beleeue, vnleſſe he had ſeene them with his owne eyes.

Of the citie of Cambaleth.

Trauelling eight dayes iourney farther by diuers territories and cities, at length I came by freſh water vnto a certaine citie named Lencyn, ſtanding vpon the riuer of * Karauoran, which runneth through the midſt of Cataie, and doth great harme in the countrey when it ouerfloweth the bankes, or breaketh foorth of the chanell. From thence paſſing along the riuer Eaſtward, after many dayes trauell, and the ſight of diuers cities, I arriued at a citie called *Sumakoto, which aboundeth more with ſilke then any other citie in the world: for when there is great ſcarcitie of ſilke, fortie pound is ſold for leſſe then eight groates. In this citie there is abundance of all merchandize, and of all kindes of victuals alſo, as of bread, wine, fleſh, fiſh, with all choiſe and delicate ſpices. Then trauelling on ſtill towards the Eaſt by many cities, I came vnto the noble and renowmed citie of Cambaleth, which is of great antiquitie, being ſituate in the prouince of Cataie. This citie the Tartars tooke, and neere vnto it within the ſpace of halfe a mile, they built another citie called Caido. The citie of Caido hath twelue gates, being each of them two miles diſtant from another. Alſo the ſpace lying in the midſt betweene the two foreſayd cities is very well and throughly inhabited, ſo that they make as it were but one citie betweene them both. The whole compaſſe or circuit of both cities together, is 40. miles. In this citie the great emperour Can hath his principall ſeat, and his Imperiall palace, the walls of which palace containe foure miles in circuit: and neere vnto this his palace are many other palaces and houſes of his nobles which belong vnto his court. Within the precincts of the ſayd palace Imperiall, there is a moſt beautifull mount, ſet and repleniſhed with trees, for which cauſe it is called the Greene mount, hauing a moſt royall and ſumptuous palace ſtanding thereupon, in which, for the moſt part, the great Can is reſident. Vpon the one ſide of the ſayd mount there is a great lake, whereupon a moſt ſtately bridge is built, in which lake is great abundance of geeſe, ducks, and all kindes of water foules: and in the wood growing vpon the mount there is great ſtore of all birds, and wilde beaſts. And therefore when the great Can will ſolace himſelfe with hunting or hauking, he needs not ſo much as once to ſtep foorth of his palace. Moreouer, the principall palace, wherein he maketh his abode, is very large, hauing within it 14 pillers of golde, and all the walles thereof are hanged with red ſkinnes, which are ſayd to be the moſt coſtly ſkinnes in all the world. In the midſt of the palace ſtandeth a ciſterne of two yards high, which conſiſteth of a precious ſtone called Merdochas, and is wreathed about with golde, & at ech corner thereof is the golden image of a ſerpent, as it were, furiouſly ſhaking and caſting foorth his head. This ciſterne alſo hath a kinde of networke of pearle wrought about it. Likewiſe by the ſayd ciſterne there is drinke conueyed thorow certeine pipes and conducts, ſuch as vſeth to be drunke in the emperours court, vpon the which alſo there hang many veſſels of golde, wherein, whoſoeuer will may drinke of the ſayd licour. In the foreſayd palace there are many peacocks of golde: and when any Tartar maketh a banquet vnto his lord, if the gueſts chance to clap their hands for ioy and mirth, the ſayd golden peacocks alſo will ſpread abroad their wings, and lift vp their traines, ſeeming as if they danced: and this I ſuppoſe to be done by arte magike or by ſome ſecret engine vnder the ground.

Of the glory and magnificence of the great Can.

Moreouer, when the great emperor Can ſitteth in his imperiall throne of eſtate, on his left hand ſitteth his queene or empreſſe, and vpon another inferior ſeate there ſit two other women, which are to accompany the emperor, when his ſpouſe is abſent; but in the loweſt place of all, there ſit all the ladies of his kinred. All the maried women weare vpon their heads a kind of ornament in ſhape like vnto a mans foote, of a cubite and a halfe in length, and the lower part of the ſayd foote is adorned with cranes feathers, and is all ouer thicke ſet with great and orient pearles. Upon the right hand of the great Can ſitteth his firſt begotten ſonne and heire apparant vnto his empire, and vnder him ſit all the nobles of the blood royall. There bee alſo foure Secretaries, which put all things in writing that the emperor ſpeaketh. In whoſe preſence likewiſe ſtand his Barons and diuers others of his nobilitie, with great traines of folowers after them, of whom none dare ſpeake ſo much as one word, vnleſſe they haue obtained licence of the emperor ſo to doe, except his ieſters and ſtage-players, who are appointed of purpoſe to ſolace their lord. Neither yet dare they attempt to doe ought, but onely according to the pleaſure of their emperor, and as hee enioineth them by lawe. About the palace gate ſtand certaine Barons to keepe all men from treading vpon the threſhold of the ſayd gate. When it pleaſeth the great Can to ſolemnize a feaſt, he hath about him 14000. Barons, carying wreathes & litle crownes vpon their heads, and giuing attendance vpon their lord, and euery one of them weareth a garment of gold and precious ſtones, which is worth ten thouſand Florens. His court is kept in very good order, by gouernours of tens, gouernours of hundreds, and gouernours of thouſands, inſomuch that euery one in his place performeth his dutie committed vnto him, neither is there any defect to bee found. I Frier Odoricus was there preſent in perſon for the ſpace of three yeeres, and was often at the ſayd banquets; for we friers Minorites haue a place of abode appointed out for vs in the emperors court, and are enioined to goe and to beſtow our bleſſing vpon him. And I enquired of certaine Courtiers concerning the number of perſons pertaining to the emperors court: And they anſwered mee, that of ſtage-players, muſicians, and ſuch like, there were eighteene Thuman at the leaſt, and that the keepers of dogs, beaſts and foules were fifteene Thuman, and the phyſicians for the emperours body, were foure hundred; the Chriſtians alſo were eight in number, together with one Saracen. At my being there, all the foreſayd number of perſons had all kind of neceſſaries both for apparell and victuals out of the emperors court. Moreouer, when he will make his progreſſe from one countrey to another, hee hath foure troupes of horſemen, one being appointed to goe a dayes iourney before, and another to come a dayes iourney after him, the third to march on his right hand, and the fourth on his left, in the maner of a croſſe, he himſelfe being in the midſt, and ſo euery particular troupe haue their daily iourneys limited vnto them, to the ende they may prouide ſufficient victuals without defect. Nowe the great Can himſelfe is caried in maner following; hee rideth in a chariot with two wheeles, vpon which a maieſticall throne is built of the wood of Aloe, being adorned with gold and great pearles, and precious ſtones, and foure elephants brauely furniſhed doe drawe the ſayd chariot, before which elephants foure great horſes richly trapped and couered doe leade the way. Hard by the chariot on both ſides thereof, are foure Barons laying hold and attending thereupon, to keepe all perſons from approching neere vnto their emperour. Upon the chariot alſo two milke-white Ier-falcons doe ſit, and ſeeing any game which hee would take, hee letteth them flie, and ſo they take it, and after this maner doth hee ſolace himſelfe as hee rideth. Moreouer, no man dare come within a ſtones caſt of the chariot, but ſuch as are appointed. The number of his owne followers, of his wiues attendants, and of the traine of his firſt begotten ſonne and heire apparant, would ſeeme incredible vnto any man, vnleſſe hee had ſeene it with his owne eyes. The foreſayd great Can hath diuided his Empire into twelue partes or Prouinces, and one of the ſayd prouinces hath two thouſand great cities within the precincts thereof. Whereupon his empire is of that length and breadth, that vnto whatſoeuer part thereof he intendeth his iourney, he hath ſpace enough for ſix moneths continual progreſſe, except his Iſlands which are at the leaſt 5000.

Of certaine Innes or hoſpitals appointed for trauailers throughout the whole empire.

The foreſayd Emperour (to the end that trauellers may haue all things neceſſary throughout his whole empire) hath cauſed certaine Innes to be prouided in ſundry places vpon the high wayes, where all things pertaining vnto victuals are in a continuall readineſſe. And when any alteration or newes happen in any part of his Empire, if he chance to be farre abſent from that part, his ambaſſadors vpon horſes or dromedaries ride poſt vnto him, and when themſelues and their beaſts are weary, they blow their horne, at the noiſe whereof, the next Inne likewiſe prouideth a horſe and a man, who takes the letter of him that is weary, and runneth vnto another Inne: and ſo by diuers Innes, and diuers poſtes, the report, which ordinarily could ſkarce come in 30. dayes, is in one naturall day brought vnto the emperor: and therefore no matter of any moment can be done in his empire, but ſtraightway he hath intelligence thereof. Moreouer, when ỹ great Can himſelfe will go on hunting, he vſeth this cuſtome. Some twenty dayes iourney from the citie of Kambalech there is a forreſt containing ſixe dayes iourney in circuit, in which forreſt there are ſo many kinds of beaſts and birds, as it is incredible to report. Vnto this forreſt, at the ende of euery third or fourth yeere, himſelfe with his whole traine reſorteth, and they all of them together enuiron the ſayd forreſt, ſending dogs into the ſame, which by hunting do bring foorth the beaſts: namely, lions and ſtags, and other creatures, vnto a moſt beautifull plaine in the midſt of the forreſt, becauſe all the beaſts of the forreſt doe tremble, eſpecially at the cry of hounds. Then commeth the great Can himſelfe, being caried vpon three elephants, and ſhooteth fiue arrowes into the whole herd of beaſts, and after him all his Barons, and after them the reſt of his courtiers and family doe all in like maner diſcharge their arrowes alſo, and euery mans arrow hath a ſundry marke. Then they all goe vnto the beaſts which are ſlaine (ſuffering the liuing beaſts to returne into the wood that they may haue more ſport with them another time) and euery man enioyeth that beaſt as his owne, wherein he findeth his arrow ſticking.

Of the foure feaſts which the great Can ſolemnizeth euery yeere in his Court.

Foure great feaſts in a yeere doeth the emperor Can celebrate: namely, the feaſt of his birth, the feaſt of his circumciſion, the feaſt of his coronation, and the feaſt of his mariage. And vnto theſe feaſts he inuiteth all his Barons, his ſtage-players, and all ſuch as are of his kinred. Then the great Can ſitting in his throne, all his Barons preſent themſelues before him, with wreaths and crownes vpon their heads, being diuerſly attired, for ſome of them are in greene, namely, the principall: the ſecond are in red, and the third in yellow, and they hold each man in his hand a little Iuorie table of elephants tooth, and they are girt with golden girdles of halfe a foote broad, and they ſtand vpon their feete keeping ſilence. About them ſtand the ſtage-players or muſicians with their inſtruments. And in one of the corners of a certaine great pallace, all the Philoſophers or Magicians remaine for certaine howers, and doe attend vpon points or characters: and when the point and hower which the ſayd Philoſophers expected for, is come, a certaine crier crieth out with a loud voyce, ſaying, Incline or bowe your ſelues before your Emperour: with that all the Barons fall flat vpon the earth. Then hee crieth out againe; Ariſe all, and immediately they all ariſe. Likewiſe the Philoſophers attend vpon a point or character the ſecond time, and when it is fulfilled, the crier crieth out amaine; Put your fingers in your eares: and foorthwith againe he ſaieth; Plucke them out. Againe, at the third point he crieth, Boult this meale. Many other circumſtances alſo doe they performe, all which they ſay haue ſome certaine ſignification: howbeit, neither would I write them, nor giue any heed vnto them, becauſe they are vaine and ridiculous. And when the muſicians hower is come, then the Philoſophers ſay, Solemnize a feaſt vnto your Lord: with that all of them ſound their inſtruments, making a great and a melodious noyſe. And immediately another crieth, Peace, peace, and they are all whiſt. Then come the women-muſicians and ſing ſweetly before the Emperour, which muſike was more delightfull vnto me. After them come in the lions and doe their obeiſance vnto the great Can. Then the iuglers cauſe golden cups full of wine to flie vp and downe in the ayre, and to apply themſelues vnto mens mouthes that they may drinke of them. Theſe and many other ſtrange things I ſawe in the court of the great Can, which no man would beleeue vnleſſe he had ſeen them with his owne eies, and therefore I omit to ſpeake of them. I was informed alſo by certaine credible perſons, of another miraculous thing, namely, that in a certaine kingdome of the ſayd Can, wherein ſtand the mountains called Kapſei (the kingdomes name is Kalor) there growe great Gourds or Pompions, which being ripe, doe open at the tops, and within them is found a little beaſt like vnto a yong lambe, euen as I my ſelfe haue heard reported, that there ſtand certaine trees vpon the ſhore of the Iriſh ſea, bearing fruit like vnto a gourd, which, at a certaine time of the yeere doe fall into the water, and become birds called Bernacles, and this is moſt true.

A lambe in a gourd.

Of diuers prouinces and cities.

And after three yeres I departed out of the empire of Cataie, trauailing fiftie dayes iourney towards the Weſt. And at length I came vnto the empire of Pretegoani, whoſe principall

His returne Weſtward.

Caſan.

Or, Thebet.

The ſame ſtory concerning the very ſame people is in William de Rubricis.

city is Koſan, which hath many other cities vnder it. From thence paſſing many dayes trauell, I came vnto a prouince called Caſan, which is for good commodities, one of the onely prouinces vnder the Sunne, and is very well inhabited, inſomuch that when we depart out of the gates of one city we may beholde the gates of another city, as I my ſelfe ſaw in diuers of them. The breadth of the ſayd prouince is fifty dayes iourney, & the length aboue ſixty. In it there is great plenty of all victuals, and eſpecially of cheſnuts, and it is one of the twelue prouinces of the great Can. Going on further, I came vnto a certaine kingdome called Tebek, which is in ſubiection vnto the great Can alſo, wherein I thinke there is more plenty of bread & wine then in any other part of the world beſides. The people of the ſayd countrey do, for the moſt part, inhabit in tents made of blacke fels. Their principall city is inuironed with faire and beautifull walles, being built of moſt white and blacke ſtones, which are diſpoſed checkerwiſe one by another, and curiouſly compiled together: likewiſe all the high wayes in this countrey are exceedingly well paued. In the ſayd countrey none dare ſhed the bloud of a man, or of any beaſt, for the reuerence of a certaine idole. In the foreſayd city their Abaſſi, that is to ſay, their Pope is reſident, being the head and prince of all idolaters (vpon whom he beſtoweth and diſtributeth gifts after his maner) euen as our pope of Rome accounts himſelfe to be the head of all Chriſtians. The women of this countrey weare aboue an hundreth tricks and trifles about them, and they haue two teeth in their mouthes as long as the tuſhes of a boare. When any mans father deceaſeth among them, his ſonne aſſembleth together all the prieſts and muſicians that he can get, ſaying that he is determined to honour his father: then cauſeth he him to be caried into the field (all his kinſfolks, friends, and neighbours accompanying him in the ſayd action) where the prieſts with great ſolemnity cut off the fathers head, giuing it vnto his ſonne, which being done, they diuide the whole body into morſels, and ſo leaue it behinde them, returning home with prayers in the company of the ſayd ſonne. So ſoone as they are departed, certaine vultures, which are accuſtomed to ſuch bankets, come flying from the mountaines, and cary away all the ſayd morſels of fleſh: and from thenceforth a fame is ſpread abroad, that the ſayd party deceaſed was holy, becauſe the angels of God carried him into paradiſe. And this is the greateſt and higheſt honour, that the ſonne can deuiſe to performe vnto his deceaſed father. Then the ſayd ſonne taketh his fathers head, ſeething it and eating the fleſh thereof, but of the ſkull he makes a drinking cup, wherein himſelfe with all his family and kinred do drinke with great ſolemnity and mirth, in the remembrance of his dead and deuoured father. Many other vile and abominable things doth the ſayd nation commit, which I meane not to write, becauſe men neither can nor will beleeue, except they ſhould haue the ſight of them.

Of a certaine rich man, who is fed and nouriſhed by fiftie virgins.

Meliſtorte.

While I was in the prouince of Mancy, I paſſed by the palace of a certaine famous man, which hath fifty virgin damoſels continually attending vpon him, feeding him euery meale, as a bird feeds her yoong ones. Alſo he hath ſundry kindes of meat ſerued in at his table, and three diſhes of ech kinde: and when the ſayd virgins feed him, they ſing moſt ſweetly. This man hath in yeerely reuenues thirty thuman of tagars of riſe, euery of which thuman yeeldeth tenne thouſand tagars, and one tagar is the burthen of an aſſe. His palace is two miles in circuit, the pauement whereof is one plate of golde, and another of ſiluer. Neere vnto the wall of the ſayd palace there is a mount artificially wrought with golde and ſiluer, whereupon ſtand turrets and ſteeples and other delectable things for the ſolace and recreation of the foreſayd great man. And it was tolde me that there were foure ſuch men in the ſayd kingdome. It is accounted a great grace for the men of that countrey to haue long nailes vpon their fingers, and eſpecially vpon their thumbes, which nailes they may folde about their hands: but the grace and beauty of their women is to haue ſmall and ſlender feet; and therefore the mothers when their daughters are yoong, do binde vp their feet, that they may not grow great. Trauelling on further towards the South, I arriued at a certaine countrey called Meliſtorte, which is a very pleaſant and fertile place. And in this countrey there was a certeine aged man called Senex de monte, who round about two mountaines had built a wall to incloſe the ſayd mountaines. Within this wall there were the faireſt and moſt chryſtall fountaines in the whole world: and about the ſayd fountaines there were moſt beautifull virgins in great number, and goodly horſes alſo, and in a word, euery thing that could be deuiſed for bodily ſolace and delight, and therefore the inhabitants of the countrey call the ſame place by the name of Paradiſe.

The ſayd olde Senex, when he ſaw any proper and valiant yoong man, he would admit him into his paradiſe. Moreouer by certaine conducts he makes wine and milke to flow abundantly.

This Senex, when he hath a minde to reuenge himſelfe or to ſlay any king or baron, commandeth him that is gouernor of the ſayd paradiſe, to bring thereunto ſome of the acquaintance of the ſayd king or baron, permitting him a while to take his pleaſure therein, and then to giue him a certaine potion being of force to caſt him into ſuch a ſlumber as ſhould make him quite voide of all ſenſe, and ſo being in a profound ſleepe to conuey him out of his paradiſe: who being awaked, & ſeeing himſelfe thruſt out of the paradiſe would become ſo ſorowfull, that he could not in the world deuiſe what to do, or whither to turne him. Then would he go vnto the foreſaid old man, beſeeching him that he might be admitted againe into his paradiſe: who ſaith vnto him, You cannot be admitted thither, vnleſſe you will ſlay ſuch or ſuch a man for my ſake, and if you will giue the attempt onely, whether you kill him or no, I wil place you againe in paradiſe, that there you may remaine alwayes: then would the party without faile put the ſame in execution, indeuouring to murther all thoſe againſt whom the ſayd olde man had conceiued any hatred. And therefore all the kings of the eaſt ſtood in awe of the ſayd olde man, and gaue vnto him great tribute.

Of the death of Senex de monte.

And when the Tartars had ſubdued a great part of the world, they came vnto the ſayd olde man, and tooke from him the cuſtody of his paradiſe: who being incenſed thereat, ſent abroad diuers deſperate and reſolute perſons out of his forenamed paradiſe, and cauſed many of the Tartarian nobles to be ſlaine. The Tartars ſeeing this, went and beſieged the city wherein the ſaid olde man was, tooke him, and put him to a moſt cruell and ignominious death. The friers in that place haue this ſpeciall gift and prerogatiue: namely, that by the vertue of the name of Chriſt Ieſu, and in the vertue of his precious blood, which he ſhedde vpon the croſſe for the ſaluation of mankinde, they doe caſt foorth deuils out of them that are poſſeſſed. And becauſe there are many poſſeſſed men in thoſe parts, they are bound and brought ten dayes iourney vnto the ſayd friers, who being diſpoſſeſſed of the vncleane ſpirits, do preſently beleeue in Chriſt who deliuered them, accounting him for their God, and being baptiſed in his name, and alſo deliuering immediatly vnto the friers all their idols, and the idols of their cattell, which are commonly made of felt or of womens haire: then the ſayd friers kindle a fire in a publike place (whereunto the people reſort, that they may ſee the falſe gods of their neighbors burnt) and caſt the ſayd idols thereinto: howbeit at the firſt thoſe idols came out of the fire againe. Then the friers ſprinkled the ſayd fire with holy water, caſting the idols into it the ſecond time, and with that the deuils fled in the likeneſſe of blacke ſmoake, and the idols ſtill remained till they were conſumed vnto aſhes. Afterward, this noiſe & outcry was heard in the ayre: Beholde and ſee how I am expelled out of my habitation. And by theſe meanes the friers doe baptiſe great multitudes, who preſently reuolt againe vnto their idols: inſomuch that the ſayd friers muſt eftſoones, as it were, vnderprop them, and informe them anew. There was another terrible thing which I ſaw there: for paſſing by a certaine valley, which is ſituate beſide a pleaſant riuer, I ſaw many dead bodies, and in the ſayd valley alſo I heard diuers ſweet ſounds and harmonies of muſike, eſpecially the noiſe of citherns, whereat I was greatly amazed. This valley conteineth in length ſeuen or eight miles at the leaſt, into the which whoſoeuer entreth, dieth preſently, and can by no meanes paſſe aliue thorow the middeſt thereof: for which cauſe all the inhabitants thereabout decline vnto the one ſide. Moreouer, I was tempted to go in, and to ſee what it was. At length, making my prayers, and recommending my ſelfe to God in the name of Ieſu, I entred, and ſaw ſuch ſwarmes of dead bodies there, as no man would beleeue vnleſſe he were an eye witneſſe thereof. At the one ſide of the foreſayd valley vpon a certaine ſtone, I ſaw the viſage of a man, which beheld me with ſuch a terrible aſpect, that I thought verily I ſhould haue died in the ſame place. But alwayes this ſentence, the word became fleſh, and dwelt amongſt vs, I ceaſed not to pronounce, ſigning my ſelfe with the ſigne of the croſſe, and neerer then ſeuen or eight paſes I durſt not approch vnto the ſaid head: but I departed & fled vnto another place in the ſayd valley, aſcending vp into a little ſandy mountaine, where looking round about, I ſaw nothing but the ſayd citherns, which me thought I heard miraculouſly ſounding and playing by themſelues without the helpe of muſicians. And being vpon the toppe of the mountaine, I found ſiluer there like the ſcales of fiſhes in great abundance: and I gathered ſome part thereof into my boſome to ſhew for a wonder, but my conſcience rebuking me, I caſt it vpon the earth, reſeruing no whit at all vnto my ſelfe, and ſo, by Gods grace I departed without danger. And when the men of the countrey knew that I was returned out of the valley aliue, they reuerenced me much, ſaying that I was baptiſed and holy, and that the foreſayd bodies were men ſubiect vnto the deuils infernall, who vſed to play vpon citherns, to the end they might allure people to enter, and ſo murther them. Thus much concerning thoſe things which I beheld moſt certainely with mine eyes, I frier Odoricus haue heere written: many ſtrange things alſo I haue of purpoſe omitted, becauſe men will not beleeue them vnleſſe they ſhould ſee them.

Of the honour and reuerence done vnto the great Can.

I Will report one thing more, which I ſaw, concerning the great Can. It is an vſuall cuſtome in thoſe parts, that when the forſayd Can trauelleth thorow any countrey, his ſubiects kindle fires before their doores, caſting ſpices thereinto to make a perfume, that their lord paſſing by may ſmell the ſweet and delectable odours thereof, and much people come foorth to meet him. And vpon a certaine time when he was comming towardes Cambaleth, the fame of his approch being publiſhed, a biſhop of ours with certaine of our minorite friers and my ſelfe, went two dayes iourney to meet him: and being come nigh vnto him, we put a croſſe vpon wood, I my ſelfe hauing a cenſer in my hand, and began to ſing with a loud voice: Veni creator ſpiritus. And as we were ſinging on this wiſe, he cauſed vs to be called, commanding vs to come vnto him: notwithſtanding (as it is aboue mentioned) that no man dare approch within a ſtones caſt of his chariot, vnleſſe he be called, but ſuch onely as keepe his chariot. And when we came neere vnto him, he vailed his hat or bonet being of an ineſtimable price, doing reuerence vnto the croſſe. And immediatly I put incenſe into the cenſer, and our biſhop taking the cenſer perfumed him, and gaue him his benediction. Moreouer, they that come before the ſayd Can do alwayes bring ſome oblation to preſent vnto him, obſeruing the ancient law: Thou ſhalt not appeare in my preſence with an empty hand. And for that cauſe we carried apples with vs, and offered them in a platter with reuerence vnto him: and taking out two of them he did eat ſome part of one. And then he ſignified vnto vs, that we ſhould go apart, leaſt the horſes comming on might in ought offend vs. With that we departed from him, and turned aſide, going vnto certaine of his barons, which had bene conuerted to the faith by certaine friers of our order, being at the ſame time in his army: and we offered vnto them of the foreſayd apples, who receiued them at our hands with great ioy, ſeeming vnto vs to be as glad, as if we had giuen them ſome great gift.

All the premiſſes abouewritten frier William de Solanga hath put downe in writing euen as the foreſayd frier Odoricus vttered them by word of mouth, in the yeere of our Lord 1330, in the moneth of May, and in the place of S. Anthony of Padua. Neither did he regard to write them in difficult Latine or in an eloquent ſtile, but euen as Odoricus himſelfe rehearſed them, to the end that men might the more eaſily vnderſtand the things reported. I frier Odoricus of Friuli, of a certaine territory called Portus Vahonis, and of the order of the minorites, do teſtifie and beare witneſſe vnto the reuerend father Guidotus miniſter of the prouince of S. Anthony, in the marqueſate of Treuiſo (being by him required vpon mine obedience ſo to doe) that all the premiſſes aboue written, either I ſaw with mine owne eyes, or heard the ſame reported by credible and ſubſtantiall perſons. The common report alſo of the countreyes where I was, teſtifieth thoſe things, which I ſaw, to be true. Many other things I haue omitted, becauſe I beheld them not with mine owne eyes. Howbeit from day to day I purpoſe with my ſelfe to trauell countreyes or lands, in which action I diſpoſe my ſelfe to die or to liue, as it ſhall pleaſe my God.

Of the death of frier Odoricus.

IN the yeere therefore of our Lord 1331 the foreſayd frier Odoricus preparing himſelfe for the performance of his intended iourney, that his trauell and labour might be to greater purpoſe, he determined to preſent himſelfe vnto pope Iohn the two and twentieth, whoſe benediction and obedience being receiued, he, with a certaine number of friers willing to beare him company, might conuey himſelfe vnto all the countreyes of infidels. And as he was trauelling towards the pope, and not farre diſtant from the city of Piſa, there meets him by the way a certaine olde man, in the habit and attire of a pilgrime, ſaluting him by name, and ſaying: All haile frier Odoricus. And when the frier demaunded how he had knowledge of him: he anſwered: Whileſt you were in India I knew you full well, yea, and I knew your holy purpoſe alſo: but ſee that you returne immediatly vnto the couent from whence you came, for tenne dayes hence you ſhall depart out of this preſent world. Wherefore being aſtoniſhed and amazed at theſe wordes (eſpecially the olde man vaniſhing out of his ſight, preſently after he had ſpoken them) he determined to returne. And ſo he returned in perfect health, feeling no crazedneſſe nor infirmity of body. And being in his couent at Vdene in the prouince of Padua, the tenth day after the foreſayd viſion, hauing receiued the Communion, and preparing himſelfe vnto God, yea, being ſtrong and ſound of body, hee happily reſted in the Lord: whoſe ſacred departure was ſignified vnto the Pope aforeſaid, vnder the hand of the publique notary in theſe words following.

In the yeere of our Lord 1331, the 14. day of Ianuarie, Beatus Odoricus a Frier minorite deceaſed in Chriſt, at whoſe prayers God ſhewed many and ſundry miracles, which I Guetelus publique notarie of Vtina, ſonne of M. Damianus de Porto Gruaro, at the commandement and direction of the honorable Conradus of the Borough of Gaſtaldion, and one of the Councell of Vtina, haue written as faithfully as I could, and haue deliuered a copie thereof vnto the Friers minorites: howbeit not of all, becauſe they are innumerable, and too difficult for me to write.

The voyage of Matthew Gourney, a moſt valiant Engliſh Knight, againſt the Moores of Algier in Barbarie and Spaine. M. Camden pag. 159.

NEc tacendum Matthæum Gourney in oppido quodam, vulgari lingua Stoke vnder Hamden in comitatu Somerſetenſi appellato, ſepultum eſſe, virum bellicoſiſſimum regnante Edwardo tertio: qui 96. ætatis anno diem obiuit, cum (vt ex inſcriptione videre licuit) obſidioni d'Algizer contra Saracenos, prælijs Benamazin, Scluſenſi, Creſſiaco, Ingenos, Pictauienſi, & Nazarano in Hiſpania dimicaſſet.

The ſame in Engliſh.

IT is by no meanes to be paſſed ouer in ſilence, that Matthew Gourney, being a moſt valiant warriour in the reigne of Edward the third, lyeth buried at a certaine towne, in the countie of Somerſet, commonly called Stoke vnder Hamden: who deceaſed in the 96. yeare of his age; and that (as it is manifeſt by the inſcription of his monument) after he had valiantly behaued himſelfe at the ſiege of Algizer againſt the Sarazens, and at the battailes of Benamazin, of Sluce, of Creſſie, of Ingenos, of Poictou, and of Nazaran in Spaine.

In the reigne of Edward the third.

The comming of Lyon King of Armenia into England, in the yeere 1386, and in the ninth yeere of Richard the ſecond, in truſt to finde ſome meanes of peace or good agreement betweene the King of England and the French king. Iohn Froyſſart lib. 3. cap. 56.

THus in abiding for the Duke of Berrie, and for the Conſtable, who were behind, then king Lyon of Armenia, who was in France, and had aſſigned him by the king, ſixe thouſande frankes by the yeare to maintaine his eſtate, tooke vpon him for a good intent to goe into England to ſpeake with the king there and his Councell, to ſee if he might finde any matter of peace to be had, betweene the two Realmes, England and France: And ſo he departed from his lodging of Saint Albeyne beſide Saint Denice, alonely with his owne company, and with no great apparell. So he rode to Boloine, and there he tooke a ſhippe, and ſo ſayled foorth till he came to Douer; and there he found the Earle of Cambridge, and the Earle of Buckingham, and was then a hundreth men of armes, and a two thouſand Archers, who lay there to keepe that paſſage, for the bruite ran, that the Frenchmen ſhould lande there or at Sandwich, and the king lay at London, and part of his Councell with him, and daily heard tydings from all the Portes of England. When the king of Armenia was arriued at Douer, he had there good cheere, becauſe he was a ſtranger, and ſo he came to the kings Vncles there, who ſweetly receiued him, and at a time conuenient, they demaunded of him from whence he came and whither he would. The king anſwered and ſayd, that in truſt of goodneſſe he was come thither to ſee the king of England, and his Councell, to treate of peace betweene England and France, for he ſawe that he thought the warre was not meete: for he ſayd, by reaſon of warre betweene theſe two Realmes which hath indured ſo long, the Saracens, Iewes & Turkes are waxed prowde, for there is none that make them any warre, and by occaſion thereof I haue loſt my land and Realme, and am not like to recouer them againe without there were firme peace in all Chriſtendome: & I would gladly ſhew the matter that toucheth all Chriſtendome to the king of England, and to his Councell, as I haue done to the French king. Then the kings Vncles demaunded of him if the French king ſent him thither or no; he anſwered and ſayd, no: there is no man that ſent mee, but I am come hither by mine owne motion to ſee if the king of England & his Councel would any thing leane to any treaty of peace, then was he demaunded where the French king was, he anſwered I beleeue he be at Sluce, I ſawe not him ſithence I tooke my leaue of him at Senlize. Then he was demaunded, howe he could make any treatie of peace, and had no charge ſo to doe, and Sir, if yee be conueyed to the King our Nephew and to his Counſell, and the French king in the meane ſeaſon enter with his puiſſance into England; yee may happe thereby to receiue great blame, and your perſon to be in great ieoperdy with them of the Countrey. Then the King anſwered and ſaid, I am in ſuretie of the French king, for I haue ſent to him, deſiring him till I returne againe, not to remoue from Sluce, and I repute him ſo noble and ſo well aduiſed, that he will graunt my deſire, and that hee will not enter into the ſea, till I come againe to him. Wherefore, ſirs, I pray you in the inſtance of loue and peace, to conuey me to ſpeake with the King, for I deſire greatly to ſee him: or elſe yee that be his Vncles, if ye haue authoritie, to giue me anſwere to all my demaunds. Then the Earle of Buckingham ſayd, ſyr king of Armenia, we be ordayned here to keepe and defend this paſſage, and the frontiers of England, by the King and his Counſell, and wee haue no charge to meddle any further with the buſineſſe of the Realme, without we be otherwiſe commanded by the King. But ſith ye be come for a good intent into this Countrey, ye be right welcome; but ſir, as for any firme anſwere ye can haue none of vs, for as now we be not of the Councell, but we ſhall conuey you to the king without perill or danger. The king thanked them, and ſaid: I deſire nothing elſe but to ſee the king and to ſpeake with him.

How the King of Armenia returned out of England, and of the anſwere that was made to him.

When the king of Armenia was refreſhed at Douer a day, and had ſpoken with the kings Vncles at good leaſure, then he departed towards London, with a good conduct that the Lords appointed to him, for feare of any recounters: ſo long he rode that he came to London, and in his ryding through London he was well regarded, becauſe he was a ſtranger, and he had good cheare made him, and ſo was brought to the king, who lay at the Royall at the Queenes wardrobe, and his Councell were in London at their lodgings: The Londoners were ſore fortefying of their citie. When the comming of the king of Armenia was knowen, the kings Councell drew to the King to heare what tydings the King brought in that troublous ſeaſon: When the king of Armenia was come into the kings preſence, he made his ſalutation and then beganne his proceſſe to the ſtates, how he was come out of France principally to ſee the king of England whõ he had neuer ſeene before, & ſaid, how he was right ioyous to be in his preſence, truſting that ſome goodneſſe might come thereby. And there he ſhewed by his wordes, that to withſtande the great peſtilence that was likely to be in England; therefore he was come of his owne good will to doe good therein if he might, not ſent from the French king, willing to ſet ſome accorde and peace betweene the two Realmes England and France. Many faire pleaſant wordes the king of Armenia ſpake to the king of England, and to his Counſell, then he was ſhortly anſwered thus: Syr king, ye be welcome into this Realme, for the king our Soueraigne lord, and all we are glad to ſee you here, but ſir, we ſay that the king hath not here all his Councell, but ſhortly they ſhall be here, and then ye ſhall be anſwered. The king of Armenia was content therewith, and ſo returned to his lodging. Within foure dayes after the king was counſelled (and I thinke he had ſent to his Vncles to know their intents, but they were not preſent at the anſwere giuing) to goe to the pallace at Weſtminſter and his Councell with him, ſuch as were about him, and to ſend for the king of Armenia to come thither. And when he was come into the preſence of the king of England and his Councell, the king ſate downe, and the king of Armenia by him, and then the Prelates and other of his Councell. There the king of Armenia rehearſed againe his requeſtes that he made, and alſo ſhewed wiſely how all Chriſtendome was ſore decayed and feebliſhed by occaſion of the warres betweene England and France. And how that all the knights and Squires of both Realmes entended nothing elſe, but alwayes to be on the one part or of the other: whereby the Empire of Conſtantinople leeſeth, and is like to leeſe; for before this warre the Knightes and Squires were wont to aduenture themſelues. And alſo the king of Armenia ſhewed that by occaſion of this warre he had loſt his Realme of Armenia, therefore he deſired for Gods ſake that there might be ſome treaty of peace had betweene the two Realmes England and France. To theſe wordes anſwered the Archbiſhop of Canterburie, for he had charge ſo to doe; And he ſayd, Sir king of Armenia, it is not the manner nor neuer was ſeene betweene two ſuch enemies as the king of England and the French king, that the king my Soueraigne lorde ſhould be required of peace, and he to enter his land with a puiſſant army, wherefore ſir, we ſay to you, that if it pleaſe you, ye may returne to the French king, and cauſe him and all his puiſſance to returne backe into their owne countreys. And when euery man be at home, then if it pleaſe you ye may returne againe hither, and then we ſhall gladly intende to your treatie.

This was all the anſwere the king of Armenia could get there, and ſo he dined with the king of England, and had as great honour as could bee deuiſed, and the king offered him many great gifts of golde and ſiluer, but he would take none though he had neede thereof, but alonely a ring to the value of a hundreth Frankes. After dinner he tooke his leaue and returned vnto his lodging, and the next day departed, and was two dayes at Douer, and there he tooke his leaue of ſuch lords as were there, and ſo tooke the ſea in a paſſager, and arriued at Calais and from thence went to Sluce, and there he ſpake with the French king and with his Vncles, and ſhewed them how he had bene in England, and what anſwere he had: the French king and his Vncles tooke no regard of his ſaying, but ſent him backe againe into France, for their full intention was to enter into England as ſoone as they might haue winde and weather, and the Duke of Berrie and the Conſtable came to them: The winde was ſore contrary to them, for therewith they could neuer enter into England but the winde was good to goe into Scotland.

The ſame in Engliſh.

THe French in the meane ſeaſon hauing gotten ſome leaſure by meanes of their truce, and being ſollicited and vrged by the intreaties of the Genuois, vndertooke to wage warre against the Moores, who robbed and ſpoyled all the coaſts of Italy, and of the Ilandes adiacent. Likewiſe Richard the ſecond, king of England, being ſued vnto for ayde, ſent Henry the Earle of Derbie with a choice armie of Engliſh ſouldiers vnto the ſame warfare. Wherefore the Engliſh and French, with forces and mindes vnited, ſayled ouer into Africa, who when they approched vnto the ſhore were repelled by the Barbarians from landing, vntill ſuch time as they had paſſage made them by the valour of the Engliſh archers. Thus hauing landed their forces, they foorthwith marched vnto the royall citie of Tunis, and beſieged it. Whereat the Barbarians being diſmayed, ſent Amballadours vnto our Chriſtian Chieftaines to treat of peace, which our men graunted vnto them, vpon condition that they ſhould pay a certaine ſumme of money, and that they ſhould from thencefoorth abſtaine from piracies vpon all the coaſts of Italy and France. And ſo hauing diſpatched their buſineſſe, within a fewe moneths after their departure they returned home.

This Hiſtorie is ſomewhat otherwiſe recorded by Froyſard and Holenſhed in manner following, pag. 473.

IN the thirteenth yeere of the reigne of king Richard the ſecond, the Chriſtians tooke in hand a iourney againſt the Saracens of Barbarie through ſute of the Genouois, ſo that there went a great number of Lords, Knights, and Gentlemen of France and England, the Duke of Burbon being their Generall. Out of England there went Iohn de Beaufort baſtarde ſonne to the Duke of Lancaſter (as Froyſard hath noted) alſo Sir Iohn Ruſſell, Sir Iohn Butler, Sir Iohn Harecourt and others. They ſet forwarde in the latter ende of the thirteenth yeere of the Kings reigne, and came to Genoa, where they remayned not verie long, but that the gallies and other veſſels of the Genouois were ready to paſſe them ouer into Barbarie. And ſo about midſomer in the begining of the foureteenth yere of this kings reigne the whole army being embarked, ſailed forth to the coaſt of Barbary, where neere to the city of Africa they landed: at which inſtant the Engliſh archers (as the Chronicles of Genoa write) ſtood all the company in good ſtead with their long bowes, beating backe the enemies from the ſhore, which came downe to reſiſt their landing. The Chronicles of Genoa. After they had got to land, they inuironed the city of Africa (called by the Moores Mahdia) with a ſtrong ſiege: but at length, conſtrained with the intemperancy of the ſcalding ayre in that hot countrey, breeding in the army ſundry diſeaſes, they fell to a compoſition vpon certaine articles to be performed in the behalfe of the Saracens: and ſo 61 dayes after their arriuall there they tooke the ſeas againe, and returned home, as in the hiſtories of France and Genoa is likewiſe expreſſed. Where, by Polydore Virgil it may ſeeme, that the lord Henry of Lancaſter earle of Derby ſhould be generall of the Engliſh men, that (as before you heard) went into Barbary with the French men and Genouois.

The voyage of the Lord Iohn of Holland, Earle of Huntington, brother by the mothers ſide to King Richard the ſecond, to Ieruſalem and Saint Katherins mount.

1394. Froyſſart. THe Lord Iohn of Holland, Earle of Huntington, was as then on his way to Ieruſalem, and to Saint Katherins mount, and purpoſed to returne by the Realme of Hungarie. For as he paſſed through France (where he had great cheere of the king, and of his brother and vncles) hee heard how the king of Hungary and the great Turke ſhould haue battell together: therefore he thought ſurely to be at that iourney.

THomas lord Moubray, ſecond ſonne of Elizabeth Segraue and Iohn lord Moubray her huſband, was aduanced to the dukedome of Norfolke in the 21. yeere of yͤ reigne of Richard the 2. Shortly after which, hee was appealed by Henry earle of Bullingbroke of treaſon, and caried to the caſtle of Windſore, where he was ſtrongly & ſafely garded, hauing a time of combate granted to determine the cauſe betweene the two dukes, the 16. day of September, in the 22. of the ſayd king, being the yeere of our redemption 1398. But in the end the matter was ſo ordred, that this duke of Norfolke was baniſhed for euer: whereupon taking his iourney to Ieruſalem, he died at Venice in his returne from the ſaid citie of Ieruſalem, in the firſt yeere of king Henry the 4. about the yeere of our redemption, 1399.

A preparation of a voyage of King Henrie the fourth to the Holy land againſt the infidels in the yere 1413, being the laſt yere of his reigne: wherein he was preuented by death: written by Walſingham, Fabian, Polydore Virgile, and Holenſhed.

IN this foureteenth and laſt yere of king Henries reigne a councell was holden in the White friers in London, at the which among other things, order was taken for ſhips and gallies to be builded and made ready, and all other things neceſſary to be prouided for a voyage, which he meant to make into the Holy land, there to recouer the city of Ieruſalem from the infidels: for it grieued him to conſider the great malice of Chriſtian princes, that were bent vpon a miſchieuous purpoſe to deſtroy one another, to the perill of their owne ſoules, rather then to make warre againſt the enemies of the Chriſtian faith, as in conſcience, it ſeemed to him, they were bound. We finde, ſayeth Fabian in his Chronicle, that he was taken with his laſt ſickneſſe, while he was making his prayers at Saint Edwards ſhrine, there as it were, to take his leaue, and ſo to proceede foorth on his iourney. He was ſo ſuddenly and grieuouſly taken, that ſuch as were about him feared leaſt he would haue died preſently: wherefore to relieue him, if it were poſſible, they bare him into a chamber that was next at hand, belonging to the Abbot of Weſtminſter, where they layd him on a pallet before the fire, and vſed all remedies to reuiue him. At length he recouered his ſpeech, and perceiuing himſelfe in a ſtrange place which he knew not, he willed to know if the chamber had any particular name, whereunto anſwere was made, that it was called Ieruſalem. Then ſayde the king, Laudes be giuen to the father of heauen: for now I knowe that I ſhall die here in this chamber, according to the prophecie of mee declared, that I ſhould depart this life in Ieruſalem.

Order taken for building of ſhips and gallies.

Of this intended voyage Polydore Virgile writeth in manner following.

POſt hæc Henricus Rex memor nihil homini debere eſſe antiquius, quàm ad officium iuſtitiæ, quæ ad hominum vtilitatem pertinet, omne ſuum ſtudium conferre, protinus omiſſo ciuili bello, quo pudebat videre Chriſtianos omni tempore turpiter occupari, de republica Anglica benè gubernanda, de bello in hoſtes communes ſumendo, de Hieroſolymis tandem aliquando recipiendis plura deſtinabat, claſſemque iam parabat, cum ei talia agenti atque meditanti caſus mortem attulit; ſubito enim morbo tentatus, nulla medicina ſubleuari potuit. The ſame in Engliſh.

Afterward, King Henry calling to minde, that nothing ought to be more highly eſteemed by any man, then to doe the vtmoſt of his indeuour for the performance of iuſtice, which tendeth to the good and benefite of mankinde; altogether abandoning ciuill warre (wherewith he was aſhamed to ſee, how Chriſtians at all times were diſhonourably buſied) entred into a more deepe conſideration of well gouerning his Realme of England, of waging warre againſt the common enemie, and of recouering, in proceſſe of time, the citie of Ieruſalem, yea, and was prouiding a nauie for the ſame purpoſe, whereas in the very midſt of this his heroicall action and enterpriſe, he was ſurpriſed with death: for falling into a ſudden diſeaſe, he could not be cured by any kinde of phiſicke. He deceaſed at Weſtminſter in the 46 yeare of his age, which was in the yeere of our Lord, 1413.

A briefe relation of the ſiege and taking of the Citie of Rhodes, by Sultan Soliman the great Turke, tranſlated out of French into Engliſh at the motion of the Reuerend Lord Thomas Dockwray, great Prior of the order of Ieruſalem in England, in the yeere, 1524.

Willing faithfully to write and reduce in veritie Hiſtoriall, the great ſiege, cruell oppugnation, and piteous taking of the noble and renowmed citie of Rhodes, the key of Chriſtendome, the hope of many poore Chriſtian men, withholden in Turkie to ſaue and keepe them in their faith: the reſt and yeerely ſolace of noble pilgrimes of the holy ſepulchre of Ieſu Chriſt and other holy places: the refuge and refreſhing of all Chriſtian people: hauing courſe of marchandiſe in the parties of Leuant, I promiſe to all eſtates that ſhall ſee this preſent booke, that I haue left nothing for feare of any perſon, nor preferred it for fauour. And firſt I ſhall ſhewe the occaſions that mooued this cruell bloodſhedder, enemie of our holy Chriſtian faith, Sultan Soliman, now being great Turke, to come with a great hoſte by ſea and by lande, to beſiege and aſſayle the ſpace of ſixe moneths, night and day, the noble and mightie citie of Rhodes, The yeere of the incarnation of our Lord Ieſu Chriſt, 1522.

The occaſions why the great Turke came to beſiege the Citie of Rhodes.

The firſt and principall cauſe was that he did conſider and ſawe by experience, that there was none other Towne nor place in Leuant that warred againſt him nor kept him in doubt, but this poore rocke of Rhodes. And hearing the continuall complaintes of his ſubiectes aſwell of Syria, as of Turkie, for the damages and priſes dayly done of their bodies and goods by Chriſtian men of warre receiued into Rhodes: And alſo of the ſhippes and galleis of the religion, he tooke concluſion in himſelfe, that if he might put the ſayde Towne in his power and ſubiection, that then he ſhould be peaceable lord of all the parties of Leuant, and that his ſubiects ſhould complaine no more to him.

The ſecond, that he might followe the doings of his noble predeceſſours, and ſhewe himſelfe very heire of the mightie and victorious lord Sultan Selim his father, willing to put in execution the enterpriſe by him left the yeere one thouſand fiue hundred twentie and one. The which Selim the great Turke put in all readineſſe his armie to the number of three hundreth ſayles purpoſing for to ſend them againſt Rhodes, if mortalitie had not happened in his hoſt, and he afterwarde by the will of our lorde was ſurpriſed and taken with death: wherefore he being in the latter ende of his dayes, (as ſome Turkes and falſe chriſtian men that were at this ſiege haue told me) did charge by his teſtament, or cauſed to charge his ſonne now being great Turke, that after his death hee ſhould make his two firſt enterpriſes, the one againſt Bellegrado in Hungarie, and the other againſt Rhodes, for to get him honour, and to ſet his Countries and ſubiectes in reſt and ſuretie. The which fatherly motion eaſilie entered into him and was imprinted in the heart and yoong will of the ſayde Solyman his ſonne, the which ſoone after the death of his father put in effect the firſt enterpriſe, and raiſed an huge hoſte both by water and by land, and went himſelfe in perſon againſt Bellegrado, a right ſtrong place in Hungarie. And after that hee had beſieged it the ſpace of two moneths or thereabout, for fault of ordinance and vitailes, it was yeelded to him by compoſition the eight day of September, in the yeere of our lord, one thouſand fiue hundred twentie and one. The ſayd Solyman hauing this victory, being ſwollen and raiſed in pride and vaineglory, turned his heart agaynſt Rhodes. Neuertheleſſe, he not ignorant of the ſtrength of it, and conſidering the qualities of the people that were within it, of whom he ſhould be well receiued as his predeceſſours had bene aforetimes, doubted much, and knew not how to furniſh his enterpriſe. For his capitaines and Baſhas turned him from it as much as they might by many reaſons, they knowing the force of it, ſaue onely Muſtofa Baſha his brother in lawe, the which counſelled and put him in minde to goe thither. Finally, hee purpoſed entirely to haue it by treaſon or by force. And alſo for the ſame cauſe and purpoſe, his father in his dayes had ſent a Iewe phyſician into Rhodes as a ſpie, to haue the better knowledge of it: the ſayd Solyman was informed that he was there yet, wherfore he ſent him worde that he ſhould abide there ſtill for the ſame cauſe. And gaue in charge to one of the chiefe men in Sio, to ſend vnto the ſayd Iewe all things needefull to maintaine him. And the ſame Iewe wrote to him of Sio, vnder priuie wordes, all that was done in Rhodes to giue knowledge thereof to the great Turke: and the better to hide his treaſon, the ſayde Iewe made himſelfe to bee baptiſed. And to bee the more named to be expert in Phyſike, he did ſome faire cures to ſuch as were diſeaſed, whereby he began to bee well truſted, and came in fauour with many ſubſtantiall folkes of the towne. Among all other things whereof hee aduertiſed the great Turke, one was of a wall that was taken downe for to be new builded at the bulwarke of Auuergne, certifying him that if hee came haſtely with his hoſte, hee might eaſilie and at vnawares ſurpriſe the towne in ſuch eſtate as it was at that time. Many other aduertiſements and warnings hee ſhewed the Turke, which ſhall bee declared hereafter. But beſide his aduertiſement, the ſayd great Turke ſtirred and prouoked by a falſe traitour, a Portingale knight of ours, that time Chanceller of the ſayd holy Religion, a man of great authoritie, dignitie, and vnderſtanding, and one of the principall lordes of the counſell of the ſame, named Sir Andrew de Merall, by little and little was mooued and kindled to the ſayd enterpriſe of treaſon, whereof was no maruell, for it was a great hope and comfort to haue ſuch a perſon for him, that knew all the eſtate and rule of the religion and of the towne. And for to declare the occaſions of the curſed and vnhappy will of the ſaid traitor that had bene occaſion of ſo great loſſe and damage, and ſhall be more at the length, if the diuine power ſet not to his hand.

The taking of Belgrade.

Forren phyſitians become ſpies oftentimes.

A Portingale traitor.

And here it is manifeſtly to bee vnderſtood of all men, that after the death of the noble and right prudent lord, Fabrice of Cacetto, great maſter of Rhodes, the ſayd Sir Andrew enflamed with ambition and couetouſneſſe to bee great maſter, and ſeeing himſelfe deceiued of his hope, by the election made the two and twentieth day of Ianuary, of the right reuerend and illuſtrate lord, Philip de Villiers Liſleadam, before him: from that time hee tooke ſo great enuie and deſperation, enmitie and euill will, not onely againſt the ſayde lord, but againſt all the holy religion, that hee ſet all his ſtudie and purpoſe, to betray and ſell his religion and the citie of Rhodes to the curſed miſbeleeuers, forgetting the great honours and goodneſſe that hee hath had of the religion, and hoped to receiue, with many other particuler pleaſures that the ſayd lord maſter had done to him. But the deuill, vnkindneſſe, and wickedneſſe had ſo blinded the eyes of his thought, that hee in no wiſe could refraine him, but at euery purpoſe that was ſpoken afore him, hee was ſhort and might not diſſemble. And one day among other hee ſayde before many knights, that hee would that his ſoule were at the deuill, and that Rhodes and the religion were loſt. And many other fooliſh and diſhoneſt purpoſes and wordes hee vttered, whereat none tooke heed, nor thought that hee had the courage to doe that thing that hee hath done. Howbeit, obſtinate as Iudas, hee put in execution his curſed will: for ſoone after that the tidings of the election was ſent Weſtward to the ſayde noble lord, the ſayd de Merall did ſend a Turke priſoner of his to Conſtantinople, vnder ſhadowe to fetch his ranſome. By whom hee aduertiſed the great Turke and his counſell, of the maner and degree of Rhodes, and in what ſtate and condicion the towne was in of all maner of things at that time, and what might happen of it, prouoking and ſtirring him to come with a great hoſte to beſiege the towne. And after the comming of the ſayd reuerend lord great maſter, he gaue other aduiſe to the great Turke, ſhewing him that hee could neuer haue better time to come, ſeeing that the great maſter was new come, and part of the wall taken downe, and that all Rhodes was in trouble by occaſion of ſome Italian knights, rebels agaynſt the lord great maſter: of the which rebellion he was cauſer, the better to bring his curſed mind to paſſe: and alſo gaue the ſayde great Turke knowledge that all Chriſtian princes were buſie, warring each vpon other, and that he ſhould not doubt but if the rebellion laſted among them, the towne ſhould be his without faile, as it is ſeene by experience. And for lacke of ſuccours of euery part, and eſpecially of ſuch as might eaſily haue holpen vs beyng our neighbours, with their gallies and men of warre, wherefore it is now in the handes of the enemies of the chriſtian faith. The which meditations and reaſons of the falſe traitor being vnderſtood and pondered by the great Turke and his counſell, it was conſidered of them not to looſe ſo good occaſion and time. Wherefore hee made moſt extreme diligence to rigge and apparell many ſhips & veſſels of diuers ſorts, as galliaſſes, gallies, pallandres, fuſtes, and brigantines, to the number of 350. ſailes and moe.

When the priſoner that the ſayd de Merall did ſend into Turkie had done his commiſſion, hee returned into Rhodes, whereof euery man had maruell. And many folkes deemed euil of his comming againe, as of a thing vnaccuſtomed, but none durſt ſay any thing, ſeeing the ſayd de Merall of ſo great authoritie and dignitie, and he cheriſhed the ſayd priſoner more then he was woont to doe. Therefore belike hee had well done his meſſage, and had brought good tidings to the damnable and ſhamefull mind of the ſayd traitor de Merall.

How the great Turke cauſed the paſſages to be kept, that none ſhould beare tidings of his hoſte to Rhodes.

The great Turke intending with great diligence to make readie his hoſte both by ſea and by land, the better to come to his purpoſe, and to take the towne vnwarily as hee was aduertiſed, thought to keepe his doings as ſecret as hee might, and commaunded that none of his ſubiects ſhould goe to Rhodes for any maner of thing. And likewiſe he tooke all the barkes and brigantines out of the hauens and portes in thoſe coaſtes, becauſe they ſhould giue no knowledge of his armie. And alſo hee made the paſſages by land to bee kept, that none ſhould paſſe. Howbeit, ſo great apparell of an armie could not bee long kept cloſe: for the ſpies which the lord great maſter had ſent into Turkie, brought tidings to the caſtle of ſaint Peter, and to Rhodes, of all that was ſayd and done in Turkie. Neuertheleſſe, the ſayd lord gaue no great credence to all that was brought and told, becauſe that many yeeres before, the predeceſſours of the great Turke had made great armies: and alway it was ſayd that they went to Rhodes, the which came to none effect. And it was holden for a mocke and a by-word in many places, that the Turke would goe to beſiege Rhodes. And for this reaſon doubt was had of this laſt armie, and ſome thought that it ſhould haue gone into Cyprus or to Cataro, a land of the lordſhip of Venice. Howbeit the great maſter not willing to bee taken vnwarily, but the meane while as carefull and diligent for the wealth of his towne, & his people, vnderſtanding theſe tidings of the Turkes armie, did all his diligence to repaire and ſtrengthen the towne. Amongſt all other things to build vp, and raiſe the bulwarke of Auuergne, and to cleanſe and make deeper the ditches. And the more to cauſe the workemen to haſte them in their buſineſſe, the ſayd lord ouerſawe them twiſe or thriſe euery day.

How the lord great maſter counſelled with the lordes for prouiſion for the towne.

Sir Ioh. Bourgh the Engliſh Turcoplier.

Then the ſayd reuerend lord thought to furniſh and ſtore the towne with more vitailes for the ſuſtenance thereof, and for the ſame many times hee ſpake with the lordes that had the handling and rule of the treaſurie, and of the expenſes thereof in his abſence, and ſince his comming: That is to wit, with the great Commander Gabriel de pommerolles, lieutenant of the ſayd lord: The Turcoplier Sir Iohn Bourgh of the Engliſh nation: and the Chanceller Sir Andrew de Meral, of whom is ſpoken afore, and of his vntruth agaynſt his religion. The which three lordes ſayd, that hee ſhould take no thought for it, for the towne was well ſtored with vitailes for a great while, and that there was wheate ynough till new came in: Notwithſtanding it were good to haue more, or the ſiege were laied afore the towne, and therefore it were behooueful to ſend for wheate and other neceſſaries into the Weſt for ſuccours of the towne, and at that time to puruey for euery thing.

Of the prouiſion for vitailes and ordinance of warre.

AS touching the ſtore and ordinance of warre, the ſayd lordes affirmed that there was ynough for a yeere and more, whereof the contrary was found, for it failed a moneth or the citie was yeelded. It is of trueth that there was great ſtore, and to haue laſted longer then it did. But it was needfull to ſpend largely at the firſt comming of the enemies to keepe them from comming neere, and from bringing earth to the ditches ſides as they did. And moreouer you are to conſider the great number of them, and their power that was ſpred round about the towne, giuing vs ſo many aſſaults and ſkirmiſhes in ſo many places as they did, and by the ſpace of ſixe whole moneths day and night aſſailing vs, that much ordinance and ſtore was waſted to withſtand them in all points. And if it failed, it was no maruell. Howbeit the noble lord great maſter prouided ſpeedily for it, and ſent Brigantines to Lango, to the caſtle of ſaint Peter, and to the caſtels of his iſle Feraclous and Lyndo, for to bring powder and ſaltpeter to ſtrength the towne, but it ſuffiſed not.

And for to ſpeake of the purueiance of vitailes, it was aduiſed by the lord great maſter and his three lords, that it was time to ſend ſome ſhips for wheat to places thereabout, before the Turks hoſte were come thither. And for this purpoſe was appointed a ſhip named the Gallienge, whoſe captaine hight Brambois, otherwiſe called Wolfe, of the Almaine nation, an expert man of the ſea, the which made ſo good diligence, that within a moneth he performed his voiage, and brought good ſtore of wheat from Naples and Romania, which did vs great comfort.

How a Brigantine was ſent to Candie for wine, and of diuers ſhips that came to helpe the towne.

AFter this, a motion was made to make prouiſion of wine for the towne, for the men of Candie durſt not ſaile for to bring wine to Rhodes as they were woont to doe for feare of the Turkes hoſte: and alſo they of the towne would ſend no ſhip into Candie, fearing to be taken and encloſed with the ſayd hoſte by the way. Howbeit ſome merchants of the towne were willing to haue aduentured themſelues in a good ſhip of the religion, named the Mary, for to haue laden her with wine in Candie. But they could not agree with the three lordes of the treaſure, and their let was but for a little thing: and all the cauſe came of the ſayd traitour de Merall, faining the wealth of the treaſure; for he intended another thing, and brake this good and profitable enterpriſe and will of the ſayd merchants, ſeeing that it was hurtfull to the Turke, whoſe part the ſaid traitour held in his diueliſh heart: that notwithſtanding, the reuerend lord great maſter, that in all things from the beginning to the ende, hath alway ſhewed his good will, and with all diligence and right that might bee requiſite to a ſoueraigne captaine and head of warre, found other expedience, and ſent a Brigantine into Candie, in the which he ſent a brother ſergeant named Anthonie of Boſus, a well ſprighted man and wiſe, that by his wiſedome wrought ſo well, that within a ſmall time he brought fifteene veſſels called Gripes, laden with wine, and with them men of warre the which came vnder ſhadow of thoſe wines, becauſe the gouernours of Candie durſt let none of their men goe to the ſuccour of Rhodes for feare of the Turke. And beſide thoſe fifteene Gripes came a good ſhip whoſe capitaine and owner was a rich yong gentleman Venetian, Meſſire Iohn Antonio de Bonaldi, which of his good will came with his ſhip laden with 700. buts of wine to ſuccour the towne with his perſon and folkes, whoſe good and lowable will I leaue to the conſideration of the readers of this preſent booke. For hee being purpoſed to haue had his wines to Conſtantinople, or he was enformed of the buſines of Rhodes, and was in the porte du Caſtell in Candie, would not beare his vitailes to the enemies of the faith, but came out and returned his way toward Rhodes, forgetting all particular profite and aduantage. He being arriued at Rhodes, diſpatched and ſold his wine, which was a great encreaſe and comfort for the towne. And when he had ſo done, he preſented his perſon, his ſhip, and his folke, to the reuerend great maſter, the which retained him, and ſet him in wages of the Religion. And during the ſiege, the ſayd capitaine behaued him worthily in his perſon, and put himſelfe in ſuch places as worthy men ought to be, ſpending his goods largely without demanding any paiment or recompenſe for his doing, of the Religion.

How the corne was ſhorne downe halfe ripe and brought into the towne for feare of the Turkes hoſte.

DUring theſe things, the reuerend lord great maſter carefull and buſie to haue euery thing neceſſary, as men and other ſtrengths, ſent veſſels called brigantines, for to cauſe the waſters of the ſea to come into Rhodes, for the keeping and fortifying of the towne, the which at the firſt ſending came and preſented their perſons and ſhips to the ſeruice of the religion.

Harueſt in Aprill and May.

After that the ſayd lord cauſed to ſhere downe the Rie of his iſle, and cauſed it to bee brought into the towne, which was done in Aprill: and then in May in ſome places, he made to ſhere the wheate halfe ripe, howbeit the moſt part was left in the fields, becauſe the Turkes hoſte was come out of the ſtreights of Conſtantinople. And doubting that any number of ſhips ſhould come before to take the people of the ſayd Iſle vnwares, the ſayd lord made them to leaue ſhering of wheate, and cauſed the people of the furtheſt part of the Iſle to come into the towne.

While that the great maſter prouided for all things after the courſe of time and tidings that hee had, there arriued a Carak of Genoa laden with ſpicerie from Alexandria, the which paſſed before the port of Rhodes the eight day of Aprill, and rid at anker at the Foſſe, 7. or 8. miles from the towne, for to know and heare tidings of the Turkiſh hoſte. Then the lord willing to furniſh him with people as moſt behoouefull for the towne, ſent a knight of Prouence named ſir Anaſtaſe de ſancta Camilla, commander de la Tronquiere to the captaine of the Carak, praying him to come into the hauen with his ſhip for the defence of the towne, proffering him what he would, aſſuring him his ſhip. The captaine excuſed him, ſaying, that the merchandiſe was not his owne, but belonged to diuers merchants to whom he muſt yeeld account. Howbeit at the laſt after many words and promiſes to him made, hee came into the hauen, the which captaine was named meſſire Domingo de Fournati, and hee in his perſon behaued him valiauntly in the time of the ſayd ſiege.

How the great maſter cauſed generall muſters to be made, and ſent a veſſell to the Turkes nauie, of whom he receiued a letter.

After the moneth of April the lord maſter ſeeing that the Turkes hoſte drew neere, and that he had the moſt part of the waſters within the towne, he cauſed generall muſters of men of armes to be made. And began at the knights, the which vpon holy Rood day in May made their muſters before the Commiſſioners ordained by the ſayd lord in places deputed to each of them called Aulberge. The which Commiſſioners made report to the lordes that they had found the knights in good order of harneſſe & other things neceſſary for warre, & their araie faire & proper, with croſſes on them. When the muſter of the knights was done, the lord maſter thought to make the muſters of them of the towne, and ſtrangers together: but his wiſedome perceiued that harme ſhould come thereby, rather then good, doubting that the number of people ſhould not bee ſo great as he would, or needed to haue, whereof the great Turke might haue knowledge by goers and commers into Rhodes, and therefore he cauſed them of the towne to make their muſters ſeuerall by bandes and companies, and the ſtrangers alſo by themſelues, to the end that the number ſhould not bee knowen, notwithſtanding that there was good quantitie of good men and well willing to defend themſelues. And the more to hearten and giue them courage and good will, ſome knights of the Croſſe, decked their men with colours and deuiſes, and tooke with them men of the towne and ſtrangers, and with great noyſe of trumpets and timbrels, they made many muſters, as enuying each other which ſhould keepe beſt aray and order, and haue the faireſt company. It was a great pleaſure to ſee them all ſo well agree, and ſo well willing.

The number of the men of the towne amounted and were eſteemed, three or foure thouſand, beſide men of the villages, that might be 1500. or 2000.

The eight day of the ſame moneth, the Turkes hearing of thoſe tidings, made a fire for a token in a place called le Fiſco, in the maine land right againſt Rhodes. And certaine dayes afore they had made another, that is to weet, when the ſhip of a knight named Menetow went thither, and had with him the clarke of the gallies named Iaques truchman, the which vnder ſhadow to ſpeake with him, was withholden of the Turkes. For the great Turke had commanded to take him or ſome other man of the Rhodes to haue perfect knowledge in what eſtate the towne was then in euery thing. And they of the towne weening that the ſecond fire was for to deliuer Iaques, the reuerend lord great maſter ſent one of his galliaſſes, whoſe patron was called meſſire Boniface of Prouence, to know the cauſe thereof. And when hee arriued at the ſayd place of le Fiſco, he demaunded of the Turkes wherefore they had made the token of fire. And they ſaid that it was becauſe their lord had ſent a letter to the great maſter, but as yet it was not come, and deſired him to tary till it were brought. The patron as warie & wiſe in the buſineſſe of the ſea, thought in himſelfe that the Turkes made ſuch prolonging to ſome euill intent, or to ſurpriſe his veſſell being alone, wherefore hee bade them giue him the letter ſpeedily, or els he would goe his way, and neither tary for letter nor other thing: and told them of the euill and diſhoneſt deed that they had done the dayes afore, to withhold the clarke vnder their wordes and ſafeconduct: and therewith he turned his galliaſſe to haue gone away. The Turkes ſeeing that, gaue him the letter, the which he tooke, and when he was arriued at Rhodes, he preſented it to the lord great maſter, which aſſembles the lordes of his counſell, and made it to be red: The tenor whereof was ſuch as foloweth.

The copie of the letter that the great Turke ſent to the lord great maſter, and to the people of the Rhodes.

SVltan Solyman Baſha by the grace of God, right mightie emperor of Conſtantinople, and of himſelfe holding both the lands of Perſia, Arabia, Syria, Mecha, and Ieruſalem; of Aſia, Europe, Ægypt, and of all the Sea, lord and poſſeſſor: To the reuerend father lord Philip, great maſter of Rhodes, to his counſailors, and to all the other citizens great and ſmall, greeting. Sending conuenient and worthy ſalutations to your reuerences, wee giue you to weet, that we haue receiued your letters ſent vnto our imperiall maieſtie by George your ſeruant, the tenor whereof we doe well vnderſtand; and for this occaſion we ſend vnto you this our preſent commaundement, to the end that we will that ye know ſurely how by our ſentence we will haue that Iſle of Rhodes for many damages and euill deeds which we haue, and heare from day to day of the ſayd place done to vs and our ſubiects, and ye with your good will ſhall hold it of vs & doe vs obeiſance, and giue the citie to mine imperiall maieſtie. And we ſweare by God that made heauen and earth, and by 26000. of our prophets, and by the 4. Miſaſi that fell from the ſkies, and by our firſt prophet Mahomet, that if ye doe vs homage, and yeeld you with good will vpon theſe othes, all you that will abide in the ſayd place, great and ſmall, ſhall not need to feare perill nor damage of mine imperiall maieſtie, neither you, your goods, nor your men: and who ſo will goe to any other place with his goods and houſhold, may ſo doe, and who ſo will dwell and inhabite in any other places vnder mine Imperiall maieſtie, may remaine where they like beſt, without feare of any perſon. And if there bee any of the principals and worthy men among you that is ſo diſpoſed, wee ſhall giue him wages and prouiſion greater then hee hath had. And if any of you will abide in the ſayd iſle, yee may ſo doe after your auncient vſages and cuſtomes, and much better. And therefore if that yee will accept theſe our othes and intreatings, ſend vnto vs a man with your letters to mine Imperiall maieſtie, or els know yee that wee will come vpon you with all prouiſions of warre, and thereof ſhall come as it pleaſeth God. And this wee doe, to the end that ye may know, and that ye may not ſay, but we haue giuen you warning. And if ye doe not thus with your good will, wee ſhall vault and vndermine your foundations in ſuch maner, that they ſhalbe torne vpſide downe, and ſhall make you ſlaues, and cauſe you to die, by the grace of God, as we haue done many, and hereof haue ye no doubt. Written in our court at Conſtantinople the firſt day of the moneth of Iune.

How the Turkes came to land in the Iſle of Lango, and were driuen to their ſhips againe by the Prior of S. Giles.

When the lord great maſter and his counſell had heard the tenor of the letter, they would giue none anſwere to the great Turke, but that he ſhould be receiued with good ſtrokes of artillerie. So that to a fooliſh demaund behooued none anſwere. And it was very like that he would haue nothing. For ſixe dayes after, that was the 14. day of the ſaid moneth of Iune, the Brigantines that went toward Sio to know of the ſaid armie, came againe and ſayd, that of a trueth the ſaid armie was comming, and that nigh to Lango an Iſle of the religion, an 100. mile from Rhodes, they had ſeene and told 30. ſailes that were moſt part gallies and fuſtes: the which veſſels ſet men on land in yͤ iſle of Lango. Thē the prior of S. Giles, Meſſire pre Iohn de Bidoux commander of the ſayd place, taried not long from horſebacke with his knights and people of the iſle, and he met ſo well with the Turkes, that he droue them to their ſhips, and ſlew a certaine number of them: and of the ſide of Pre Iohn ſome were hurt, and his horſe was ſlaine. When the enemies were entered into their gallies, they went to a place called caſtle Iudeo on the maine land, betweene the ſayd iſle of Lango and the caſtle of S. Peter.

How part of the nauie and armie of the great Turke came before the citie of Rhodes.

The 18. day of the ſaid moneth of Iune, theſe 30. gallies went from the ſayd place, and paſſed by the Cape of Crion, entering the gulfe of Epimes beſide Rhodes, and were diſcouered from the ſhade of the hill of Salaco, a caſtle in the iſle of Rhodes. On the morrow they came out of the gulfe by plaine day, and ſailing along by the coaſts, they entered into a hauen on maine land called Malfara, where they abode three dayes. Then they went from thence, and returned to the gulfe of Epimes, where they abode two dayes and two nights.

The 24 day of the ſame moneth they iſſued out of Epimes, and trauerſing the chanell, they came to the yle of Rhodes in a place before a caſtle called Faues, and they went to land, and burnt a great field of corne the ſame day, which was the feaſt of S. Iohn Baptiſt our patron. The guard of a caſtle named Abſito in the yle of Rhodes diſcouered and ſpied the great hoſte, and in great haſte brought word to the lord maſter, and ſayd that the ſayd hoſte, that was in ſo great number of ſailes that they might not be numbred, was entred into the gulfe of Epimes. The 30 ſailes that lay in the yle aroſe in the night, and went to the ſayd hoſte in the gulfe.

The 26 day of Iune the ſayd great hoſte aroſe and went out of Epimes on houre after the ſun riſing, & trauerſing the chanell, they came to a place called the Foſſe, eight miles from the towne. And the 30 firſt ſailes turned backe toward the cape of S. Martin and other places to watch for ſhips of Chriſtian men, if any paſſed by to Rhodes. The great hoſte abode ſtill till noone or one of the clocke, and then aroſe, not all, but about 80 or 100 ſhips, as gallies, galliaſſes, and fuſts: and paſſed one after another before the towne and hauen of Rhodes three miles off, and came to ſhore in a place nigh to land, called Perambolin, ſixe miles from the towne. In the which place the ſayd hoſte abode from that time to the end of that vnhappy ſiege.

The number and names of the veſſels that came to beſiege Rhodes.

The number of the ſhips were theſe: 30 galliaſſes, 103 gallies, aſwell baſtards as ſubtill mahonnets, 15 taffours, 20 fuſts, 64 great ſhips, ſixe or ſeuen gallions, & 30 galleres, beſide the nauy that waited for Chriſtian men, if any came to ſuccour vs. Theſe were the veſſels that came at the firſt to lay the ſiege. And ſith that the ſayd hoſt came out of Perambolin, there came from Syria 20 other ſailes, aſwell gallies as fuſts. And many other ſhips came ſith, and ioyned with the ſayd army in the time of the ſayd ſiege. And it was ſayd that there were 400 ſailes and moe.

The ſame day that part of the hoſt came to the ſayd place, the reuerend lord great maſter ordeined a great brigandine to ſend into the Weſt, to certifie our holy father the pope, and the Chriſtian princes how the Turks army was afore Rhodes. And in the ſayd veſſell he ſent two knights, one a French man named Sir Claude danſoyuille called Villiers, and Sir Loys de Sidonia a Spaniard: and they went to the pope and to the emperour.

After the comming of the Turks nauy into the ſayd place, it was 14 or 15 dayes or they ſet any ordinance on land, great or ſmall, or any quantity of men came on ſhore, whereof we marueiled. And it was tolde vs by ſome that came out of the campe, and alſo by the ſpies that the lord great maſter had ſent abroad arayed as Turks, that they abode the commandement of their great lord, vntill the hoſte by land were come into the campe. Howbeit there came ſome number for to view the towne, but they went priuily, for the ordinance of the towne ſhot without ceaſe.

All this while the gallies and galliaſſes went and came to land, bringing vitaile and people. At the which ſhips paſſing nigh the town, were ſhot many ſtrokes with bombards, which made ſome ſlaughter of our enemies: and when the moſt part of them was paſt, they began to ſet ordinance on the land with great diligence. Then the lord great maſter departed from his palace, and lodged him nigh a church called The victory, becauſe that place was moſt to be doubted: and alſo that at the other ſiege the great buſineſſe and aſſault was there.

How the lord great maſter made his petition before the image of S. Iohn, and offered him the keyes of the towne.

The day before were made many predications and ſermons, and the laſt was in the church of S. Iohn Baptiſt. When the ſermon was done, a pontificall Maſſe was celebrate with all ſolemnities, and all the reliques taken downe, and the lord great maſter and all his knights with great deuotions and reuerence heard it. And when the Maſſe was ended, the lord great maſter made a pitious oration or prayer before Saint Iohn Baptiſt his protectour: and aboue all other words, which were too long to tell, he beſought him meekly that it would pleaſe him to take the keyes of that miſerable city. The which keyes he preſented and layed vpon the altar before the image, beſeeching S. Iohn to take the keeping and protection thereof, and of all the religion, as by his grace he had giuen to him vnworthy the gouerning vnto that day: and by his holy grace to defend them from the great power of the enemies that had beſieged them.

How

How the women ſlaues would haue ſet fire in the towne.

THe eight day of Iuly it was knowen that the Turkiſh women being ſlaues and ſeruaunts in many houſes of the towne, had appointed to ſet fire in their maſters houſes at the firſt aſſault that ſhould be made, to the end that the men ſhould leaue their poſterns & defenſes to go and ſaue their houſes and goods. And it was found that a woman of Marchopota being a ſlaue, was firſt moouer thereof, the which was taken and put to execution.

The ſame day ſome of our men went out for to ſkirmiſh with the Turkes, and many of them were ſlaine with ſhot of our artillerie, and of our men but one.

How the Turkes layd their artillerie about the towne, and of the maner and quantitie of their pieces and gunſhot.

THe 18. day of Iuly, for the beginning and firſt day they ſet vp a mantellet, vnder the which they put three or foure meane pieces, as ſacres, wherewith they ſhot againſt the poſterns of England and Prouence. But the mantellet was ſoone broken and caſt downe, and their pieces deſtroyed with the ſhot of the wall, and they that ſhot them were moſt part ſlaine. As this firſt mantellet was broken, by the great and innumerable people that they had they ſet all their ordinance on land, and caried it to the places where it ſhould be bent, or nigh thereby.

And the 29. day of the ſame moneth, they ſet vp two other mantellets. One beſide a church of ſaint Coſme and Damian, and another toward the Weſt. And from theſe mantellets they ſhot great pieces, as Culuerings, double gunnes, and great bombards agaynſt the wals of England and Spaine, to the which mantellets the ordinance of the towne gaue many great ſtrokes, and often brake them. And the more to grieue the towne and to feare vs, they ſet vp many other mantellets in diuers places, almoſt round about the towne, and they were reckoned foure ſcore: the which number was well leſſened by the great quantitie of ſtrokes of artillerie ſhot out of the towne from many places.

The artillerie of the Turkes was ſuch as followeth.

FIrſt there were ſixe great gunnes, cannons perriers of braſſe, that ſhot a ſtone of three foote and a halfe: alſo there were 15. pieces of iron that ſhot ſtones of fiue or ſixe ſpannes about. Alſo there were 14. great bombards that ſhot ſtones of eleuen ſpans about. Alſo there were twelue baſiliſkes, whereof they ſhot but with 8. that is to weet, foure ſhot agaynſt the poſterns of England and Spaine, and two againſt the gate of Italy: the other two ſhot ſometime againſt Saint Nicholas tower. Alſo there were 15. double gunnes caſting bullets as baſiliſkes. The meane ſhot, as ſacres and paſuolans, were in great number. The handgunſhot was innumerable and incredible. Alſo there were twelue potgunnes of braſſe that ſhot vpward, whereof eight were ſet behind the church of S. Coſme and Damian, and two at ſaint Iohn de la Fontaine toward the port of Italy, and the other two afore the gate of Auuergne, the which were ſhot night and day: and there were three ſorts of them, whereof the greateſt were of ſixe or ſeuen ſpannes about. And the ſayd ſtones were caſt into the towne to make murder of people, which is a thing very inhumane and fearefull, which maner of ſhooting is little vſed amongſt chriſtian men. Howbeit by euident myracle, thanked be God, the ſayd pieces did no great harme, and ſlew not paſt 24. or 25. perſons, and the moſt part women and children, and they began to ſhoote with the ſaid pieces from the 19. day of the ſame moneth, vnto the end of Auguſt, & it was accounted that they ſhot 2000. times, more or leſſe.

Then the enemies were warned by the Iewe that wrote letters to them of all that was done and ſayd in the towne, that the ſayd potgunnes did no harme: wherefore they were angry, for they thought that they had ſlaine the third part of our people: and they were counſelled by him to leaue that ſhooting, for it was but time loſt, and powder waſted, and then they ſhot no more with them. It is of a trueth that they ſhot with the ſayd potgunnes 12. or 15. times with bullets of braſſe or copper, full of wild fire, and when they were in the ayre, they flamed foorth, and in falling on the ground, they brake, and the fire came out and did ſome harme. But at the laſt wee knew the malice thereof, and the people was warie from comming neere to them, and therefore they did hurt no more folke.

How the captaine Gabriel Martiningo came to the ſuccor of Rhodes, and all the ſlaues were in danger to be ſlaine.

THe 24. day of the ſame moneth a brigantine arriued that was ſent afore into Candie, wherein came a worthy captaine named Gabriel Martiningo with two other captains. And there went to receiue him meſsieur prou Iohn prior of S. Giles, and the prior of Nauarre. Then after his honourable receiuing as to him well appertained, they brought him before the lord great maſter, that louingly receiued him, and he was gladly ſeene and welcommed of the people, as a man that was named very wiſe and ingenious in feats of warre. Then came a Spaniard renegado from the hoſt, that gaue vs warning of all that was done in the field, and of the approching by the trenches that our enemies made.

And in like wiſe there aroſe a great noiſe in the towne, that the ſlaues Turks that wrought for vs in the diches had ſlaine their keepers, and would haue fled, which was not ſo. Neuertheleſſe, the rumour was great, and they rang alarme: wherefore the ſayd ſlaues comming to priſon, as it was ordeined in al the alarmes, were met of the people, which in great anger put them to death: ſo that there were ſlain an hundred & moe the ſame day. And if the lord great maſter had not commanded that none ſhould hurt them, they had bene all ſlaine, and there were fifteene hundreth of them: which ſlaues did great ſeruice in time of the ſiege: for they laboured dayly to make our defences, and to caſt earth out of the ditches, and in all works they were neceſſary at our needs.

The 25 day of the ſayd moneth many of our men went out for to ſkirmiſh in the field and made great murder of Turks, and in likewiſe did our artillery. And it is to be noted that the 28 day of the ſame moneth the great Turke in perſon paſſed le Fiſco a hauen in the maine land with a galley and a fuſt, and arriued about noone, where his army lay, the which day may be called vnhappie for Rhodes. For his comming, his preſence and continuall abiding in the fielde is and hath beene cauſe of the victorie that he hath had. When the gallie that he came in was arriued, all the other ſhippes of the hoſte hanged banners aloft in their toppes and on their ſayle yerdes.

Soone after that the Turke was arriued, he went to land, and mounted on his horſe, and rode to his pauilion which was in a high place called Megalandra, foure or fiue miles fro the towne out of the danger of the gunne ſhot. And on the morow, as it was reported to vs, hee came to a Church nigh the towne called Saint Steuen, for to viewe the Towne and fortreſſes, whereas they had ſet vp mantellets for to lay their ordinance.

The laſt day of Iuly, one of our brigandines went out with a good company of men arayed as Turkes, and ſome of them could ſpeake Turkiſh, and went by night to lande through the Turkes hoſte, and demaunded if there were any that would paſſe ouer into Turkie, that they ſhould haſte them to come. The Turkes weening that they had beene of Turkie, there entred a 12. perſons, the which were carried to Rhodes, by whom we knew what they did in the campe.

The firſt day of Auguſt the Captaine Gabriel Martiningo was made knight of the order of the religion by the lord great Maſter, and was made the firſt auncient of the Italian nation, of the firſt baliage or priorie that ſhould be vacant. And in the meane ſeaſon the religion ſhould giue him twelue hundred ducates for penſion euery yeere, and the ſame day he was receiued to the Councell in the roome of a bayliffe.

The fift day of the ſayd moneth our maſter gunner was ſlaine with a gunne, which was great loſſe for vs at that time.

The 15. day of the ſayd moneth was knowen and taken for a traitor, Meſſire Iohn Baptiſta, the phyſicion aforeſayd, which confeſſed his euill and diueliſh doings, and had his head ſtriken of.

Of the marueilous mounts that the Turks made afore the towne, and how the capitaines were ordered in the trenches.

After the comming of the great Turke, the enemies began to ſhoote with ordinance of another ſort then they did before, and ſpecially with harquebuſhes and handguns, and alſo to make their trenches and approches. And alſo they did more diligence then afore, to bring yͤ earth nigh the towne with ſpades and pickaxes. And it is to weet, that they moued the earth from halfe a mile off, and there were ſhot out of the towne innumerable ſtrokes with ordinance againſt the ſayd earth, and innumerable quantitie of people hid behind the ſayd earth, were ſlaine. Neuertheleſſe they neuer left working till they had brought it to the brimmes of the ditches: and when it was there, they raiſed it higher and higher in ſtrengthning it behind. And in concluſion the ſayd earth was higher then the wals of the towne by 10. or 12. foote, and it ſeemed a hill. And it was agaynſt the gate of Auuergne and Spaine, and beat our men that were at the gates & bulwarks, in ſuch wiſe, that none durſt be ſeene till certaine defences and repaires were made of plankes and boards to couer our people and keepe them from the ſhot. And at the gate of Italy was made ſuch another heape, and in none other part.

When the trenches were thus made to the ditches, the enemies made holes in the wals of the ditch outward: wherethorow they ſhot infinitely with handgunnes at our men aſwell on the walles as on the bulwarks, and ſlew many of them. Then the baſſhas and captaines entred into the trenches, ech to his place after their order and dignity: that is to wit, Muſtafa Baſſha as chiefe captaine entred the trench direct to the bulwarke of England with his people & captaines vnder him. Pery Baſſha went to the trenches againſt the gate of Italy with his folkes and captaines vnder him. Acmek Baſſha was in the trenches of Auuergne and Spaine with the Aga of the Ianizaires and the Beglarby of Romany with him. The Beglarby of Natolia was in the trenches of Prouence. Allibey was with his company againſt the garden of ſaint Anthony on the North ſide, and diuers other captaines with him, and ſet his ordinance againſt the wall of the gate of Almaine, which was but weake, and ſet vp ſeuen mantellets by the milles toward the Weſt: and by the ſpace of eight or nine dayes they beat vpon the ſame wall; which put vs in great feare, if they had continued. Howbeit the noble ſayd great maſter forthwith cauſed repaires to be made within, and planks & tables to be ſet to fortifie the ſayd weake wall: and abode there from the morning til night, to cauſe it to be the more haſted. The artillery of the gate of Almaine, and the Maſtik of the gate of the campe and of the palais beat ſo ſore and ſo often vpon the ſayd mantellets that it wearied the enemies to make and repaire them ſo often: and they tooke vp the pieces, and bare them away. And alſo they could not well beat the ſayd wall becauſe the brimmes of the ditch without were almoſt as hie as the wall that they beat. But or they bare the artillery away, they beat the ſteeple of S. Iohns church ſo, that the moſt part was broken and caſt downe. The foreſayd mantellets were appointed to beat S. Nicholas tower, and by the ſpace of ten or twelue dayes they ſhot ſore againſt it: but they had ſo ſharpe and vigorous anſwere, that there was not one mantellet that abode whole an houre. The captaine of the ſayd tower and his folke did ſuch diligence and buſineſſe in ſhooting off their pieces, that the enemies durſt ſet vp no more mantellets by day, nor ſhoot no more but onely by night, while the Moone did ſhine, which is a thing worthy of memory, of maruaile, and of praiſe. At the laſt when they had beaten againſt the ſayd tower a certaine time, ſeeing that it furthered nothing, they tooke their ordinance frō thence, and bare it where they thought beſt.

During the ſhot in the ſayd place, the other captaines were not idle nor in a ſleepe, but without ceaſe night and day they beat the wall of England and Spaine, and ſet foureteene mantellets againſt it, ſhooting great bombards, whereof ſome of the ſtones were fiue or ſixe ſpannes about, and ſome other of nine or ten: and within a moneth and leſſe they caſt downe the wall almoſt euen ſmooth with the Barbican. And when the ſayd wall was ſo beaten, they ſet to beat the bulwarke of Spaine for to raiſe the defences: and in their trenches they ſet three great bombards, which ſhot ſtones of eleuen ſpannes in compaſſe, and with the ſayd pieces they beat the ſayd bulwarke and wall in ſuch wiſe, that they made great bracks, and the ſtones and earth that fell, ſerued the enemies for ladders, ſo that they might come vpon the plaine ground. In like ſort they raiſed the defences from the height of the bulwarke at the poſterne of Prouence, and ſet three great pieces on the brimme of the ditch, which ſhot ſtones of eleuen ſpannes againſt the wall, and within a while they made a breach as at the poſterne of Spaine. The artillery of the towne did ſhoot without ceaſe againſt the mantellets, and brake many of them, but they made other as it is ſayd in the nights. For they had all things that belonged to them, & needed. And out of the poſterne of England was ſhot a gunne that brake downe one of the ſayd mantellets, and hit vpon one of the pieces, and ſlew foure or fiue men, and bare away both the legs of the maſter of the ordinance, which died ſoone after: whereof the great Turke was very ill content, and ſayd that he had rather haue loſt one of his baſſhas or captaines then the ſayd maſter. Alſo it is to knowen that there were three or foure mantellets addreſſed againſt the plain ground of Italy, and by continuall beating of ſhot that they made, there was alſo a breach, and by the earth and ſtones that were fallen, they might come vp to it.

Of the politike repaires and defences that the ingenious captaine Gabriel Martiningo made within the towne againſt the breaches in the walles.

The captaine Gabriel Martiningo, prompt, diligent, and expert to giue remedies to the needfull places, forthwith cauſed to make the trauerſes vpon the wall whereas the breach was, with good repaires, and gunnes ſmall and great which were ſet in the ſayd trauerſes, the which ſhot not onely at the breaches but to the trenches, and made great murder of enemies aſwell at the aſſaults that they made as other whiles. And beſide the trauerſes, the ſayd captaine planted ſmall artillery, as harquebuſhes, and handgunnes vpon certaine houſes within the towne, that ſtood open againſt the breach, with good repaires: and from that place great ſlaughter of Turks was made at the aſſaults. Alſo it is of trueth that beſide the ſayd mantellets that ſhot againſt the wall of England and Spaine with great bombards, were two mantellets in an hie place toward the way to the gardin of Maupas, in the which were certaine double gunnes, as baſiliſks with hollow ſtones and wilde fire in them, which ſhot againſt the wall into the towne at all auentures for to make murder of people: howbeit, thanked be God, they did no great harme but to the houſes.

After theſe great & terrible beatings, and that the enemies had way to mount vpon the towne walles, and come to hand with vs by trauerſing of their trenches to the fallen earth within the breach more ſurely, and without hurt of our gunſhot, ſhooting thorow holes that they made in the walles of the ditch without, they caſt vp much ſtone and earth, becauſe it ſhould couer them from the ſhot of the bulwarke of Auuergne. And alſo they ſhot feruently againſt the bulwarke of Spaine, for to raiſe the defences, of the which at the laſt they raiſed the moſt part, reſeruing only a few gunners below in the mine of the ſayd bulwarke, which litle or nothing damaged them. And this is touching the gunſhot, whereof I ſay not the third part, becauſe it is a thing incredible to them that haue not ſeene it. For ſome dayes they ſhot with thoſe great bombards that were on the brimme of the ditch, and from the mantellets bent againſt the wall of England and Spaine 20 or 30 times and more. And I beleeue verily that ſince the creation of the world ſuch artillery, and ſo great quantity was neuer bent and layed before any towne as hath bene againſt Rhodes at this ſiege. Wherfore it is no maruell if the walles be and haue bene beaten downe, and if there be breaches and clifts in many places.

Of the mines that the Turks made: and how they ouerthrew part of the bulwarke of England.

ANd becauſe, as it is ſayd before, that the greateſt hope that the enemies had to get the towne of Rhodes, was by mining, therefore now after that I haue ſpoken of the gunſhot and beatings, I ſhall ſhew of the mines that the Turks made, the which were in ſo great quantity, and in ſo many places, that I beleeue the third part of the towne was mined: and it is found by account made, that there were about 60 mines, howbeit, thanked be God, many of them came not to effect, by occaſion of the countermines that they within made, and alſo trenches that the right prudent lord the great maſter cauſed to be made deepe within the ditches, vnto two or three foot of water. The which trenches and certaine pits that he had cauſed in the ſayd ditches to be wrought, or the hoſt arriued, ſerued right well ſince: for night and day there were men in them to watch and hearken when the enemies mined, for to meet them, and cut their way, as was done many times.

And for to ſpeake of the mines that had effect, and damaged vs, it is to wit, that the fourth day of September, about foure houres after noone, the enemies put fire in two mines, one was betweene the poſterne of Spaine and Auuergne, which did no hurt but to the Barbican. The other was at the bulwarke of England, which was ſo fell and ſtrong, that it cauſed moſt part of the town to ſhake, and caſt downe a great part of the ſayd bulwarke at the ſpring of the day: and by the earth and ſtones that fell into the ditches, the enemies came vpon the bulwarke with their banners, and fought ſore and mightily with our men, not with hands, but with ſhot of handgunnes. The lord great maſter that was come 15 dayes or more with his ſuccours to the ſayd bulwarke, went with his company to helpe them that fought. After that they had fought the ſpace of two or three houres, the enemies repelled and driuen backe by our men from the ſayd bulwarke, and beaten with ordinance on euery ſide, withdrew them with their loſſe, ſhame, and damage. And this was the firſt victory that our lord gaue vs, and there abode of our enemies a thouſand and more.

A thouſand & more Turkes ſlaine before the Engliſh bulwarke.

When this aſſault was done, they made another at the breach in the wall of Spaine, and mounted vpon it, but the ordinance of the trauerſes of the walles and of the houſes made ſo faire a riddance, that they were very willing to withdraw themſelues: for at the retreat, and alſo at their comming the ſayd ordinance of the bulwarke did them great damage, albeit that they had made ſome repaire of earth. Of our men died that day 25 or thereabout, aſwell knights as other. And the ſame day in the morning departed out of this world Gabriel de Pomerolles lieutenant to the lord maſter, which on a certaine day before fell from the wall as he went to ſee the trenches in the ditches, and hurt his breaſt, and for fault of good attendance he fell into a feuer, whereof he died.

How the Turks aſſailed the bulwarke of England, and how they were driuen away.

THe ninth day of the ſayd moneth, at ſeuen in the morning the enemies put fire in two mines; one at the poſterne of Prouence, which had none effect: the other was at the bulwarke of England, which felled another piece nigh to that that was caſt downe afore. And the ſayd mine was as fierce as the other, or more, for it ſeemed that all the bulwarke went downe, and almoſt all they that were in it ranne away. And when the ſtanderd of the religion came into the ſayd bulwarke, the enemies were at the breach ready to haue entred: but when they ſaw the ſayd ſtanderd, as people loſt and ouercome, they went downe againe. Then the artillery of the bulwarke of Quoſquino, and of other places, found them well enough, and ſlew many of them. Howbeit, their captaines made them to returne with great ſtrokes of ſwordes and other weapons, and to remount vpon the earth fallen from the ſayd bulwarke, and pight ſeuen banners nigh to our repaire. Then our men fought with moriſpikes and fired ſpeares againſt them the ſpace of three whole houres, till at the laſt they being well beaten with great ordinance and ſmall on euery ſide, withdrew themſelues. And of their banners our men gate one, for it was not poſſible to get any more: for aſſoone as any of our men went vp on our repaires, he was ſlaine with ſmall gunnes of the trenches, and holes made in the walles of our ditches. And there was ſlaine of our enemies that day at the aſſault 2000 of meane men, and three perſons of eſtate, which lay dead along in the ditch, with faire and rich harneſſe. And it was reported to vs from the campe, they were three ſaniacbeis, that is to ſay, great ſeneſhalles or ſtuards. And of Chriſtian men of our part aboue about thirty perſons. And this was the ſecond victory giuen to vs by the grace diuine.

Two thouſand Turks ſlaine at the Engliſh bulwarke.

How Sir Iohn Bourgh Turcoplier of England was ſlaine at an aſſault of the Engliſh bulwarke.

THe 17 day of the ſame moneth, about midday, the enemy came againe to giue another aſſault to the ſayd bulwarke, at the ſame place aforeſayd, without ſetting of fire in mines, and brought fiue banners with them, nigh to the repaires. Then was there ſtrong fighting on both parts, and there were gotten two of their banners, of the which ſir Chriſtopher Valdenare, that time Caſtelaine of Rhodes, gate one: the other was in the hands of ſir Iohn Bourgh Turcoplier of England, chiefe captaine of the ſuccours of the ſayd poſterne of England, a valiant man & hardy: and in holding of it he was ſlaine with the ſtroke of a handgunne, which was great damage. The ſayd banner was recouered by one of our men. And after long fighting on both ſides, the enemies ſeeing that they got nothing but ſtripes, returned into their trenches. At the ſayd fray the lord prior of S. Giles pre Iohn was hurt thorow the necke with a handgun, and was in great danger of death, but he eſcaped and was made whole. The ſame day, and the ſame houre of the ſayd aſſault, the enemies mounted to the breach in the wall of Spaine, and came to the repaires to the handes of our men, and fought a great while: but the great quantity of artillery that was ſhot ſo buſily and ſo ſharply from our trauerſes on ech ſide, and out of the bulwarks of Auuergne and Spaine, ſkirmiſhed them ſo well, that there abode as many at that aſſault as at the other of England, well neere to the number of 5000. And they withdrew themſelues with their great loſſe and confuſion, which was the third time that they were chaſed and ouercome: thanked be our Lord, which gaue vs the force and power ſo to doe, for they were by eſtimation a hundred againſt one.

Alſo the 22 day of the ſame moneth of September they fired a mine betweene Italy and Prouence, which did no harme.

Of the terrible mine at the poſterne of Auuergne.

AND the 23 day of the ſame moneth they fired two mines, one at the poſterne of Spaine, and the other by the bulwarke of Auuergne, the which mine by Auuergne was ſo terrible, that it made all the towne to ſhake, and made the wall to open from aboue to beneath vnto the plaine ground: howbeit, it fell not, for the mine had vent or breath in two places, by one of the countermines, and by a rocke vnder the Barbican, the which did cleaue, and by that cleft the fury and might of the mine had iſſue. And if the ſayd two vents had not bene, the wall had bene turned vpſide downe. And for truth, as it was reported to vs out of the campe, the enemies had great hope in the ſayd mine, thinking that the wall ſhould haue bene ouerthrowen, and then they might haue entred into the towne at their pleaſures: but when they ſaw the contrary, they were very ill pleaſed. And the captaines determined to giue aſſault at foure places at once, to make vs the more adoo, and to haue an entrance into the towne by one of the foure. And the ſayd day and night they ceaſed not to ſhoot artillery: and there came in hope of the mine threeſcore thouſand men and moe into the trenches.

How the bulwarke of Spaine was loſt, and woonne againe.

The 24 day of the ſame moneth, a little before day, they gaue aſſault at the breach of Spaine, to the bulwarke of England, to the poſterne of Prouence, and at the plaine ground of Italy, all at one houre & one time. The firſt that mounted to the breach of Spaine, was the Aga of the Ianiſſaries, a valiant man, and of great courage with his company, and bare three ſcore or three ſcore and tenne banners and ſignes, and pight them in the earth of the breach, and then fought with our men, and mounted on our repaires, making other maner of fray and more rigorous then the other that were paſſed, and the ſayd ſkirmiſh laſted about ſixe houres. And forthwith, as the aſſault was giuen, a great ſort of Turks entred into the bulwarke of Spaine, and ſet vp eight or nine ſignes or banners vpon it, and droue our men out, I can not tell how, vnwares or otherwiſe. And they were lords of it three houres and more. Howbeit there were of our men beneath in the mine of the ſayd bulwarke, the which bulwarke ſo loſt, gaue vs euill hope. But incontinently the lord great maſter being at the defence of the poſterne of England, hauing knowledge of the ſayd loſſe, and that there was great fighting and reſiſtance on both ſides at the breach of Spaine, marched thither with the banner of the crucifix, leauing the charge of the ſayd bulwarke in the hands of the bailiſe de la Moree meſsieur Mery Combant. And the lord mounted on the wall of Spaine, whereas then began a great ſkirmiſh, and euery man layed his hands to worke, as well to put the enemies out of the breach, as to recouer the bulwarke that was loſt. And the ſayde lord ſent a company of men into the bulwarke by the gate of the mine, or by the Barbican, the which entred at the ſayd gate, and went vp, where they found but few Turkes. For the artillery of the poſterne of England, right againſt the bulwarke of Spaine, had ſo well met and ſcattered them, that within a while our men had ſlaine all them that were left. And thus the ſayde bulwarke was gotten and recouered againe, and with all diligence were made new repaires and ſtrengths to the ſayd place. And in like ſort, the enemies were put from the breach, and few of them eſcaped, and all their banners and ſignes were left with vs. Surely it may be ſayd, that after the grace of God (the trauerſes of Spaine and Auuergne, and the ſmall artillery ſet on the houſes right againſt the ſayd breaches, as it is ſayd, with the comming and preſence of the lord great maſter) hath giuen vs this dayes victory.

As touching the murder of the people, done by the artillery of the bulwarkes of England and Spaine, the quantity was ſuch that a man could not perceiue nor ſee any ground of the ditches. And the ſtench of the maſtifs carions was ſo grieuous, that we might not ſuffer it ſeuen or eight dayes after. And at the laſt, they that might ſaue themſelues did ſo, and withdrew themſelues to the trenches: and the reuerend lord great maſter abode victorious of the ſayd place, and in like ſort of the other three aſſaults, the which were but little leſſe then that of Spaine, for they fought long. But in concluſion, the enemies beaten on all ſides, and in ſo many ſorts, with artillery were put backe, and vanquiſhed, that there died that day at all the foure places fifteene or ſixteene thouſand. And the ſlaughter was ſo great at the plaine Italy, of the curſed enemies, that the ſea was made redde with their blood. And on our ſide alſo died to the number of an hundred men or more. And of men of dignity in the towne, hauing charge, died Sir Francis de Frenolz commander of Romania, which Sir Francis was chiefe captaine of the great ſhip of Rhodes, and he was ſlaine at the plaine of Italy, wounded with two ſtrokes of harquebuſhes: it was great dammage of his death, for he was a worthy man, perfect, and full of vertues. There died alſo meſſieur Naſtaſy de ſancta Camilla aforenamed, hauing two hundred men vnder him of the lord great maſters ſuccours. There died alſo diuers other worthy men that day, and many were maimed. Among all other that loſt any member, meſsieur Iohn de le Touz called Pradines, being at the ſayd bulwarke, with a ſtroke of artillery had his arme ſmitten away, in great danger to haue loſt his life; howbeit by the helpe of God he died not. In like ſort the ſame day was hurt Sir William Weſton aboueſayd, captaine of the poſterne of England, and had one of his fingers ſtricken away with an harquebuſh: which knight behaued himſelfe right worthily at all the aſſaults. Of the Turkes part, of great men, were two principall captaines ſlaine vnder the Aga of the Ianiſſaries, and another captaine that was come out of Surey to the campe certaine dayes before, with ſixe hundred Mamelukes, and two or three thouſand Moores. And of them that were hurt of great men the Beglarby of Natolia had a ſtroke with an arrow as he was in the trench of Prouence. And many other were wounded, whoſe names be not rehearſed here, becauſe of ſhortneſſe.

Sir Will. Weſton captaine of the Engliſh poſterne hurt.

How the great Turke for anger that he could not get the towne, would haue put his chiefe captaine to death, and how they made 11 mines vnder the bulwarke of England.

During this aſſault, the great Turke was by his pauillion in a place that he had cauſed to be made, and ſaw all the buſineſſe, and how his people were ſo ſharpely put backe, and the victory loſt on his ſide, he was very ſore diſpleaſed, and halfe in deſpaire: and he ſent for Muſtafa Baſha with whom he was angry, and chid him bitterly, ſaying that he had cauſed him to come thither, and had made him to beleeue that he ſhould take the towne in fifteene dayes, or a moneth at the furtheſt, and he had bene there already three monethes with his army, and yet they had done nothing. And after theſe wordes he was purpoſed to put him to death in the campe: but the other Baſhas ſhewed him that he ought not to do iuſtice in the land of his enemies, for it would comfort them and giue them courage. Wherefore he did moderate his anger, and left him for that time, and thought to ſend him to Cairo, leaſt the people there would rebell, by occaſion of the captaine of Cairo which died a few dayes before. Howbeit he departed not ſo ſuddenly, and or he went he thought to aſſay if he might do ſome thing for to pleaſe the Turke, aswell for his honour as for to ſaue his perſon, and was maruellous diligent to make mines at the bulwarke of England for to ouerthrow it. And by account were made 11 mines aswell to the ſayd bulwarke as elſwhere, beſide them ſpoken of before, and that they had fired. But the moſt part of the ſayd mines came to no proofe though they put fire in them, and many were met with countermines, and broken by our men by the good diligence and ſollicitude of ſir Gabriel Du-chef ſteward of the houſe of the lord great maſter, which had the charge of the ſayd countermines at the ſame bulwarke. In the which buſineſſe he behaued himſelfe well and worthily, and ſpared not his goods to cauſe the people to worke and trauell, but ſpent thereof largely.

How the Turks were minded to haue gone their way, and of the traitours within the towne, and of many great aſſaults.

The Turks ſeeing that by mining they were nothing furthered, nor might not come to their intentions, and hauing but ſmall ſtore of gunpowder, were in deliberation and minde to haue raiſed the ſiege, and gone their way. And in deed ſome of them bare their cariages toward the ſhippes: and alſo certaine number of people went out of the trenches with their ſtandards ſtraight to the ſhips. And it was written vnto vs from the campe how the Ianiſſaries and other of the hoſt would fight no more: and that they were almoſt all of one opinion for to go away, ſaue ſome of the captaines of the foreſayd Muſtafa Baſſha or Acmek Baſſha. And in the meane ſeaſon the falſe traitours that were in the towne wrote letters to the campe, giuing them knowledge of all that was ſayd and done among vs. And alſo an Albaneſe fled to the enemies campe, and warned them not to go, for the gunſhot was nigh waſted, and that the moſt part of the knights and people ſhould be theirs ſhortly.

In like ſort then wrote the abouesayd Chanceller Sir Andrew de Merall, whoſe treaſon as then was not knowen: but when it commeth to the effect of his treaſon, I ſhall ſhew the knowledge that he gaue to the enemies at diuers times.

When the baſhas and captaines of the hoſte vnderſtood the ſayd warnings, they all purpoſed for to tary, and cauſed theſe tidings of the towne to be knowen ouer all the army. And beganne againe to ſhoot artillery faſter then euer they did, for new ſhot was come into the campe. Then Muſtafa Baſſha being in deſpaire that he could do nothing by mines, by gunſhot, nor by aſſaults, he being ready to depart for to goe into Surey by the great Turkes commandement, before his departing hee thought once againe to aſſay his aduenture, and made three aſſaults three dayes together. The firſt was on a Saturday the fourth day of October an houre before night. The other on Sunday in the morning. And the third on Munday after dinner. And the ſayd three aſſaults were made to the bulwarke of England. And it was aſſailed but with ſtones and bagges full of artificiall fire. And at theſe three aſſaults many of our men were hurt with the ſayd fire, and with the ſtones that came as thicke as raine or haile. But in the end the enemies got nothing but ſtrokes, and returned into their trenches euill contented, and murmuring, and ſware by their Mahomet that Muſtafa Baſſha ſhoulde not make them to mount any more to the ſayd bulwarke. And that it was great folly for them to cauſe them to be ſlaine at the will and fantaſie of one man. Theſe wordes ſayd in Greeke by ſome of the enemies were heard of our men as they went downe from the bulwarke. And becauſe (as it is ſayd) that the enemies at the aſſaults that were made, came vp by the earth and ſtones that fell from the breaches, ſome of our men aduiſed to clenſe the barbican, and take the earth out of the ditch, to the end that the enemies ſhould not eaſily come vpon the wall. And in effect weening that it were well and behoouefull to be done; by great diligence night and day by mines they voyded the barbican, and the moſt part of the earth that lay in the ditch was brought into the towne, the which was hurtfull afterward, and was cauſe that the enemies got the foot of the wall. Notwithſtanding, they had it but ſcarſely. But this cleanſing furthered the time, and cauſed them to get it ſooner then they ſhould haue done if the earth had lien ſtill: but their ſmall intent was to raiſe the defence of the bulwarks, and then paſſe at their pleaſure, and enter into the barbican, as they haue done: for the enemies ſeeing that the barbican was clenſed, thought to get into it by trenches, and ſo they did, howbeit they were certaine dayes letted by our handguns that. The enemies ſeeing that they might not come neere it, couered their trenches with tables to ſaue themſelues: and then they made a mine whereby they might goe to the barbican. So by theſe two meanes, afterward they were repaired with earth and with a certaine wall that they made for to eſchew the ſhot of the bulwarks of Auuergne and Spaine: and in the mine they found but two gunners, which they ſlew by force of men. By this maner they being couered on all parts and without any danger, paſſed thorow and lept into the barbican, and got the foot of the wall; which was the 17 day of October, an vnhappy day for the poore towne, and occaſion of the ruine thereof, and winning of the ſame.

At this point they ſlept not, but lightly and with great delight they began to picke and hew the wall. And weening to make remedy therefore, and to finde meanes to driue them from the ſayde barbican with engins of fire and barrels of gunpowder, wee ſlew many of them, but it auailed nothing: for the quantity and multitude of people that trauelled there was ſo great, that they cared not for loſſe of them. And if we had had men enow within the towne, there might haue bene remedy to haue raiſed them from thence: but conſidering that our force and totall hope was in people, wee left to doe many things that might haue beene done, and that ſhould haue bene good then and other times alſo for fault of men of warre. At the laſt it was pondred by Sir Gabriel Martiningo, that there was no remedy but to hew the wall for to meet them, and beat them with ordinance and with engins of fire to burne and vndoe them. Then our men began to hew the wall, and made ſome holes to ſhoot at the enemies that ſlept not, but did as wee did, and ſhot at vs, and indeed they ſlew & hurt many of our men. Then Sir Gabriel Martiningo ordeined to make repaires within the towne at the front where they did cut the wall, to the end that after the walles were cut, the enemies ſhould know with whom to meet. The trauerſes were made on ech ſide with good artillery great and ſmall: and the ſayd trauerſes and repaires were of the length that the enemies had cut the wall, and beganne at the muraile of Spaine made by the reuerend lord great maſter Mery d'Amboiſe, & ended at the church of S. Saluador. The which trauerſes and repaires the vulgar people call the Mandra, that is to ſay the fold.

The meane time that the repaires and trauerſes were made with all diligence, Sir Gabriel Martiningo neuer ceaſed going to euery place to puruey for all things: and he being on the bulwarke of Spaine to ordeine all things that were needfull, there came a ſtroke of a hargubuſe from the trenches that ſmote out his eye, and put him in danger of his life, but thanked be God, he recouered his health within a moneth and a halfe. His hurt came ill to paſſe, for the need that we had of him that time in all things, and ſpecially to the repaires of the breaches. Neuertheles the lord priour of S. Giles (not ignorant in all ſuch things) with other men expert in warre, attended to the ſayd repaires and trauerſes, there and elſwere. The enemies on the other ſide night and day without reſt (for the great number of labourers that they had hourely and newly ready) hewed and vndermined the ſayd wall.

And the 20 day of October they put fire in the vndermines, weening to haue caſt downe the wall, but they could not: then they would haue pulled it downe with great ropes and ancres, but the artillery of the bulwarke of Auuergne brake their ropes, and ſent them away lightly.

At the laſt they made a mine vnder the ſayd wall and breach: and the 26 day of the ſame moneth they did put fire to the ſame mine, weening to haue ouerthrowen the wall, which it did not, but raiſed it, and made it to fall almoſt ſtraight vpright, which was more diſaduantage to the enemies then profit. Then they ſhot artillery at it, which in fewe dayes beat it downe, and they had opening and way to come into the Towne. Neuertheleſſe it was not neceſſary for them as then to enter: for the artillery of our repaires beat them in the forepart, and the artillery lying at the two walles at the poſterne of Quoſquino, and in that of England, whereas was a baſiliſke that beat right vpon the breach with other pieces: and therefore the enemies ſought other meanes, and beganne to raiſe the earth betweene our two walles, drawing toward the bulwarke of England on the one ſide, and toward Auuergne on the other ſide, and would haue cut the wall further then our trauerſes were for to come in vnbeaten of our artillery. Then were the repaires inlarged and made greater with the wall that was cut, of the height of twelue, & 16 foot in breadth: and ſo the enemies might goe no further forward, but ſhot great artillery againſt our repaires, for to breake and caſt them downe, and alſo they made trenches for to come right to the breach, and vnto the repaires: and certeinly we looked day by day, and houre by houre for to haue ſome aſſault. The reuerend lord great maſter, the which, as it is ſayd, had left the bulwarke of England the day that the great aſſault was made, and ſince that time he moued not from thence while they hewed the wall, & where as the breach was, becauſe that they were moſt dangerous & moſt vnquiet places. And continually the ſayd lord kept him behinde the ſayd repaires with his knights and men of ſuccours, intentiuely ready and prepared to liue and die, and to receiue his enemies as they ought to bee receiued. And he abode there three or foure dayes at the ſayd breach, continuing ſince it was made, vnto the end, fighting with his enemies euery day in great perill of his body: for oftentimes hee put himſelfe further in the preaſe then needed for the danger of his perſon, but he did it for to hearten and ſtrengthen the courage of his people, being ſo well willing to defend and die for the faith.

How the enemies aſſailed the poſternes of Prouence and Italy, and how they were driuen away.

BY the will of our Lord, the enemies alway in feare and dread, would giue none aſſault, but continually ſhot againſt our repaires, and made trenches for to paſſe forward into the towne: by the which trenches they ſhot infinitely with harquebuſhes and handgunnes, and ſlew many of our folke, and ſpecially of them that wrought and made the repaires that were broken and craſed. And they put vs in ſuch extremity, that we had almoſt no more ſlaues nor other labouring people for to repaire that which they brake night and day, which was a great hinderance for vs, and the beginning of our perdition. And if we had much to doe in that place, there was not leſſe at the gate of Prouence, and at the plaine of Italy: for dayly they were doing either with aſſault or ſkirmiſh, and moſt at the plaine of Italy. Howbeit by the helpe of our Lord with the good conducting of the captaine of ſuccours of the ſame place, the priour of Nauarre, that was prompt and inuentiue, and could well incourage his men, the enemies had alway the worſt, and were driuen from the ſayd plaine, and from the breach of Prouence.

How the treaſon of Sir Andrew de Merall was knowen, and of the maruellous aſſaults that the Turks made.

VPon theſe terrors and aſſaults, the treaſon of the chancellour Sir Andrew de Merall, of whom I ſpake before, was perceiued: for a ſeruant of his, named Blaſe, was found ſhooting a quarrell of a croſſebow with a letter, whereof he was accuſed to the lord great maſter, which commanded to take him and examine him by iuſtice, and he confeſſed the ſhot of that letter & of other before, at the commandement of his maſter: and ſayd that he had great acquaintance with the Turks baſhas, and that it was not long ſince he had written a letter to them, warning them that they ſhould not go, for gunſhot began to faile, and the men were waſted by ſlaying and hurting at the aſſaults in great quantity: and if they abode ſtill and gaue no more aſſaults, at the laſt the towne ſhould be theirs. And diuers other things the ſeruant ſayd of his maſter, of the which I haue ſpoken part before at the beginning, and of the warning that he gaue to the great Turke for to come.

But to returne to the plaine of Italy. After many battels and aſſaults done in the ſayd place, by continuall ſhot of ſeuenteene great gunnes that beat the ſayd plaine, the repaires and trauerſes were almoſt broken and loſt. And by trenches the enemies were come ioyning to the breach, and neuer ceaſed to graue the earth and ſcrape the earth to cauſe the repaires & trauerſes to fall: and at the laſt the moſt part fell downe, & our men were conſtrained to leaue the ſayd plaine, ſaue a quarter that was toward the ſea, as it were the third part thereof. Certaine dayes afore the enemies came to the foot of the plaine, and did cut it, and raiſed the earth, & at the laſt they paſſed thorow into the towne wall: and anon began to hew and cut as they did at that of Spaine. The lord great maſter ſeeing that, anon caſt downe a part of the church of our Lady de la Victoria, and of another church of S. Panthalion. And within they began to make the repaires and trauerſes as at the place of Spaine, wherein was made extreame diligence, but not ſuch as the ſayd needed, and as was needfull, becauſe there were no labourers for to helpe. After that the enemies had taken the moſt part of the bulwarke of England & the plaine of Italy, they purpoſed to make aſſault to the ſayd plaine, and to the breach of Spaine, and to enter into our repaires to winne them for to make an end of vs. And for euer to affeeble the repaires and for to abaſh vs, the 28 day of Nouember all along the day and night they ceaſed not to ſhoot great artillery, both from the brimmes of the ditches with thoſe great pieces, caſting ſtones of nine & eleuen foot about, and from the mantellets without. And as it was reckoned, they ſhot the ſame day and night 150 times or more againſt our repaires and trauerſes of the wall.

And in the morning the 29 day of the ſame moneth, the vigill of S. Andrew at the ſpring of the day, the enemies went thorow the breach with their banners, and entred into the repaires with greater number of people then they did at the great battell in September, hardily and furiouſly for to fight with vs. But at their comming in, the artillery of the trauerſes, and the handgunnes, and the gunſhot of the milles found them ſo well and ſo ſharply, that he that came in, was anon diſpatched and ouerthrowen, and there abode about 2000 of the Turks ſlaine. The other that came after ſeeing their fellowes ſo euill welcommed, as people that were aſtonied and loſt, they turned againe to their trenches: at whome the artillery of the milles ſhot victoriouſly, and haſted them to go apace: and by report from the campe there died ſixe thouſand or mo that day; the which day might be called very happy, and well fortunate for vs, thanked be God, for there was none that thought to eſcape that day, but to haue died all, and loſt the towne: howbeit, the pleaſure of our Lord was by euident miracle to haue it otherwiſe, and the enemies were chaſed and ouercome. And it is to be noted, that the ſame day the raine was ſo great and ſo ſtrong, that it made the earth to ſincke a great deale that they had caſt into the ditches, for to couer them from the ſhot of Auuergne. And the ſayd earth being ſo ſuncken, the artillery of the ſayde bulwarke (vnwares to them) ſmote them going and comming, and made great murder of the ſayd dogges. The ſayd day alſo the enemies came to the plaine of Italy for to aſſault it; but when they vnderſtood that their fellowes had bene put backe ſo rudely, and with ſo great ſlaughter, they were afrayd, and ſo they returned againe to their trenches.

How the Turks got the plaine ground of Spaine.

AND that done, Acmek Baſha ſeeing their buſineſſe euery day goe from worſe to worſe, and that at the aſſaults were but loſſe of people, without doing of any good, and that there was no man that willingly would go to it any more, he intended to giue no more aſſaults, but to follow his trenches, and by them enter couertly without loſſe of a man from the breach to the other end of the towne. Semblably he intended for to winne the plaine earth beſide Spaine: the which to get, he came at pleaſure to the foot of the wall, & began to beat downe the plaine ground, and to giue many ſkirmiſhes and conflicts to our folke that kept it. And there were ſlaine many good men. And at the laſt, for default of more helpe and of gunſhot, it was left and giuen vp of our men, and ſo loſt. That done, the enemies came thither as in other places. And this is the third place where they came nere to the foot of the wall. And whoſo wel conſidered in what eſtate the poore towne was at that time, ſeeing their enemies haue ſo great aduantage, might well ſay, and iudge, that at length it ſhould be taken, and a loſt towne.

How a Genouois came to the gate of the towne for to ſpeake for a treaty, and deliuerance of the ſame.

A Few dayes after the ſaide iourney a Chriſtian man that was in the campe, the which by his ſpeech was a Genouois or Spiolis, came to the gate of Auuergne, and demanded to parle, and after that he was demanded what he would haue, he ſayd that he had maruell of vs why we would not preſerue our ſelues, ſeeing the pitious eſtate the towne was in: and he as a Chriſtian man counſelled vs to yeeld our ſelues with ſome agreement: and that if we would harken thereto, that ſome ſhould be found expedient as to ſome what for our ſafegard. And it is very like that he ſayd not ſuch words, nor ſpake ſo farforth in the matter, without commiſſion and leaue of the chiefe of the campe, or of the great Turke himſelfe. To the which Spiolis was anſwered, that he ſhould go away with an euill hap, and that it needed not to ſpeake of appointment: and that though the enemies had great aduantage, there was yet enough wherewith to receiue and feaſt them, if they made any aſſault. Theſe words heard, he went away: and two dayes after he came againe, and demanded to ſpeake with a marchant Genouois of the towne, named Mathew de Vra, and he was anſwered that he which he demanded, was ſicke, and might not come, but that he ſhould deliuer the letter, and it ſhould be giuen to him. The ſayd Spiolis ſayd nay, and that he would giue it himſelfe, and ſpeake with him: and ſayd that he had alſo a letter of the Grand ſignior, for the lord maſter. Vpon this he was bidden to go his way: and to ſet him packing, they ſhot after him a piece of artillery. The next day after Ballantis Albaneſe that was fled thorow the breach of Spaine to the campe, came from the ſayd Genouois propoſing ſuch words, or like as the other had ſayd, ſaying likewiſe that the Grand ſignior had ſent a letter to the lord maſter. To whom no words were ſpoken, nor anſwere made, for the lord great maſter as wiſe and prudent conſidering that a towne that will heare intreatings is halfe loſt, defended vpon the paine of death ſith that Siotis had ſpoken theſe two times, that none ſhould be ſo hardy to ſpeake nor anſwere them of the campe, without his knowledge & commandement: but ſeeing they were ſuch ambaſſadors, they reported the words of the ſayd Albaneſe, or euer the ſayd lord had knowledge of the words of the Siotis. The which words ſpread thorow the towne put many folke in thought, and would haue vndone that that the Siotis ſaid: the which is no maruell whereas is much people, for with good will and moſt often they regard ſooner to ſaue the liues of them and their children, then they doe to the honour of the reſidue. Howbeit not one durſt ſpeake a word openly of that buſineſſe, but all ſecretly: and ſome came and ſpake to certaine lords of the great croſſe for to ſpeake to ẏ lord great maſter. And in effect ſome lords ſpake thereof to him, perſuading him that it ſhould be good to thinke thereon, ſeeing that the towne went to loſſe. To whom the ſayd lord ſhewed many things for his honor and the Religion: and that no ſuch things ought to be done or thought for any thing in the world, but rather he and they to die. The lords hearing this anſwere, went their wayes, and then returned againe to the ſayd lord, aduiſing him more to thinke well on all things, and to the ſaluation of his towne and of his religion. And they ſayd moreouer, that they doubted that the people would rather haue a peace then to die themſelues, their wiues and children. The lord ſeeing that ſuch words were as things inforced, as who ſhould ſay, if thou do it not, we ſhall do it as wiſe men and prudent, willing to make remedies of needfull things by counſell, called the lords of his Councell for to haue aduiſe in theſe doings, and other. And when they were aſſembled, the lord propoſed the words that were to him denounced, and ſayd: With theſe termes and wordes came two or three marchants and citizens of the towne that knocked at the doore of the Councell, and preſented a ſupplication to the great maſter, and lords of the Councell, whereby they required and beſought meekely the ſayd reuerend lord to haue reſpect to them and their poore houſholds, and to make ſome appointment with the great Turke, ſeeing that the ſayd matter was already forward in purpoſe, that he would do it; and that it would pleaſe him to conſider the pitious & ſorowfull eſtate that the towne was in; & that there was no remedy to ſaue it: and at the leſt way, if the lord would not make appointment, to giue them leaue (of his goodneſſe) to haue their wiues and their children out of the Rodes to ſaue them, for they would not haue them ſlaine nor made ſlaues to the enemies. And the concluſion was, that if the ſayd lord would not puruey therefore, they would puruey for it themſelues. And there was written in the ſaid requeſt the names of eight or ten of the richeſt of the towne. Which words of the ſayd ſupplication being heard, the ſayd lord and his councell were abaſhed and ill content as reaſon would, ſeeing that it was but a courſe game, and thought on many things to make anſwere to the ſayd citizens, for to content and appeaſe them: and alſo to ſee if they ſhould intend to the appointment, as they required, and after as the Genowayes had reported: and the better to make the ſayd anſwere, and to know more plainly in what eſtate the towne was in all things: that is to wit, firſt of gunpowder, and then of men of warre, and of the batteries. Alſo were demanded and aſked the lord of S. Giles pre Iohn, which had the charge of the gunpowder, and then the captaine Sir Gabriel Martiningo, for being ouer their men of warre (as it is ſaid) as to him that knew the trueth if the towne might holde or not, or there were any meanes to ſaue it. The ſayd lord of S. Giles aroſe, ſaying and affirming vpon his honour and his conſcience that almoſt all the ſlaues and labourers were dead and hurt, and that ſcantly there were folke enow to remoue a piece of artillery from one place to another, and that it was impoſſible without ſome any more to make or ſet vp the repaires the which euery day were broken and cruſhed by the great, furious, and continuall ſhot of the enemies artillery. As for gunpowder the ſayd lord ſayd, that all that was for ſtore in the towne, was ſpent long agone, and that which was newly brought, was not to ſerue & furniſh two aſſaults. And he ſeeing the great aduantage of the enemies being ſo farre within the towne, without power to put or chaſe them away, for default of men, was of the opinion that the towne would be loſt, and that there was no meanes to ſaue it. The words of the ſayd lord finiſhed, the captaine Gabriel Martinigo for his diſcharge ſayd and declared to the reuerend lord and them of the Councell, that ſeeing and conſidering the great beatings of the ſhot that the towne had ſuffered, and after ſeeing the cutting which the enemies had ſo large, and that they were within the towne by their trenches both endlong and ouerthwart; ſeeing alſo that in two other places they were at the foot of the wall, and that the moſt part of our knights and men of warre and other were ſlaine and hurt, and the gunpowder waſted, and that it was impoſſible for them to reſiſt their enemies any more, that without doubt the towne was loſt if there came no ſuccors for to helpe and reſiſt the ſiege. The which opinions and reaſons of theſe two worthy men and expert in ſuch feats, vnderſtood and pondered by the lord great maſter and the lords of the Councell, they were moſt part aduiſed for to accept and take treaty if it were offered, for the ſauegard of the common people, and of the holy reliques of the church, as part of the holy croſſe, the holy throne, the hand of S. John, and part of his head, and diuers other reliques. Howbeit the lord great maſter to whom the buſineſſe belonged very neere, and that tooke it moſt heauily, and was more ſorrowfull then any of the other, as reaſon required, was alway ſtedfaſt in his firſt purpoſe, rather willing to die then to conſent to ſuch a thing, and ſayd againe to the lordes of the Councell: Aduiſe you, and thinke well on euery thing, and of the end that may happen, and he propoſed to them two points: that is to wit, Whether it is better for vs to die all, or to ſaue the people and the holy reliques. The which two points and doubts were long time diſputed, and there were diuers opinions: neuertheleſſe, at the laſt they ſayd all, that howbeit that it were well and ſafely done to die for the faith, and moſt honor for vs, notwithſtanding ſeeing and conſidering that there is no remedy to reſiſt againſt our enemies, and meanes to ſaue the towne; and on the other part, that the great Turke would not oppreſſe vs to forſake our faith, but only would haue the towne, it were much better then, and tending to greater wealth to ſaue all the iewels aboue ſayde, that ſhould be defiled and loſt if they came in the handes of the enemies of the faith. And alſo to keepe ſo much ſmall people, as women and children, that they would torment and cut ſome in pieces, other take, and perforce cauſe them to forſake their faith, with innumerable violences, and ſhamefull ſinnes that ſhould be committed and done, if the towne were put to the ſword, as was done at Modon, and lately at Bellegrado. Whereby they did conclude, that it were better, and more agreeable to God, for to take the treaty, if it were proffered, then for to die as people deſperate, and without hope.

How the great Turke ſent two of his men to the towne, to haue it by intreating. And how the lord great maſter ſent two knights to him, to know his aſſurance.

Vpon theſe conſultations and wordes almighty God that ſaueth them which truſt in him, and that would not that ſo many euils and cruelties ſhould come to the poore city & inhabitants of it, and alſo that the great Turke might not ariſe in ouer great pride and vaineglory, put him in minde to ſeeke to haue the ſayd towne by treaty, which he ought not to haue done for his honour, nor by reaſon, for the towne was in a maner his. And in like ſort he ought not to haue let vs goe as he did, ſeeing that we were his mortall enemies euer, and ſhall be ſtill in the time comming, conſidering the great ſlaughter of his people that we haue made in this ſiege. Howbeit, the eternall goodneſſe hath blinded him, and hath pleaſed that theſe things ſhould be thus, for ſome cauſe vnknowen of vs. And for concluſion, the great Turke ſent to haue a communication and parle in following the wordes of the Genoueſe afore ſayd. Then was a ſigne ſet vpon the church of the abbey without the towne; to the which was made anſwere with another at the milles of Quoſquino. And forthwith came two Turks to ſpeake with them of the towne. Then the lord great maſter ſent the Priour of S. Giles pre John, and the captaine Gabriel Martiningo to know the cauſe of their comming. And when they came to them, without holding of long ſpeech, the two Turkes deliuered them a letter for to beare to the lord great maſter from the great Turke, and then returned ſafely into their tents. When the two lords had receiued it, they bare & preſented it to the reuerend lord great maſter, which cauſed it to be read. By the which the great Turke demanded of the lord great maſter to yeeld the towne to him, and in ſo doing he was content to let him go & all his knights, and all the other people of what condition ſoeuer they were, with all their goods & iewels ſafe without feare of any harme or diſpleaſure of his folkes. And alſo he ſware and promiſed on his faith ſo to do. The ſayd letter was ſealed with his ſignet that he vſeth, that is as it were gilded. And he ſayde afterward, that if the lord great maſter would not accept the ſayde treaty, that none of the city, of what eſtate ſoeuer he were, ſhould thinke to eſcape, but that they all vnto the cats ſhould paſſe by the edge of the ſword, and that they ſhould ſend him an anſwere forthwith, either yea or nay. After the ſight of the contents of the ſayd letters of ſo great weight, and the time ſo ſhort for to giue ſo great an anſwere, and ſuch demand, the ſayd lord great maſter and all the lords of the Councell were in great thoughts, howbeit they determined to giue an anſwere, ſeeing the eſtate of the towne ſo ill that it could be no worſe. Hearing the report and opinions a day or two before of the two lords ordeined to view the defence of the towne, ſaying that the towne was loſt without remedy: conſidering alſo that the principalles of the towne would haue appointment. And in likewiſe, at the other counſell all the lordes had already willed and declared, that it were better to ſaue the towne for reſpect of the poore people, then to put it all whole to the furie of the enemies, whereupon they agreed and concluded to take the foreſayd treatie. After the concluſion taken, anſwere was made readily for a good reſpect; that is to weet, to take the Turke at his worde, to the ende that he ſhould not repent him of it, nor change his opinion. For euery houre his people wanne and entered further and further into the towne. And for to goe vnto the great Turke were ordained theſe two knights, ſir Paſſin afore named, and he bare the token of the White croſſe: and another of the towne named Robert de Perruſe iudge Ordinarie.

When theſe two ambaſſadours had made them readie, they went out at the gate of Quoſquino, and went to the tent of Acmek baſha, capitaine generall. And becauſe it was late, and that they might not goe that day to the great Turke, on the next day in the morning the foreſaid capitaine Acmek led and conueied our ſayd ambaſſadours to the great Turkes pauillion, that they might haue the more knowledge plainely, and for to heare his will as touching the wordes which were reported to the reuerend lord great maſter, and after, the contents of his letter and writings.

When the ſayd two ambaſſadours were departed out of the towne, there did enter two men of authoritie of the campe; one was nephew or kinſman of the ſayd Acmek, the other was the great Turkes truchman, which the lord maſter cauſed to be well receiued, and they were lodged nigh the ſayd gate of Quoſquino. And then truce was taken for 3. dayes, and the enemies came to our repaires, and ſpake with our folke and dranke one with another.

How the ambaſſadours of Rhodes ſpake with the great Turke, and what anſwere they had.

When our ambaſſadours had made reuerence to the great Turke, they ſayd that the lord great maſter of Rhodes had ſent them to his Imperiall maieſtie to know what he requeſted, and deſired that they might talke together, and how the great maſter had receiued his letter. The great Turke anſwered them by his truchman, that of demanding to ſpeake together, nor writing of letter to the great maſter he knew nothing. Howbeit, ſith the great maſter had ſent to him for to know his will, he bade ſay to them that the great maſter ſhould yeeld him the towne. And in ſo doing he promiſed by his faith for to let him goe with all his knights, and all other that would goe with their goods, without receiuing any diſpleaſure of his people of the campe. And if he accepted not the ſayd treatie, to certifie him that he would neuer depart from Rhodes till he had taken it, and that all his might of Turkie ſhould die there, rather then hee would faile of it, and that there ſhould neither great nor litle eſcape, but vnto the cats they ſhould be all cut in pieces, and ſayd that within 3. dayes they ſhould giue him an anſwere, for hee would not that his people ſhould looſe time, and that during the ſayd truce they ſhould make no repaires nor defences within the towne.

When the great Turke had ended his wordes, our ambaſſadours tooke their leaue of him, and returned to the towne, and there was giuen to each of them a rich garment of branched veluet, with cloth of gold of the Turkiſh faſhion. Then Acmek baſha tooke ſir Paſſin, and led him to his pauillion, and intreating him right well, cauſed him to abide all that day and night: and in eating and drinking they had many diſcourſes of things done at the ſiege, queſtioning each with other. And among all other things our ambaſſadour demaunded of Acmek, and prayed him to tell for trueth how many men died of the campe while the ſiege was laied. The ſaid Baſha ſware vpon his faith and certified, that there were dead of the campe of violent death, that is to ſay, of gunſhot and other wayes, 64000. men or more, beſide them that died of ſickneſſe, which were about 40. or 50. thouſand.

64000. Turks ſlaine at the ſiege of Rhodes.

How one of the ambaſſadours made anſwere of his meſſage, and how the Commons would not agree to yeeld the towne.

Returne we now to our purpoſe and to the anſwere that our ambaſſadours brought to the lord great maſter. The ſayd Robert Perruſe made the anſwere, and told what the great Turke had ſayd, certifying that he would haue an anſwere quickly either yea or nay. The which anſwere after the demaund of the great Turke hath bene purpoſed and concluded by the whole counſel, and his offer yͤ treatie accepted, howbeit the ſayd ambaſſadours had it not to do ſo ſoone nor the firſt time that they went for good reaſons, but yet they would not deferre it, for feare leaſt he ſhould repent him. And vpon theſe determinations that they would haue ſent the ſayd Peruſe to beare the anſwere, came ſome of the common people of the towne to the lord great maſter, that was with the lordes of the counſell, and ſayd that they were aduertiſed of the appointment that he had made with the great Turke, and that he would yeeld the towne with couenants by him taken, which they ſuppoſed ought not to be done without calling of them. And becauſe they were not called to it, they ſayd that they would not agree thereto, and that it were better for them to die, for the great Turke by ſome way would put them all to death, as was done in Bellegrado in Hungarie.

How the lord great maſter ſent two ambaſſadors for the Commons to the great Turke.

When the reuerend lord great maſter had heard their wordes, he ſayd graciouſly to them, that as touching the acceptation of the great Turks offer, it was needful ſo to do in the degree that the towne was, and the cauſes wherefore he had done it the counſell had ſeene and diſcuſſed, and that it was a thing that might not, nor ought not to be ſayd nor publiſhed in common, for reporting of it to the enemies by traitours, but be kept ſtill and ſecret. And moreouer, that it was concluded to make an anſwere ſhortly, for to take the great Turke at his word, leaſt he repented him. For if they had bene called, or the anſwere had bene giuen, it had bene ouerlong buſineſſe, and in the meane time the Turke might haue changed his mind, and that that he had done and concluded with the great Turke, the lordes of the counſell had well regarded and conſidered in all things, and for their profite and aduantage, as much or more as for that of the Religion. And that they would ſend to the great Turke againe other ambaſſadours, the better to know his will, and to be ſurer of his promiſe. Then the lord great maſter ordained two other ambaſſadours for to goe to the great Turke, which were two Spaniardes, the one named ſir Raimon Market, and the other meſſire Lopez, at whoſe iſſuing entered Sir Paſſin the firſt ambaſſadour, and the other two went to the tent of Acmek baſha, for to leaue them to the great Turke. And when they were within the Turkes pauillion, and had done him reuerence as appertained, our ambaſſadours ſayd that the great maſter had heard and ſeen his demaund to yeeld the towne. And for ẏ it is a thing of great weight, and that he had to doe and ſay with many men of diuers nations, and becauſe the time of anſwere was ſo ſhort, hee might not doe that that hee demaunded ſo ſoone. Howbeit hee would ſpeake with his people, and then hee would giue him an anſwere.

How the Turke began the aſſault, and how the Commons agreed to yeeld the towne.

When the great Turke heard the anſwere of our ambaſſadours, he ſayd nothing, but commaunded his Baſhas that they ſhould begin the battell againe to the towne, the which was done, and then the truce was broken, and the ſhot of the enemies was ſharper then it was afore. And on the other ſide nothing, or very litle for fault of powder: for that that there was left, was kept for ſome great aſſault or neede. Howbeit the ſayd Amek Baſha kept one of the ambaſſadours, and meſſire Lopez onely entered. The great maſter ſeeing the warre begun, and the ſhot thicker then it was afore, and the enemies entred hourely by their trenches further into the towne, called them that before had ſayde to him, that they would not the towne ſhould be yeelded, but had rather for to die. And therefore the ſayd lord ſayd that he was content for to die with them, and that they ſhould diſpoſe them to defend themſelues well, or to doe their endeuour better then they had done in times paſt. And to the ende that each one of them ſhould haue knowledge of his will (for as then he ſpake but to foure or fiue of them that gaineſayd him) he made a cry through all the towne, that all they that were holden to be at the poſternes or gates ſhould giue attendance, and not to come away day nor night on payne of death: for afore, the Rhodians came but litle there. And that the other that were not of the poſternes, or that were of his ſuccours, ſhould goe to the breach of Spaine where the ſayd lord was continually, and not to goe away day nor night on the aboueſayd payne. The ſayd cry made, each one were obedient for a day or twaine, howbeit a young Rhodian left his poſterne and went to his houſe, which on the next day was hanged for breaking of the lordes commaundement. Notwithſtanding that, by litle and litle the people annoyed them, and their heartes failed, and left the poſternes and breaches: in ſuch wiſe, that the enemies might come in without finding great reſiſtance, but of a fewe that the lord maſter cauſed to abide there (that is to weet) knightes of his ſuccours, And in the night he ſought out moe people for to keepe ẏ watch at the ſaid breach, and paied to them as much as they would. The ſayd lord ſeeing himſelf thus abandoned and left of his people, he ſent to aſke them againe wherefore they did not their endeuour, and why they came not to day, as they ſayd before. Which made anſwere that they ſawe and knew well that the towne was loſt for certaine reaſons that were told them: by occaſion whereof they had gaineſaid the ordinance of the ſayd lord, and ſayd that they had bene wrongfully ſtayed of diuers things: and on the other ſide, that they feared that the Turke would not hold his word. But ſithens they ſawe that there was none other remedie but to abide the aduenture and fortune, they ſayd that they put all to the ſayd lord to doe what he thought good, and that hee would ſee what were beſt for them. And required the lord to doe them ſo much fauour as to let them chooſe one or two among them for to goe to the great Turke with his ambaſſadours for to haue ſuretie of him. The which was granted, and two ordinarie ambaſſadours were choſen for them; one Nicholas Vergotie, and the other Piero of ſaint Creſice, and the foreſayd Paſſin ſhould returne with them for to make the ſayd anſwere. Then the great maſter or they departed (prolonging the time as much as he might) aduiſed to ſend a letter to the great Turke, the which his grandfather had written or cauſed to be written. In the which letter he gaue his malediction or curſe to his children and ſucceſſours, if they enterpriſed to beſiege Rhodes. The ſayd Roben Perruſe bare the ſayd letter, and as he was accuſtomed, he went to Acmek Baſha for to cauſe him to haue audience, and to preſent the ſayd letter. And the Baſha ſayd hee would ſee the letter: for it is the guiſe in the great Turkes court, that none may ſpeake to him nor giue him a letter, but he be aduertiſed firſt what ſhall be ſaid, or what ſhall be written. When the Baſha had ſeene the wordes written in the ſaid letter, he brake it and caſt it on the ground, and did tread vpon it, ſaying many iniurious and villanous wordes to the ſayd iudge. And bade him returne apace to his great maſter, and bid him to thinke on his buſineſſe, and to make anſwere to the great lord (as he had ſent and commanded) or els it ſhould not be long or he ſawe his dolorous and wofull ende. And that ſame day were taken two men of ours that bare earth toward the bulwarke of England. Of whom the ſayd Acmek cauſed an officer to cut off their noſes, fingers and eares, and gaue them a letter to beare to the lord great maſter, wherein were great wordes and threatnings. After the ſayd Perruſe was returned, meſſire Paſſin was ſent againe to the ſayde Baſha, for to know of him if the great Turke would be content with any ſumme of money for his coſtes and expenſes, that he had made for his armie. The which anſwered that ſuch wordes or offers of ſiluer were not to bee ſayd nor preſented to the great lord on paine of life, and that hee ſet more by honour then by ſiluer: And therefore hee bade him returne and ſay to the great maſter that hee ſhould make anſwere to the great lord after his demaund, to yeeld or not yeeld the towne. The ſayd Paſſin made relation of the wordes of the Baſha to the great maſter: the which for the great ſorrow that hee had deferred alwayes, ſaw himſelfe in ſuch pitious eſtate. Notwithſtanding, the ſayd lord putting all to the will of our lord, & conſidering that there was no remedie to do otherwiſe, nor to truſt any more his enemies: and being conſtrained on all ſides to make the appointment, with great heauineſſe, ineſtimable dolours and bewailings, at the laſt gaue his voyce to yeeld the towne (with the treatiſe or offers to him preſented) which was the 20. day of December, the yeere of our lord a thouſand fiue hundreth and two and twentie.

An anſvvere to ſuch as will make queſtion for the deliuerance of the citie of Rhodes.

And if by any it were demaunded wherefore the ſayd lord great maſter hath yeelded the towne to the great Turke, requeſting it with treatie and conuenants, which was a ſigne that he feared and would no more fight, but giue his way. To this I anſwere; Notwithſtanding that the great Turke was aduertiſed by ſome traitours, and by other that fled into the campe, that the powder almoſt failed, and that there were but fewe men of warre within the towne, yet he beleeued not, nor gaue credence of all that was reported to him, but thought verily that wee had ynough for a great while, and conſidered that hee muſt tary till they were waſted and ſpent, wherein behoued time. And ſeeing all his eſtate entred into ſtrange places, and into the lands of his enemies, and had bene there alreadie ſixe moneths, (and not without great danger of his owne perſon) thinking on the other ſide, that taking the towne by aſſault, he ſhould loſe many of his folke; and yet when hee had ouercome and wonne the towne, they ſhould fall each vpon other in departing of the bootie or pillage, doubting finally the hazard of warre. For theſe reaſons and other that may be alleaged, the great Turke had much rather to haue the towne by compoſition and treatie, then otherwiſe. And it ſuffiſed him to driue his olde enemies out of the countreys of Leuant, and ſet the ſubiects of his countreys in reſt and ſuretie. And we of the towne that knew our weakneſſe, & that we might do no more, it ſeemed better to ſaue ſo much ſmall people, then we and they to fall into the furie of our enemies, for otherwiſe could we not haue done, but tempt God, and died as in diſpaire.

How the citie of Rhodes was yeelded to the great Turke, and of the euil behauiour of certaine Turkes.

BUt to returne to our principall: After that the reuerend great maſter had giuen his voyce to the yeelding of the towne, he ſent the ſaid Paſſin againe for to beare it to the great Turke. And with him went the two men that were choſen of the Commons, and they went all three together to the tent of Acmek Baſha. To whom the ſayd Paſſin firſt made this pitious anſwere and concluſion to yeeld the towne. Notwithſtanding, he ſayd the people had ordained two men among them for to goe to the great Turke, to ſpeake of their particular doings, and to haue ſome ſuretie of their perſons, wiues, and children, to the ende that it were not done to them, as to thoſe of Bellegrado. The ſayd Acmek led the three ambaſſadours toward the great Turke. And when they were entered into the pauillion, the ſayde meſſire Paſſin made the report of his ambaſſade to the ſayd lord, and ſayd that the great maſter yeelded him the towne vnder the promiſe made by his Imperiall maieſtie, with the treatie promiſed. Of the which promiſe hee held him ſure and certaine, and that hee would doe no leſſe: howbeit, the people had required him to giue them licence to goe to his maieſtie for to aſke ſome requeſt of him. Then the two citizens beſought the great Turke that he would for ſuretie remooue his campe from the towne, to the ende that they ſhould haue no maner of harme to their bodies nor goods, and that they that would goe, ſhould goe, and that they that would abide ſtill, might be well entreated. The great Turke anſwered by his interpreter to meſſire Paſſin, that hee accepted the towne, and promiſed againe vpon his faith, and on his honour to the lord great maſter, that he would performe that he had promiſed, and ſent to him by the ſame Paſſin that he ſhould not doubt of the contrary: and if he had not ſhips ynough for to carie his people and their goods, that hee would let them haue of his, and that he would deliuer the artillerie that was wont to be in the ſhips of ẏ Religion. And as touching the requeſt of the people, he ſayd that he would remooue the campe, and that they that would abide, might abide, and they ſhould bee well entreated, and ſhould pay no tribute in fiue yeeres, and their children ſhould not be touched, and who ſo would goe within the ſayd ſpace of fiue yeeres, they ſhould goe in good time. These wordes ended, our ambaſſadours tooke leaue of him, & when they were departed, they ſpake againe with the ſayd Acmek Baſha for to haue a letter of the contents of the promiſe of the ſayd lord. And by his commandement the ſayd letter was made, whereby he promiſed to let go the great maſter with all his knights, ſtrangers and men of the towne that would go with their goods, without hauing diſpleaſure of any of his people of the campe, or by the wayes. When the letter was made, it was deliuered to meſſire Paſſin. And as touching withdrawing of the campe, the ſayd Baſha promiſed againe that he would do it, ſince the great lord would ſo: howbeit he remooued but from the trenches, and ſome of his people went a litle way off. And the ſayd Baſha demaunded in the Turkes behalfe, that they ſhould ſend to him in hoſtage foure and twentie knights, whereof two ſhould bee of the great Croſſe, and two and twentie citizens. And the ſayd lord ſhould ſend onely a captaine with three or foure hundred Ianiſſaries, for to keepe the towne when the campe were withdrawen. And ſo it was done; and beſide this hee gaue twelue dayes reſpite to the lord great maſter, to prepare him and depart out of Rhodes. And in concluſion all this done, our ambaſſadours returned and made the report to the reuerend great maſter of all that they had done and practiſed with the great Turke, and the ſayd Baſha, and gaue him the letter for to goe ſurely. Then the great maſter with his counſell ordained the foure and twentie perſons, and other of the towne. When they were readie, they went to the campe, where they were well entreated foure dayes. During this time, Ferra Baſha paſſed from the maine land to the campe, with foure and twentie or fiue and twentie thouſand Ianiſſaries, which by the commandement of the great Turke was gone vpon the borders of the countreis of the Sophie. For the Turke ſeeing the people of the campe diſcouraged and willing no more to goe to the aſſaults, ſent to the ſayde Baſha to come to Rhodes with his people, which would haue withſtood vs ſore, as freſh men. And it was the worke of God and a wonderfull miracle, that they came after that the appointment was made: for if they had come afore, it is to be ſuppoſed that the deed had gone otherwiſe, and there had bene many ſtrokes giuen: but I beleeue that the ende ſhould haue bene pitious for vs, but God would not that the Turke ſhould haue victory vpon vs as hee might haue had, ſeeing the great aduantage that he had in all things, but he blinded him and would not that he ſhould know his might. And on the other part it may be

ſaid and marueiled how it was poſsible alway to haue ouercome our enemies in all aſſaultes thirtie dayes, and at the end to looſe the towne, it was the will of God that ſo hath pleaſed for ſome cauſe to vs vnknowen. It is to bee thought, that lacke of men and gunſhot, and the enemies ſo farre within the towne, and ready to enter at other places, with the treaſons, haue cauſed the towne to be loſt. Two or three dayes after the comming of the ſayd Baſha, his Janiſſaries and other of the armie entred into the Towne, which was on Chriſtmas day, within the time giuen to vs, and then the Turkes word was broken, if it were his will or not, I cannot tell. Neuertheleſſe there was no ſwoord drawen, and in that reſpect promiſe was kept. But they made pillage, and entered by force into the houſes of the caſtle, and tooke all that they might and would. After that they had ranſacked the houſes, they entred into the churches, and pilled all that they found, and brake the images. And there was no crucifix, nor figure of our lady, nor of other ſaints, that were left whole. Then with great inhumanitie they went into the hoſpitall of poore and ſicke folke, called the Fermarie, and tooke all the ſiluer veſſell that the ſicke folke were ſerued with, and raiſed them out of their beds, and droue them away, ſome with great ſtrokes and ſtaues, and ſome were caſt downe from the galleries. When theſe houndes had done that acte, they went to the church of ſaint Iohn and tooke downe the tombes of the great maſters, and ſought if there were any treaſure hid in them, and they forced certaine women and maidens. And all they that were chriſtened and had bene Turkes afore, were they men, women or children, and children that the ſayd men had made chriſtians, they led into Turkie, which thing is of greater importance then any of the other. The morrowe after Chriſtmas day, the reuerend lord great maſter went to the great Turkes pauillion for to viſite him, and to be better aſſured of his promiſe, the which lord he made to be wel & graciouſly receiued. And he ſignified vnto him by his interpreter, that the caſe ſo happened to him was a thing vſuall and common; as to looſe townes and lordſhips, and that hee ſhould not take ouermuch thought for it: and as for his promiſe, he bare that he ſhould not doubt in any thing, and that he ſhould not feare any diſpleaſure to his perſon, and that he ſhould goe with his people without feare. With theſe wordes the ſayd lord thanked him, and tooke his leaue and departed.

An ambaſſage from Don Ferdinando, brother to the emperor Charles the 5. vnto king Henry the 8. in the yere 1527. deſiring his aide againſt Solyman the great Turke. Holinſhed. pag. 894.

ON the 14. day of March, 1527. were conueied from London to Greenwich by the earle of Rutland and others, the lord Gabriel de Salamanca, earle of Octonburge, Iohn Burgraue of Syluerberge, and Iohn Faber a famous clerke, after biſhop of Vien, as ambaſſadours from Don Ferdinando, brother to Charles the emperor, newly elect king of Hungarie and Beame, after the death of his brother in law king Lewes, which was ſlaine by Solyman the Turke the laſt Summer. This company was welcommed of the high officers, and after brought into the kings preſence, all the nobilitie being preſent; and there after great reuerence made, M. Faber made a notable oration, taking his ground out of the Goſpell, Exijt ſeminator ſeminare ſemen ſuum: and of that hee declared how Chriſt and his diſciples went foorth to ſowe, and how their ſeed was good that fel into the good ground, and brought foorth good fruite, which was the Chriſtian faith. And then he declared how contrary to that ſowing, Mahomet had ſowen ſeed, which brought foorth euill fruit. He alſo ſhewed from the beginning, how the Turkes haue increaſed in power, what realmes they had conquered, what people they had ſubdued euen to that day. He declared further what actes the great Turke then liuing had done; and in eſpeciall, he noted the getting of Belgrade and of the Rhodes, and the ſlaying of the king of Hungarie, to the great rebuke (as he ſayd) of all the kings chriſtened. Hee ſet forth alſo what power the Turke had, what diuerſities of companies, what capitaines he had, ſo that he thought, that without a maruellous great number of people, hee could not be ouerthrowen. Wherefore he moſt humbly beſought the king as S. Georges knight, and defender of the faith, to aſſiſt the king his maſter in that godly warre and vertuous purpoſe.

He meaneth the Emperor & the French king.

To this oration the king by the mouth of Sir Thomas Moore anſwered; that much hee lamented the loſſe that happened in Hungarie, and if it were not for the warres which were betweene the two great princes, he thought that the Turke would not haue enterpriſed that acte: wherefore he with all his ſtudie would take paine, firſt, to ſet an vnitie and peace throughout all Chriſtendome, and after that, both with money and men he would be readie to helpe toward that glorious warre, as much as any other prince in Chriſtendome. After this done, the ambaſſadours were well cheriſhed, and diuers times reſorted to the court, and had great cheere and good rewards, and ſo the third day of May next following, they tooke their leaue & departed homeward.

The antiquitie of the trade with Engliſh ſhips into the Leuant.

IN the yeeres of our Lord, 1511. 1512. &c. till the yeere 1534. diuers tall ſhips of London, namely, The Chriſtopher Campion, wherein was Factor one Roger Whitcome; the Mary George, wherein was Factor William Greſham; the great Mary Grace, the Owner whereof, was William Gunſon, and the maſter one Iohn Hely; the Trinitie Fitz-williams, whereof was maſter Laurence Arkey; the Mathew of London, whereof was maſter William Capling, with certaine other ſhips of Southampton and Briſtow, had an ordinarie and vſuall trade to Sicilia, Candie, Chio, and ſomewhiles to Cyprus, as alſo to Tripolis and Barutti in Syria. The commodities which they caried thither were fine Kerſies of diuers colours, courſe Kerſies, white Weſterne dozens, Cottons, certaine clothes called Statutes, and others called Cardinal-whites, and Calueſkins which were well ſold in Sicilie, &c. The commodities which they returned backe were Silks, Chamlets, Rubarbe, Malmeſies, Muſkadels and other wines, ſweete oyles, cotten wooll, Turkie carpets, Galles, Pepper, Cinamom, and ſome other ſpices, &c. Beſides, the naturall inhabitants of the foreſayd places, they had, euen in thoſe dayes, traffique with Iewes, Turkes, and other forreiners. Neither did our merchants onely employ their owne Engliſh ſhipping before mentioned, but ſundry ſtrangers alſo: as namely, Candiots, Raguſeans, Sicilians, Genouezes, Venetian galliaſſes, Spaniſh and Portugale ſhips. All which particulars doe moſt euidently appeare out of certaine auncient Ligier bookes of the R. W. Sir William Locke Mercer of London, of Sir William Bowyer Alderman of London, of maſter Iohn Greſham, and of others; which I Richard Hakluyt haue diligently peruſed and copied out. And here for authorities ſake I doe annexe, as a thing not impertinent to this purpoſe, a letter of king Henry the eight, vnto Don Iohn the third, king of Portugale.

A letter of the king of England Henry the eight, to Iohn king of Portugale, for a Portingale ſhip with the goods of Iohn Greſham and Wil. Locke with others, vnladen in Portugale from Chio.

Octobr. 1531.

The ſame in Engliſh.

To the high and mightie prince, Iohn by the grace of God, king of Portugale, and of Algarue on this ſide and beyond the ſea in Africa, lord of Ghinea, and of the conqueſt, nauigation, and traffique of Æthiopia, Arabia, Perſia, India, &c. our moſt deere and welbeloued brother.

Henry by the grace of God, king of England and of France, defender of the faith, and lord of Ireland: to Iohn by the ſame grace, king of Portugale and Algarue, on this ſide and beyond the ſea in Africa, and lord of Ghinea, and of the conqueſt, nauigation, and traffique of Aethiopia, Arabia, Perſia, India, &c. our moſt deare and welbeloued brother, ſendeth greeting. So much ÿ more willingly and readily we vndertake the recommending of all iuſt cauſes vnto your highneſſe, becauſe by the daily teſtimonie of our ſubiects which traffike in your kingdoms and dominions, we are informed, that according to the dutie of a moſt worthy prince, ſo carefully and exactly you miniſter iuſtice vnto euery man, that all men moſt willingly repaire vnto your highneſſe, with full truſt to obtaine the ſame. Whereas therefore our welbeloued and truſtie ſubiect Iohn Greſham merchant of London, of late in humble maner hath ſignified vnto vs, that one William Heith his Factor and Agent, certaine moneths agoe did hire in Candie a certaine Portugale ſhip called Santo Antonio, (the patrone whereof is Diego Perez) and couenanted with the patrone of the ſayd ſhip, that he ſhould firſt ſaile to the Iſle of Sio, to take in merchandize of ſundry ſorts, & then eftſoones returne to Candie, to be fraighted with other goods, all which he was to bring into our kingdome of England, to the value of 12000 ducats, as by their billes of couenant & agreement more plainly appeareth: it ſo fel out, that ÿ aforeſaid Diego your highnes ſubiect hauing receiued the ſaid goods, very trecherouſly & much contrary to his couenant, to the exceeding great loſſe of our ſubiects, putting in by the way into an hauen of Portugale, & altering his purpoſe of comming into England, he remaineth ſtill in that hauen, & likewiſe detaineth our ſubiects goods. Which iniury (ſeeing it is done in your Highnes kingdome) we hope your Highnes will ſee reformed according to equity & right, the rather at our requeſt, which alwayes haue had a ſpeciall care of the cauſes & goods of your Highnes, & of your ſubiects whenſoeuer they come into our kingdome, whereof we made proofe the laſt yeere. Wherefore we inſtantly requeſt your Highnes, ÿ you would ſo receiue Iohn Ratcliffe the bearer of theſe preſent letters, & the new appointed agent of Iohn Greſham, which commeth into your dominions about this buſines, being thus commended vnto you in this buſines, & recouering & freely bringing home of the ſaid goods, & in remitting of the cuſtoms, vnleſſe they were ſold there (the like whereof we did towards your ſubiects) ſeeing by the fraud & deceit of the patron of the ſhip, the wares were brought thither, & finally in diſpatching ÿ whole matter, according to iuſtice, & ſo further the ſame by directing your highnes letters to your officers whom it may concerne, that we may perceiue, that our ſubiects right and liberty hath eſpecially beene maintained vpon this our commendation. Which we will take in moſt thankfull part, and your highnes ſhal find vs in the like or a greater matter moſt ready to gratifie you, whom we wiſh moſt heartily well to fare. From our Court at Waltham the 15. of October 1531.

A voyage made with the ſhippes called the Holy Croſſe, and the Mathew Gonſon, to the Iles of Candia and Chio, about the yeere 1534, according to a relation made to Maſter Richard Hackluit, by Iohn Williamſon, Cooper and citizen of London, who liued in the yere 1592, and went as cooper in the Mathew Gonſon the next voyage after.

The Holy Croſſe and the Mathew Gonſon depart for Turkie.

THe ſhippes called the Holy Croſſe, and the Mathew Gonſon, made a voyage to the Iſlandes of Candia and Chio in Turkie, about the yeere 1534. And in the Mathew went as Captaine M. Richard Gonſon, ſonne of old Maſter William Gonſon, paymaſter of the kings nauie. In this firſt voyage went William Holſtocke (who afterwards was Controuller of her Maieſties Nauie, lately deceaſed) as page to M. Richard Gonſon aforeſaid, which M. Gonſon died in Chio in this his firſt voyage. The ſhip called the Holy Croſſe was a ſhort ſhippe, and of burden 160 tunnes. And hauing beene a full yeere at the ſea in performance of this voyage, with great danger ſhe returned home, where, vpon her arriuall at Blackwall, in the riuer of Thames, her wine and oyle caſke was found ſo weake, that they were not able to hoyſe them out of the ſhip, but were conſtrayned to draw them as they lay, and put their wine and oyle into new veſſels, and ſo to vnlade the ſhippe. Their chiefe fraight, was very excellent Muſcatels and red Malmeſie, the like whereof were ſeldome ſeene before in England. They brought home alſo good quantitie of ſweete oyles, cotton woolles, Turkie Carpets, Galles, Cynamon, and ſome other ſpices. The ſaide ſhippe called the Holy Croſſe was ſo ſhaken in this voyage, and ſo weakened, that ſhe was layd vp in the docke, and neuer made voyage after.

Another voyage to the Iles of Candia and Chio made by the ſhippe the Mathew Gonſon, about the yeere 1535, according to the relation of Iohn Williamſon, then Cooper in the ſame ſhip, made to M. Richard Hackluit in the yeere 1592.

The Mathew Gonſon goeth into Turkie.

THe good ſhippe called the Mathew Gonſon, of burden 300 tunnes, whereof was owner old M. William Gonſon, pay-maſter of the kings Nauie, made her voyage in the yere 1535. In this ſhip went as Captaine Richard Gray, who long after died in Ruſsia. Maſter William Holſtocke afterward Controuller of the Queenes Nauie went then as purſer in the ſame voyage. The Maſter was one Iohn Picher, ſeruant to old M. William Gonſon, Iames Rumnie was Maſters mate. The maſter cooper was Iohn Williamſon citizen of London, liuing in the yeere 1592, and dwelling in Sant Dunſtons pariſh in the Eaſt. The M. Gunner was Iohn Godfrey of Briſtoll. In this ſhip were 6 gunners and 4 trumpetters, all which foure trumpetters at our returne homewards went on land at Meſsina in the Iland of Sicilia, as our ſhip road there at anker, & gat them into the Gallies that lay neere vnto vs, & in them went to Rome. The whole number of our companie in this ſhip were about 100. men, we were alſo furniſhed with a great bote, which was able to cary 10 tunnes of water, which at our returne homewards we towed all the way from Chio vntill we came through the ſtraight of Gibaltar into the maine Ocean. We had alſo a great long boat and a ſkiff. We were out vpon this voyage eleuen moneths, yet in all this time there died of ſickneſſe but one man, whoſe name was George Forreſt, being ſeruant to our Carpenter called Thomas Plummer.

In a great lygier booke of one William Eyms, ſeruant vnto Sir William Bowyer Alderman of London, bearing date the 15 of Nouember 1533, and continued vntill the 4 of Iuly 1544. I find that he the ſaid William Eyms was factor in Chio, not only for his Maſter, but alſo for the duke of Norfolkes grace, & for many other worſhipful marchants of London, among whom I find the accomptes of theſe eſpecially, to wit, of his ſaid Maſter, ſir William Bowyer, of William & Nicholas Wilford Marchant-taylors of London, of Thomas Curtis pewterer, of Iohn Starky Mercer, of William Oſtrige Marchant, & of Richard Field Draper. And further I find in the ſaid ligier booke, a note of the ſaid Eyms, of all ſuch goods as he left in the hands of Robert Bye in Chio, who became his Maſters factor in his roome, and another like note of particulers of goods that he left in the hands of Oliuer Leſſon, ſeruant to William and Nicholas Wilford. And for proofe of the continuance of this trade vntill the end of the yeere 1552. I found annexed vnto the former note of the goods left with Robert Bye in Chio, a letter being dated the 27 of Nouember 1552 in London.

The Epitaph of the valiant Eſquire M. Peter Read in the ſouth Ile of Saint Peters Church in the citie of Norwich, which was knighted by Charles the fift at the winning of Tunis in the yeere of our Lord 1538.

HEre vnder lyeth the corpes of Peter Reade Eſquire, who hath worthily ſerued, not onely his Prince and Countrey, but alſo the Emperour Charles the fift, both at his conqueſt of Barbarie, and at his ſiege at Tunis, as alſo in other places. Who had giuen him by the ſayd Emperour for his valiant deedes the order of Barbary. Who dyed the 29 day of December, in the yeere of our Lord God 1566.

The voyage of Sir Thomas Chaloner to Alger with Charles the fift 1541, drawen out of his booke De Republica Anglorum inſtauranda.

THomas Chalonerus patria Londinenſis, ſtudio Cantabrigenſis, educatione aulicus, religione pius, veréque Chriſtianus fuit. Itaque cum iuuenilem ætatem, mentemq; ſuam humanioribus ſtudijs roboraſſet, Domino Henrico Kneuetto à potentiſſimo rege Henrico eius nominis octauo ad Carolum quintum imperatorem tranſmiſſo legato, vnà cum illo profectus eſt, tanquam familiaris amicus, vel eidem à conſilijs. Quo quidem tempore Carolo quinto nauali certamine à Genua & Corſica in Algyram in Africa contra Turcas claſſem ſoluente ac hoſtiliter proficiſcente, ornatiſſimo illo Kneuetto legato regis, Thoma Chalonero, Henrico Knolleo, & Henrico Iſamo, illuſtribus viris eundem in illa expeditione ſuapte ſponte ſequentibus, pariterque militantibus, mirifice vitam ſuam Chalonerus tutatus eſt. The ſame in Engliſh.

THomas Chaloner was by birth a Londiner, by ſtudie a Cantabrigian, by education a Courtier, by religion a deuout and true Chriſtian. Therfore after he had confirmed his youth and minde in the ſtudies of good learning, when Sir Henry Kneuet was ſent ambaſſadour from the mighty Prince Henry the 8. to the Emperour Charles the fift, he went with him as his familiar friend, or as one of his Councell. At which time the ſaid Charles the 5. paſſing ouer from Genoa and Corſica to Alger in Africa in warlike ſort, with a mighty army by ſea, that honorable Kneuet the kings ambaſſadour, Thomas Chaloner, Henry Knolles, and Henry Iſham, right worthy perſons, of their owne accord accompanied him in that expedition, & ſerued him in that warre, wherin Thomas Chaloner eſcaped moſt wonderfully with his life. For the gally wherein he was, being either daſhed againſt the rockes, or ſhaken with mighty ſtormes, and ſo caſt away, after he had ſaued himſelfe a long while by ſwimming, when his ſtrength failed him, his armes & hands being faint and weary, with great difficulty laying hold with his teeth on a cable, which was caſt out of the next gally, not without breaking and loſſe of certaine of his teeth, at length recouered himſelfe, and returned home into his countrey in ſafety.

The voyage of M. Roger Bodenham with the great Barke Aucher to Candia and Chio, in the yeere 1550.

IN the yeere 1550. the 13 of Nouember I Roger Bodenham Captaine of the Barke Aucher entered the ſaid ſhip at Graueſend, for my voiage to the Ilands of Candia and Chio in the Leuant. The maſter of my ſhip was one William Sherwood. From thence we departed to Tilbery hope, and there remained with contrarie windes vntill the 6. of Ianuary 1551. The 6 of Ianuarie, the M. came to Tilbery, and I had prouided a ſkilfull pylot to cary me ouer the lands end, whoſe name was M. Wood, and with all ſpeede I valed downe that night 10 miles to take the tide in the morning, which happily I did, and that night came to Douer, and there came to an anker, and there remained vntill tueſday, meeting with the worthy knight ſir Anthony Aucher owner of the ſaide ſhip.

The Barke Aucher goeth for Leuant.

The 11 day we arriued in Plimoth, and the 13 in the morning we ſet forward on our voyage with a proſperous winde, and the 16 we had ſight of Cape Finiſter on the coaſt of Spaine.

The 30 we arriued at Cades, and there diſcharged certaine marchandiſe, and tooke others aboord.

Mallorca.

The 20 of February we departed from Cades, & paſſed the ſtraights of Gibraltar that night, and the 25 we came to the Ile of Mallorca, and ſtaied there fiue daies with contrary windes.

Meſſina.

The firſt of March, we had ſight of Sardenna, and the fift of the ſaid moneth wee arriued at Meſſina in Sicilia, and there diſcharged much goods, and remained there vntill good Friday in Lent.

The Turke prepareth an army to beſiege Malta.

The Barke Aucher at Micone.

The towne of Chio is bound in 12000 ducats for the ſafegard of the Barke Aucher.

The chiefe marchant that laded the ſayd Barke Aucher was a marchant ſtranger called Anſelm Saluago, and becauſe the time was then very dangerous, and no going into Leuant, eſpecially to Chio, without a ſafe conduct from the Turke, the ſaid Anſelm promiſed the owner Sir Anthony Aucher, that we ſhould receiue the ſame at Meſſina. But I was poſted from thence to Candia, and there I was anſwered that I ſhould ſend to Chio, and there I ſhould haue my ſafe conduct. I was forced to ſend one, and hee had his anſwere that the Turke would giue none, willing me to looke what was beſt for me to doe, which was no ſmall trouble to me, conſidering I was bound to deliuer the goods that were in the ſhip at Chio, or ſend them at mine aduenture. The marchants without care of the loſſe of the ſhip would haue compelled me to goe, or ſend their goods at mine aduenture, the which I denied, and ſayd plainely I would not goe, becauſe the Turkes gallies were come forth to goe againſt Malta, but by the French kings meanes, he was perſwaded to leaue Malta, and to goe to Tripoly in Barbary, which by the French he wan. In this time there were in Candia certaine Turkes veſſels called Skyraſas, which had brought wheat thither to ſell, and were ready to depart for Turkie. And they departed in the morning betimes, carying newes that I would not goe foorth: the ſame night I prepared beforehande what I thought good, without making any man priuie, vntill I ſawe time. Then I had no ſmall buſineſſe to cauſe my mariners to venture with the ſhip in ſuch a manifeſt danger. Neuertheleſſe I wan them to goe all with me, except three which I ſet on land, and with all diligence I was readie to ſet foorth about eight of the clocke at night, being a faire moone ſhine night, & went out. Then my 3 marriners made ſuch requeſts vnto the reſt of my men to come aborde, as I was conſtrained to take them in. And ſo with good wind we put into the Archipelago, & being among the Ilands the winde ſcanted, & I was forced to anker at an Iland called Micone, where I taried 10 or 12 daies, hauing a greeke Pilot to carrie the ſhip to Chio. In this meane ſeaſon, there came many ſmall botes with myſſon ſayles to goe for Chio, with diuerſe goods to ſell, & the Pilot requeſted me that I would let them goe in my company, to which I yeelded. After the ſayde dayes expired, I wayed & ſet ſaile for the Iland of Chio, with which place I fel in the after noone, whereupon I caſt to ſeaward againe to come with the Iland in the morning betimes. The foreſaid ſmal veſſels which came in my company, departed from me to win the ſhore, to get in yͤ night, but vpon a ſudden they eſpied 3 foyſtes of Turkes comming vpon them to ſpoyle them. My Pilot, hauing a ſonne in one of thoſe ſmall veſſels, entreted me to caſt about towards them, which at his requeſt I did, and being ſome thing farre from them, I cauſed my Gunner to ſhoot a demy-coluering at a foyſt that was readie to enter one of the botes. This was ſo happy a ſhott, that it made the Turke to fall a ſterne of the bote and to leaue him, by the which meanes hee eſcaped. Then they all came to me, and requeſted that they might hang at my ſterne vntill day light, by which time I came before the Mole of Chio, and ſent my bote on land to the marchants of that place to ſend for their goods out of hand, or elſe I would returne back with all to Candia, & they ſhould fetch their goods there. But in fine, what by perſwaſion of my merchants Engliſh men, & thoſe of Chio, I was entreated to come into the harbour, and had a ſafe aſſurance for 20 dayes againſt the Turkes army, with a bond of the citie in the ſumme of 12000 ducats. So I made haſt & ſolde ſuch goods as I had to Turkes that came thither, & put all in order, with as much ſpeede as I could, fearing the comming of the Turkes nauie, of the which, the chiefe of the citie knew right wel. So vpon the ſudden they called me of great friendſhip, & in ſecret told me, I had no way to ſaue my ſelfe but to be gone, for ſaid they, we be not able to defend you, that are not able to helpe our ſelues, for the Turke where he commeth, taketh what he will, & leaueth what he liſt, but the chiefe of the Turkes ſet order yͭ none ſhal do any harme to the people or to their goods. This was ſuch news to me, that indeed I was at my wits end, & was brought into many imaginations how to do, for that the winde was contrarie. In fine, I determined to goe foorth. But the marchants Engliſh men and other regarding more their gaines then the ſhip, hindered me very much in my purpoſe of going foorth, and made the marriners to come to me to demaund their wages to be payed them out of hande, and to haue a time to employ the ſame there. But God prouided ſo for me, that I paied them their money that night, and then charged them, that if they would not let the ſhip foorth, I would make them to anſwere the ſame in England, with danger of their heads. Many were married in England and had ſomewhat to looſe, thoſe did ſticke to me. I had twelue gunners: the Maſter gunner who was a madde brayned fellow, and the owners ſeruant had a parlament betweene themſelues, and he vpon the ſame came vp to me with his ſword drawen, ſwearing that hee had promiſed the owner Sir Anthony Aucher, to liue and die in the ſayde ſhippe againſt all that ſhould offer any harme to the ſhippe, and that he would fight with the whole armie of the Turkes, and neuer yeelde: with this fellow I had much to doe; but at the laſt I made him confeſſe his fault and followe mine aduiſe. Thus with much labour I gat out of the Mole of Chio, into the ſea by warping foorth, with the helpe of Genoueſes botes, and a French bote that was in the Mole, and being out God ſent mee a ſpeciall gale of winde to goe my way. Then I cauſed a peece to be ſhotte off for ſome of my men that were yet in the towne, & with much a doe they came aboord, and then I ſet ſayle a little before one of the clocke, and I made all the ſayle I could, and about halfe an houre paſt two of the clocke there came ſeuen gallies into Chio to ſtay the ſhippe: and the admirall of them was in a great rage becauſe ſhe was gone. Whereupon they put ſome of the beſt in priſon, and tooke all the men of the three ſhips which I left in the port, and put them into the Gallies. They would haue followed after mee, but that the townes men found meanes they did not. The next day came thither a hundred more of Gallies, and there taried for their whole companie, which being together were about two hundred & 50 ſayle, taking their voyage for to ſurpriſe the Iland of Malta. The next day after I departed, I had the ſight of Candia, but I was two dayes after or euer I could get in, where I thought my ſelfe out of their daunger. There I continued vntill the Turkes armie was paſt, who came within the ſight of the towne. There was preparation made as though the Turks had come thither. There be in that Iland of Candia many baniſhed men, that liue continually in the mountaines, they came downe to ſerue, to the number of foure or fiue thouſand, they are good archers, euery one with his bowe and arrowes, a ſword and a dagger, with long haire, and bootes that reach vp to their grine, and a ſhirt of male, hanging the one halfe before, and the other halfe behinde, theſe were ſent away againe aſſoone as the armie was paſt. They would drinke wine out of all meaſure. Then the armie being paſt, I laded my ſhippe with wines and other things: and ſo after I had that which I left in Chio, I departed for Meſſina. In the way I found about Zante, certaine Gallions of Turkes, laying aboord of certaine veſſels of Venice laden with Muſcatels: I reſcued them, and had but a barrell of wine for my powder and ſhot: and within a few dayes after I came to Meſſina. I had in my ſhippe a Spaniſh pilot called Noblezia, which I tooke in at Cades at my comming foorth: he went with me all this voyage into the Leuant without wages, of good will that he bare me and the ſhippe, he ſtoode me in good ſteede vntill I came backe againe to Cades, and then I needed no Pilot. And ſo from thence I came to London with the ſhippe and goods in ſafetie, God be prayſed. And all thoſe Mariners that were in my ſayd ſhippe, which were, beſides boyes, threeſcore and tenne, for the moſt part were within fiue or ſixe yeeres after, able to take charge, and did. Richard Chanceller, who firſt diſcouered Ruſſia, was with me in that voyage, and Mathew Baker, who afterward became the Queenes Maiesties chiefe ſhip-wright.

The voyage of M. Iohn Locke to Ieruſalem.

In my voyage to Ieruſalem, I imbarked my ſelfe the 16 of March 1553 in the good ſhippe called the Mathew Gonſon, which was bound for Liuorno, or Legorne and Candia. It fell out that we touched in the beginning of Aprill next enſuing at Cades in Andalozia, where the Spaniardes, according to their accuſtomed maner with all ſhippes of extraordinarie greatnes and burden, picked a quarrell againſt the company, meaning to haue forfeited, or at the leaſt to haue arreſted the ſaid ſhippe. And they grew ſo malicious in their wrongfull purpoſe, that I being vtterly out of hope of any ſpeedie releaſe, to the ende that my intention ſhould not be ouerthrowen, was inforced to take this courſe following. Notwithſtanding this hard beginning, it fell out ſo luckily, that I found in the roade a great ſhippe called the Caualla of Venice, wherein after agreement made with the patron, I ſhipped my ſelfe the 24 of May in the ſaid yeere 1553. And the 25 by reaſon of the winde blowing hard and contrary, we were not able to enter the Straits of Gibraltar, but were put to the coaſt of Barbarie, where we ankered in the maine ſea 2 leagues from ſhore, and continued ſo vntill two houres before ſunne ſet, and then we weighed againe, and turned our courſe towards the Straits, where we entered the 26 day aforeſayd, the winde being very calme, but the current of the ſtraites very fauourable. The ſame day the winde beganne to riſe ſomewhat, and blew a furthering gale, and ſo continued at Northweſt vntill we arriued at Legorne the third of Iune. And from thence riding ouer land vnto Venice, I prepared for my voyage to Ieruſalem in the Pilgrimes ſhippe.

The ſhip Fila Cauena departeth for Ieruſalem.

Rouignio a port in Iſtria.

I Iohn Locke, accompanied with Maiſter Anthony Raſtwold, with diuers other, Hollanders, Zelanders, Almaines and French pilgrimes entered the good ſhippe called Fila Cauena of Venice, the 16 of Iuly 1553. and the 17 in the morning we weighed our anker and ſayled towardes the coaſt of Iſtria, to the port of Rouigno, and the ſaid day there came aboord of our ſhip the Perceuena of the ſhippe named Tamiſari, for to receiue the reſt of all the pilgrimes money, which was in all after the rate of 55. Crownes for euery man for that voyage, after the rate of fiue ſhillings ſtarling to the crowne: This done, he returned to Venice.

Sancta Euſemia.

The 19 day we tooke freſh victuals aboord, and with the bote that brought the freſh prouiſion we went on land to the Towne, and went to ſee the Church of Sancta Euſemia, where we ſawe the bodie of the ſayd Saint.

Monte de Ancona.

The 20 day wee departed from Rouignio, and about noone we had ſight of Monte de Ancona, and the hilles of Dalmatia, or elſe of Sclauonia both at one time, and by report they are 100. miles diſtant from ech other, and more.

Il pomo.

Sant Andrea.

Liſſa an Iland.

Lezina Iland.

The 21 we ſayled ſtill in ſight of Dalmatia, and a litle before noone, we had ſight of a rocke in the midſt of the ſea, called in Italian, il Pomo, it appeareth a farre off to be in ſhape like a ſugarloafe. Alſo we ſawe another rocke about two miles compaſſe called Sant Andrea: on this rocke is onely one Monaſterie of Friers: we ſayled betweene them both, and left S. Andrea on the left hand of vs, and we had alſo kenning of another Iland called Liſſa, all on the left hande, theſe three Ilands lie Eaſt and Weſt in the ſea, and at ſunne ſetting we had paſſed them. Il pomo is diſtant from Sant Andrea 18 miles, and S. Andrea from Liſſa 10 miles, and Liſſa from another Iland called Lezina, which ſtandeth betweene the maine of Dalmatia and Liſſa, tenne miles. This Iland is inhabited, and hath great plentie of wine and fruites, and hereagainſt we were becalmed.

Carza.

Pelagoſa.

Auguſta.

Meleda.

Monte Sant Angelo.

The 22 we had ſight of another ſmall Iland called Carza, which is deſolate and on the left hand, and on the right hand, a very dangerous Iland called Pelagoſa, this is alſo deſolate, and lyeth in the midſt of the ſea betweene both the maines: it is very dangerous and low land, and it hath a long ledge of rockes lying out fiue miles in to the ſea, ſo that many ſhips by night are caſt away vpon them. There is betweene Carza and Pelagoſa 30 miles, and theſe two Ilands are diſtant from Venice 400 miles. There is alſo about twelue miles eaſtward, a great Iland called Auguſta, about 14 miles in length, ſomewhat hillie, but well inhabited, and fruitfull of vines, corne and other fruit, this alſo we left on the left hand: & we haue hitherto kept our courſe from Rouignio Eaſt ſoutheaſt. This Iland is vnder the Signiorie or gouernement of Raguſa, it is diſtant from Raguſa 50 miles, and there is by that Iland a greater, named Meleda, which is alſo vnder the gouernement of Raguſa, it is about 30 miles in length, and inhabited, and hath good portes, it lyeth by Eaſt from Auguſta, and ouer againſt this Iland lyeth a hill called Monte S. Angelo, vpon the coaſt of Puglia in Italy, and we had ſight of both landes at one time.

Raguſa payeth 14000. Sechinos to the Turke yerely.

Il Cromo.

The 23 we ſayled all the day long by the bowline alongſt the coaſt of Raguſa, and towardes night we were within 7 or 8 miles of Raguſa, that we might ſee the white walles, but becauſe it was night, we caſt about to the ſea, minding at the ſecond watch, to beare in againe to Raguſa, for to know the newes of the Turkes armie, but the winde blew ſo hard and contrary, that we could not. This citie of Raguſa payeth tribute to the Turke yeerely fourteene thouſand Sechinos, and euery Sechino is of Venetian money eight liuers and two ſoldes, beſides other preſents which they giue to the Turkes Baſſas when they come thither. The Venetians haue a rocke or cragge within a mile of the ſaid towne, for the which the Raguſeos would giue them much money, but they doe keepe it more for the name ſake, then for profite. This rocke lieth on the Southſide of the towne, and is called Il cromo, there is nothing on it but onely a Monaſterie called Sant Ieronimo. The maine of the Turkes countrie is bordering on it within one mile, for the which cauſe they are in great ſubiection. This night wee were put backe by contrarie windes, and ankered at Melleda.

Zupanna.

Iſola de Mezo.

Sant Andrea.

The 24 being at an anker vnder Melleda, we would haue gone on land, but the winde came ſo faire that we preſently ſet ſayle and went our courſe, and left on the right hand of vs the forenamed Iland, and on the left hand betweene vs and the maine the Iland of Zupanna, and within a mile of that vnder the maine by Eaſt, another Iland called Iſola de Mezo. This Iland hath two Monaſteries in it, one called Santa Maria de Bizo, and the other Sant Nicholo. Alſo there is a third rocke with a Frierie called Sant Andrea: theſe Ilands are from the maine but two miles, and the channell betweene Melleda and Zupanna is but foure or fiue miles ouer by geſſe, but very deepe, for we had at an anker fortie fathoms. The two Ilands of Zupanna and Mezo are well inhabited, and very faire buildings, but nothing plentie ſaue wine onely. This night toward ſunne ſet it waxed calme, and we ſayled little or nothing.

The 24 we were paſt Raguſa 14 miles, and there we mette with two Venetian ſhips, which came from Cyprus, we thought they would haue ſpoken with vs, for we were deſirous to talke with them, to knowe the newes of the Turkes armie, and to haue ſent ſome letters by them to Venice. About noone, we had ſcant ſight of Caſtel nouo, which Caſtell a fewe yeeres paſt the Turke tooke from the Emperour, in which fight were ſlaine three hundred Spaniſh ſouldiers, beſides the reſt which were taken priſoners, and made gallie ſlaues. This Caſtell is hard at the mouth of a channell called Boca de Cataro. The Venetians haue a hold within the channell called Cataro, this channell goeth vp to Budoa, and further vp into the countrey. About ſunneſet we were ouer againſt the hilles of Antiueri in Sclauonia, in the which hilles the Venetians haue a towne called Antiueri, and the Turkes haue another againſt it called Marcheuetri, the which two townes continually ſkirmiſh together with much ſlaughter. At the end of theſe hils endeth the Countrey of Sclauonia, and Albania beginneth. Theſe hilles are thirtie miles diſtant from Raguſa.

The end of Sclauonia and the beginning of Albania.

The 27 we kept our courſe towards Puglia, and left Albania on the left hand. The 28. we had ſight of both the maines, but we were neerer the coaſt of Puglia, for feare of Foyſtes. It is betweene Cape Chimera in Albania and Cape otranto in Puglia 60 miles. Puglia is a plaine low lande, and Chimera in Albania is very high land, ſo that it is ſeene the further. Thus ſayling our courſe along the coaſt of Puglia, we ſaw diuerſe white Towers, which ſerue for ſeamarkes. About three of the clocke in the after noone, we had ſight of a rocke called Il fano, 48 miles from Corfu, and by ſunne ſet we diſcouered Corfu. Thus we kept on our courſe with a proſperous winde, and made our way after twelue mile euery houre. Moſt part of this way we were accompanied with certaine fiſhes called in the Italian tongue Palomide, it is a fiſh three quarters of a yard in length, in colour, eating, and making like a Makarell, ſome what bigge and thick in body, and the tayle forked like a halfe moone, for the which cauſe it is ſaid that the Turke will not ſuffer them to be taken in all his dominions.

The 29 in the morning we were in ſight of an Iland, which we left on our left hande called Cephalonia, it is vnder the Venetians and well inhabited, with a faire towne ſtrongly ſituated on a hill, of the which hill the Iland beareth her name, it hath alſo a very ſtrong fortreſſe or Caſtle, and plentie of corne and wine, their language is Greeke, it is diſtant from the maine of Morea, thirtie miles, it is in compaſſe 80 miles. One houre within night we ſayled by the towne ſtanding on the South cape of Cephalonia, whereby we might perceiue their lights. There come oftentimes into the creekes and riuers, the Turkes foyſtes and gallies where at their arriuall, the Countrey people doe ſignifie vnto their neighbours by ſo many lights, as there are foiſtes or gallies in the Iland, and thus they doe from one to another the whole Iland ouer. About three of the clocke in the afternoone the winde ſcanted, and wee minded to haue gone to Zante, but we could not for that night. This Iland of Zante is diſtant from Cephalonia, 12 or 14 miles, but the towne of Cephalonia, from the towne of Zante, is diſtant fortie miles. This night we went but little forward.

Cephalonia.

Morea.

Zante.

The 30 day we remained ſtill turning vp and downe becauſe the winde was contrary, and towards night the winde amended, ſo that we entered the channell betweene Cephalonia & Zante, the which chanell is about eight or tenne miles ouer, and theſe two beare Eaſt and by South, and Weſt and by North from the other. The towne of Zante lieth within a point of the land, where we came to an anker, at nine of the clocke at night.

The 31 about fiue of the clocke in the morning, I with fiue Hollanders went on land, and hoſted at the houſe of Pedro de Venetia. After breakfaſt we went to ſee the towne, and paſſing along we went into ſome of the Greeke churches, wherein we ſawe their Altares, Images, and other ornaments. This done, wee went to a Monaſterie of Friers called Sancta Maria de la Croce, theſe are weſterne Chriſtians, for the Greekes haue nothing to doe with them, nor they with the Greekes, for they differ very much in religion. There are but 2. Friers in this Friery. In this Monaſterie we ſawe the tombe that M. T. Cicero, was buried in, with Terentia Antonia, his wife. This tombe was found about ſixe yeeres ſince, when the Monaſtery was built, there was in time paſt a ſtreete where the tombe ſtoode. At the finding of the tombe there was alſo found a yard vnder ground, a ſquare ſtone ſome what longer then broad, vpon which ſtone was found a writing of two ſeuerall handes writing, the one as it ſeemed, for himſelfe, and the other for his wife, and vnder the ſame ſtone was found a glaſſe ſomewhat proportioned like an vrinall, vrnall, but that it was eight ſquare and very thicke, wherein were the aſhes of the head and right arme of Mar. T. Cicero, for as ſtories make mention he was beheaded as I remember at Capua, for inſurrection. And his wife hauing got his head and right arme, (which was brought to Rome to the Emperour) went from Rome, and came to Zante, and there buried his head and arme, and wrote vpon his tombe this ſtyle M. T. Cicero, *Haue. Then followeth in other letters, Et tu Terentia Antonia, which difference of letters declare that they were not written both at one time. The tombe is long and narrowe, and deepe, walled on euery ſide like a graue, in the botome whereof was found the ſayd ſtone with the writing on it, & the ſaid glaſſe of aſhes, and alſo another litle glaſſe of the ſame proportion, wherein, as they ſay, are the teares of his friendes, that in thoſe dayes they did vſe to gather and bury with them, as they did vſe in Italy and Spaine to teare their haire, to bury with their friendes. In the ſayde tombe were a fewe bones. After dinner we reſted vntill it drew towards euening by reaſon of the heat. And about foure of the clocke we walked to another Frierie a mile out of the towne called Sant Elia, theſe are white Friers, there were two, but one is dead, not ſixe dayes ſince. This Frierie hath a garden very pleaſant, and well furniſhed with Orenges, Lemons, pomegranates, and diuers other good fruites. The way to it is ſomewhat ragged, vp hill and downe, and very ſtonie, and in winter very durtie. It ſtandeth very pleaſantly in a clift betweene two hilles, with a good proſpect. From thence we aſcended the hill to the Caſtle, which is ſituated on the very toppe of a hill. This Caſtle is very ſtrong, in compaſſe a large mile and a halfe, which being victualed, (as it is neuer vnfurniſhed) and manned with men of truſt, it may defend it ſelfe againſt any Princes power. This Caſtle taketh the iuſt compaſſe of the hill, and no other hill neere it, it is ſo ſteepe downe, and ſo high and ragged, that it will tyre any man or euer he be halfe way vp. Very nature hath fortified the walles and bulwarkes: It is by nature foure ſquare, and it commaundeth the towne and porte. The Venetians haue alwayes their Podeſta, or Gouernour, with his two Counſellours reſident therein. The towne is well inhabited, & hath great quantitie of houſholders. The Iland by report is threeſcore and tenne miles about, it is able to make twentie thouſand fighting men. They ſay they haue alwayes fiue or ſixe hundred horſemen readie at an houres warning. They ſay the Turke hath aſſayed it with 100. Gallies, but he could neuer bring his purpoſe to paſſe. It is ſtrange to mee how they ſhould maintaine ſo many men in this Iland, for their beſt ſuſtenance is wine, and the reſt but miſerable.

The Caſtle of Torneſſe.

Twelue turks gallies at Modon, and Coron, and Candia.

The firſt of Auguſt we were warned aboord by the patron, and towards euening we ſet ſayle, and had ſight of a Caſtle called Torneſſe, which is the Turkes, and is ten miles from Zante, it did belong to the Venetians, but they haue now loſt it, it ſtandeth alſo on a hill on the ſea ſide in Morea. All that night we bare into the ſea, becauſe we had newes at Zante of twelue of the Turkes gallies, that came from Rhodes, which were about Modon, Coron, and Candia, for which cauſe we kept at the ſea.

Modon. Coron.

The ſecond of Auguſt we had no ſight of land, but kept our courſe, and about the third watch the winde ſcanted, ſo that we bare with the ſhore, and had ſight of Modon and Coron.

Cauo Matapan.

The third we had ſight of Cauo Matapan, and all that day by reaſon of contrary windes, which blew ſomewhat hard, we lay a hull vntill morning.

The fourth we were ſtill vnder the ſayd Cape, and ſo continued that day, and towardes night there grewe a contention in the ſhip amongſt the Hollanders, and it had like to haue bene a great inconuenience, for we had all our weapons, yea euen our kniues taken from vs that night.

Candia.

Candia.

Cape Spada. C. Salomon.

The ſixt toward the breake of day we ſaw two ſmall Ilands called Gozi, and towards noone we were betweene them: the one of theſe Ilands is fifteene miles about, and the other 10 miles. In thoſe Ilands are nouriſhed ſtore of cattell for butter and cheeſe. There are to the number of fiftie or ſixtie inhabitants, which are Greekes, and they liue chiefly on milke and cheeſe. The Iland of Candia is 700 miles about, it is in length, from Cape Spada to Cape Salomon, 300 miles, it is as they ſay, able to make one hundred thouſand fighting men. We ſayled betweene the Gozi, and Candia, and they are diſtant from Candia 5 or 6 miles. The Candiots are ſtrong men, and very good archers, and ſhoot neere the marke. This Ilande is from Zante 300 miles.

The ſeuenth we ſayled all along the ſayd Iland with little winde and vnſtable, and the eight day towards night we drew to the Eaſt end of the Iland.

The 9 and 10 we ſayled along with a proſperous winde and ſaw no land.

Ponta Maloca. Baffo. Cauo Bianco.

The 11 in the morning, we had ſight of the Iland of Cyprus, and towards noone we were thwart the Cape called Ponta Maloca, and about foure of the clocke we were as farre as Baffo, and about ſunne ſet we paſſed Cauo Bianco, and towards nine of the clocke at night we doubled

Cauo de la gatte.

Cauo de le gatte, and ankered afore Limiſſo, but the wind blew ſo hard, that we could not come neere the towne, neither durſt any man goe on land. The towne is from Cauo de le gatte twelue miles diſtant.

Limiſſo.

Caualette, is a certaine vermine in the Iſland of Cyprus.

The 12. of Auguſt in the morning wee went on land to Limiſſo: this towne is ruinated and nothing in it worth writing, ſaue onely in the midſt of the towne there hath bene a fortreſſe, which is now decayed, and the wals part ouerthrowen, which a Turkiſh Rouer with certaine gallies did deſtroy about 10. or 12. yeeres paſt. This day walking to ſee the towne, we chanced to ſee in the market place, a great quantitie of a certaine vermine called in the Italian tongue Caualette. It is as I can learne, both in ſhape and bigneſſe like a graſſehopper, for I can iudge but little difference. Of theſe many yeeres they haue had ſuch quantitie ẏ they deſtroy all their corne. They are ſo plagued with them, ẏ almoſt euery yeere they doe well nie looſe halfe their corne, whether it be the nature of the countrey, or the plague of God, that let them iudge that beſt can define. But that there may no default be laied to their negligence for the deſtruction of thẽ, they haue throughout the whole land a conſtituted order, that euery Farmor or huſbandman (which are euen as ſlaues bought and ſold to their lord) ſhall euery yeere pay according to his territorie, a meaſure full of the ſeede or egges of theſe forenamed Caualette, the which they are bound to bring to the market, and preſent to the officer appointed for the ſame, the which officer taketh of them very ſtraight meaſure, and writeth the names of the preſenters, and putteth the ſayd egges or ſeed, into a houſe appointed for the ſame, and hauing the houſe full, they beate them to powder, and caſt them into the ſea, and by this policie they doe as much as in them lieth for the deſtruction of them. This vermine breedeth or ingendereth at the time of corne being ripe, and the corne being had away, in the clods of the ſame ground do the huſbandmen find ẏ neſtes, or, as I may rather terme them, caſes of the egges of the ſame vermine. Their neſts are much like to the keies of a haſelnut tree, when they be dried, and of the ſame length, but ſomewhat bigger, which caſe being broken you ſhall ſee the egges lie much like vnto antes egges, but ſomewhat leſſer. Thus much I haue written at this time, becauſe I had no more time of knowledge, but I truſt at my returne to note more of this iſland, with the commodities of the ſame at large.

The pilgrimes going to the Greeke churches.

The 13 day we went in the morning to the Greekes church, to ſee the order of their ceremonies, and of their communion, of the which to declare the whole order with the number of their ceremonious croſſings, it were to long. Wherefore leaſt I ſhould offend any man, I leaue it vnwritten: but onely that I noted well, that in all their Communion or ſeruice, not one did euer kneele, nor yet in any of their Churches could I euer ſee any grauen images, but painted or portrayed. Alſo they haue ſtore of lampes alight, almoſt for euery image one. Their women are alwayes ſeperated from the men, and generally they are in the lower ende of the Church. This night we went aboord the ſhip, although the wind were contrary, we did it becauſe the patrone ſhould not find any lacke of vs, as ſometimes he did: when as tarying vpon his owne buſineſſe, he would colour it with the delay of the pilgrimes.

The 14. day in the morning we ſet ſaile, and loſt ſight of the Iſland of Cyprus, and the 15. day we were likewiſe at Sea, and ſawe no land: and the 16. day towards night, we looked for land, but we ſawe none. But becauſe we ſuppoſed our ſelues to be neere our port, we tooke in all our ſailes except onely the foreſaile and the miſſen, and ſo we remained all that night.

The 17. day in the morning, we were by report of the Mariners, ſome ſixe miles from Iaffa, but it prooued contrary. But becauſe we would be ſure, wee came to an anker ſeuen miles from the ſhore, and ſent the ſkiffe with the Pilot and the maſter gunner, to learne the coaſt, but they returned, not hauing ſeen tree nor houſe, nor ſpoken with any man. But when they came to the ſea ſide againe, they went vp a little hill ſtanding hard by the brinke, whereon as they thought they ſawe the hill of Ieruſalem, by the which the Pilot knew (after his iudgement) that wee were paſt our port. And ſo this place where we rode was, as the mariners ſayd, about 50. mile from Iaffa. This coaſt all alongſt is very lowe, plaine, white, ſandie, and deſert, for which cauſe it hath fewe markes or none, ſo that we rode here as it were in a gulfe betweene two Capes.

A great currant.

The 18. day we abode ſtill at anker, looking for a gale to returne backe, but it was contrary: and the 19. we ſet ſaile, but the currant hauing more force then the winde, we were driuen backe, inſomuch, that the ſhip being vnder ſaile, we caſt the ſounding lead, & (notwithſtanding the wind) it remained before the ſhippe, there wee had muddie ground at fifteene fadome. The ſame day about 4. of the clocke, wee ſet ſaile againe, and ſayled Weſt alongſt the coaſt with a freſh ſide-winde. It chanced by fortune that the ſhippes Cat lept into the Sea, which being downe, kept her ſelfe very valiantly aboue water, notwithſtanding the great waues, ſtill ſwimming, the which the maſter knowing, he cauſed the Skiffe with halfe a dozen men to goe towards her and fetch her againe, when ſhe was almoſt halfe a mile from the ſhippe, and all this while the ſhip ſhippe lay on ſtates. I hardly beleeue they would haue made ſuch haſte and meanes if one of the company had bene in the like perill. They made the more haſte becauſe it was the patrons cat. This I haue written onely to note the eſtimation that cats are in, among the Italians, for generally they eſteeme their cattes, as in England we eſteeme a good Spaniell. The ſame night about tenne of the clocke the winde calmed, and becauſe none of the ſhippe knewe where we were, we let fall an anker about 6 mile from the place we were at before, and there wee had muddie ground at twelue fathome.

A Cat fallen into the ſea and recouered.

The 20 it was ſtill calme, and the current ſo ſtrong ſtill one way, that we were not able to ſtemme the ſtreame: moreouer we knew not where we were, whereupon doubting whither wee were paſt, or ſhort of our port, the Maſter, Pilot, and other Officers of the ſhippe entered into counſell what was beſt to doe, whereupon they agreed to ſende the bote on lande againe, to ſeeke ſome man to ſpeake with all, but they returned as wiſe as they went. Then we ſet ſayle againe and ſounded euery mile or halfe mile, and found ſtill one depth, ſo we not knowing where we were, came againe to an anker, ſeuen or eight miles by Weſt from the place we were at. Thus ſtill doubting where we were, the bote went on land againe, and brought newes that wee were ſhort 80 miles of the place, whereas we thought wee had beene ouerſhot by eaſt fiftie miles. Thus in theſe doubts we loſt foure dayes, and neuer a man in the ſhippe able to tell where we were, notwithſtanding there were diuerſe in the ſhippe that had beene there before. Then ſayd the Pylot, that at his comming to the ſhore, by chance he ſaw two wayfaring men, which were Moores, and he cryed to them in Turkiſh, inſomuch that the Moores, partly for feare, and partly for lacke of vnderſtanding, (ſeeing them to be Chriſtians) beganne to flie, yet in the end with much a doe, they ſtayed to ſpeake with them, which men when they came together, were not able to vnderſtand ech other, but our men made to them the ſigne of the Croſſe on the ſande, to giue them to vnderſtand that they were of the ſhippe that brought the pilgrims. Then the Moores knowing (as al the country elſe doth) that it was the vſe of Chriſtians to go to Ieruſalem, ſhewed them to be yet by weſt of Iaffa. Thus we remained all that night at anker, and the farther weſt that we ſayled, the leſſe water we had.

They met with two Moores on land.

The 21 we ſet ſayle againe, and kept our courſe Northeaſt, but becauſe we would not goe along the ſhore by night, wee came to an anker in foure and twentie fathome water. Then the next morning being the 22 we ſet ſayle againe, and kept our courſe as before, and about three of the clocke in the afternoone wee had ſight of the two towers of Iaffa, and about fiue of the clocke, wee were with a rocke, called in the Italian tongue, Scolio di Santo Petro, on the which rocke they ſay he fiſhed, when Chriſt bid him caſt his net on the right ſide, and caught ſo many fiſhes. This rocke is now almoſt worne away. It is from Iaffa two or three mile: here before the two towers we came to an anker. Then the pilgrimes after ſupper, in ſalutation of the holy lande, ſang to the prayſe of God, Te Deum laudamus, with Magnificat, and Benedictus, but in the ſhippe was a Frier of Santo Franciſco, who for anger becauſe he was not called and warned, would not ſing with vs, ſo that he ſtood ſo much vpon his dignitie, that he forgot his ſimplicitie, and neglected his deuotion to the holy land for that time, ſaying that firſt they ought to haue called him yer they did beginne, becauſe he was a Fryer, and had beene there, and knewe the orders.

The 23 we ſent the bote on land with a meſſenger to the Padre Guardian of Ieruſalem. This day it was notified vnto mee by one of the ſhippe that had beene a ſlaue in Turkie, that no man might weare greene in this land, becauſe their prophet Mahomet went in greene. This came to my knowledge by reaſon of the Scriuanello, who had a greene cap, which was forbidden him to weare on the land.

A meſſenger departeth for Ieruſalem.
Mahomet is clothed in greene.

The 24, 25, and 26 we taryed in the ſhippe ſtill looking for the comming of the Padre guardian, and the 26 at night we had a ſtorme which laſted all the next day.

The 27 in the morning, came the Cadi, yͤ Subaſſi, & the Meniwe, with the Padre guardian, but they could not come at vs by reaſon of the ſtormy weather: in the afternoone we aſſayed to ſend the bote on land, but the weather would not ſuffer vs. Then againe toward night the bote went a ſhore, but it returned not that night. The ſame day in the afternoone we ſawe in the element, a cloud with a long tayle, like vnto the tayle of a ſerpent, which cloud is called in Italian Cion, the tayle of this cloud did hang as it were into the ſea: and we did ſee the water vnder the ſayde cloude aſcend, as it were like a ſmoke or myſte, the which this Cion drew vp to it. The Marriners reported to vs that it had this propertie, that if it ſhould happen to haue lighted on any part of the ſhippe, that it would rent and wreth ſayles, maſt, ſhroudes and ſhippe and all in manner like a wyth: on the land, trees, houſes, or whatſoeuer elſe it lighteth on, it would rent and wreth. Theſe marriners did vſe a certaine coniuration to breake the ſayd tayle, or cut it in two, which as they ſay with preuaile. They did take a blacke hafted knife, and with the edge of the ſame did croſſe the ſaid taile as if they would cut it in twaine, ſaying theſe words, Hold thou Cion, eat this, and then they ſtucke the knife on the ſhip ſide with the edge towards the ſaid cloude, and I ſaw it therewith vaniſh in leſſe then one quarter of an houre. But whether it was then conſumed, or whether by vertue of the Inchantment it did vaniſh I know it not, but it was gone. Hereof let them iudge that know more then I. This afternoone we had no winde, but the Sea very ſtormy, inſomuch that neither cheſte, pot, nor any thing elſe could ſtand in the ſhippe, and wee were driuen to keepe our meate in one hand, and the pot in the other, and ſo ſit downe vpon the hatches to eate, for ſtand we could not, for that the Seas in the very port at an anker went ſo high as if wee had bene in the bay of Portugall with ſtormy weather. The reaſon is, as the Mariners ſaid to me, becauſe that there meete all the waues from all places of the Straights of Gibraltar, and there breake, and that in moſt calmes there go greateſt ſeas, whether the winde blow or not.

The 28. the weather growing ſomewhat calme, wee went on land and reſted our ſelues for that day, and the next day we ſet forward toward the city of Ieruſalem.

What I did, and what places of deuotion I viſited in Ieruſalem, and other parts of the Holy land, from this my departure from Iaffa, vntill my returne to the ſaid port, may briefly be ſeene in my Teſtimoniall, vnder the hand & ſeale of the Vicar generall of Mount Sion, which for the contentment of the Reader I thought good here to interlace.

The pilgrimes returne from Ieruſalem.

THe 15. of September being come from our pilgrimage, we went aboord our ſhippe, and ſet ſaile, and kept our courſe West toward the Iland of Cipres, but al that night it was calme, and the 16. the winde freſhed, and we paſſed by Mount Carmel.

Mount Carmel.

The 17. the winde was very ſcant, yet we kept the ſea, and towards night wee had a guſte of raine whereby wee were conſtrained to ſtrike our ſailes, but it was not very ſtormie, nor laſted very long.

The 18. 19. 20. and 21. we kept ſtill the ſea and ſaw no land becauſe we had very litle winde, and that not very fauourable.

The 22. at noone the Boatſwaine ſent ſome of the Mariners into the boat, (which we towed a ſterne from Iaffa) for certaine neceſſaries belonging to the ſhip, wherein the Mariners found a certaine fiſh in proportion like a Dace, about 6. inches long (yet the Mariners ſaid they had ſeene the like a foote long and more) the which fiſh had on euery ſide a wing, and towards the taile two other leſſer as it were finnes, on either ſide one, but in proportion they were wings and of a good length. Theſe wings grow out betweene the gils and the carkaſſe of the ſame fiſh. They are called in the Italian tongue Peſce columbini, for in deede, the wings being ſpred it is like to a flying doue, they ſay it will flie farre, and very high. So it ſeemeth that being weary of her flight, ſhe fell into the boate, and not being able to riſe againe died there.

Peſce columbini.

The 23. 24. and 25. we ſailed our direct courſe with a ſmall gale of winde, and this day we had ſight of the Iland of Cyprus. The firſt land that we diſcouered was a headland called Cauo de la Griega, and about midnight we ankered by North of the Cape. This cape is a high hill, long and ſquare, and on the Eaſt corner it hath a high top, that appeareth vnto thoſe at the ſea, like a white cloud, for towards the ſea it is white, and it lieth into the ſea Southweſt. This coaſt of Cyprus is high declining towards the ſea, but it hath no cliffes.

Salini.
Arnacho di Salini.
Caſalia.

The 26. we ſet ſaile againe, and toward noone we came into the port of Salini, where we went on land and lodged that night at a towne one mile from thence, called Arnacho di Salini, this is but a village called in Italian, Caſalia. This is diſtant from Iaffa 250. Italian miles.

The 27. we reſted, and the 28. we hired horſes to ride from Arnacho to Salina, which is a good mile. The ſalt pit is very neere two miles in compaſſe, very plaine and leuell, into the which they let runne at the time of raine a quantitie of water comming from the mountaines, which water is let in vntill the pit be full to a certaine marke, which when it is full, the reſt is conueyed by a trench into the ſea. This water is let runne in about October, or ſooner or later, as the time of the yeere doth aſſorde. There they let it remaine vntill the ende of Iuly or the middeſt of Auguſt, out of which pits at that time, in ſteade of water that they let in they gather very faire white ſalt, without any further art or labour, for it is only done by the great heate of the ſunne. This the Venetians haue, and doe maintaine to the vſe of S. Marke, and the Venetian ſhips that come to this Iland are bound to caſt out their ballaſt, and to lade with ſalt for Venice. Alſo there may none in all the Iland buy ſalt but of theſe men, who maintaine theſe pits for S. Marke. This place is watched by night with 6. horſemen to the end it be not ſtolne by night. Alſo vnder the Venetians dominions no towne may ſpende any ſalt, but they muſt buy it of Saint Marke, neither may any man buy any ſalt at one towne to carie to another, but euery one muſt buy his ſalt in the towne where he dwelleth. Neither may any man in Venice buy more ſalt then he ſpendeth in the city, for if he be knowen to carie but one ounce out of the citie and be accuſed, hee looſeth an eare. The moſt part of all the ſalt they haue in Venice commeth from theſe Salines, and they haue it ſo plentifull, that they are not able, neuer a yeere to gather the one halfe, for they onely gather in Iuly, Auguſt, and September, and not fully theſe three monethes. Yet notwithſtanding the abundance that the ſhippes carie away yeerely, there remaine heapes like hilles, ſome heapes able to lade nine or tenne ſhippes, and there are heapes of two yeeres gathering, ſome of three and ſome of nine or tenne yeeres making, to the value of a great ſumme of golde, and when the ſhips do lade, they neuer take it by meaſure, but when they come at Venice they meaſure it. This ſalt as it lyeth in the pit is like ſo much ice, and it is ſixe inches thicke: they digge it with axes, and cauſe their ſlaues to cary it to the heapes. This night at midnight we rode to Famaguſta, which is eight leagues from Salina, which is 24. Engliſh miles.

Sixe horſemen to watch the ſalt pit.

Famaguſta.

The 29 about two houres before day, we alighted at Famaguſta, and after we were refreſhed we went to ſee the towne. This is a very faire ſtrong holde, and the ſtrongeſt and greateſt in the Iland. The walles are faire and new, and ſtrongly rampired with foure principall bulwarkes, and betweene them turrions, reſponding one to another, theſe walles did the Venetians make. They haue alſo on the hauen ſide of it a Caſtle, and the hauen is chained, the citie hath onely two gates, to ſay, one for the lande and another for the ſea, they haue in the towne continually, be it peace or warres, 800 ſouldiers, and fortie and ſixe gunners, beſides Captaines, petie Captaines, Gouernour and Generall. The lande gate hath alwayes fiftie ſouldiers, pikes and gunners with their harnes, watching thereat night and day. At the ſea gate fiue and twentie, vpon the walles euery night doe watch fifteene men in watch houſes, for euery watch houſe fiue men, and in the market place 30 ſouldiers continually. There may no ſoldier ſerue there aboue 5. yeres, neither will they without friendſhip ſuffer them to depart afore 5. yeres be expired, and there may ſerue of all nations except Greekes. They haue euery pay, which is 45. dayes, 15 Mozenigos, which is 15 ſhillings ſterling. Their horſemen haue onely ſixe ſoldes Venetian a day, and prouender for their horſes, but they haue alſo certaine lande therewith to plow and ſowe for the maintenance of their horſes, but truely I maruell how they liue being ſo hardly fed, for all the ſommer they feede onely vpon chopt ſtrawe and barley, for hey they haue none, and yet they be faire, fat and ſeruiceable. The Venetians ſend euery two yeeres new rulers, which they call Caſtellani. The towne hath allowed it alſo two gallies continually armed and furniſhed.

Saint Katherens Chappel in old Famaguſta.

The 30 in the morning we rode to a chappell, where they ſay Saint Katherin was borne. This Chappell is in olde Famaguſta, the which was deſtroyed by Engliſhmen, and is cleane ouerthrowne to the ground, to this day deſolate and not inhabited by any perſon, it was of a great circuit, and there be to this day mountaines of faire, great, and ſtrong buildings, and not onely there, but alſo in many places of the Iland. Moreouer when they digge, plowe, or trench they finde ſometimes olde antient coines, ſome of golde, ſome of ſiluer, and ſome of copper, yea and many tombes and vaults with ſepulchers in them. This olde Famaguſte is from the other, foure miles, and ſtandeth on a hill, but the new towne on a plaine. Thence we returned to new Famaguſta againe to dinner, and toward euening we went about the towne, and in the great Church we ſawe the tombe of king Iaques, which was the laſt king of Cyprus, and was buried in the yere of Chriſt one thouſand foure hundred ſeuentie & three, and had to wife one of the daughters of Diuers coines vnder ground.

Venice, of the houſe of Cornari, the which family at this day hath great reuenues in this Iſland, and by meanes of that mariage, the Venetians chalenge the kingdome of Cyprus.

Cornari, a famile of Venice married to king Iaques.

The firſt of October in the morning, we went to ſee the reliefe of the watches. That done, we went to one of the Greekes Churches to ſee a pot or Iarre of ſtone, which is ſayd to bee one of the ſeuen Iarres of water, the which the Lord God at the mariage conuerted into wine. It is a pot of earth very faire, white enamelled, and fairely wrought vpon with drawen worke, and hath on either ſide of it, inſtead of handles, eares made in fourme as the Painters make angels wings, it was about an elle high, and ſmall at the bottome, with a long necke and correſpondent in circuit to the bottome, the belly very great and round, it holdeth full twelue gallons; and hath a tap-hoſe to drawe wine out thereat, the Iarre is very auncient, but whether it be one of them or no, I know not. The aire of Famaguſta is very vnwholeſome, as they ſay, by reaſon of certaine mariſh ground adioyning vnto it. They haue alſo a certaine yeerely ſickneſſe raigning in the ſame towne, aboue all the reſt of the Iſland: yet neuertheleſſe, they haue it in other townes, but not ſo much. It is a certaine redneſſe and paine of the eyes, the which if it bee not quickly holpen, it taketh away their ſight, ſo that yeerely almoſt in that towne, they haue about twentie that loſe their ſight, either of one eye or both, and it commeth for the moſt part in this moneth of October, and the laſt moneth: for I haue met diuers times three and foure at once in companies, both men and women. Their liuing is better cheape in Famaguſta then in any other place of the Iſland, becauſe there may no kinde of prouiſion within their libertie bee ſolde out of the Citie.

No vitailes muſt be ſold out of the city of Famaguſta.

The ſecond of October we returned to Arnacho, where wee reſted vntill the ſixt day. This towne is a prettie Village, there are thereby toward the Sea ſide diuers monuments, that there hath bene great ouerthrow of buildings, for to this day there is no yere when they finde not, digging vnder ground, either coines, caues, and ſepulchres of antiquities, as we walking, did ſee many, ſo that in effect, all alongſt the Sea coaſt, throughout the whole Iſland, there is much ruine and ouerthrow of buildings: for as they ſay, it was diſinhabited ſixe and thirtie yeres before Saint Helens time for lacke of water. And ſince that time it hath bene ruinated and ouerthrowen by Richard the firſt of that name, king of England, which he did in reuenge of his ſiſters rauiſhment comming to Ieruſalem, the which inforcement was done to her by the king of Famaguſta.

Cyprus 36. yeres diſinhabited for lacke of water.

Cypr. ruinated by Rich. the 1.

The ſixt day we rid to Nicoſia, which is from Arnacho ſeuen Cyprus miles, which are one and twentie Italian miles. This is the ancienteſt citie of the Iſland, and is walled about, but it is not ſtrong neither of walles nor ſituation: It is by report three Cyprus miles about, it is not throughly inhabited, but hath many great gardens in it, and alſo very many Date trees, and plentie of Pomegranates and other fruites. There dwell all the Gentilitie of the Iſland, and there hath euery Cauallier or Conte of the Iſland an habitation. There is in this citie one fountaine rented by ſaint Marke, which is bound euery eight dayes once, to water all the gardens in the towne, and the keeper of this fountaine hath for euery tree a Bizantin, which is twelue ſoldes Venice, and ſix pence ſterling. He that hath that to farme, with a faire and profitable garden thereto belonging, paieth euery yeere to ſaint Marke, fifteene hundred crownes. The ſtreetes of the citie are not paued, which maketh it with the quantitie of the gardens, to ſeeme but a rurall habitation. But there be many faire buildings in the Citie, there be alſo Monaſteries both of Franks & Greekes. The Cathedrall church is called Santa Sophia, in the which there is an old tombe of Iaſpis ſtone, all of one piece, made in forme of a cariage coffer, twelue ſpannes long, ſixe ſpannes broad, and ſeuen ſpannes high, which they ſay was found vnder ground. It is as faire a ſtone as euer I haue ſeene.

The ſeuenth day we rid to a Greeke Frierie halfe a mile without the towne. It is a very pleaſaunt place, and the Friers feaſted vs according to their abilitie. Theſe Friers are ſuch as haue bene Prieſts, and their wiues dying they muſt become Friers of this place, and neuer after eate fleſh, for if they do, they are depriued from ſaying maſſe: neither, after they haue taken vpon them this order, may they marry againe, but they may keepe a ſingle woman. Theſe Greekiſh Friers are very continent and chaſt, and ſurely I haue ſeldome ſeen (which I haue well noted) any of them fat.

The 8. day we returned to Arnacho, and reſted there. The 9. after midnight my company rid to the hill called Monte de la Croce (but I not diſpoſed would not go) which hill is from Arnacho 15. Italian miles. Vpon the ſayd hill is a certaine croſſe, which is, they ſay, a holy Croſſe. This Croſſe in times paſt did by their report of the Iſland, hang in the ayre, but by a certaine earthquake, the croſſe and the chappell it hung in, were ouerthrowen, ſo that neuer ſince it would hang againe in the aire. But it is now couered with ſiluer, and hath 3. drops of our lordes blood on it (as they ſay) and there is in the midſt of the great croſſe, a little croſſe made of the croſſe of Chriſt, but it is cloſed in the ſiluer, you muſt (if you will) beleeue it is ſo, for ſee it you cannot. This croſſe hangeth nowe by both endes in the wall, that you may ſwing it vp and downe, in token that it did once hang in the aire. This was told mee by my fellow pilgrimes, for I ſawe it not.

The 10. at night we went aboord by warning of the patron: and the 11. in the morning we ſet ſaile, and crept along the ſhore, but at night we ankered by reaſon of contrary windes.

Limiſſo.

The 12. we ſet ſaile toward Limiſſo, which is from Salines 50. miles, and there we went on land that night.

Carrobi.

Vulture.

The 13. and 14. we remained ſtill on land, and the 15. the patrone ſent for vs; but by reaſon that one of our company was not well, we went not preſently, but we were forced afterward to hire a boate, and to ouertake the ſhip tenne miles into the ſea. At this Limiſſo all the Venetian ſhips lade wine for their prouiſion, and ſome for to ſell, and alſo vineger. They lade alſo great ſtore of Carrobi: for all the countrey thereabout adioining, and all the mountaines are full of Carrobi trees, they lade alſo cotton wooll there. In the ſayd towne we did ſee a certaine foule of the land (whereof there are many in this Iſland) named in the Italian tongue Vulture. It is a fowle that is as big as a Swanne, and it liueth vpon carion. The ſkinne is full of ſoft downe, like to a fine furre, which they vſe to occupie when they haue euill ſtomacks, and it maketh good digeſtion. This bird (as they ſay) will eate as much at one meale as ſhall ſerue him fortie dayes after, and within the compaſſe of that time careth for no more meate. The countrey people, when they haue any dead beaſt, they cary it into the mountaines, or where they ſuppoſe the ſayd Vultures to haunt, they ſeeing the carion doe immediately greedily ſeaze vpon it, and doe ſo ingraft their talents, that they cannot ſpeedily riſe agayne, by reaſon whereof the people come and kill them: ſometimes they kill them with dogs, and ſometimes with ſuch weapons as they haue. This foule is very great and hardy, much like an Eagle in the feathers of her wings and backe, but vnder her great feathers ſhe is onely downe, her necke alſo long and full of downe. She hath on the necke bone, betweene the necke and the ſhoulders, a heape of fethers like a Taſſell, her thighs vnto her knees are couered with downe, her legs ſtrong and great, and dareth with her talents aſſault a man. They haue alſo in this Iſland a certaine ſmall bird, much like vnto a Wagtaile in fethers and making, theſe are ſo extreme fat that you can perceiue nothing els in all their bodies: theſe birds are now in ſeaſon. They take great quantitie of them, and they vſe to pickle them with vineger and ſalt, and to put them in pots and ſend them to Venice and other places of Italy for preſents of great eſtimation. They ſay they ſend almoſt 1200. Iarres or pots to Venice, beſides thoſe which are conſumed in the Iſland, which are a great number. Theſe are ſo plentifull that when there is no ſhipping, you may buy them for 10. Carchies, which coine are 4. to a Venetian Soldo, which is peny farthing the dozen, and when there is ſtore of ſhipping, 2. pence the dozen, after that rate of their money. They of the limites of Famaguſta do keepe the ſtatutes of yͤ Frenchmen which ſometimes did rule there. And the people of Nicoſia obſerue the order of the Genoueſes, who ſometimes alſo did rule them. All this day we lay in the ſea with little wind.

Great plenty of very fat birds.

The Famaguſtans obſerue the French ſtatutes.

Cauo Bianco.

The 16. we met a Venetian ſhip, and they willing to ſpeake with vs, and we with them, made towards each other, but by reaſon of the euill ſtirrage of the other ſhip, we had almoſt boorded each other to our great danger. Toward night we ankered vnder Cauo Bianco, but becauſe the winde grew faire, we ſet ſaile againe preſently.

Another Cion.

A ſhip called el Bonna.

The 17, 18, 19, and 20. we were at ſea with calme ſommer weather, and the 20. we had ſome raine, and ſaw another Cion in the element. This day alſo we ſawe, and ſpake with a Venetian ſhip called el Bonna, bound for Ciprus.

A great tempeſt.

The 21. we ſailed with a reaſonable gale, and ſaw no land vntil the 4. of Nouember. This day we had raine, thunder, lightening, and much wind and ſtormie weather, but God be praiſed we eſcaped all dangers.

Candia, Gozi.

Antonie Gelber departeth this life.

The 4. of Nouember, we had firſt ſight of the Iſland of Candia, and we fell with the Iſlands called Gozi, by South of Candia. This day departed this preſent life, one of our company named Anthonie Gelber of Pruſſia, who onely tooke his ſurfet of Cyprus wine. This night we determined to ride a trie, becauſe the wind was contrary, and the weather troubleſome.

The 5. we had very rough ſtormie weather. This day was the ſayd Anthonie Gelber ſowed in a Chauina filled with ſtones and throwen into the ſea. By reaſon of the freſhnes of the wind we would haue made toward the ſhore, but the wind put vs to the ſea, where we endured a great ſtorme and a troubleſome night.

The 6. 7. and 8. we were continually at the ſea, & this day at noone the wind came faire, whereby we recouered the way which we had loſt, and ſailed out of ſight of Candia.

The 9. we ſailed all day with a proſperous wind after 14. mile an houre: and the 10. in the morning, wee had ſight of Cauo Matapan, and by noone of Cauo Gallo, in Morea, with which land we made by reaſon of contrary wind, likewiſe we had ſight of Modon, vnder the which place we ankered. This Modon is a ſtrong towne, and built in the ſea, and ioineth on the North ſide to the land. It hath a litle caſtle built into the ſea, with a peere for litle ſhips and galleis to harbour in. It hath on the South ſide of the chanell, the Iſland of Sapiencia, with other litle Iſlands all diſinhabited. The chanell lieth Southweſt and Northeaſt betweene the Iſlands and Morea, which is firme land. This Modon was built by the Venetians, but as ſome ſay it was taken frõ them by force of the Turke, and others ſay by compoſition: in like caſe Coron, and Napolis de Romania, which is alſo in Morea. This night the Flemmiſh pilgrims being drunke would haue ſlaine the patrone becauſe he ankered here.

Cauo Matapan. Cauo Gallo, Modon.

Sapiencia.

Coron. Napolis de Romania.

The 11. day we ſet ſaile againe, and as we paſſed by Modon, we ſaluted them with ordinance, for they that paſſe by this place, muſt ſalute with ordinance, (if they haue) or els by ſtriking their top ſailes, for if they doe not, the towne will ſhoot at them. This day toward 2. of the clocke wee paſſed by the Iſland of Prodeno, which is but litle, and deſert, vnder the Turke. About 2. houres before night, we had ſight of the Iſlands of Zante and Cephalonia, which are from Modon one hundreth miles.

Prodeno.

Zante and Cephalonia.

The 12. day in the morning, with the wind at Weſt, we doubled betweene Caſtle Torneſte, and the Iſland of Zante. This caſtle is on the firme land vnder the Turke. This night we ankred afore the towne of Zante, where we that night went on land, and reſted there the 13. 14. and 15. at night we were warned aboord by the patrone. This night the ſhip tooke in victuals and other neceſſaries.

Caſtle Torneſte vnder the Turke.

The 16. in the morning we ſet ſaile with a proſperous wind, and the 17. we had ſight of Cauo de ſanta Maria in Albania, on our right hand, and Corfu on the left hand. This night we ankered before the caſtles of Corfu, and went on land and refreſhed our ſelues.

Cauo S. Maria on the coaſt of Albania.

Corfu Iſland.

The 18. by meanes of a friend we were licenced to enter the caſtle or fortreſſe of Corfu, which is not onely of ſituation the ſtrongeſt I haue ſeene, but alſo of edification. It hath for the Inner warde two ſtrong caſtles ſituated on the top of two high cragges of a rocke, a bowe ſhoot diſtant the one from the other: the rocke is vnaſſaultable, for the ſecond warde it hath ſtrong walles, with rampiers and trenches, made as well as any arte can deuiſe. For the third warde and vttermoſt, it hath very ſtrong walles with rampires of the rocke it ſelfe cut out by force, and trenched about with the Sea. The bulwarkes of the vttermoſt warde are not yet finiſhed, which are in number but two: there are continually in the caſtle ſeuen hundred ſouldiours. Alſo it hath continually foure wardes, to wit, for the land entrie one, for the ſea entrie another, and two other wardes. Artillerie and other munition of defence alwayes readie planted it hath ſufficient, beſides the ſtore remaining in their ſtorehouſes. The Venetians hold this for the key of all their dominions, and for ſtrength it may be no leſſe. This Iſland is very fruitfull and plentifull of wine and corne very good, and oliues great ſtore. This Iſland is parted from Albania with a chanell, in ſome places eight and ten, and in other but three miles. Albania is vnder the Turke, but in it are many Chriſtians. All the horſemen of Corfu are Albaneſes; the Iſland is not aboue 80. or 90. miles in compaſſe.

The deſcription of the force of Corfu.

The Iſland of Corfu is very plentifull.

The 19. 20. and 21. we remained in the towne of Corfu.

The 22. day wee went aboord and ſet ſaile, the wind being very calme wee toed the ſhip all that day, and toward Sunne ſet, the caſtle ſent a Fragatta vnto vs, to giue vs warning of three Foiſtes comming after vs, for whoſe comming wee prepared and watched all night, but they came not.

The 23. day in the morning being calme, wee toed out of the Streight, vntill wee came to the olde towne, whereof there is nothing ſtanding but the walles. There is alſo a new Church of the Greekes called Santa Maria di Caſſopo, and the townes name is called Caſſopo. It is a good porte. About noone wee paſſed the Streight, and drew toward the ende of the Iſland, hauing almoſt no wind. This night after ſupper, by reaſon of a certaine Hollander that was drunke, there aroſe in the ſhip ſuch a troubleſome diſturbance, that all the ſhip was in an vprore with weapons, and had it not bene rather by Gods helpe, and the wiſedome and patience of the patrone, more then by our procurement, there had bene that night a great ſlaughter. But as God would, there was no hurt, but onely the beginner was put vnder hatches, and with the fall hurt his face very ſore. All this night the wind blew at Southeaſt, and ſent vs forward.

Caſſopo.

A dangerous tumult in the ſhip.

The 24. in the morning wee found our ſelues before an Iſland called Saſeno, which is in the entrie to Valona, and the wind proſperous.

Saſeno.

Valona.

The 25. day we were before the hils of Antiueri, and about ſunne ſet wee paſſed Raguſa, Meleda.

and three houres within night we ankered within Meleda, hauing Sclauonia or Dalmatia on the right hand of vs, and the winde Southweſt.

Curzola a fruitfull Iland.

The 26 in the morning we ſet ſayle, and paſſed the channell between Sclauonia and Meleda, which may be eight mile ouer at the moſt. This Iland is vnder the Raguſes. At after noone with a hard gale at weſt and by north we entered the channell betweene the Iland Curzola and the hilles of Dalmatia, in the which channell be many rockes, and the channell not paſt 3 miles ouer, and we ankered before the towne of Curzola. This is a pretie towne walled about and built vpon the ſea ſide, hauing on the toppe of a round hill a faire Church. This Iland is vnder the Venetians, there grow very good vines, alſo that part toward Dalmatia is well peopled and husbanded, eſpecially for wines. In the ſaid Iland we met with the Venetian armie, to wit, tenne gallies, and three foyſtes. All that night we remained there.

In the Iland of Leſina, are taken ſtore of Sardinas.

The 27 we ſet ſayle and paſſed along the Iland, and towards afternoone we paſſed in before the Iland of Auguſta, and about ſunne ſet before the towne of Leſina, whereas I am informed by the Italians, they take all the Sardinas that they ſpend in Italy. This day we had a proſperous winde at Southeaſt. The Iland of Leſina is vnder the Venetians, a very fruitfull Iland adioyning to the maine of Dalmatia, we left it on our right hand, and paſſed along.

The gulfe of Quernero. Rouignio.

The 28 in the morning we were in the Gulfe of Quernero, and about two houres after noone we were before the cape of Iſtria, and at ſunne ſet we were at anker afore Rouignio which is alſo in Iſtria and vnder the Venetians, where all ſhips Venetian and others are bound by order from Venice to take in their Pilots to goe for Venice. All the ſommer the Pilots lie at Rouignio, and in winter at Parenzo, which is from Rouignio 18 miles by Weſt.

Parenzo.

The 29 we ſet ſayle and went as farre as Parenzo, and ankered there that day, and went no further.

S. Nicolo an Iland.

The 30 in the morning we rowed to Sant Nicolo a litle Iland hard by vninhabited, but only it hath a Monaſtery, it is full of Oliue trees, after maſſe wee returned and went aboord. This day the patron hired a Barke to imbarke the pilgrims for Venice, but they departed not. In the afternoone we went to ſee the towne of Parenzo, it is a pretie handſome towne, vnder the Venetians. After ſupper wee imbarked our ſelues againe, and that night wee ſayled towardes Venice.

Caorle ſtanding at the entry of the marſhes of Venice.

The firſt of December we paſt a towne of the Venetians, ſtanding on the entery to the Palude or marſhes of Venice: which towne is called Caorle, and by contrary windes we were driuen thither to take port. This is 60 miles from Parenzo, and fortie from Venice, there we remayned that night.

Our arriuall at Venice.

The ſecond two houres before day, with the winde at Southeaſt, we ſayled towards Venice, where we arriued (God be prayſed) at two of the clocke after dinner, and landed about foure, we were kept ſo long from landing, becauſe we durſt not land vntill we had preſented to the Prouidor de la Sanita, our letter of health.

The manner of the entring of Soliman the great Turke, with his armie into Aleppo in Syria, marching towards Perſia againſt the Great Sophie, the fourth day of Nouember, 1553, noted by Maſter Anthony Ienkinſon, preſent at that time.

There marched before the Grand Signior, otherwiſe called the Great Turke, 6000 Eſperes, otherwiſe called light horſemen very braue, clothed all in ſcarlet.

After, marched 10000 men, called Nortans, which be tributaries to the Great Turke, clothed all in yellow veluet, and hats of the ſame, of the Tartary faſhion, two foote long, with a great role of the ſame colour about their foreheads, richly decked, with their bowes in their hands, of the Turkiſh faſhion.

After them marched foure Captaines, men of armes, called in Turkiſh Saniaques, clothed all foure in crimſon veluet, euery one hauing vnder his banner twelue thouſand men of armes well armed with their morrions vpon their heads, marching in good order, with a ſhort weapon by their ſides, called in their language, Simitерro.

After came 16000 Ianizaries, called the ſlaues of the Grand Signior, all a foote, euery one hauing his harquebuſh, who be his gard, all clothed in violet ſilke, and apparelled vpon their heads with a ſtrange forme, called Cuocullucia, faſhioned in this ſort: the entering in of the forehead is like a ſkull made of white veluet, & hath a traine hanging downe behind, in manner of a French hoode, of the ſame colour, and vpon the forepart of the ſaid ſkull, iuſt in the middes of his forehead there is ſtanding bolt vpright like a trunke of a foote long of ſiluer, garniſhed moſt richly with Goldſmiths worke, and precious ſtones, and in the top of the ſaid trunke a great buſh of fethers, which waueth vp and downe moſt brauely when he marcheth.

After this, there cam 1000. pages of honour, all clothed in cloth of gold, the halfe of them carying harquebuſhes, and the other halfe Turkiſh bowes, with their truſſes of arrowes, marching in good order.

Then came three men of armes well armed, and vpon their harneſſe coates of the Turkes faſhion, of Libard ſkinnes, and murrions vpon their heads, their ſpeares charged, and at the end of their ſtaffe hard by ỳ head of the ſpeare, a horſe taile died in a bloody colour, which is their enſigne: they be the chalengers for the Turkes owne perſon.

After them came ſeuen pages of honour in cloth of ſiluer, vpon ſeuen white horſes, which horſes were couered with cloth of ſiluer, all embrodered and garniſhed with precious ſtones, emeraunds, diamonds, and rubies moſt richly.

After them alſo came ſixe more pages of honour, clothed in cloth of gold, euery one hauing his bowe in his hand, and his fawchine of the Turkes faſhion by his ſide.

Immediately after them came the great Turke himſelfe with great pompe & magnificence, vſing in his countenance and geſture a wonderfull maieſtie, hauing onely on each ſide of his perſon one page clothed with cloth of gold: he himſelfe was mounted vpon a goodly white horſe, adorned with a robe of cloth of gold, embrodered moſt richly with the moſt precious ſtones, and vpon his head a goodly white tucke, containing in length by eſtimation fifteene yards, which was of ſilke and linnen wouen together, reſembling ſomething Callicut cloth, but is much more fine and rich, and in the top of his crowne, a litle pinnach of white Oſtrich feathers, and his horſe moſt richly apparelled in all points correſpondent to the ſame.

After him folowed ſixe goodly yong ladies, mounted vpon fine white hackneis, clothed in cloth of ſiluer, which were of the faſhion of mens garments, embrodered very richly with pearle and precious ſtones, and had vpon their heads caps of Goldſmiths worke, hauing great flackets of haire, hanging out on each ſide, died as red as blood, and the nailes of their fingers died of the ſame colour, euery of them hauing two eunuches on each ſide, and litle bowes in their hands, after an Antike faſhion.

After marched ỳ great Baſha chiefe conductor of the whole army, clothed with a robe of Dollymant crimſon, and vpon the ſame another ſhort garment very rich, and about him fiftie Ianizaries afoote, of his owne gard, all clothed in crimſon veluet, being armed as the great Turks owne Ianizaries.

Then after enſued three other Baſhas, with ſlaues about them, being afoote, to the number of three thouſand men.

After came a companie of horſemen very braue, and in all points well armed, to the number of foure thouſand.

All this aforeſayd army, moſt pompous to behold, which was in number foure ſcore and eight thouſand men, encamped about the citie of Aleppo, and the Grand Signior himſelfe was lodged within the towne, in a goodly caſtle, ſituated vpon a high mountaine: at the foote whereof runneth a goodly riuer, which is a branch of that famous riuer Euphrates.

The reſt of his armie paſſed ouer the mountaines of Armenia called now the mountaines of Camarie, which are foure dayes iourney from Aleppo, appointed there to tary the comming of the Grand Signior, with the reſt of his armie, intending to march into Perſia, to giue battel to the great Sophie. So the whole armie of the Grand Signior, containing as well thoſe that went by the mountaines, as alſo thoſe that came to Aleppo in company with him, with horſemen & footemen, and the conductors of the camels and victuals, were the number of 300000. men.

The camels which caried munition and vitailes for the ſaid army, were in number 200000.

A note of the preſents that were giuen at the ſame time in Aleppo, to the grand Signior, and the names of the preſenters.

First the Baſha of Aleppo, which is as a Viceroy, preſented 100. garments of cloth of gold, and 25. horſes.

The Baſha of Damaſco, preſented 100. garments of cloth of gold, and twentie horſes, with diuers ſorts of comfits, in great quantitie.

The Baſha of Aman preſented 100. garments of cloth of gold, 20. horſes, and a cup of gold, with two thouſand duckets.

The Saniaque of Tripolis preſented ſix camels, charged all with ſilkes, 20. horſes, and a little clocke of gold, garniſhed with precious ſtones, eſteemed worth two hundred duckets.

The Conſul of the company of the Venetians in Tripolis, came to kiſſe the grand Signiors hand, and preſented him a great baſin of gold, and therein 4000. duckets Venetians.

The ſafeconduct or priuiledge giuen by Sultan Solyman the great Turke, to maſter Anthony Ienkinſon at Aleppo in Syria, in the yeere 1553.

SVltan Solyman, &c. to all Viceroyes, Saniaques, Cadies, and other our Iuſticers, Officers, and ſubiects of Tripolis in Syria, Conſtantinople, Alexandria in Ægypt, and of all other townes and cities vnder our dominion and iuriſdiction: We will and commaund you, that when you ſhall ſee Anthony Ienkinſon, bearer of theſe preſent letters, merchant of London in England, or his factor, or any other bearing the ſayd letter for him, arriue in our ports and hauens, with his ſhip or ſhips, or other veſſels whatſoeuer, that you ſuffer him to lade or vnlade his merchandiſe whereſoeuer it ſhall ſeeme good vnto him, trafficking for himſelfe in all our countreys and dominions, without hindering or any way diſturbing of him, his ſhip, his people or merchandiſe, and without enforcing him to pay any other cuſtome or toll whatſoeuer, in any ſort, or to any perſons whatſoeuer they be, ſaue onely our ordinarie duties contained in our cuſtome houſes, which when he hath paied, we will that he be franke and free, as well for himſelfe as for his people, merchandiſe, ſhip or ſhips, and all other veſſels whatſoeuer: and in ſo doing that he may traffike, bargaine, ſell and buy, lade and vnlade, in all our foreſayd Countreys, lands and dominions, in like ſort, and with the like liberties and priuiledges, as the Frenchmen and Venetians vſe, and enioy, and more if it bee poſſible, without the hinderance or impeachment of any man. And furthermore, wee charge and commaund all Viceroyes, and Conſuls of the French nation, and of the Venetians, and all other Conſuls reſident in our Countreys, in what port or prouince ſoeuer they be, not to conſtraine, or cauſe to conſtraine by them, or the ſayd Miniſters and Officers whatſoeuer they be, the ſayd Anthony Ienkinſon, or his factor, or his ſeruaunts, or deputies, or his merchandiſe, to pay any kind of conſullage, or other right whatſoeuer, or to intermeddle or hinder his affaires, and not to moleſt nor trouble him any maner of way, becauſe our will and pleaſure is, that he ſhall not pay in all our Countreys, any other then our ordinarie cuſtome. And in caſe any man hinder and impeach him, aboue, and beſides theſe our preſent letters, wee charge you moſt expreſly to defend and aſſiſt him agaynſt the ſayd Conſuls, and if they will not obey our preſent commandement, that you aduertiſe vs thereof, that we may take ſuch order for the ſame, that others may take example thereby. Moreouer, we commaund all our Captaines of our Gallies, and their Lieutenants, be they Foiſtes or other Veſſels, that when they ſhall finde the ſayd Ienkinſon, or his factor, his ſhip or ſhips, with his ſeruaunts and merchandiſe, that they hurt him not neither in body nor goods, but that rather they aſſiſt and defend him agaynſt all ſuch as ſeeke to doe him wrong, and that they ayde and helpe him with vitailes, according to his want, and that whoſoeuer ſhall ſee theſe preſents, obey the ſame, as they will auoyd the penaltie in doing the contrary. Made in Aleppo of Syria, the yeere 961. of our holy prophet Mahomet, and in the yeere of Ieſus, 1553. ſigned with the ſcepter and ſignet of the grand Signior, with his owne proper hand.

A diſcourſe of the trade to Chio, in the yeere 1569. made by Gaſpar Campion, vnto maſter Michael Locke, and vnto maſter William Winter, as by his letters vnto them both ſhall appeare. Written the 14. of February.

1569. WOrſhipfull Sir, &c. As theſe dayes paſt I ſpake vnto you about the procurement of a ſafeconduct from the great Turke, for a trade to Chio: The way and maner how it may be obtained with great eaſe ſhall plainly appeare vnto you in the lines following. Sir, you ſhall vnderſtand that the Iland of Chio in time paſt hath bene a Signiorie or lordſhip of it ſelfe, and did belong vnto the Genowaies. There were 24. of thē that gouerned the Iland which were called Mauneſes. But in continuaunce of time the Turke waxed ſo ſtrong and mightie, that they, conſidering they were not able to keepe it, vnleſſe they ſhould become his tributaries, becauſe the Iland had no corne, nor any kind of vitailes to ſuſtaine themſelues, but onely that which muſt of neceſſitie come out of the Turkes dominions, and the ſayd Iland being incloſed with the Turks round about, and but 12. miles from the Turks Continent, therefore the ſaid Genowaies did compound and agree to be the Turkes tributaries, and to pay him 14000. thouſand ducates yeerely. Alwayes prouided, that they ſhould keep their lawes both ſpirituall and temporall, as they did when the Iland was in their owne hands. Thus he granted them their priuiledge, which they inioyed for many yeeres, ſo that all ſtrangers, and alſo many Engliſh men did trade thither of long continuance, and went and came in ſafety. In this meane time, the prince Pedro Doria (being a Genouois) became a captaine to ſerue the Emperour with 30 or 40 gallies againſt the Turke. And ſince that time diuers other captaines belonging to Genoa haue bene in the ſeruice of king Philip againſt the Turke. Moreouer, whenſoeuer the Turke made out any army, he perceiued that no nation did him more hurt then thoſe Genouois, who were his tributaries. Likewiſe at the Turkes ſiege of Malta, before which place he lay a great while, with loſſe of his men, and alſo of his gallies, he found none ſo troubleſome vnto his force, as one Iuanette Doria a Genouois, and diuers others of the Iland of Chio, who were his tributaries. At which ſight, he tooke ſuch diſpleaſure againſt them of Chio, that he ſent certaine of his gallies to the Iland, for to ſeiſe vpon all the goods of the 24 Mauneſes, and to turne them with their wiues and children out of the Iland, but they would let none other depart, becauſe the Iland ſhould not be vnpeopled. So that now the Turke hath ſent one of his chiefe men to rule there: whereby now it will be more eaſie for vs to obtaine our ſafeconduct then euer it was before. For if the townſmen of Chio did know that we would trade thither (as we did in times paſt) they themſelues, and alſo the cuſtomer (for the Turke in all his dominions doth rent his cuſtomes) would be the chiefeſt procurer of this our ſafeconduct for his owne gaine: which is no ſmall matter: for we can pay no leſſe then ten in the hundred throwout the Turks whole dominion. Inſomuch, that if one of our ſhippes ſhould go thither, it would be for the cuſtomers profit 4000 ducats at leaſt, whereas if we ſhould not trade thither, he ſhould loſe ſo much. Alſo the burgeſſes, and the common people would be very glad of our trade there, for the Communalty do get more by our countreymen then they do by any other nation whatſoeuer: for we do vſe to buy many of their ſilke quilts, and of their Scamato and Dimite, that the poore people make in that towne, more then any other nation, ſo that we would not ſo gladly trade, but the people of the countrey would be twiſe ſo willing. Wherefore they themſelues would be a meanes vnto their gouernour, by their petition to bring this trade to paſſe: giuing him to vnderſtand that of all nations in the world we do him leaſt hurt, and that we may do his countrey great good in conſuming thoſe commodities which his countrey people make. Furthermore, it were farre more requiſite that we ſhould cary our owne commodities, then to ſuffer a ſtranger to cary them thither, for that we can affoord them better cheape then a ſtranger can. I write not this by hearesay of other men, but of mine own experience, for I haue traded in the countrey aboue this 30 yeres, and haue bene maried in the towne of Chio full 24 yeres, ſo that you may aſſure your ſelfe that I will write nothing but truth. Now I will declare vnto you the wares and commodities that are in the countreyes neere about Chio. There are very good galles, the beſt ſort whereof are ſold in England fiue ſhillings deerer then any other countrey galles. There is alſo cotten wooll, tanned hides, hides in the haire, waxe, chamlets, mocayares, grogerams, ſilke of diuers countreyes, cordouan ſkinnes tanned white, to be made blacke, of them great quantity, and alſo courſe wooll to make beds. The naturall commodities growing in the Iland it ſelfe are ſilke rawe, and maſticke. Of theſe commodities there are laden yeerely ten or twelue great ſhips of Genoa, beſides fiue or ſixe that do belong to the towne of Chio, which ſhips are fraughted for Genoa, Meſſina, and Ancona. And now that the Mauneſes and the chiefe merchants of Genoa are baniſhed, the trade is cleane loſt, by reaſon whereof merchandiſe muſt now of neceſſity be better cheape then they haue bene in times paſt. But yet when all thoſe ſhips did trade to the countrey, & alſo our ſhips, we neuer had leſſe then three kintals of galles for a carſie, and in England we ſold them for 35 and 36 ſhillings the hundred. And whereas now they are brought by the Venetians, they ſell them vnto vs for three pound tenne ſhillings, and foure pound the hundred. Alſo we had three kintals of cotten wooll for a carſie, and ſolde the wooll in England for 50 ſhillings or 3 pound at the moſt, whereas now the Italians ſell the ſame to vs for 4 pound 10 ſhillings and 5 pound the hundred. In like maner chamlets, whereas we had three pieces, and of the beſt ſort two and a halfe for a carſie, and could not ſell them aboue 20 ſhillings and 22 ſhillings the piece, they ſell them for 30 and 35 ſhillings the piece. Alſo grogerams, where we had of the beſt, two pieces and a halfe for a carſie, they ſell them for foure ſhillings and foure ſhillings and ſixe pence the yard. Carpets the ſmaller ſort which ſerue for cupboords, we had three for a carſie: whereas we at the moſt could not ſell them but for 20 ſhillings the piece, they ſell them for 35 ſhillings the piece. And ſo all other commodities that the Venetians do bring, they ſell them to vs for the third part more gaines then we our ſelues in thoſe dayes that we traded in thoſe parts. Likewiſe the barrels of oile that they bring from Candia, we neuer could ſell them aboue foure nobles the barrell, where they ſell them alwayes for 50 ſhillings & 3 pound the barrell. What great pity is this, that we ſhould loſe ſo good

The Mauneſes put out of the Iland of Chio by the Turke.

The cuſtome throwout all Turkie is ten in euery hundreth.

Engliſh men do buy more commodities of Chio then any other nation.

Great ſtore of ſundry commodities to be had in Chio.

a trade, and may haue it in our owne hands, and be better welcome to that countrey then the Venetians. Moreouer, the Venetians come very little to Chio, for their moſt trade is into Alexandria. And for to aſſure you that we had theſe commodities in barter of our carſies, looke into your fathers books, and the books of Sir Iohn Greſham, and his brethren, and you ſhall finde what I haue ſayd to be true.

Diuers places where we may haue ſweete oiles for our clothing farre cheaper then out of Spaine.

Alſo you know, that we are forced to ſeeke oiles out of Spaine, and that for theſe many yeeres they haue bene ſolde for 25 pound and 30 pound the tunne: whereas, if we can obtaine the foreſayd ſafeconduct from the Turke, there are diuers places in his dominions, where we may lade 500 tunnes, at 5 pound ſterling the tunne. The places are Modon, and Coron, which are but twelue miles diſtant the one from the other, and do ſtand in our way to Chio, as you may plainly ſee by the Card. Alſo theſe are places where we may vtter our owne commodities, and not onely theſe two places, but many others, where we may haue oiles, and be better vſed then we are in Spaine, where we pay very deare, and alſo are very euill intreated many wayes, as to you is not vnknowen. So that by theſe meanes (if the marchants will) we may be eaſed, and haue ſuch a trade as the like is not in Chriſtendome. Now, as for getting the ſafeconduct, if I were but able to ſpend one hundred pounds by the yeere, I would be bound to loſe it, if that I did not obtaine the foreſayd ſafeconduct. For I know that if the inhabitants of Chio did but thinke that wee would trade thither againe, they at their owne coſt would procure to vs a ſafeconduct, without any peny of charges to the marchants. So that if the marchants will but beare my charges to ſolicit the cauſe, I will vndertake it my ſelfe. Wherefore I pray you ſpeake to M. Winter and the other marchants, that this matter may take effect. And let me haue your anſwere herein aſſoone as conueniently you may, for that the time of the yeere draweth nigh that this buſineſſe muſt be done. Thus I commit you to God, and reſt alwayes yours to command.

Yours as your ſeruant Gaſpar Campion.

To the worſhipfull M. VVilliam VVinter.

IT may pleaſe your worſhip to vnderſtand, that as concerning the voyage to Chio, what great profit would be gotten, both for marchants, and alſo for owners of ſhippes (as it was well knowen in thoſe dayes when the Matthew Gonſon, the Trinitie Fitzwilliams, and the Sauiour of Briſtow, with diuers other ſhips which traded thither yerely, and made their voyage in ten or twelue moneths, and the longeſt in a yeere) M. Francis Lambert, M. Iohn Brooke, and M. Drauer can truely informe you heereof at large. And by reaſon that wee haue not traded into thoſe parts theſe many yeeres, and the Turke is growen mighty, whereby our ſhips doe not trade as they were woont, I finde that the Venetians doe bring thoſe commodities hither, and doe ſell them for double the value that we our ſelues were accuſtomed to fetch them. Wherefore, as I am informed by the aboue named men, that there is none ſo fit to furniſh this voyage as your ſelfe: my requeſt is that there may be a ſhippe of conuenient burthen prepared for this voyage, and then I will ſatiſfie you at large what is to be done therein. And becauſe the Turke, as I ſayd before, is waxen ſtrong, and hath put out the Chriſtian rulers, and placed his owne ſubiects, we may doubt whether we may ſo peacealy trade thither as we were woont: therefore I dare vndertake to obtaine a ſafeconduct, if my charges may be borne to goe and come. Of the way how this may be done, M. Locke can ſatiſfie you at large. Moreouer, I can informe you more of the trade of that countrey, then any other, for that I haue bene in thoſe parts theſe thirty yeeres, and haue bene married in the very towne of Chio full foure and twenty yeres. Furthermore, when one of our ſhips commeth thither, they bring at the leaſt ſixe or eight thouſand carſies, ſo that the cuſtome thereof is profitable for the prince, and the returne of them is profitable to the common people: for in barter of our wares, we tooke the commodities which the poore of that towne made in their houſes: ſo that one of our ſhippes brought the prince and countrey more gaines then ſixe ſhips of other nations. The want of this our trade thither was the onely cauſe why the Chriſtian rulers were diſplaced: for when they payd not their yerely tribute, they were put out by force. Touching the ſhip that muſt go, ſhe muſt obſerue this order, ſhe muſt be a ſhip of countenance, and ſhe muſt not touch in any part of Spaine, for the times are dangerous, nor take in any lading there: but ſhe muſt lade in England, either goods of our owne, or els of ſtrangers, and go to Genoa or Legorno, where we may be wel intreated, and from thence ſhe muſt make her money to buy wines, by exchange to Candia, for there both cuſtome & exchange are reaſonable: and not do as the Math. Gonſon & other ſhips did in time paſt, who made ſale of their wares at Meſſina foꝛ the lading of their wines, and payed foꝛ turning their white money into golde after foure and fiue in the hundreth, and alſo did hazzard the loſſe of ſhippe and goods by carying away their money. Thus by the afoꝛeſayd courſe we ſhall trade quietly, and not be ſubiect to theſe dangers. Alſo from Legorno to Caſtilla de la mar, which is but 16 miles from Naples, and the ready way to Candia, you may lade hoopes, which will coſt carolins of Naples 27 and a halfe the thouſand, which is ducats two and a halfe of Spaine. And in Candia foꝛ euery thouſand of hoops you ſhall haue a but of Malmeſey cleare of all charges. Inſomuch that a ſhip of the burden of the Mathew Gonſon will cary foure hundꝛeth thouſand hoops, ſo that one thouſand ducats will lade her, and this is an vſual trade to Candia, as M. Michael Locke can teſtifie. Furthermoꝛe, it is not vnknowen to you, that the oiles which we do ſpend in England foꝛ our cloth, are bꝛought out of Spaine, and that very deare, and in England we cannot ſell them vnder 28 pound and 30 pound the tunne: I ſay we may haue good oile, and better cheape in diuers places within the ſtreights. Wherefoꝛe if you thinke good to take this voyage in hand, I will infoꝛme you moꝛe particularly when you pleaſe. In the meane time I reſt your woꝛſhips to command.

Stoꝛe of hoops laden at Caſtilla de la mare foꝛ Candia.

Yours at your pleaſure Iaſper Campion.

The true report of the ſiege and taking of Famaguſta, of the antique writers called Tamaſſus, a city in Cyprus 1571.

In the which the whole order of all the skirmiſhes, batteries, mines, and aſſaults giuen to the ſayd fortreſſe, may plainly appeare. Engliſhed out of Italian by William Malim.

To the right honourable and his ſingular good Lord, and onely Patron the Earle of Leiceſter, Baron of Denbigh, Knight of the honourable order of the Garter, one of the Queenes Maieſties moſt honourable priuy Councell &c. William Malim wiſheth long health with increaſe of honour.

IT hath bene a naturall inſtinct (right honourable and mine eſpeciall good lord) ingraffed in noble perſonages hearts, much approued and confirmed alſo by cuſtome, for them to ſeeke from time to time, by ſome meanes in their life, by the which they after their death might deliuer ouer their name to their poſteritie: leaſt otherwiſe with their body, their fame alſo altogether might perchance be buried. Vpon the which conſideration we reade many notable and famous things to haue bene erected in time paſt of noble perſonages (hauing had wealth at will) in ſuch ſort, that not onely certaine ruines of the ſame ſumptuous works builded ſo many hundred yeres paſt, do ſtill remaine, but alſo the moſt part of thoſe princes, the authours of them, do continually by them dwell in our memories. As the Pyramides made at Memphis, or neere the famous riuer of Nilus, by the great expenſes of the kings of Egypt: the tower called Pharia, made in the Iland of Pharos by king Ptolomee: the walles of Babylon, made or at the leaſt reedified by queene Semiramis: Dianas church at Epheſus builded by all the noble perſons of Aſia: Mauſolus toome or ſepulchre, made by his wife queene of Caria: Coloſſus Solis placed at Rhodes, I remember not by what Princes charge, but made by the hands of Cares Lindius ſcholar to Lyſippus: and the image of Iupiter, made of Yuory by the hands of the skilfull workman Phydias. The which monuments made of barbarous and heathen Princes to redeeme themſelues from obliuion deſerued both for the magnificence, and perfect workmanſhip of the ſame, to be accounted in thoſe dayes as the ſeuen woonders of the world. Since the which time, an eaſier, readier, and lighter way, being alſo of more continuance then the former, hath bene found out, namely, Letters, which were firſt inuented by the Caldies and Egyptians, as we reade, and augmented ſince by others, to our great benefit, and now laſt of all (no long time paſt) the ſame to haue bene committed to Printers preſſes, to the greateſt perfection of the ſame: men being firſt inforced to write their actes and monuments in beaſts skinnes dried, in barkes of trees, or otherwiſe perchance as vnreadily. By the which benefit of letters (now reduced into print) we ſee how eaſie a thing it is, and hath bene for noble perſons, to liue for euer by the helpe of learned men. For the memory of thoſe two woorthy and valiant captaines Scipio and Hannibal had bene long before this preſent quite forgotten, except Titus Liuius, or ſome ſuch learned Hiſtoriographer had written of them in time. And Alexander Magnus himſelfe that great conquerour had nothing beene ſpoken of, had not Q. Curtius, or ſome other like by his learned ſtile reuiued the remembrance of him, and called backe againe his doings to his poſteritie. For the which cauſe we ſee commonly in all ages learned men to be much made of by noble perſonages, as that rare paterne of learning Ariſtotle to haue bene greatly honoured of that former renowmed Monarch Alexander: who affirmed openly, that he was more bound to his Maſter Ariſtotle, then to king Philip his father, becauſe the one had well framed his minde, the other onely his body. Many other like examples I could alledge at this preſent, if I knew not vnto whom I now wrote, or in what: for your honour being skilfull in hiſtories, and ſo familiarly acquainted with the matter it ſelfe, that is in ſtill entertaining learned men with all curteſie, I ſhould ſeeme to light a candle at noone tide, to put you in remembrance of the one, or to exhort you to doe the other, dayly being accuſtomed to performe the ſame. Craſſus ſayth in Tullies firſt booke, De Oratore: that a Lawyers houſe is the oracle of the whole citie. But I can iuſtly witneſſe, that for theſe fiue yeeres laſt paſt, ſince my returne from my trauell beyond the ſeas, that your lodging in the Court (where I through your vndeſerued goodneſſe to my great comfort do dayly frequent) hath bene a continuall receptacle or harbour for all learned men comming from both the eyes of the realme, Cambridge, and Oxford (of the which Vniuerſity your lordſhip is Chanceller) to their great ſatisfaction of minde, and ready diſpatch of their ſutes. Eſpecially for Preachers and Miniſters of true religion: of the which you haue beene from time to time not onely a great fauourer, but an earneſt furtherer, and protectour: ſo that theſe two nurſeries of learning (in one of the which I haue before this ſpent part of my time, that I may ſpeake boldly what I thinke) ſhould wrong your honour greatly, and much forget themſelues, if by all meanes poſſible they ſhould not heerafter (as at this preſent to their ſmal powers many well learned gentlemen of them do) labour and trauell in ſhewing of themſelues thankefull, to reuerence and honour your lordſhip, and honeſt their owne names: whoſe ſtudies certeinly would ſuddenly decay and fall flat, if they were not held vp by ſuch noble proppes, and had not ſome ſure ankerholds in their diſtreſſe to leane vnto. How ready dayly your trauell is, and hath long beene beſides to benefit all other perſons, in whom any ſparke of vertue or honeſty remaineth, I need not labour to expreſſe, the world knowing already the ſame. But whoſoeuer they be, that in all their life time haue an eſpeciall care by all meanes to profit as many as they be able, and hurt none, do not onely a laudable act, but leade a perfect and very godly life. Whereupon Strabo affirmeth this moſt truely to be ſpoken of them: Mortales tum demum Deum imitari, cum benefici fuerint. That is, Mortall men then ſpecially to follow the nature of God, when they are beneficiall and bountifull to others. Great commendation vndoubtedly it bringeth to any noble perſonage, that as the Moone, that light and brightneſſe which ſhe receiueth of the Sun, is wont preſently to ſpread abroad vpon the face of the earth, to the refreſhing and comforting of all inferiour and naturall things bearing life: ſo for him, to beſtow all that fauour and credit, which he hath gotten at the princes handes, to the helpe and reliefe of the woorthy and needy. Great is the force (my right honourable lord) of true vertue, which cauſeth men, as Tully writeth in his booke De Amicitia, to be loued & honored oft of thoſe perſons, which neuer ſaw them. Whereof I neuer had better proofe (I take God & mine one conſcience to witneſſe, the which I declared alſo to certaine of my friends aſſoone as I returned) then at my laſt being at Conſtantinople, in the yere of our Lord 1564, whereas I oft reſorting (as occaſion ſerued) to the right honorable Chriſtian ambaſſadors, while I made my abode there (namely vnto Monſieur Antonio Petrimol, lieger there for the French king, Sig. M. Victor Bragadino, for the ſegniory of Venice, Sig. Lorenzo Giuſtiniano, for the ſtate of Scio, or Chios, and Sig. Albertacio delli Alberti, for the duke of Florence) heard them often report and ſpeake very honorably of your lordſhip, partly for your other good inclinations of nature, but eſpecially for your liberality, & courteous intreating of diuers of their friends & countrymen, which vpon ſundry occaſions had bene here in this our realme. So that to conclude, all men iuſtly fauour your honourable dealings and deſerts: and I for my part haue reuerenced and honoured the ſame euermore both here at home, and elſwhere abroad, wiſhing often to haue had ſome iuſt occaſion to pay part of that in good will, which my ſlender abilitie will neuer ſuffer me fully to diſcharge. For vnto whom ſhould I ſooner preſent any thing any way, eſpecially concerning matters done abroad, then vnto your lordſhip, by whom I was much cheriſhed abroad in my trauell, and mainteined ſince my returne here at home? For the which cauſe I haue enterpriſed (hoping greatly of your lordſhips fauour herein) to clothe and ſet forth a few Italian newes in our Engliſh attire, being firſt mooued thereunto by the right worſhipfull M.

Maſter Malim at Conſtantinople 1564.

D. Wilſon Maſter of her Maieſties Requeſts, your honours aſſured truſty friend, a great & painfull furtherer of learning, whom I, and many other for diuers reſpects ought to reuerence: who remembring that I had bene at Cyprus, was willing that my pen ſhould trauell about the Chriſtian and Turkiſh affaires, which there lately haue happened: perſwading himſelfe, that ſomewhat thereby I might benefit this our natiue countrey. Againſt whoſe reaſonable motion I could not greatly wreſtle, hazzarding rather my ſlender skill in attempting and performing this his requeſted taske, then he through my refuſall ſhould ſeeme to want any iot of my good will. In offering vp the which newes, although I ſhall preſent no new thing to your honour, becauſe you are ſo well acquainted with the Italian copy, as I know: yet I truſt your lordſhip will not miſlike, that the ſame which is both pleaſant to reade, and ſo neceſſary to be knowen for diuers of our captaines and other our countreymen, which are ignorant in the Italian tongue, may thus now ſhew it ſelfe abroad, couered vnder the wing of your lordſhips protection. Certeinly it mooueth me much to remember the loſſe of thoſe three notable Ilands, to the great diſcomfort of all Chiſtendome, to thoſe helliſh Turkes, horſeleeches of Chriſtian blood: namely Rhodes beſieged on S. Iohn Baptiſts day, and taken on Iohns day the Euangeliſt, being the 27 of December 1522. Scio or Chios being loſt ſince my being there, taken of Piali Baſſa with 80 gallies, the 17 of April 1566. And now laſt of all not only Famaguſta the chiefe holde & fortreſſe in Cyprus to haue bene loſt of the Venetians the 15 of Auguſt laſt paſt 1571 (the chiefe gouernors & captaines of thē being hewen in ſunder by the cōmandement of that tyrant Muſtafa Baſſa) but all the whole Iland alſo to be conquered by thoſe cruell Turks, ancient profeſſed enemies to all Chriſtian religion. In the which euill ſucceſſe (comming to vs as I take it for our offences) as I lament the generall loſſe: ſo I am ſurely penſiue to vnderſtand by this too true a report of the vile death of two particular noble gentlemen of Venice, Sig. M. Lorenzo Tiepolo, and Sig. M. Giouanni Antonio Querini: of both the which I in my trauaile was very courteouſly vſed, the former of them being then (as now alſo he was in this ouerthrow) gouernour of Baffo in Cyprus, the other captaine of one of the caſtels at Corcyra in Greece, now called Corfu. But things paſt are paſt amendment, and they could neuer die more honourably, then in the defence of their countrey. Beſides that the late blowes, which the Turks haue receiued ſince this their fury, in token of Gods wrath againſt them, do much comfort euery Chriſtian heart. Moreouer, this vniforme preparation which is certainly concluded, and forthwith looked for, by very many Chriſtian Princes (would God by all generally) againſt theſe barbarous Mahometiſts: whoſe cruelty and beaſtly behauiour I partly know, and am able to iudge of, hauing bene in Turky amongſt them more then eight moneths together. Whoſe vnfaithfulneſſe alſo and breach of promiſe, as the Venetians manly courage in defence of themſelues, and their fortreſſe, your honour may eaſily reade in this ſhort treatiſe and ſmall handfull of leaues, I hauing ſet downe alſo a ſhort deſcription of the Iland of Cyprus, for the better vnderſtanding of the whole matter. The which I not onely moſt humbly beſeech your honour now fauourably to accept as an earneſt peny of more to come, and of my preſent good will: but with your accuſtomed goodneſſe towards me, to defend the ſame againſt ſuch perſons, whoſe tongues too readily roule ſometime againſt other mens painfull trauels, perſwading themſelues to purchaſe the ſooner ſome credit of learning with the ruder ſort, by controlling and ouerdaintie ſifting of other mens laboured tasks. For I know in all ages to be found as well Baſilisks as Elephants. Thus nothing doubting of your ready ayd heerein, as I aſſuredly truſt of your honours fauourable acceptation of this my poore preſent, wiſhing long life with the increaſe of Gods holy ſpirit to your lordſhip and to all your moſt honourable familie (vnto whom I haue wholly dedicated my ſelfe by mine owne choiſe and election for euer) I, crauing pardon for my former boldneſſe, moſt humbly thus take my leaue. From Lambhith the 23 of March. Ann. 1572.

Your honours moſt humble and faithfull ſeruant for euer, William Malim.

A briefe deſcription of the Iland of Cyprus: by the which not onely the Venetians title why they haue ſo long enioyed it, but alſo the Turks, whereby now he claimeth it, may plainly appeare.

The Iland of Cyprus is inuironed with diuers ſeas: for Weſtward it is waſhed with the ſea called Pamphilium: Southward, with the ſea Ægyptium: on the Eaſt part, with the ſea Syrium: and Northward, with the ſea called Cilicium. The which Iland in time paſt had diuers names: called once Acamantis, as Sabellicus witneſſeth.

ſeth. Philonides maketh mention, that it was called ſometime Ceraſis. Xenogoras writeth, that is was named Aſpelia, Amathuſa, & Macaria. There were in times paſt fifteene cities or famous townes in it, but now very few, amongſt the which Famaguſta is the chiefeſt & ſtrongeſt, ſituated by the ſea ſide. There is alſo Nicoſia, which was woont, by the traffike of Marchants, to be very wealthy: beſides the city of Baffo, Arnica, Saline, Limiſſo, Melipotamo, & Epiſcopia. Timoſthenes affirmeth, that this Iland is in compaſſe 429 miles: and Arthemidorus writeth the length of the ſame to be 162 miles, meaſuring of it from the Eaſt to the Weſt, betwixt two promontories named Dinaretta and Acamanta. This Iland is thought to be very rich, abundant of Wine, Oile, Graine, Pitch, Rozin, Allum, Salt, and of diuers precious ſtones, pleaſant, profitable, and neceſſary for mans vſe, and much frequented of Marchants of Syria, vnto the which it lieth very nere. It hath bene, as Plinie writeth, ioyned ſometime with Syria, as Sicilia hath beene alſo with Italy. It was a long time ſubiect vnto the Romans, after to the Perſians, and to the Soldan of Ægypt. The ſelfeſame Iland was ſometime alſo Engliſh, being conquered by king Richard the firſt, in his voyage to Hieruſalem in the yeere of our Lord 1192. Who (as Polydore writeth in his fourteenth booke of our Engliſh hiſtorie) being prohibited by the Cypriottes from arriuall there, inuaded and conquered the ſame ſoone after by force: and hauing left behinde him ſufficient garriſons to keepe the ſame, departed from thence to Ptolemayda: who afterward exchanged the ſame with Guy of Luſignan, that was the laſt chriſtened king of Hieruſalem, for the ſame kingdome. For the which cauſe the kings of England were long time after called kings of Hieruſalem. And laſt of all, the Venetians haue enioyed it of late a long time, in this order following. In the yeere of our Lord 1470, Iohn king of the ſayd Iland, ſonne to Ianus of Luſignan, had by Helen his wife, which was of the Emperiall houſe of Paleologus, one daughter only called Charlotta, and a baſtard called Iames: the which Iames was afterward conſecrated Biſhop of Nicoſia. This Charlotta was married firſt to the king of Portingall, of whom he had no iſſue, ſo that he being dead, Lewes Duke of Sauoy (to whom ſhee was the ſecond time married) ſonne to Lewes the ſecond of that name (vnto whom the ſaid Iland by the right of this his wife Charlotta did appertaine) had the poſſeſſion of the ſame. Iames the baſtard aſſoone as his father was dead, of a Biſhop became a ſouldiour, and with an army wanne the Iland, making it his owne by force. This Duke of Sauoy hearing theſe newes, with a number of well appointed ſouldiers, arriued ſhortly after in Cyprus, and recouering againe the Iland, compelled the baſtard to flie foorthwith ouer to the Soldan of Ægypt. Who making himſelfe his ſubiect, in time ſo wrought and tempered the matter, that the Soldan in perſon at his requeſt paſſed ouer into Cyprus, beſieged Duke Lewes in the caſtle of Nicoſia, and at length compelled him to depart, leauing his kingdome. So that this Biſhop became againe King of this Iland: who ſhortly after cleauing to the Venetians hauing made a league of friendſhip with them, married by their conſent one Catherina the daughter of Marco Cornaro, which Catherin the Senate of Venice adopted vnto them ſoone after as their daughter. This Biſhop not long after ſickened, and died, leauing this his wife with child, who liued not long after his fathers death. By the which meanes the Venetians making themſelues the next heires to Catherina by the law of adoption, tooke vnto them the poſſeſſion of this kingdome, and haue kept and enioyed the ſame almoſt this hundred yeeres. Now this great Turke called Sultan Selim in the right of the Soldan of Ægypt, whom his grandfather (called alſo Sultan Selim) conquered, pretendeth a right title vnto it, and now, as you may vnderſtand by reading of this ſhort Treatiſe, hath by conqueſt obtained the ſame. Whom I pray the euerliuing God, if it be his holy will, ſhortly to root out from thence,

To the Reader.

I Am not ignorant (gentle Reader) how hard a matter it is for any one man to write that, which ſhould pleaſe and ſatisfie all perſons, we being commonly of ſo diuers opinions and contrary iudgements: againe Tully affirmeth it to be a very difficult thing, to finde out any matter which in his owne kinde may be in all reſpects perfect. Wherefore I truſt by your owne iudgement I ought of reaſon to be the ſooner pardoned (my tranſlation being preciſely tied to mine authours meaning) if any thing heerein beſides be thought to be wanting: I haue learned by the way how comberous a thing it is to turne the ſelfeſame matter out of the Italian language into our countrey ſpeech. But who ſo doeth what he poſſibly can is bound to no more. And I now at the requeſt of others (who put me in minde, that I was not onely borne vnto my ſelfe) haue accompliſhed that in the ende, which I promiſed and was required. With what paine and diligence, I referre me to them which are skilfull in the Italian tongue, or may the better iudge, if it pleaſe them to trie the ſame, caſting aſide this exampler. I ſpeake it not arrogantly, I take God to witneſſe: but mens painefull trauels ought not lightly to be condemned: nor ſurely at any time are woont to be of the learned, or diſcreet. By whoſe gentle acceptation if theſe my preſent doings be now ſupported, I will perſwade my ſelfe that I haue reaped ſufficient fruit of my trauell. Vnto whome with all my heart I wiſh proſperous ſucceſſe in all their affaires,

In Turchas precatio.

Summe Deus, ſuccurre tuis, miſereſce tuorum,
Et ſubeat gentis te noua cura tuæ.
Quem das tantorum finem, Rex magne, laborum?
In nos vibrabit tela quouſque Sathan?
Antè Rhodum, mox indè Chium, nunc deniquè Cyprum,
Turcharum cepit ſanguinolenta manus.
Muſtafa fœdifragus partes graſſatur in omnes,
Et Veneta Cypriam ſtrage cruentat humum.
Nec finem imponit ſceleri, mollitue furorem,
Nec niſi potato ſanguine paſtus abit.
Qualis, quæ nunquam niſi plena tuménſque cruore
Sanguiſuga obſeſſam mittit hirudo cutem.
Torturam ſequitur tortura, cruórque cruorem,
Et cædem admiſſam cædis alius amor.
Sæuit inops animi, nec vel ſe temperat ipſe,
Vel manus indomitum noſtra domare poteſt.
At tu, magne Pater, tumidum diſperde Tyrannum,
Nec ſine mactare ſemper ouile tuum.
Exulet hoc monſtrum, ne ſanguine terra redundet.
Excutiántque nouum Cypria regna iugum.
Et quòd Chriſticolæ fœdus pepigere Monarchæ,
Id fauſtum nobis omnibus eſſe velis.
Tu pugna illorum pugnas, & bella ſecundes,
Captiuóſque tibi ſubde per arma Scythas.
Sic tua per totum fundetur gloria mundum,
Vnus ſic Chriſtus fiet, & vna fides.

Gulielmus Malim.

The true report of all the ſucceſſe of Famaguſta, made by the Earle Neſtor Martiningo, vnto the renowmed Prince the Duke of Venice.

The ſixteenth day of February, *1571, the fleet which had brought the ayde vnto Famaguſta, departed from thence, whereas were found in all the army, but foure thouſand footmen, eight hundred of them choſen ſouldiers, and three thouſand (accounting the Citizens and other of the Villages) the reſt two hundred in number were ſouldiers of Albania. After the arriuall of the which ſuccour, the fortification of the City went more diligently forward of all hands, then it did before, the whole garriſon, the Grecian Citizens inhabiting the Towne, the Gouernours and Captaines not withdrawing themſelues from any kinde of labour, for the better incouragement and good example of others, both night and day ſearching the watch, to the intent with more carefull heed taking they might beware of their enemies, againſt whom they made no ſally out of the City to ſkirmiſh but very ſeldome, eſpecially to vnderſtand when they might learne the intent of the enemies. Whileſt we made this diligent prouiſion within the Citie, the Turks without made no leſſe preparation of all things neceſſary, fit to batter the fortreſſe withall, as in bringing out of Caramania and Syria with all ſpeed by the Sea, many woolpacks, a great quantitie of wood and timber, diuers pieces of artillery, engins, and other things expedient for their purpoſe.

*In Italy and other places the date of the yere of yͤ Lord is alwayes changed the firſt of Ianuary, or on New yeres day, and from that day reckoned vpon: although wee heere in England, eſpecially the temporall lawyers for certaine cauſes are not woont to alter the ſame vntill the Annunciation of our Lady.

At the beginning of April Halli Baſha landed there with fourſcore gallies or thereabout in his company, who brought thither that, which of our enemies was deſired, who ſoone after departing from thence, and leauing behinde him thirty gallies, which continually tranſported ſouldiours, munition, freſh victuals, and other neceſſaries, beſides a great number of * Caramuſalins, or Brigandines, great Hulkes called * Maones, and large broad veſſels termed of them * Palandrie which continually paſſed to and fro betweene Cyprus and Syria, and other places thereabout, which they did with great ſpeed, ſtanding in feare of the Chriſtian army. And about the middeſt of the ſame moneth the Turkes cauſed to be brought out of the Citie of Nicoſia, which they had woone a little before, fifteene pieces of artillery, and raiſing their army from whence they were before, making ditches and trenches neceſſary, incamped themſelues in gardens, and toward the Weſt part of Famaguſta neere a place called Precipola.

* Caramuſalini be veſſels like vnto yͤ French Gabards, ſailing dayly vpon the riuer of Bordeaux, which ſaile with a miſen or triangle ſaile.

* Maone be veſſels like vnto yͤ great hulks, which come hither frō Denmarke, ſome of the which cary 7 or 8 hundred tunnes a piece, flat and broad, which ſaile ſome of them with ſeuen miſens a piece.

* Palandrie be great flat veſſels made like Feriboats to tranſport horſe.

Nicoſia, otherwiſe called Licoſia.

The fiue and twentieth day of the ſame moneth they raiſed vp mounts to plant their artillery vpon, and cauſed trenches to be made for harquebuzers, one very nigh another, approching ſtill very neere the Citie, in ſuch order, as was almoſt impoſſible to ſtay the ſame, fortie thouſand of their Pioners continually labouring there the moſt part of all the night. The intent of the enemie being then knowen, and in what part of the Citie he minded moſt to plant his battery, we tooke diligent heed on the other part, to repaire and fortifie all places neceſſary within. For the which cauſe wee placed a great watch in that way, which was couered with a counterſcharfe, and in the ſallies of their priuy Poſternes, for the defence of the ſaid counterſcharfe, there were new flanckers made, alſo Trauerſes called Buttetiſſes made vpon the Cortaine, with one trench of Turues two foot high and broad, the which was made on that ſide of the wall of the Citie, which was already battered with the ſhot of the Turkes, with certaine loope holes for our Harquebuzers, by the which they defended the counterſcharſe. Two noble perſonages Bragadino and Baglione perſonally tooke this charge on them, by the which meanes the Chriſtian affaires paſſed in very good order. All the bread for our Souldiers was made in one ſtorehouſe, of the which the noble gentleman Lorenzo Tiepolo captaine of * Baffo had charge, who refuſed no paine, where he thought his trauell might preuaile. In the caſtle was placed that famous gentleman Andrea Bragadino, who with a diligent gard had charge on that part of the caſtle principally, next vnto the ſea ſide, trimming and digging out new flanckers for the better defence of the * Arſenall.

Sig. Bragadino was Proueditore, that is, Gouernour, and Sig. Baglione Generall of the Chriſtian armie.

* Baffo of the ancient writers named Paphos, in the which Citie there was a ſumptuous Church dedicated to Venus.

* Arſenall in Conſtantinople and Venice is the place for munition and artillery to lie in.

A valiant knight named Foito was appointed Maſter of the Ordinance, who was ſlain within few dayes after in a ſkirmiſh, whoſe garriſon the noble Bragadino Proueditore before named preſently deliuered ouer to me. Three other captaines were appointed ouer the wilde-fire with twentie footmen for euery one of them, choſen out of the armie, to vſe and execute the ſame as occaſion ſhould ſerue. The beſt pieces of Ordinance were brought foorth vnto that ſide of the Towne, where the battery was looked for to be made: and they made priuy fences to couer the better their cannon ſhot withall. There was no want in the Chriſtians to annoy their enemies in iſſuing often out of euery ſide againſt them, aſwell to hinder their determinations, as to hurt them otherwiſe at diuers times. They alſo rendered to vs the like. For three hundred of the inhabitants of Famaguſta one time iſſuing out of the citie, armed onely with their ſwords and targets, with ſo many Italian Harquebuzers alſo in their company, receiued great dammage, becauſe the trenches of the enemies were made about ſo thicke, although at the ſame preſent wee compelled them to flie, and ſlew alſo many of them: yet they increaſed to ſuch number, that they killed preſently thirty, and hurt there threeſcore of our company. For the which cauſe order was taken, that our men ſhould no more come forth of their holde, committing themſelues to manifeſt perill to bid their enemies the baſe.

The Turkes in proceſſe of time by little and little with their trenches, came at length to the toppe of the counterſcharfe, and hauing furniſhed their forts the nineteenth day of May, began their battery with ten forts, hauing threeſcore and fouretene pieces of great artillery within their cuſtody, amongſt the which there were foure Baſiliſkes (for ſo they terme them) of an immeaſurable greatneſſe, and began to batter from the gate Limiſſo vnto the Arſenall, and layed fiue batteries againſt the towne, the one againſt the great high Turret of the Arſenall, which was battered with fiue pieces of Ordinance mounted vpon that fort of the rocke, the other againſt the Cortaine it ſelfe of the Arſenall, battered by one fort with eleuen pieces: another againſt the Keepe of Andruzzi with two commanders, or caualiers, which were aboue with one fort of eleuen other pieces: another battery againſt the Turret of S. Nappa, the which was battered with foure Baſiliſks. The gate of Limiſſo, which had one high commander or caualier alone, and a Brey and Cortaine without was battered by the forts with three and thirty pieces of artillery, whereas Muſtafa himſelfe Generall of the Turkes army tooke the charge in perſon. At the firſt they ſeemed not to care much to ſpoile the walles, but ſhot ſtill into the city, and againſt our Ordinance, which greatly galled them. Whereupon they, who were within the city, aſwell our ſouldiours, as the Grecians, aſſoone as the battery began, withdrawing themſelues, came and dwelt by the walles of the citie, whereas they continued from that time to the end of the ſiege. The noble Bragadino lodged in the Keepe of Andruzzi, Baglioni in that ward of S. Nappa. The honourable Tiepolo in that which was called Campo Santo. Wherefore they being preſent at all that was done, both encouraged, and puniſhed the ſouldiers according to their deſerts. The right worſhipfull Luigi Martiningo was appointed chiefe ouer the Ordinance, who anſwering all mens expectation of him, with great courage diuided the charge thereof vnto ſixe other inferiour captaines, who tooke order and care for that company, and for the prouiſion of things neceſſary for the gunners: one company of the Grecians being appointed to euery gate of the Citie for to attend vpon the ſeruice of the artillery. The valiant captaine Franceſco Bagone warded at the Keepe, and at the great Commander of the Arſenall. Captaine Pietro Conte attended vpon the Cortaine, at the Commander of the Volti, and at the Keepe of Campo Santo. I for my part attended vpon the Commander of Campo Santo, and vpon the Commander of Andruzzi, and of the Cortaine, vnto the Turret of Santa Nappa. The Earle Hercole Martiningo attended vpon the Commander of Santa Nappa, and to the whole Cortaine, vnto the gate of Limiſſo. Horatio Captaine of Veletri attended vpon the Brey and Cortaine, toward the Bulwarke. Vpon the high Commander of Limiſſo, which was more troubled then all the reſt, attended the Captaine Roberto Maluezzi. At the ſame time, when the battery began (by the commiſſion of the honourable Bragadino) victuals were appointed, and giuen to all the ſouldiers, aſwell Grecians, as Italians, and Gunners: namely Wine, Pottage, Cheeſe, and Bakon: all the which things were brought to the walles as need did require in very good order, ſo that no ſouldier there ſpent any more in bread then two ſouſes a day. They were payed at the end of euery thirty dayes with the great trauell of that right worſhipfull Venetian gentleman M. Giouanni Antonio Querini, who beſides this his ordinary charge was found preſent in all weighty and dangerous affaires to the great incouragement of our ſouldiours. And wee made a counterbattery againſt our enemies for ten dayes ſpace, with ſo great rage, that we choked and deſtroyed fifteene of their beſt pieces, alſo we killed and diſpatched of them about thirty thouſand at that ſeaſon, ſo that they were diſappointed at that time of their battery in that place, and were greatly diſmayed. But we foreſeeing that we had no great ſtore of powder left, there was made a reſtraint, and ſuch order taken, that thirty pieces ſhould not ſhoot off but thirty ſhot a piece euery day, and that in the preſence of the Captaines, who were ſtill preſent, becauſe the Souldiers and Gunners ſhould not ſhoot off in vaine.

Two Venetian ſouſes or Soldi amount but to one peny English.

The nine and twentieth day of May there came towards vs from Candia a Fregat or Pinnace, the which giuing vs great hope and lightening of ayde, encreaſed marueilouſly euery mans courage. The Turks with great trauell and ſlaughter of both ſides, had woonne at the laſt the counterſcharfe from vs, with great reſiſtance and mortalitie on both parts. Whereupon they began on the other ſide of the fift battery to fill vp the ditch, with the earth that they threw downe, which was taken neere the wall of the counterſcharfe. But all that earth and falling downe of the wall made by the ſhot of their artillery, was caried away of vs within the city, all our company labouring continually aſwell by night as day, vntill our enemies had made certaine loopeholes in the wall, thorow the which they flancking and ſcouring all the ditch with their harquebuſſe, ſtopped our former courſe of carying, or going that way any more, without certaine and expreſſe danger. But M. Giouanni Marmori, a fortifier, had deuiſed a certaine kinde of ioyned boords, the which being caried of the ſouldiers, defended them from the ſhot of the Harquebuzers, ſo that ſome other quantity of earth, but no great ſtore, was caried alſo away: in the which place this foreſayd fortifier was ſlaine, who had done eſpeciall good ſeruice in all our neceſſary affaires. And our enemies hauing caſt ſo much earth into the ditch, as filled it vp againe, and made it a firme way to the wall of the counterſcharfe, and caſting before them the earth by little and little, they made one trauerſe euen vnto the wall on two ſides in all their batteries, the which they made thicke and ſtrong with woolpacks, and other fagots, to aſſure themſelues the better of our flanckers.

When they had once poſſeſſed the ditch, that they could not be hurt of vs but by chance, they began foorthwith to caſt and digge out vndermines to vndermine the Brey, the Turret of Santa Nappa, the Commander of Andruzzi, the Keepe of Campo Santo, the Cortaine, and the Turrion of the Arſenall: ſo that being able no longer to ſerue our turne and inioy thoſe fewe flanckers, we threw downe wilde-fire into our enemies campe, the which annoyed them very ſore, becauſe it fired their woolpacks, & alſo their fagots. And for the better encouragement of the ſouldiers, the right honorable Bragadino gaue to euery ſouldier one duckat, yͤ which could gaine or recouer any of the former woolpackes, making countermines in all places. To the which charge Maggio the fortifier knight was appointed, who in all our buſineſſe ſerued with ſuch diligence and courage, as he was able, or was requiſite. But the countermines met not, ſauing thoſe of the Commander of S. Nappa, of Andruzzi, and that of Campo Santo, becauſe they were open, and our men ſallied out often both by day and night into the ditch to perceiue better the way of the mines, and to fire the fagots and wooll. Nor we ceaſſed at any time through the vnſpeakable trauell of the Lord Baglione (who had the ouerſight of all theſe matters) to trouble our enemies intents, by all maner of wit and policie, diuiding the companies for the batteries, ioyning and planting in all places a garriſon of the * Albanois ſouldiours, who aſwell on foot as on horſebacke, ſhewed alwayes notable courage and manhood.

* Albanois ſouldiers, ſouldiers of Albania, otherwiſe called Epirus, who cōmonly ſerue the Venetians both on horſebacke and foot, very ſkilfull & painfull.

The firſt aſſault.

The one and twentieth day of Iune they put fire to the mine of the Turret of the Arſenall, whereas Giambelat Bey tooke charge, who with great ruine rent in ſunder a moſt great and thicke wall, and ſo opened the ſame, that he threw downe more then halfe thereof, breaking alſo one part of the vaimure, made before to vphold the aſſault. And ſuddenly a great number of the Turkes ſkipping vpon the ruines thereof, diſplayed their Enſignes, euen to the toppe of the ſame. Captaine Pietro Conte with his company was in that ward, the which was much ſhaken and terrified by that ſudden ruine. I with my company came firſt thither, ſo that they ſhortly tooke the repulſe, and although they refreſhed themſelues with new ſupplies fiue or ſixe times, yet they failed of their purpoſe. There fought perſonally the Lord Baglione: Bragadino and Querini being armed ſtood not farre off to refreſh and comfort our Souldiours, and the Captaine of the Caſtell with the Ordinance, that was planted vpon the Butteries, deſtroyed many of our enemies, when they gaue ẏ aſſault, the which endured fiue houres together: ſo that of Turkes were ſlaine very many, and of our ſide betweene them that were ſlaine and hurt one hundred: moſt part of the which number were caſt away by a miſchance of our wilde-fire, the which being vnaduiſedly and negligently handled, burnt vp many of our owne company. There died at that preſent the Earle Gio. Franceſco Goro, the Captaine Barnardino Agubio: and by the throwing of ſtones Hercole Malateſta, Captaine Pietro Conte, with other Captaines and Standerdbearers, were very ſore hurt.

Of this noble & painfull Venetian gentleman M. Gio. Antonio Querini (who was afterwardes hewen in ſunder by the cōmandement of Muſtafa) I was entertained very courteouſly in my trauell at Corcyra, now called Corfu, he being then there Mag. Caſtellano or Captaine of one of the caſtles.

The night following arriued in Cyprus a Pinnaſſe from Candia, which bringing newes of moſt certaine ayde, greatly increaſed both the mirth and courage of vs all, ſo that we made ſoone after, with the helpe of the Captaine Marco Criuellatore, and Maggio the knight, certaine retreats flancked to all the places beaten downe, and whereas they ſuſpected that the enemy had digged vp any mines, with Hogſheads, Cheſts, Tikes, and Sacks ſtuffed full of moiſt earth (the Grecians with all ſpeed hauing already brought almoſt all that which they had) becauſe they hauing diſpatched their Canuels about neceſſary vſes, they brought their hangings, curtaines, carpets, euen to their very ſheets, to make and ſtuffe vp their foreſayd ſacks, a very good and ready way to make vp againe their vaimures, the which were throwen downe with the fury of the artillery, which neuer ſtinted, ſo that we made vp againe ſtill that in the night, the which was throwen downe and broken in the day, ſleeping very ſeldome: all the ſouldiers ſtanding alwayes vpon the walles, viſited continually of the Gouernors of the Citie, which ſlept at no time, but in the extreame heat of the day, hauing no other time to take their reſt, becauſe the enemie was at hand, giuing vs continually alarmes, not ſuffering vs long to breath.

In extremities mē haue no regard to ſpare trifles.

Prouident & carefull gouernours or magiſtrates ſeldome ſleepe all the night at any time, much leſſe in dangerous ſeaſons.

The ſecond aſſault.

The nine and twentieth day of the ſame moneth they ſet the mine made towards the Brey on fire, the which mine was digged in ſtone, which brake and cleft all things in pieces, and cauſed great ruine, making an eaſie way for the enemy to aſſault vs, who with an outragious fury came to the toppe, whereas Muſtafa their Generall was altogether preſent, which aſſault was receiued, and ſtayed at the beginning of the Earle Hercole Martiningo with his garriſon, and ſo were repulſed by our company, who fought without any aduantage of couert, the vaimure being throwen downe by the mine. There were ſlaine of our company Captaine Meani the Sergeant Maior of our armie, Captaine Celio de Fuochi, Captaine Eraſmo da Fermo: and Captaine Soldatello, Antonio d'Aſcoli, Captaine Gio. d'Iſtria, Standerd bearers, with many other officers, were ſore wounded, there died alſo 30 other of our common ſouldiers. At the Arſenall they were beaten backe with greater dammage of our enemies, and ſmall hurt to vs.

A ſmall thing at the beginning, or in due time done, helpeth much.

Fiue onely of our part being ſlaine there, whereas Captaine Giacomo de Fabriano alſo was killed, and I was wounded in my left legge with an harquebuſh ſhot. The which aſſault continued ſixe houres, the Biſhop of Limiſſo ſtanding vp there, incouraging the Souldiours. Where alſo were found preſent ſtout women, who came thither with weapons, ſtones, and water, to helpe the Souldiours. Our enemies vnderſtanding how great hinderance they had receiued at theſe two aſſaults, changed their mindes, and began againe with greater fury then euer they had before accuſtomed to lay battery to all places, and into our retreats, ſo that they labouring more ſpeedily then euer they did, made ſeuen other forts more, vnder the caſtle, and taking away the artillery from them which were farther off, planting of it ſomewhat nerrer, to the number of foureſcore, they battered the holde with ſo great rage, that on the eighth day of Iuly, with the ſame night alſo were numbred fiue thouſand Canon ſhot, and after that ſort they ouerthrew to the ground the vaimures, that ſcarſely with great trauell and paine we could repaire them againe, becauſe our men that laboured about them were continually ſlaine by their Ordinance, and by reaſon of the endleſſe tempeſt of the ſhot of their Harquebuzers. And our men beganne to decreaſe. For the Turkes cauſed vs to retire from our Breyes, by the violence of their artillery and mining, in ſuch ſort, that there being no more ſtanding left for our Souldiours, becauſe we making our vaimures more thicke, our ſtanding began to waxe narrower, the which preſently we of neceſſitie enlarged with boords as a ſcaffolde to the vaimure, whereby we might haue more elbow roome to fight. Captaine Maggio alſo made one mine vnder the ſayd Brey, to the intent, that we being not able any longer to keepe it, the ſame might be left to our enemies to their great hinderance.

That certaine women inhabiting this Iland be viragos, or mankind, I ſaw ſufficient triall at my laſt being there, in a city called Saline.

It is accounted a good warlike ſhift, to leaue that to our enemies with hinderance, which we can not any longer keepe, and vſe to our owne commoditie.

The third aſſault.

TO the ſayd Brey the ninth day of Iuly they gaue the third aſſault, to the Curtion of Santa Nappa, to that of Andruzzi, to the Cortaine, to the Keepe of the Arſenall: the which aſſault hauing continued more then ſixe houres, they were beaten backe in foure places, but we left the Brey to their great loſſe, and ours alſo: becauſe we being aſſaulted, our company being not able to mannage their Pikes in good order, by reaſon of the narrowneſſe of the ſtanding where they were, being willing to retire in that order, as the L. Baglione had preſcribed vnto them, and could not, caſt themſelues at the laſt into a confuſe order, and retired, they being mingled amongſt the Turkes: ſo that fire being giuen to our mine, the ſame (with a terrible ſight to beholde) ſlew preſently of our enemies more then one thouſand, and aboue one hundred of vs. There was ſlaine Roberto Maluezzi, and Captaine Marchetto de Fermo was grieuouſly wounded. At the aſſault of the Arſenall was ſlaine Captaine Dauid Noce maſter of the Campe, & I my ſelfe was hurt by the racing of a Cannon ſhot. This aſſault continued fiue houres, and the Citizens of Famaguſta ſhewed great courage in euery place, with their women alſo, and yoong ſtriplings. The Brey was ſo defaced by reaſon of this mine ſet on fire, that no body any more attempted to recouer the ſame: becauſe there was no apt place remaining to ſtay vpon. The left flancker onely remained ſtill, whereas another mine was made. The gate of Limiſſo was ouer againſt this foreſayd Brey, and ſomewhat lower, which was alwayes open, hauing made to the ſame a Portall, with a Percollois annexed to it, the which Percollois by the cutting of a ſmall cord, was a preſent defence to the gate, and our Souldiours gaue their attendance by that gate to bring in the battered earth, which fell in the ditches from the rampaire: and when they ſaw that their enemies in foure dayes came not thither, they beganne to entrench aboue the Brey, and by the flanckers aboue they ſuffered no perſon to paſſe out of the gate, the which thing brought great ſuſpition vnto our enemies, becauſe they were often times aſſailed of our company.

The fourth aſſault.

WHerefore they came the fourteenth day of Iuly to aſſault the gate of Limiſſo, and laying their battery to all other places, they came and planted their Enſignes euen before the gate, whereas the L. Baglione, and Sig. Luigi were in readineſſe, who had taken vpon them to defend that gate of the Citie. Who aſſoone as they had encouraged their Souldiours, ſallying ſwiftly foorth, killed, and put to flight the greater part of them, and at the laſt giuing fire to the mine of the flancker ſlew foure hundred Turkes, and Sig. Baglione at the ſame time woon an Enſigne of our enemies, wraſting it violently out of one of the Enſigne bearers hands. The day following they gaue fire to the mine of the Cortaine, the which thing not falling out greatly to their purpoſe, they followed not their prepared aſſault. Wherefore they beganne to fortifie, and aduance higher their trauerſes in the ditches, for their better aſſurance againſt they ſhould giue the aſſault: and they had emptied and carried away all the earth neere vnto the counterſkarfe, where they lodged in their pauillions, ſo that we could not deſcrie them. They ſhot ſeuen pieces of artillery vpon the wall of the counterſcharfe ſo couertly, that they were not ſeene: two from the Brey of the Turrion of Santa Nappa, one from Andruzzi, and two other all along the battery of the Cortaine. And they came with certaine boordes couered with rawe and greene hides, vnder which they brought their men to digge in the vaimures, we being nothing behinde or forgetfull to caſt wilde-fire amongſt them, and ſometime to iſſue foorth of our ſallies called Poſternes, to offend their Pioners, although to our great hinderance. And we ſtill repaired the vaimures by all meanes poſſible, with Buffe ſkinnes, being moiſt and wet, throwing in alſo earth, threads, and cotton with water, being well bound together with cordes: all the women of Famaguſta gathering themſelues together into companies in euery ſtreet (being guided of one of their Monkes called Caloiero) reſorted dayly to a certaine place appointed, to labour, gathering and prouiding for the ſouldiers, ſtones and water, the which was kept for all aſſaults in halfe buts to quench the fire, which the Turks threw amongſt them.

The forwardneſſe of the captaine at dangerous times not onely much comforteth the common ſouldier, but alſo increaſeth greatly his credit & commendation with all men.

Teglia in Latine called Teda is a certaine wood which burneth eaſily, and ſauoreth vnpleaſantly, of the which there is great ſtore in Sicilia: ſometime it is vſed for a torch.

Hauing had no great ſucceſſe in taking of the gate, they found out a newe way, neuer heard of before, in gathering together a great quantitie of certaine wood called Teglia, which eaſily burned, and ſmelt very euill, the which they throwing before the former gate of the Citie, and fagots faſtened to the ſame, with certaine beames beſmeered with Pitch, kindled ſuddenly ſo great a fire, as was not poſſible for vs to quench the ſame, although we threw vpon it whole Buts of water, which were throwen downe from an high Commander, which Buts preſently brake in ſunder.

Mans courage oft abateth, but hope ſeldome forſaketh. Saguntina fames.

This fire continued foure dayes, wherefore we were inforced by reaſon of the extreame heat and ſtinch, to withdraw our ſelues further inward, and they deſcending towardes their lower flanckers, beganne other mines, ſo that the gate was ſhut vp, becauſe it could be no longer kept open, and ſuddenly (a thing maruellous to be ſpoken) the ſtanding of the Brey being repaired, and made vp againe, they planted one piece ouer againſt the gate, the which of vs with ſtones, earth and other things, was ſuddenly buried vp. By this time we were driuen to an exigent, all our prouiſion within the Citie ſtooping very lowe, ſauing onely hope, the noble courage of the Gouernours and Captaines, and the ſtout readineſſe of the Souldiours: our wine, and fleſh as well powdered as vnpowdered was ſpent, nor there was any Cheeſe to be gotten, but vpon an vnreaſonable price, our company hauing eaten vp their Horſes, Aſſes, and Cats, for lacke of other victualls: there was nothing left to be eaten, but a ſmall quantitie of Bread, and Beanes, and we dranke water and Vineger together, whereof was not much left. When that we perceiued that our enemies had digged and caſt vp three mines in the Commander of the gate, they labouring in all places more diligently then euer they did before, bringing into the ditch, ouer againſt the battery of the Cortaine, a hill of earth, as high as the wall: and already they came to the wall aboue the Counterſcharfe ouer againſt the Turrion of the Arſenall, and had made one Commander complete, fenced with ſhares, like vnto plough ſhares, in proportion and height correſpondent to ours.

In July the heat is ſo extreme in this Iland, that the inhabitants thereof are not woont to trauell, but by night onely.

A letter or ſupplication exhibited by the Cypriottes vnto Sig. Bragadino.

Within the Citie were remaining but fiue hundreth Italian Souldiours, who were not hurt, yet very faint and weary by their long watching and paines in fighting in thoſe feruent and burning heates, which are in thoſe parts. And the greater and better part alſo of the Grecians were by this time ſlaine, whenas the chiefe of thoſe Citizens remaining did fully reſolue themſelues (the which was about the twentieth day of July) to preſent a ſupplication in writing to that noble gentleman Bragadino Proueditore, deſiring and beſeeching him, that ſeeing their Citie and Fortreſſe was thus battered and brought to extremitie, without ſufficient ayde to defend the ſame, without ſubſtance or ſuſtenance, hauing no hope of ſuccour, or any newe ſupply, they hauing ſpent and conſumed not onely their goods, but alſo their liues for the defence of them, and in teſtifying of their dutifull ſeruice towardes the noble and royall ſtate of the Segniorie of Venice, that it might nowe pleaſe him, and the reſt of the honourable Gouernours, that were preſent, and put in truſt, hauing a carefull eye vnto ſome honourable conditions, to haue now at the laſt a reſpect to the credit and honour of their long trauelled wiues, and the ſafegard of their poore children, which otherwiſe were ſhortly very like to be a pray to their bloudthirſting and rauening enemies. To the which letter or ſupplication ſpeedy anſwere was made by the forenamed honourable Bragadino, comforting them, that they ſhould by no meanes abate their courage, and that ſhortly he looked for ſuccour from the Segniorie, diminiſhing as much as hee might, the feare which they had conceiued in their hearts, hearts, diſpatching and ſending away ſuddenly from Cyprus into Candia, a Pinneſſe to certifie the duke and gouernours there, in what extremitie they were. The Turkes by this time had ended their mines, and ſet them on fire, the 29. of July: in the which ſpace our men, according as they were woont to doe, renued and made vp againe the rampires ruined before by the Ordinance, and hauing no other ſtuffe left to aduaunce them with, made ſackes of Kerſie, vnto the which the noble Tiepolo diligently looked. The three mines of the Commander did great damage to vs, hauing throwen downe the greater part of the earth, whereas the gouernour Randacchi was ſlaine. The mine of the Arſenall ouerthrew all the reſt of the Turrion, hauing ſmoldered and choked one whole garriſon of our ſouldiers, the two ſlanckers onely ſtill remaining.

It ſtandeth with reaſon, in hope of ſauing the greater, to let the leſſer go.

The fift Aſſault.

The enemies trauelled much to become maſters of thoſe foreſayd flankers, and to ſally foorth by the other batteries, and this aſſault laſted from three of the clocke in the after noone vntil night, where, and at what time were ſlaine very many of our enemies. In this aſſault Sig. Giacomo Strambali, amongſt the reſt, ſhewed much worthineſſe, as hee had done before in other conflictes.

The ſixt and laſt aſſault.

The next morning following, at the breake of the day, they aſſailed all places, the which aſſault continued more then ſixe houres, with very little hurt on our ſide, becauſe our enemies fought more coldly then they were wont to doe, annoying of vs continually on the Sea ſide with their Gallies, ſhooting in all their aſſaults and batteries continually Cannon ſhot in all parts of the Citie, as neere as they might. After we had defended and repulſed this aſſault, and perceiued things brought to a narrower ſtraite then they were wont to be at, wee hauing left in all the whole Citie but ſeuen barrels of pouder, the gouernours of the Citie fully determined to yeelde vp themſelues and the Citie, with honourable conditions. Wherefore the firſt of Auguſt in the after noone, they tooke a truce, one being come for that purpoſe from Muſtafa the Generall, with whom they concluded the next morning following to giue two hoſtages a piece, vntill ſuch time as both armies were agreed. For our hoſtages (by the appointment of the right honourable Bragadino) were ſent foorth the earle Hercole Martinengo, and Signior Matteo Colſi a Citizen of Famaguſta, and from our enemies came into the Citie the Lieutenant of Muſtafa, and the Aga of the Giannizzers, the which were met, euen vnto the gate of the Citie, of Signiour Baglione with two hundreth harquebuſers: ours alſo were met in like maner with great pompe with horſemen and harquebuſers, with the ſonne alſo of Muſtafa in perſon, who made very much of them.

Neceſſitie oftimes preſſeth vs in the end to that, which our will continually ſpurneth againſt.

Giannezzeri be the gard of the great Turke, in that Aga de Giannizzeri is the captaine of the Turkes gard.

The Lord Baglione imparld with theſe hoſtages, which were then come for that purpoſe of the articles of peace, requiring by them of their Generall, their liues, armour, and goods, fiue peeces of Ordinance, three of the beſt horſes, and ſafe paſſage from thence vnto Candia accompanied with their Gallies, and laſt of all, that the Grecians inhabiting the Iſland, might dwell there ſtill quietly, and enioy peaceably their owne goods and poſſeſſions, liuing ſtill Chriſtians hereafter, as they had done before. All the which requeſts and articles were agreed vpon, granted, and ſubſcribed vnto by the hand of Muſtafa. Foorthwith were ſent Gallies, and other veſſels into the hauen, ſo that our ſouldiers immediatly began to imbarke themſelues, of the which the greater part were already gone aboorde, the Nobilitie and our chiefe Captaines alſo being likewiſe very deſirous to depart.

Iuſt Turkiſh dealing, to ſpeake and not to meane: ſo baſely to promiſe, and neuer to performe the ſame.

The 15. of Auguſt in the morning, the worthy Bragadino ſent me with a letter vnto Muſtafa, by the which hee ſignified, that the ſame night hee would come vnto him to deliuer vp the keyes of the Citie, and that he would leaue in the holde the honourable gentleman Tiepolo, praying him therefore, that whileſt hee ſhould haue iuſt cauſe thus to bee abroad, that there might be no harme done at home, and in the Citie. The Turkes from our truce taking vntill that time, practiſed with vs all familiarly, and without any ſuſpition of ſiniſter or double dealing, they hauing ſhewed vs much courteſie both in word and deede. Muſtafa himſelfe by worde of mouth preſently anſwered me to this letter, in this ſort, that I ſhould returne, and make relation to this noble man Bragadino, who had ſent mee, that he ſhould come ouer to him at his owne pleaſure, for hee was very deſirous both to ſee and know him, for his great worthineſſe and proweſſe, that hee had tried to be in him, and in the other of his Captaines and Souldiers, of whoſe manhood and courage he would honourably report, where ſoeuer he came, as occaſion ſhould ſerue thereunto: and to conclude, that hee ſhould nothing doubt of any thing: becauſe in no maner of condition hee would ſuffer any violence to be done to thoſe, which remained behind within the Citie. So I ſpeedily returning, made true report of the ſame: and towards night about foure of the clocke, the right honourable Bragadino accompanied with the L. Baglione, with Signior Aluigi Martinengo, with the right worſhipfull Signior Gio. Antonio Querini, with the right worſhipfull Signior Andrea Bragadino, with the knight of Haſte, with the captaine Carlo Ragonaſco, with captaine Franceſco Straco, with captaine Hector of Breſcia, with captaine Girolomo di Sacile, and with other gentlemen and fiftie ſouldiours, the Gouernours and Noble men with their ſwordes, and the ſouldiours with their harquebuzes came foorth of their hold, and went vnto the pauillion of Muſtafa, of whom, all they at the beginning were curteouſly receiued, and cauſed to ſit downe by him, he reaſoning and diſcourſing with them of diuers things, a certaine time, and drawing them from one matter to another, at the laſt vpon a ſudden picked a quarell vnto them, eſpecially burdening that noble Bragadino with an vntrueth, laying to his charge ẏ he had cauſed certaine of his ſlaues in the time that the truce continued betweene thē, to be put to death. The which thing was moſt falſe. So that hee being angry therewith, ſuddenly ſtept foorth, and commaunded them to bee bound. Thus they being vnarmed (not ſuffered at that time to enter into his pauillion, with their former weapons) and bound, were led one by one into the market place, before his pauillion, being preſently cut and hewen in ſunder in his preſence, and laſt of all from that woorthy and noble Bragadino (who being bound as the reſt, and being commaunded twiſe or thriſe to ſtretch foorth his necke, as though hee ſhould haue bene beheaded, the which moſt boldly hee did without any ſparke of feare) his eares were cut off, and cauſing him to bee ſtretched out moſt vilely vpon the ground, Muſtafa talked with him, and blaſphemed the holy name of our Sauiour, demaunding him, where is now thy Chriſt, that hee helpeth thee not? To all the which no anſwere at all was giuen of that honourable gentleman. The earle Hercole Martinengo, which was ſent for one of the hoſtages, who was alſo bound, was hidden by one of Muſtafas eunuches vntill ſuch time as his furie was paſt, afterward his life being graunted him, hee was made the eunuches ſlaue. Three Grecians which were vnder his pauillion were left vntouched. All the ſouldiers which were found in the campe, and all ſortes of Chriſtians to the number of three hundred, were ſuddenly ſlaine, they nothing miſtruſting any ſuch treaſon, or tirannie. The Chriſtian ſouldiers which were embarked a litle before, were linked and fettered with iron chaines, made ſlaues, all things being taken from them, and ſtripped into their ſhirtes.

The propertie of true fortitude is, not to be broken with ſudden terrors.

Muſtafa, coſin germaine to ẏ thiefe, which hong on the left ſide of our Sauiour at his Paſſion.

The ſecond day after this murther was committed, which was the 17. of Auguſt, Muſtafa entred the firſt time into the Citie, and cauſed the valiant and wiſe gouernour Tiepolo to bee hanged, who remained behind, waiting the returne of Signior Bragadino. I being in the citie at that preſent, when other of my countreymen were thus miſerably ſlaine and made ſlaues, hid my ſelfe in certaine of the Grecians houſes the ſpace of fiue dayes, and they not being able to keepe mee in couert any longer for feare of the great penaltie, which was proclaimed agaynſt ſuch tranſgreſſors and concealers, I offred, and gaue my ſelfe ſlaue to one Sangiaccho del Bir, promiſing him fiue hundred * Zechins for my ranſome, with whom I remained in the Campe. The Friday folowing (being the Turkes ſabboth day) this woorthy and pacient gentleman Bragadino was led ſtill in the preſence of that vnfaithfull tirant Muſtafa, to the batteries made vnto the Citie, whereas he being compelled to cary two baſkets of earth, the one vpon his backe, the other in his hand ſlaue-like, to euery ſundry battrie, being enforced alſo to kiſſe the ground as oft as he paſſed by him, was afterward brought vnto the ſea ſide, where he being placed in a chaire to leane and ſtay vpon, was winched vp in that chaire, and faſtened vnto the maineyard of a galley, and hoiſted vp with a crane, to ſhew him to all the Chriſtian ſouldiours and ſlaues (which were in the hauen already ſhipped) hee being afterward let downe, and brought to the market place, the tormenters tooke of his clothes from him, and tacked him vnto the pillorie, whereas he was moſt cruelly flaied quicke; with ſo great conſtancie and faith on his part, that he neuer loſt or abated any iot of his ſtedfaſt courage, being ſo farre from any fainting, that hee at that preſent with moſt ſtout heart reproched them, and ſpake much ſhame of his moſt traiterous dealing in breaking of his faithfull promiſe. At the laſt without any kind of alteration of his conſtancie, he recommending his ſoule vnto almightie God, gaue vp the ghoſt. When hee had thus ended his life (thanks be to God) his ſkin being taken and filled with ſtrawe, was commaunded foorthwith to be hanged vpon the bowſprit of a * Foiſt, and to be caried alongſt the coaſt of Syria by the ſea ſide, that all the port townes might ſee, and vnderſtand who he was.

*Zechini, be certaine pieces of fine gold coined in Venice, euery one of the which is in value ſixe ſhillings eight pence of our mony, & ſomewhat better: & equal altogether to a Turkiſh Byralcom.

*A Foiſt is as it were a Brigandine, being ſomewhat larger then halfe a galley, much vſed of the Turkiſh Curſaros, or as we call them Pirates or Rouers.

This is now ſo much as I am able to declare to your highneſſe by that I ſawe my ſelfe, and can remember whileſt that I was in the Fortreſſe: that alſo which by true relation of others I could vnderſtand, and ſawe alſo my ſelfe in the campe, whileſt I was ſlaue, I will likewiſe briefly vtter vnto you. The enemies armie was in number two hundred thouſand perſons of all ſortes and qualities. Of ſouldiers which tooke pay there were 80. thouſand, beſides the which number, there were 14. thouſand of Giannizzers taken out from all the holdes of Syria, Caramania, Natolia, and part of them alſo which came from the * gate of the great Turke. The venturers with the ſword were 60. thouſand in number. The reaſon, why there were ſo many of this ſort, was becauſe Muſtafa had diſperſed a rumour through the Turkes dominion, that Famaguſta was much more wealthy and rich, then the citie of Nicoſia was: ſo for that cauſe, and by the commodious and eaſie paſſage from Syria ouer into Cyprus, theſe venturers were eaſily induced to come thither. In 75. dayes (all the which time the batterie ſtill continued) 140. thouſand iron pellets were ſhot of, numbred, and ſeene. The chiefe perſonages which were in their armie neere vnto Muſtafa, were theſe following: the Baſſa of Aleppo, the Baſſa of Natolia, Muſafer Baſſa of Nicoſia, the Baſſa of Caramania, the Aga of the Giannizzers, Giambelat *Bey, the Sangiaccho of Tripolis, the *Begliarbei of Greece, the Baſſa of Sciuaſſi and of Maraſco, Ferca Framburaro, the *Sangiaccho of Antipo, Soliman Bey, three Sangiacchos of Arabia, Muſtafa Bey generall of the Venturers, Fergat gouernour of Malathia, the Framburaro of Diuerie, the Sangiaccho of Arabia and other Sangiacchos of leſſer credite, with the number of fourescore thouſand perſons beſides, as by the muſter made by his Commiſſion might well appeare.

*The gate of the great Turke, is as much to ſay, as Conſtantinople: the which they call in the Turkiſh language Stanboll.

The Framburaro which was at Rhodes, was appointed and left gouernour at Famaguſta, and the report was that there ſhould bee left in all the Iſland of Cyprus, twentie thouſand perſons, with two thouſand horſes, many of the which I ſaw, being very leane and euill appoynted for ſeruice. It ſeemeth alſo a thing not impertinent to the matter, to ſignifie to you, how I, by the eſpeciall grace of God, was deliuered out of their cruel hands, I hauing paied within two & fortie dayes (all the which time I was ſlaue) fiue hundred Zechins for my ranſome to him, whoſe priſoner I was, by the meanes of the Conſul for the French merchants, a ligier then at Tripolis, who a litle before came from Tripolis in Syria vnto Cyprus, into the Turkes campe. Yet for all that I had paied this ſumme of money to him, hee would not ſo ſet me at libertie, but fed mee vp ſtill with faire wordes, and promiſed mee that hee would firſt bring mee vnto his gouernement, which abutted vpon a piece of the famous riuer of Euphrates, and afterward diſmiſſe me. The which malice and falſehood of his I perceiuing, determined with my ſelfe to giue him the ſlip, and to flie: ſo I waiting my time, and repairing often to the Citie, at length met with a ſmall Fiſher boate, of the which a poore Grecian was Owner and maſter, with whom in one night with two onely oares and a ſmall ſaile made of two ſhirts, I paſſed ouer from Cyprus vnto Tripolis, being in very great danger of drowning, whereas I remained in couert in the houſe of certaine Chriſtians, vntill the fiue and twentie of September, at what time I departed from thence in a little French ſhippe called Santa Vittor, which came into theſe partes, and as wee rode, wee touched at a part of Cyprus Weſtward, called Capo delle Gatte, where as I came on land, and talking with certaine of the inhabitants of the Villages, who were then by chaunce a Hauking, demaunded of them, how they were intreated of the Turkes, and after what ſort the Iſland was tilled: to the which they anſwered, that they could not poſſiblie bee in worſe pickle then they were at that preſent, not enioying that quietly which was their owne, being made villaines and ſlaues, and almoſt alwayes carying away the Baſtonados, ſo that now (they ſayd) they knew by triall too perfectly the pleaſant and peaceable gouernment of the Chriſtians, wiſhing and praying God that they might ſhortly returne. And concerning the tillage of the Iſland they made anſwere moreouer, that no part of it was plowed or laboured, ſauing onely that mountaine which was towards the Weſt, and that becauſe they were litle troubled with the crueltie of the Turkes, but as for the plaine and Eaſt part of the Iſland, there was ſmall ſeede ſowen therein, but became in a maner deſert, there being left but few inhabitants, and leſſe ſtore of cattell there. Afterward we departing from thence arriued in * Candia, I for my part being clothed in ſackecloth, whereas ſoone after by the great curteſie of the right honourable Signior Latino Orſino, I was new apparelled accordingly, friendly welcommed, and my neceſſitie relieued. From whence I ſhortly after ſayling in a Cypriottes ſhip (thankes be to almightie God) arriued in this Citie in health, and am ſafely come home now at the honorable feete of your highneſſe.

The woorthy enterpriſe of Iohn Foxe an Engliſh man in deliuering 266. Chriſtians out of the captiuitie of the Turkes at Alexandria, the 3. of Ianuarie 1577.

Iohn Foxe taken 1563.

AMong our merchants here in England it is a common voiage to traffike into Spaine: whereunto a ſhip, being called The three halfe Moones, manned with 38. men, and well fenſed with munitions, the better to encounter their enemies withall, and hauing wind & tide, ſet from Portſmouth, 1563. and bended her iourney toward Siuill a citie in Spaine, intending there to traffique with them. And falling neere the Streights, they perceiued thēſelues to be beſet round with eight gallies of the Turkes, in ſuch wiſe, that there was no way for thē to flie or eſcape away, but that either they muſt yeeld or els be ſunke. Which the owner perceiuing, manfully encouraged his company, exhorting them valiantly to ſhew their manhood, ſhewing them that God was their God, and not their enemies, requeſting them alſo not to faint in ſeeing ſuch a heape of their enemies ready to deuour them; putting them in mind alſo, that if it were Gods pleaſure to giue them into their enemies hands, it was not they ẏ ought to ſhew one diſpleaſant looke or countenance thereagainſt; but to take it patiently, & not to preſcribe a day and time for their deliuerance, as the citizens of Bethulia did, but to put themſelues vnder his mercy. And againe, if it were his mind and good will to ſhew his mighty power by thē, if their enemies were ten times ſo many, they were not able to ſtand in their hands; putting them likewiſe in mind of the old and ancient woorthineſſe of their countreymen, who in the hardeſt extremities haue alwayes moſt preuailed and gone away conquerors, yea, and where it hath bene almoſt impoſſible. Such (quoth he) hath bene the valiantneſſe of our countreymen, and ſuch hath bene the mightie power of our God.

With other like incouragements, exhorting them to behaue themſelues manfully, they fell all on their knees making their prayers briefly vnto God: who being all riſen vp againe perceiued their enemies by their ſignes and defiances bent to the ſpoyle, whoſe mercy was nothing els but crueltie, whereupon euery man tooke him to his weapon.

Then ſtood vp one Groue the maſter, being a comely man, with his ſword and target, holding them vp in defiance agaynſt his enemies. So likewiſe ſtood vp the Owner, the Maſters mate, Boateſwaine, Purſer, and euery man well appointed. Nowe likewiſe ſounded vp the drums, trumpets and flutes, which would haue encouraged any man, had he neuer ſo litle heart or courage in him.

Then taketh him to his charge Iohn Foxe the gunner in the diſpoſing of his pieces in order to the beſt effect, and ſending his bullets towards the Turkes, who likewiſe beſtowed their pieces thriſe as faſt toward the Chriſtians. But ſhortly they drew neere, ſo that the bowmen fel to their charge in ſending forth their arrowes ſo thicke amongſt the Gallies, & alſo in doubling their ſhot ſo ſore vpon the gallies, that there were twiſe ſo many of the Turkes ſlaine, as the number of the Chriſtians were in all. But the Turks diſcharged thriſe as faſt againſt the Chriſtians, & ſo long, that the ſhip was very ſore ſtricken & bruiſed vnder water. Which the Turkes perceiuing, made the more haſte to come aboord the Shippe: which ere they could doe, many a Turke bought it deerely with the loſſe of their liues. Yet was all in vaine, and boorded they were, where they found ſo hote a ſkirmiſh, that it had bene better they had not medled with the feaſt. For the Engliſhmen ſhewed themſelues men in deed, in working manfully with their browne bils and halbardes: where the owner, maſter, boateſwaine, and their company ſtoode to it ſo luſtily, that the Turkes were halfe diſmaied. But chiefly the boateſwaine ſhewed himſelf valiant aboue the reſt: for he fared amongſt the Turkes like a wood Lion: for there was none of them that either could or durſt ſtand in his face, till at the laſt there came a ſhot from the Turkes, which brake his whiſtle aſunder, and ſmote him on the breſt, ſo that he fell downe, bidding them farewell, & to be of good comfort, encouraging them likewiſe to winne praiſe by death, rather then to liue captiues in miſery and ſhame. Which they hearing, in deed intended to haue done, as it appeared by their ſkirmiſh: but the preaſe and ſtore of the Turkes was ſo great, that they were not able long to endure, but were ſo ouerpreſſed, that they could not wield their weapons: by reaſon wherof, they muſt needs be taken, which none of them intended to haue bene, but rather to haue died: except onely the maſters mate, who ſhrunke from the ſkirmiſh, like a notable coward, eſteeming neither the valure of his name, nor accounting of the preſent example of his fellowes, nor hauing reſpect to the miſeries, whereunto he ſhould be put. But in fine, ſo it was, that the Turks were victors, whereof they had no great cauſe to reioyce, or triumph. Then would it haue grieued any hard heart to ſee theſe Infidels ſo violently intreating the Chriſtians, not hauing any reſpect of their manhood which they had taſted of, nor yet reſpecting their owne ſtate, how they might haue met with ſuch a bootie, as might haue giuen them the ouerthrow: but no remorſe hereof, or any thing els doth bridle their fierce and tirannous dealing, but that the Chriſtians muſt needs to the gallies, to ſerue in new offices: and they were no ſooner in them, but their garments were pulled ouer their eares, and torne from their backes, and they ſet to the oares.

I will make no mention of their miſeries, being now vnder their enemies raging ſtripes. I thinke there is no man wil iudge their fare good, or their bodies vnloden of ſtripes, and not peſtered with too much heate, and alſo with too much cold: but I will goe to my purpoſe, which is, to ſhew the ende of thoſe, being in meere miſerie, which continually doe call on God with a ſtedfaſt hope that he will deliuer them, and with a ſure faith that he can doe it.

The Engliſhmen caried priſoners vnto an Hauen nere Alexandria.

Nigh to the citie of Alexandria, being a hauen towne, and vnder the dominion of the Turkes, there is a roade, being made very fenſible with ſtrong wals, whereinto the Turkes doe cuſtomably bring their gallies on ſhoare euery yeere, in the winter ſeaſon, and there doe trimme them, and lay them vp againſt the ſpring time. In which road there is a priſon, wherein the captiues & ſuch priſoners as ſerue in the gallies, are put for all that time, vntill the ſeas be calme and paſſable for the gallies, euery priſoner being moſt grieuouſly laden with irons on their legges, to their great paine, and ſore diſabling of them to any labour taking. Into which priſon were theſe Chriſtians put, and faſt warded all the Winter ſeaſon. But ere it was long, the Maſter and the Owner, by meanes of friends, were redeemed: the reſt abiding ſtill by the miſerie, while that they were all (through reaſon of their ill vſage and worſe fare, miſerably ſtarued) ſauing one Iohn Fox, who (as ſome men can abide harder and more miſerie, then other ſome can, ſo can ſome likewiſe make more ſhift, and worke more deuiſes to helpe their ſtate and liuing, then other ſome can doe) being ſomewhat ſkilfull in the craft of a Barbour, by reaſon thereof made great ſhift in helping his fare now and then with a good meale. Inſomuch, til at the laſt, God ſent him fauour in the ſight of the keeper of the priſon, ſo that he had leaue to goe in and out to the road, at his pleaſure, paying a certaine ſtipend vnto the keeper, and wearing a locke about his leg: which libertie likewiſe, ſixe more had vpon like ſufferance: who by reaſon of their long impriſonment, not being feared or ſuſpected to ſtart aſide, or that they would worke the Turkes any miſchiefe, had libertie to go in and out at the ſayd road, in ſuch maner, as this Iohn Fox did, with irons on their legs, and to returne againe at night.

In the yeere of our Lord 1577. in the Winter ſeaſon, the gallies happily comming to their accuſtomed harborow, and being diſcharged of all their maſtes, ſailes, and other ſuch furnitures, as vnto gallies doe appertaine, and all the Maſters and mariners of them being then neſted in their owne homes: there remained in the priſon of the ſaid road two hundred threeſcore and eight Chriſtian priſoners, who had bene taken by the Turks force, and were of ſixteen ſundry nations. Among which there were three Engliſhmen, whereof one was named Iohn Foxe of Woodbridge in Suffolke, the other William Wickney of Portſmouth, in the Countie of Southhampton, and the third Robert Moore of Harwich in the Countie of Eſſex. Which Iohn Fox hauing bene thirteene or fourteene yeres vnder their gentle entreatance, and being too too weary thereof, minding his eſcape, weighed with himſelfe by what meanes it might be brought to paſſe: and continually pondering with himſelf thereof, tooke a good heart vnto him, in hope that God would not be not alwayes ſcourging his children, and neuer ceaſſed to pray him to further his pretended enterpriſe, if that it ſhould redound to his glory.

Not farre from the road, and ſomewhat from thence, at one ſide of the Citie, there was a certaine victualling houſe, which one Peter Vnticaro had hired, paying alſo a certaine fee vnto the keeper of the road. This Peter Vnticaro was a Spaniard borne, and a Chriſtian, and had bene priſoner about thirtie yeeres, and neuer practiſed any meanes to eſcape, but kept himſelfe quiet without touch or ſuſpect of any conſpiracie: vntill that nowe this Iohn Foxe vſing much thither, they brake one to another their mindes, concerning the reſtraint of their libertie and impriſonment. So that this Iohn Fox at length opening vnto this Vnticaro the deuiſe which he would faine put in practiſe, made priuie one more to this their intent. Which three debated of this matter at ſuch times as they could compaſſe to meete together: inſomuch, that at ſeuen weekes ende they had ſufficiently concluded how the matter ſhould be, if it pleaſed God to farther them there-

ro: who making fiue more priuie to this their deuiſe, whom they thought they might ſafely truſt, determined in three nights after to accompliſh their deliberate purpoſe. Whereupon the ſame Iohn Fox, and Peter Vnticaro, and the other ſixe appointed to meete all together in the priſon the next day, being the laſt day of December: where this Iohn Fox certified the reſt of the priſoners, what their intent and deuiſe was, and how and when they minded to bring their purpoſe to paſſe: who therunto perſwaded them without much a doe to further their deuiſe. Which the ſame Iohn Fox ſeeing, deliuered vnto them a ſort of files, which he had gathered together for this purpoſe, by the meanes of Peter Vnticaro, charging them that euery man ſhould be readie diſcharged of his yron by eight of the clocke on the next day at night.

The laſt of December.

On the next day at night, this ſaid Iohn Fox, and his ſixe other companions, being all come to the houſe of Peter Vnticaro, paſſing the time away in mirth for feare of ſuſpect, till the night came on, ſo that it was time for them to put in practiſe their deuiſe, ſent Peter Vnticaro to the maſter of the roade, in the name of one of the Maſters of the citie, with whom this keeper was acquainted, and at whoſe requeſt he alſo would come at the firſt: who deſired him to take the paines to meete him there, promiſing him, that he would bring him backe againe. The keeper agreed to goe with him, willing the warders not to barre the gate, ſaying, that he would not ſtay long, but would come againe with all ſpeede.

Ianuarie.

In the meane ſeaſon, the other ſeuen had prouided them of ſuch weapons, as they could get in that houſe: and Iohn Fox tooke him to an olde ruſtie ſword blade, without either hilt or pomell, which he made to ſerue his turne, in bending the hand ende of the ſword, in ſteed of a pomell, and the other had got ſuch ſpits and glaiues as they found in the houſe.

The keeper now being come vnto the houſe, and perceiuing no light, nor hearing any noyſe, ſtraightway ſuſpected the matter: and returning backward, Iohn Fox ſtanding behind the corner of the houſe, ſtepped foorth vnto him: who perceiuing it to be Iohn Fox, ſaide, O Fox, what haue I deſerued of thee, that thou ſhouldeſt ſeeke my death? Thou villaine (quoth Fox) haſt bene a bloodſucker of many a Chriſtians blood, and now thou ſhalt know what thou haſt deſerued at my handes: wherewith he lift vp his bright ſhining ſword of tenne yeeres ruſt, and ſtroke him ſo maine a blowe, as therewithall his head claue a ſunder, ſo that he fell ſtarke dead to the ground. Whereupon Peter Vnticaro went in, and certified the reſt how the caſe ſtood with the keeper: who came preſently foorth, and ſome with their ſpits ranne him through, and the other with their glaiues hewed him in ſunder, cut off his head, and mangled him ſo, that no man ſhould diſcerne what he was.

Then marched they toward the roade, whereinto they entered ſoftly, where were ſixe warders, whom one of them asked, ſaying, who was there? quoth Fox & his company, all friendes. Which when they were all within, prooued contrary: for, quoth Fox, my maſters, here is not to euery man a man, wherefore looke you play your partes. Who ſo behaued themſelues in deede, that they had diſpatched theſe ſixe quickly. Then Iohn Fox intending not to be barred of his enterpriſe, and minding to worke ſurely in that which he went about, barred the gate ſurely, and planted a Canon againſt it.

Then entred they into the Gailers lodge, where they found the keyes of the fortreſſe & priſon by his bed ſide, and there had they all better weapons. In this chamber was a cheſt, wherein was a rich treaſure, and all in duckats, which this Peter Vnticaro, & two more, opening, ſtuffed themſelues ſo full as they could, betweene their ſhirts and their ſkinne: which Iohn Fox would not once touch, and ſayde, that it was his and their libertie which he ſought for, to the honour of his God, & not to make a marte of the wicked treaſure of the Infidels. Yet did theſe words ſinke nothing into their ſtomackes, they did it for a good intent: ſo did Saul ſaue the fatteſt Oxen, to offer vnto the Lord, that they to ſerue their owne turne. But neither did Saul ſcape the wrath of God therefore, neither had theſe that thing which they deſired ſo, and did thirſt after. Such is Gods iuſtice. He that they put their truſt in, to deliuer them from the tyrannous handes of their enemies, he (I ſay) could ſupply their want of neceſſaries.

Now theſe eight being armed with ſuch weapons, as they thought well of, thinking themſelues ſufficient champions to encounter a ſtronger enemie, and comming vnto the priſon, Fox opened the gates and doores thereof, and called foorth all the priſoners, whom he ſet, ſome to ramming vp the gate, ſome to the dreſſing vp of a certaine gallie, which was the beſt in all the roade, and was called the Captaine of Alexandria, whereinto ſome caried maſtes, ſailes, oares, and other ſuch furniture as doth belong vnto a gallie.

At the priſon were certaine warders, whom Iohn Fox and his companie ſlewe: in the killing of whom, there were eight more of the Turkes, which perceiued them, and got them to the toppe of the priſon: vnto whom, Iohn Fox, and his company, were faine to come by ladders, where they found a hot ſkirmiſh. For ſome of them were there ſlaine, ſome wounded, and ſome but ſcarred, and not hurt. As Iohn Fox was thriſe ſhot through his apparell, and not hurt, Peter Vnticaro, and the other two, that had armed them with the duckats, were ſlaine, as not able to wield themſelues, being ſo peſtered with the weight and vneaſie carying of the wicked and prophane treaſure: and alſo diuerſe Chriſtians were aſwell hurt about that ſkirmiſh, as Turkes ſlaine.

Amongſt the Turkes was one thrall thorowe, who (let vs not ſay that it was ill fortune) fell off from the toppe of the priſon wall, and made ſuch a lowing, that the inhabitants thereabout (as here and there ſcattering ſtoode a houſe or two) came and dawed him, ſo that they vnderſtood the caſe, how that the priſoners were paying their ranſomes: whereupon they raiſed both Alexandria which lay on the weſt ſide of the roade, and a Caſtle which was at the Cities end, next to the roade, and alſo an other Fortreſſe which lay on the Northſide of the roade: ſo that nowe they had no way to eſcape, but one, which by mans reaſon (the two holdes lying ſo vpon the mouth of the roade) might ſeeme impoſſible to be a way for them. So was the red ſea impoſſible for the Iſraelites to paſſe through, the hils and rockes lay ſo on the one ſide, and their enemies compaſſed them on the other. So was it impoſſible, that the wals of Iericho ſhould fall downe, being neither vndermined, nor yet rammed at with engines, nor yet any mans wiſedome, pollicie, or helpe ſet or put thereunto. Such impoſſibilities can our God make poſſible. He that helde the Lyons iawes from renting Daniel aſunder, yea, or yet from once touching him to his hurt: can not he hold the roring canons of this helliſh force? He that kept the fiers rage in the hot burning Ouen, from the three children, that praiſed his name, can not he keepe the fiers flaming blaſtes from among his elect?

Now is the roade fraught with luſtie ſouldiers, labourers, and mariners, who are faine to ſtand to their tackling, in ſetting to euery man his hand, ſome to the carying in of victuals, ſome munitions, ſome oares, and ſome one thing, ſome another, but moſt are keeping their enemie from the wall of the road. But to be ſhort, there was no time miſpent, no man idle, nor any mans labour ill beſtowed, or in vaine. So that in ſhort time, this gally was ready trimmed vp. Whereinto euery man leaped in all haſte, hoyſing vp the ſayles luſtily, yeelding themſelues to his mercie and grace, in whoſe hands are both winde and weather.

Now is this gally on flote, and out of the ſafetie of the roade: now haue the two Caſtles full power vpon the gally, now is there no remedy but to ſinke: how can it be auoided? The canons let flie from both ſides, and the gally is euen in the middeſt, and betweene them both. What man can deuiſe to ſaue it? there is no man, but would thinke it muſt needes be ſunke.

There was not one of them that feared the ſhottes, which went thundring round about their eares, nor yet were once ſcarred or touched, with fiue & forty ſhot, which came from the Caſtles. Here did God hold foorth his buckler, he ſhieldeth now this gally, and hath tried their faith to the vttermoſt. Now commeth his ſpeciall helpe: yea, euen when man thinkes them paſt all helpe, then commeth he himſelfe downe from heauen with his mightie power, then is his preſent remedie moſt readie preſt. For they ſaile away, being not once touched with the glance of a ſhot, and are quickly out of the Turkiſh canons reach. Then might they ſee them comming downe by heapes to the water ſide, in companies like vnto ſwarmes of bees, making ſhew to come after them with gallies, in buſtling themſelues to dreſſe vp the gallies, which would be a ſwift peece of worke for them to doe, for that they had neither oares, maſtes, ſailes, gables, nor any thing elſe ready in any gally. But yet they are carying them into them, ſome into one gally, and ſome into another, ſo that, being ſuch a confuſion amongſt them, without any certaine guide, it were a thing impoſſible to ouertake them: beſide that, there was no man that would take charge of a gally, the weather was ſo rough, and there was ſuch an amazedneſſe amongſt them. And verily I thinke their God was amaſed thereat: it could not be but he muſt bluſh for ſhame, he can ſpeake neuer a word for dulnes, much leſſe can he helpe them in ſuch an extremitie. Well, howſoeuer it is, he is very much to blame, to ſuffer them to receiue ſuch a gybe. But howſoeuer their God behaued himſelfe, our God ſhewed himſelfe a God indeede, and that he was the onely liuing God: for the ſeas were ſwift vnder his faithfull, which made the enemies agaſt to behold them, a ſkilfuller Pilot leades them, and their mariners beſtirre them luſtily: but the Turkes had neither mariners, Pilot, nor any ſkilfull Maſter, that was in a readineſſe at this pinch.

When the Chriſtians were ſafe out of the enemies coaſt, Iohn Fox called to them all, willing them to be thankfull vnto almightie God for their deliuerie, and moſt humbly to fall downe vpon their knees, beſeeching him to aide them vnto their friends land, and not to bring them into another danger, ſith hee had moſt mightily deliuered them from ſo great a thraldome and bondage.

Thus when euery man had made his petition, they fell ſtraight way to their labour with the oares, in helping one another, when they were wearied, and with great labour ſtriuing to come to ſome Chriſtian land, as neere as they could geſſe by the ſtarres. But the windes were ſo diuers, one while driuing them this way, another while that way, that they were now in a newe maze, thinking that God had forſaken them, and left them to a greater danger. And foraſmuch as there were no victuals now left in the gally, it might haue beene a cauſe to them (if they had beene the Iſraelites) to haue murmured againſt their God: but they knew how that their God, who had deliuered them out of Ægypt, was ſuch a louing and mercifull God, as that hee would not ſuffer them to be confounded, in whom he had wrought ſo great a wonder: but what calamitie ſoeuer they ſuſtained, they knew it was but for their further triall, and alſo (in putting them in mind of their farther miſerie) to cauſe them not to triumph and glory in themſelues therefore. Hauing (I ſay) no victuals in the gally, it might ſeeme that one miſerie continually fel vpon an others neck: but to be briefe, the famine grew to be ſo great, that in 28 dayes, wherein they were on the ſea, there died eight perſons, to the aſtoniſhment of all the reſt.

Extremity of famine.

So it fell out, that vpon the 29 day, after they ſet from Alexandria, they fell on the Iſle of Candie, and landed at Gallipoli, where they were made much of by the Abbot and Monks there, who cauſed them to ſtay there, while they were well refreſhed and eaſed. They kept there the ſworde, wherewith Iohn Fox had killed the keeper, eſteeming it as a moſt precious iewell, and hung it vp for a monument.

Iohn Fox his ſword kept as a monument in Gallipoli.

When they thought good, hauing leaue to depart from thence, they ſayled along the coaſt, till they arriued at Tarento, where they ſolde their gallie, and deuided it, euery man hauing a part thereof. The Turkes receiuing ſo ſhamefull a foile at their hand, purſued the Chriſtians, and ſcoured the ſeas, where they could imagine that they had bent their courſe. And the Chriſtians had departed from thence on the one day in the morning, and ſeuen gallies of the Turkes came thither that night, as it was certified by thoſe who followed Fox, and his companie, fearing leaſt they ſhould haue bene met with. And then they came a foote to Naples, where they departed a ſunder, euery man taking him to his next way home. From whence Iohn Fox tooke his iourney vnto Rome, where he was well entertayned of an Engliſhman, who preſented his worthy deede vnto the Pope, who rewarded him liberally, and gaue him his letters vnto the king of Spaine, where he was very well entertained of him there, who for this his moſt worthy enterpriſe gaue him in fee twentie pence a day. From whence, being deſirous to come into his owne countrie, he came thither at ſuch time as he conueniently could, which was in the yeere of our Lorde God, 1579. Who being come into England, went vnto the Court, and ſhewed all his trauell vnto the Councell: who conſidering of the ſtate of this man, in that hee had ſpent and loſt a great part of his youth in thraldome and bondage, extended to him their liberalitie, to helpe to maintaine him now in age, to their right honour, and to the incouragement of all true hearted Chriſtians.

The copie of the certificate for Iohn Fox, and his companie, made by the Prior, and the brethren of Gallipoli, where they firſt landed.

WE the Prior, and Fathers of the Couent of the Amerciates, of the city of Gallipoli, of the order of Preachers doe teſtifie, that vpon the 29 of Ianuary laſt paſt, 1577, there came in to the ſaid citie a certaine gally from Alexandria, taken from the Turkes, with two hundreth fiftie and eight Chriſtians, whereof was principal Maſter Iohn Fox, an Engliſhman, a gunner, and one of the chiefeſt that did accompliſh that great worke, whereby ſo many Chriſtians haue recouered their liberties. In token and remembrance whereof, vpon our earneſt requeſt to the ſame Iohn Fox, he hath left here an olde ſworde, wherewith he ſlewe the keeper of the priſon: which ſword we doe as a monument and memoriall of ſo worthy a deede, hang vp in the chiefe place of our Couent houſe. And for becauſe all things aforeſaid, are ſuch as we will teſtifie to be true, as they are orderly paſſed, and haue therefore good credite, that ſo much as is aboue expreſſed is true, and for the more faith thereof, we the Prior, and Fathers aforeſaide, haue ratified and ſubſcribed theſe preſents. Geuen in Gallipoly, the third of Februarie 1577.

I Frier Vincent Barba, Prior of the ſame place, confirme the premiſſes, as they are aboue written.
I Frier Albert Damaro, of Gallipoly, Subprior, confirme as much.
I Prier Anthony Celleler of Gallipoly, confirme as aforeſaid.
I Prier Bartlemew of Gallipoly, confirme as aboue ſaid.
I Frier Francis of Gallipoly, confirme as much.

The Biſhop of Rome his letters in the behalfe of Iohn Fox.

BE it knowen vnto all men, to whom this writing ſhall come, that the bringer hereof Iohn Fox Engliſhman, a Gunner, after he had ſerued captiue in the Turkes gallies, by the ſpace of foureteene yeeres, at length, thorough God his helpe, taking good oportunitie, the third of Ianuarie laſt paſt, ſlew the keeper of the priſon, (whom he firſt ſtroke on the face) together with foure and twentie other Turkes, by the aſsiſtance of his fellow priſoners: and with 266. Chriſtians (of whoſe libertie he was the author) launched from Alexandria, and from thence arriued firſt at Gallipoly in Candie, and afterwardes at Tarento in Apulia: the written teſtimony and credite of which things, as alſo of others, the ſame Iohn Fox hath in publike tables from Naples.

Vpon Eaſter eue he came to Rome, and is now determined to take his iourney to the Spaniſh Court, hoping there to obtaine ſome reliefe toward his liuing: wherefore the poore diſtreſſed man humbly beſeecheth, and we in his behalfe do in the bowels of Chriſt, deſire you, that taking compaſsion of his former captiuitie, and preſent penurie, you doe not onely ſuffer him freely to paſſe throughout all your cities and townes, but alſo ſuccour him with your charitable almes, the reward whereof you ſhall hereafter moſt aſſuredly receiue, which we hope you will afford to him, whom with tender affection of pitie wee commende vnto you. At Rome, the 20 of Aprill 1577.

Andreas Ludouicus Regiſter to our Soueraigne Lord the Pope, which for the greater credit of the premiſes, haue ſet my ſeale to theſe preſents. At Rome, the day and yeere aboue written.

Mauricius Clement the gouernour and keeper of the Engliſh Hoſpitall in the citie.

The King of Spaine his letters to the Lieutenant, for the placing of Iohn Fox in the office of a Gunner.

TO the illuſtrious Prince, Veſpaſian Gonſaga Colonna, our Lieutenant and Capitaine Generall of our Realme of Valentia. Hauing conſideration, that Iohn Fox Engliſhman hath ſerued vs, and was one of the moſt principall, which tooke away from the Turkes a certaine gallie, which they haue brought to Tarento, wherein were two hundred, fiftie, and eight Chriſtian captiues: we licence him to practiſe, and giue him the office of a Gunner, and haue ordained, that he goe to our ſaid Realme, there to ſerue in the ſaid office in the Gallies, which by our commandement are lately made. And we doe command, that you cauſe to be payed to him eight ducats pay a moneth, for the time that he ſhall ſerue in the ſaide Gallies as a Gunner, or till we can otherwiſe prouide for him, the ſaide eight duckats monethly of the money which is already of our prouiſion, preſent and to come, and to haue regarde of thoſe which come with him. From Eſcuriall the tenth of Auguſt, 1577.

I the King.

And vnder that a confirmation of the Councell.

The renuing and increaſing of an ancient and commodious trade vnto diuerſe places in the Leuant ſeas, and to the chiefeſt partes of all the great Turks dominions, by the meanes of the Right worſh. citizens Sir Edward Oſborne Alderman, and M. Richard Staper marchant of London.

This trade into the Leuant (as is before mentioned, page 96 of this preſent volume, whereunto I referre the Reader) was very vſuall and much frequented from the yeere of our Lord 1511, till the yeere 1534, and afterward alſo, though not ſo commonly, vntill the yeere 1550, when as the barke Aucher vnder the conduct of M. Roger Bodenham made a proſperous voyage vnto Sicilia, Candia, Sio, and other places within the Leuant. Since which time the foreſaid trade (not withſtanding the Grand Signiors ample priuilege granted to M. Anthony Ienkenſon 1553, and the ſtrong and weighty reaſons of Gaſpar Campion for that purpoſe) was vtterly diſcontinued, and in maner quite forgotten, as if it had neuer bene, for the ſpace of 20 yeares and more. Howbeit the diſcreete and worthy citizens Sir Edward Osborne and M. Richard Staper ſeriouſly conſidering what benefite might grow to the common wealth by renuing of the foreſaid diſcontinued trade, to the inlarging of her Maieſties cuſtomes, the furthering of nauigation, the venting of diuerſe generall commodities of this Realme, and the inriching of the citie of London, determined to vſe ſome effectuall meanes for the reeſtabliſhing and augmenting thereof.

Wherefore about the yeere 1575 the foreſaid R. W. marchants at their charges and expenſes ſent Iohn Wight and Ioſeph Clements by the way of Poland to Conſtantinople, where the ſaid Ioſeph remained 18 monethes to procure a ſafe conduct from the grand Signior, for M. William Harborne, then factor for Sir Edward Osborne, to haue free acceſſe into his Highnes dominions, and obtained the ſame.

The voyage of Iohn Wight and Ioſeph Clements to Conſtantinople.

Which buſineſſe after two yeres chargeable trauell and ſuit being accompliſhed, the ſayd M. Harborne the firſt of Iuly 1578 departed from London by the ſea to Hamburgh, and thence accompanied with Ioſeph Clements his guide and a ſeruant, he trauailed to Leopolis in Poland, and then apparelling himſelfe, his guide, and his ſeruant after the Turkiſh faſhion (hauing firſt obteyned the king of Poland his ſafe conduct to paſſe at Camienijecz the frontier towne of his dominions next vnto Turky) by good meanes he obteined fauour of one Acmet Chaus the Turks ambaſſadour then in Poland, and readie to returne to Conſtantinople, to bee receiued into his companie and carouan. And ſo the fourth of September 1578 he departed with the ſaid Acmet from Leopolis in Poland, and trauelling through Moldauia, Valachia, Bulgaria, and Romania, gratifying the Voiauodes with certaine curteſies, he arriued at Conſtantinople the 28 of October next inſuing. Where he behaued himſelfe ſo wiſely and diſcreetely, that within few moneths after he obtained not onely the great Turkes large and ample priuiledge for himſelfe, and the two worſhipfull perſons aforeſaid, but alſo procured his honourable and friendly letters vnto her Maieſtie in maner following.

The firſt voyage of M. William Harborne to Conſtantinople.

The letters ſent from the Imperiall Muſulmanlike highneſſe of Zuldan Murad Can, to the ſacred regall Maieſtie of Elizabeth Queene of England, the fifteenth of March 1579, conteyning the grant of the firſt priuileges.

IN greatnes and glory moſt renowmed Elizabeth, moſt ſacred Queene, and noble prince of the moſt mightie worſhippers of Ieſus, moſt wiſe gouernor of the cauſes and affaires of the people and family of Nazareth, cloud of moſt pleaſant raine, and ſweeteſt fountaine of nobleneſſe and vertue, ladie & heire of the perpetuall happineſſe & glory of the noble Realme of England (whom all ſorts ſeeke vnto and ſubmit themſelues) we wiſh moſt proſperous ſucceſſe and happie ends to all your actions, and do offer vnto you ſuch pleaſures and curteſies as are worthy of our mutuall and eternall familiaritie: thus ending (as beſt beſeemeth vs) our former ſalutations.

In moſt friendly maner we giue you to vnderſtand, that a certaine man hath come vnto vs in the name of your moſt excellent Regall Maieſtie, commending vnto vs from you all kindneſſe, curteſie and friendly offices on your part, and did humbly require that our Imperiall highneſſe would vouchſafe to giue leaue and libertie to him and vnto || two other merchants of your kingdome, to reſort hither and returne againe, and that by way of traffike they might be ſuffered to trade hither with their goods and merchandizes to our Imperiall dominions, and in like ſort to make their returne.

|| Theſe two were Sir Edward Osborne and M. Richard Staper.

Our ſtately Court and Countrey hath beene euer open for the acceſſe both of our enemies and friends. But becauſe we are informed that your moſt excellent Regall Maieſty doth abound with good will, humanitie, & all kind of louing affection towards vs, ſo much the rather ſhall the ſame our Countrey be alwayes open to ſuch of your ſubiects, as by way of merchandize ſhall trade hither: and we will neuer faile to aide & ſuccor any of them that are or ſhal be willing to eſteeme of our friendſhip, fauour, & aſſiſtance: but will reckon it ſome part of our dutie to gratifie them by all good meanes. And forasmuch as our Imperiall highneſſe is giuen to vnderſtand that your moſt excellent Regall Maieſtie doth excell in bountie & curteſie, we therfore haue ſent out our Imperiall commandement to all our kings, iudges, and trauellers by ſea, to all our Captaines and voluntarie ſeafaring men, all condemned perſons, and officers of Ports and cuſtomes, ſtraightly charging and commanding them, that ſuch foreſaid perſons as ſhall reſort hither by ſea from the Realme of England, either with great or ſmall veſſels to trade by way of marchandize, may lawfully come to our imperiall Dominions, and freely returne home againe, and that no man ſhall dare to moleſt or trouble them. And if in like ſort they ſhall come into our dominions by land, either on foote or on horſebacke, no man ſhall at any time withſtand or hinder them: but as our familiars and confederates, the French, Venetians, Polonians, and the ‖ king of Germany, with diuers other our neighbours about vs, haue libertie to come hither, & to returne againe into their owne countreys, in like ſort the marchants of your moſt excellent Regall Maieſties kingdome ſhall haue ſafe conduct and leaue to repayre hither to our Imperiall dominions, and ſo to returne againe into their own Country: ſtraightly charging that they be ſuffered to vſe and trade all kind of marchandize as any other Chriſtians doe, without let or diſturbance of any.

‖ He calleth the Germaine emperor but king of Germanie.

Therefore when theſe our Imperiall letters ſhall be brought to your moſt excellent Regall Maieſtie, it ſhall be meet, according to our beneuolence, humanity, and familiarity towards your moſt excellent Maieſty, that you likewiſe bethinke your ſelfe of your like beneuolence, humanitie and friendſhippe towards vs, to open the gate thereof vnto vs, and to nouriſh by all good meanes this kindneſſe and friendſhip: and that like libertie may be granted by your Highneſſe to our ſubiects and merchants to come with their merchandizes to your dominions, either by ſea with their ſhips, or by land with their wagons or horſes, and to returne home againe: and that your moſt excellent Regall Maieſtie do alwayes declare your humanitie, good will, and friendſhip towards vs, and alwayes keepe open the dore thereof vnto vs.

The Turke demandeth like priuileges for his ſubiects in the Queenes dominions.

Giuen at our citie of Conſtantinople the fifteenth day of March, and in the yeere of our moſt holy Prophet Mahomet ‖ 987.

‖ With vs the yeere 1579.

The anſwere of her Maieſtie to the aforeſaid Letters of the Great Turke, ſent the 25 of October 1579, in the Prudence of London by Maſter Richard Stanley.

ELIZABETHA Dei ter maximi, & vnici cœli terræq; Conditoris gratia, Angliæ, Franciæ & Hiberniæ regina, fidei Chriſtianæ contra omnes omnium inter Chriſtianos degentium, & Chriſti nomen falſò profitentium Idololatrias inuictiſſima & potentiſſima Defenſatrix, auguſtiſſimo, inuictiſſimoq; principi Sultan Murad Can, Turcici regni dominatori potentiſſimo, Imperijq; orientis Monarchæ ſupra omnes ſoli & ſupremo, ſalutē, & multos cum rerum optimarū affluentia fœlices, & fortunatos annos. Auguſtiſſime & inuictiſsime Cæſar, accepimus inuictiſsimæ Cæſareæ veſtræ celſitudinis literas, die decimoquinto Martij currentis anni ad nos ſcriptas Conſtantinopoli, ex quibus intelligimus quàm benignè quàmq; clementer, literæ ſupplices quæ Cæſareæ veſtræ celſitudini a quodam ſubdito noſtro Guilielmo Hareborno in Imperiali Celſitudinis veſtræ ciuitate Conſtantinopoli commorante offerebantur, literæ profectionis pro ſe & ſocijs eius duobus hominibus mercatoribus ſubditis noſtris cum mercibus ſuis ad terras ditioneſq; Imperio veſtro ſubiectas tam per mare quàm per terras, indeq; reuerſionis veniæ poteſtatiſq; humillimam complexæ petitionem, ab inuictiſſima veſtra Cæſarea celſitudine, acceptæ fuerunt. Neq; id ſolùm, ſed quàm mira cum facilitate, dignaq; auguſtiſsma Cæſarea clementia, quod erat in dictis literis ſupplicibus poſitum, ei ſocijſq; ſuis donatum & conceſſum fuit, pro ea, vti videtur, ſolùm opinione, quam de nobis, & noſtra amicitia veſtra celſitudo concepit. Quod ſingulare beneficium in dictos ſubditos noſtros collatum tam gratè tamq; beneuolè accepimus (maximas celſitudini veſtræ propterea & agentes, & habentes gratias) nullo vt vnquam patiemur tempore, pro facultatum noſtrarum ratione, proq; ea quam nobis inſeuit ter maximus mundi monarcha Deus (per quem & cuius auſpicijs regnamus) naturæ bonitate, qua remotiſsimas nos eſſe voluit, & abhorrentes ab ingratitudinis omni vel minima ſuſpitione, docuitq; nullorum vnquam vt principum, vllis in nos meritis nos ſineremus vinci, aut ſuperari, vt apud ingratam principem tantum beneficium depoſuiſſe, ſe veſtra Celſitudo exiſtimet. Proptereaq; animum noſtrum inpræſentiarum veſtræ celſitudini emetimur, benè ſentiendo & prædicando, quantopere nos obſtrictas beneficij huius in ſubditos noſtros collati putemus memoriâ ſempiternâ: longè vberiorem, & ampliorem gratitudinis erga veſtram celſitudinem noſtræ teſtificationem daturæ, cum tempora incident vt poſsimus, & à nobis deſiderabitur. Quoniam autem quæ noſtris paucis ſubditis, eaq; ſuis ipſorum precibus, ſine vlla interceſsione noſtra conceſſa donatio eſt, in æquè libera poteſtate ſita eſt ad omnes terras ditioneſq; Imperio veſtro ſubiectas, cum mercibus ſuis tam per mare quàm per terras eundi & redeundi, atq; inuictiſsimę Cæſareæ veſtræ celſitudinis confœderatis, Gallis, Polonis, Venetis, atq; adeo regis Romanorum ſubditis largita vnquam aut donata

The ſame in Engliſh.

Elizabeth by the grace of the moſt mightie God, and onely Creatour of heauen and earth, of England, France and Ireland Queene, the moſt inuincible and moſt mighty defender of the Chriſtian faith againſt all kinde of idolatries, of all that liue among the Chriſtians, and falſly profeſſe the Name of Chriſt, vnto the moſt Imperiall and moſt inuincible prince, Zuldan Murad Can, the moſt mightie ruler of the kingdome of Turkie, ſole and aboue all, and moſt ſoueraigne Monarch of the Eaſt Empire, greeting, and many happy and fortunate yeeres, with abundance of the beſt things.

Moſt Imperiall and moſt inuincible Emperour, wee haue receiued the letters of your mightie highneſſe written to vs from Cõſtantinople the fifteenth day of March this preſent yere, whereby we vnderſtand how graciouſly, and how fauorably the humble petitions of one William Hareborne a ſubiect of ours, reſident in the Imperial citie of your highnes preſented vnto your Maieſtie for the obteining of acceſſe for him and two other Marchants more of his company our ſubiects alſo, to come with marchandizes both by ſea and land, to the countreis and territories ſubiect to your gouernment, and from thence againe to returne home with good leaue and libertie, were accepted of your moſt inuincible Imperiall highneſſe, and not that onely, but with an extraordinarie ſpeed and worthy your Imperiall grace, that which was craued by petition was granted to him, and his company in regard onely (as it ſeemeth) of that opinion which your highneſſe conceiued of vs and our amitie: which ſingular benefit done to our aforeſaid ſubiects, wee take ſo thankefully, and in ſo good part (yeelding for the ſame our greateſt thanks to your highneſſe) that we will neuer giue occaſion to your ſaid highneſſe (according as time, and the reſpect of our affaires will permit) once to thinke ſo great a pleaſure beſtowed vpon an vngratefull Prince. For the Almighty God, by whom, and by whoſe grace we reigne, hath planted in vs this goodneſſe of nature, that wee deteſt and abhorre the leaſt ſuſpition of ingratitude, and hath taught vs not to ſuffer our ſelues to bee ouermatched with the good demerits of other Princes. And therefore at this time wee doe extende our good minde vnto your highneſſe, by well conceiuing, and publiſhing alſo abroad, how much we repute our ſelfe bound in an euerlaſting remembrance for this good pleaſure to our Subiects, meaning to yeelde a much more large and plentifull teſtification of our thankefulneſſe, when time conuenient ſhall fall out, and the ſame ſhall bee looked for at our handes.

But whereas that graunt which was giuen to a fewe of our Subiects, and at their onely requeſt without any interceſſion of ours, ſtandeth in as free a libertie of comming and going to and from all the lands and kingdoms ſubiect to your Maieſtie, both by land & ſea with marchandizes, as euer was granted to any of your Imperiall highneſſe confederates, as namely to the French, the Polonians, the Venetians, as alſo to the ſubiects of the king of the Romanes, wee deſire of your highneſſe that the commendation of ſuch ſingular curteſie may not bee ſo narrowly reſtrained to two or three men onely, but may be inlarged to all our ſubiects in generall, that thereby your highneſſe goodneſſe may appeare the more notable, by reaſon of the graunting of the ſame to a greater number of perſons. The beſtowing of which ſo ſingular a benefit your highneſſe ſhall ſo much the leſſe repent you of, by howe much the more fit and neceſſary for the vſe of man thoſe commodities are, wherewith our kingdomes doe abound, and the kingdomes of other princes doe want, ſo ẏ there is no nation that can be without them; but are glad to come by them, although by very long and difficult trauels: and when they haue them, they ſell them much deerer to others, becauſe euery man ſeeketh to make profite by his labour: ſo that in the getting of them there is profit, but in the buying of them from others there is loſſe. But this profite will be increaſed to the ſubiects of your highneſſe by this free acceſſe of a few of our ſubiects to your dominions, as alſo the loſſe and burden wilbe eaſed, by the permiſſion of generall acceſſe to all our people. And furthermore we will graunt as equall and as free a libertie to the ſubiects of your highneſſe with vs for the vſe of traffique, when they wil, and as often as they wil, to come, and go to and from vs and our kingdomes. Which libertie wee promiſe to your highneſſe ſhalbe as ample, and as large as any was euer giuen or granted to your ſubiects by the aforeſaide princes your confederats, as namely the king of the Romanes, of France, of Poland, and the common wealth of Venice. In which matter, if your moſt inuincible Imperiall highneſſe ſhall vouchſafe to incline to our reaſonable requeſt, and ſhall giue order vpon theſe our letters, that wee may haue knowledge how the ſame is accepted of you, and whether it wilbe granted, with ſufficient ſecuritie for our ſubiects to go, and returne ſafe and ſecure from all violences and iniuries of your people, we on the other ſide wil giue order, that thoſe commodities which Almighty God hath beſtowed vpon our kingdomes (which are in deed ſo excellent, that by reaſon of them all princes are drawen to enter, and confirme leagues of amitie and good neighborhood with vs, by that meanes to enioy theſe ſo great bleſſings of God, which we haue, and they can in no caſe want) our ſubiects ſhall bring them ſo abundantly and plentifully to the kingdomes and dominions of your highneſſe, that both the former inconueniences of neceſſitie, and loſſe, ſhall moſt ſufficiently be taken away.

Moreouer the ſignification and aſſurance of your highneſſe great affection to vs and our nation, doeth cauſe vs alſo to intreat and vſe mediation on the behalfe of certaine of our ſubiects, who are deteined as ſlaues and captiues in your Gallies, for whom we craue, that foraſmuch as they are fallen into that miſery, not by any offence of theirs, by bearing of armes againſt your highneſſe, or in behauing of themſelues contrary to honeſtie, and to the law of nations, they may be deliuered from their bondage, and reſtored to libertie, for their ſeruice towardes vs, according to their duetie: which thing ſhall yeeld much more abundant cauſe to vs of commending your clemencie, and of beſeeching that God (who onely is aboue all things, and all men, and is a moſt ſeuere reuenger of all idolatrie, and is ielous of his honour againſt the falſe gods of the nations) to adorne your moſt inuincible Imperiall highneſſe with all the bleſſings of thoſe gifts, which onely and deſeruedly are accounted moſt worthy of aſking.

Giuen at our palace of Greenwich, neere to our Citie of London, the fiue and twentieth day of October, in the yeere of Ieſus Chriſt our Sauiour one thouſand, fiue hundreth, ſeuentie and nine, and of our reigne the one and twentieth.

The charter of the priuileges granted to the Engliſh, & the league of the great Turke with the Queenes Maieſtie in reſpect of traffique, dated in Iune 1580.

Immenſa & maxima ex poteſtate potentiſſimi, terribilibúſque verbis & nunquam finienda innumerabilique clementia & ineffabili auxilio ſanctiſſimi & pura mente colendiſſimi tremendiſſimiq; vniuerſitatum creatoris, princeps temporum pręſentium, vnicus modernæ ætatis monarcha, totius orbis terrarum potentibus ſceptra diuidere potens, clementiæ, gratiæq; diuinæ vmbra, regnorum prouinciarúmue, & vrbium ciuitatúmue diſtributor permultarum: Nos ſacratiſſimus Cæſar Muzulmanicus, Mecchæ, id eſt domus diuinæ, Medinæ, glorioſiſſimæ & beatiſſimæ Ieruſalem, Aegypti fertiliſſimæ, Iemen & Zouan, Eden & Canan, Sami paciferæ & Hebes, Iabza & Pazra, Zeruzub & Halepiæ, Caramaniæ & Diabekiruan & Dulkadiriæ, Babyloniæ, & totius triplicis Arabiæ, Euzorum & Georgianorum, Cypri diuitis, & regnorum Aſiæ, Ozakior, Camporum Maris albi & nigri, Græciæ & Meſopotamiæ, Africæ & Goletæ, Algeris & Tripolis occidentalis, ſelectiſſimæq; Europæ, Budæ, & Temeſuar, & regnorum tranſalpinorum, & his ſimilium permultorum princeps Cæſarúq; ſacratiſſimus, potentiſſimus Murad Can, filius principis Zelim Can, qui fuit Zoleiman Can, qui fuit Zelim Can, qui fuit Paiezid Can, qui fuit Mehemed Can, &c.

Nos princeps potentiſſimus Murad Can hoc in ſignum noſtræ Cæſareæ amicitiæ ſignificamus manifeſtamus, quòd in temporibus modernis Regina Angliæ, Franciæ & Hiberniæ Elizabetha in Chriſtianitate honoratiſſima Regina (cuius mercatorum exitus ſit fœliciſſimus) ad noſtram excelſam, & iuſtitiæ plenam, fulgidiſſimamue portam, quæ omnibus principibus mundi eſt refugium & requies, per egregium Gulielmum Harebornum literas miſit ſuas, quibus ſua maieſtas ſignificauit, quod tempore præterito quidam ſubditi ſui veniſſent ad noſtram portam excelſam, & ſuam obedientiam erga eam demonſtrauiſſent, & ob eam cauſam illis quoque ad noſtras ditiones mercandi gratia venire & redire poſcerent, venia & poteſtas fuiſſet data: & quòd in locis & hoſpitijs eorum per mare & terram nemo auderet impedire & illis damnum facere, mandatum Cęſareum fuiſſet datum: & quòd hanc noſtram gratiam, quam paucis hominibus ſuæ maieſtatis demonſtrauiſſemus, vniuerſis ſuis ſubditis concederemus, petebat. Quare, quemadmodum cum ſereniſſimis beneuolentiam & obedientiam, ſeruitiáue ſua demonſtrantibus erga noſtram portam excelſam regibus & principibus confœderatis (vt ſunt rex Gallorum, Veneti, & rex Polonorum, & cæteri) pacem & fœdus ſanctiſſimum pepigimus: ſic etiam cum præfata Regina amicitiam cuſtodiendam, pacem & fœdus coniunximus. Illius igitur homines, & vniuerſi mercatores, ſine aliquo impedimento cum ſuis mercibus & oneribus cunctis ad noſtras ditiones Cæſareas pacificè & ſecurè veniant, & ſuam exerceant mercaturam, maneant in ſuis ſtatibus, & ſecundum ſuos mores negocientur. Et adhæc, ſua maieſtas ſignificabat ex hominibus ſuis aliquos iamdudum captos fuiſſe, & in captiuitate detineri, & quòd hi dimitterentur petebat, & quòd ſicut alijs principibus nobiſcum confœderatis priuilegia & mandata Cæſarea ſuper fœdus ſanctiſſimum dediſſemus, ſic præfatæ quoque Reginæ priuilegium & mandata Cæſarea vt daremus, noſtræ Cæſareæ celſitudini placeret. Quare ſecundùm noſtram beneuolentiam & gratiam innatam, optata ſuę maieſtatis apud nos grata fuere: Et hoc noſtrum priuilegium iuſtitijs plenum dedimus maieſtati ſuæ: Et Beglerbegis, Zanziacbegis famulis noſtris, & Kazijs, id eſt, iudicibus, & omnibus teloniatoribus omnium locorum, portuum, & vadorum firmiter mandamus, vt donec ex parte pręfatæ reginæ fœdus, & pax, & eorum conditiones articulíque (vt conuenit) cuſtodiuntur & ſeruantur, noſtræ quóque Cæſareæ celſitudinis mandata ſunt:

Fœdus Turcici Imperatoris cum Regina initum.

Articuli huius priuilegij.

1 Vt præfatæ Reginę homines, & ſubditi eius quibuslibet rebus & mercibus, oneribus & ſupellectilibus per mare in magnis & paruis nauibus, per terram autem homines cum oneribus & pecoribus, ſecurè & pacificè ad noſtras ditiones Cæſareas veniant, & nemo illis noceat, ſed ſecurè & ſine aliquo impedimento negocientur, & in ſuis ſtatibus & conditionibus permaneant.

2 Item, ſi præfati homines & mercatores in ſuis rectis vijs & negociationibus aliquo modo caperentur, ſine aliqua tergiuerſatione dimittantur, liberentúrque.

3 Item, ſi naues eorum ad aliquos portus & loca venire voluerint, pacificè omni in tempore, & ſine impedimento veniant, & diſcedant in ſua loca.

4 Item, ſi in tempeſtatibus maris naues eorum eſſent in periculo & auxilio opus eſſet illis, naues noſtræ Cæſareæ celſitudinis, earúmque homines, & aliorum naues hominéſque ſtatim auxilium & opem ferant illis, mandamus.

5 Item, ſi edulia ſuis pecunijs emere voluerint, nemo reſiſtat illis, ſed ſine impedimento edulia emant.

6 Item, ſi infortunium maris naues eorum in terram proiecerit, Begi & iudices, & cęteri noſtri ſubditi ſint auxilio illis, merces & res eorum quę remanſerint iterum reddantur illis, & nemo impediat illos.

7 Item, ſi præfatæ reginæ homines, eorum interpretes, & mercatores, ſiue per terram, ſiue per mare mercandi gratiâ ad noſtras ditiones venire velint, legitimo telonio, & vectigali reddito, pacificè vagentur, capitanei & reges maris & nauium, & aliud genus hominum per mare vagantium in perſonis, & rebus eorum, pecoribúſque, ne noceant illis.

8 Item, ſi aliquis ex Anglis debitor, aut ęre alieno eſſet obſtrictus, inuenirique non poſſit, ratione debitorum alterius nullus niſi eſſet fideiuſſor capiatur aut impediatur.

9 Item, ſi Anglus teſtamentum fecerit, & ſua bona cuicúnque legauerit, illi dentur bona illius, & ſi ſine teſtamento moreretur, conſul eorum cuicúnque ſociorum mortui hominis dixerit debere dari, illi dentur bona mortui hominis.

10 Item, ſi Angli, & ad Angliam pertinentium locorum mercatores & interpretes, in vendendis & emendis mercibus fideiuſſionibus & rebus aliquid negocij habuerint, ad iudicem veniant, & in librum inſcribi faciant negotium, & ſi voluerint, literas quóque accepiant à iudice, propterea quòd ſi aliquid inciderit, videant librum & literas, & ſecundùm tenorem eorum perficiantur negocia eorum ſuſpecta: ſi autem néque in librum inſcriberentur, néque literas haberent, iudex falſa teſtimonia non admittat, ſed ſecundùm iuſtitiam legem adminiſtrans non ſinat illos impediri.

11 Item, ſi aliquis diceret, quod iſti Chriſtiani noſtræ fidei Muzulmanicæ maledixerint, & eam vituperijs affecerint, in hoc negotio etiam & alijs, teſtes falſi minimè admittantur.

12 Item, ſi aliquis eorum aliquod facinus patrarét, & fugiens non poſſit inueniri, nullus niſi eſſet fideiuſſor pro alterius facto retineatur.

13 Item, ſi aliquod mancipium Anglicum inueniretur, & conſul eorũ peteret illud, examinetur diligenter mancipium, & ſi inuentum fuerit Anglicum, accipiatur, & reddatur Anglis.

14 Item, ſi aliquis ex Anglis huc venerit habitandi aut mercandi gratiâ, ſiue ſit vxoratus, ſiue ſit ſine vxore, non ſoluat cenſum.

15 Item, ſi in Alexandria, in Damaſco, in Samia, in Tunis, in Tripoli occidentali, in Aegypti portubus & in alijs omnibus locis, vbicúnq; voluerint facere Conſules, faciant: Et iterum ſi voluerint eos mutare, & in loco priorũ conſulum alios locare, liberè faciant, & nemo illis reſiſtat.

16 Item, ſi illorum interpres in arduis negotijs occupatus abeſſet, donec veniret interpres, expectetur, & interim nemo illos impediat.

17 Item, ſi Angli inter ſe aliquam litem haberent & vellent ad ſuos conſules ire, nemo reſiſtat illis, ſed liberè veniant ad Conſules ſuos, vt ſecundùm mores eorum finiatur lis orta.

18 Item, ſi poſt tempus aut datum huius priuilegij, piratæ, aut alij aliqui liberi gubernatores nauium per mare vagantes, aliquem ex Anglis ceperint, & trans mare vel cis mare venderint, ſecundùm iuſtitiam examinetur: & ſi Anglus inuentus fuerit, & religionem Muzulmanicam aſſumpſerit, liberè dimittatur: ſi autem adhuc eſſet Chriſtianus, Anglis reddatur, & emptores ſuam pecuniam ab illo petant, à quo emerant.

19 Item, ſi noſtræ Cæſareæ Celſitudinis naues armatæ exiuerint ad mare, & ibi inuenerint naues Anglicas merces portantes, nemo impediat illas, imò amicè tractentur, & nullum damnum faciant illis: Quemadmodum Gallis, Venetis, & cæteris nobiſcum confœderatis regibus, & principibus priuilegium, & articulos priuilegijs dedimus, & conceſſimus, ſimili modo his quóque Anglis priuilegium & articulos priuilegijs dedimus & conceſſimus, & contra legem diuinam, & hoc priuilegium, nemo vnquam aliquid audeat facere.

20 Item, ſi naues magnæ, & paruæ in itinere & loco vbi ſtant detinebuntur, nemo illos audeat impedire, ſed potiùs auxilio ſint illis.

21 Item, ſi latrones & fures vi raperent naues illorum, nauiúmque merces, magna diligentia quærantur latrones & fures, & ſeueriſſimè puniantur.

22 Ad extremum, Beglerbegij, & Zanziacbegi, Capitanei noſtri, Mancipia, & per mare nauigantes ſerui Capitaneorum, & Iudices, & Teloniatores, & Gubernatores nauium Reiz dicti, & liberi Reiz, omnes iſti præfati, ſecundùm tenorem huius priuilegij, tenorémue articulorum eius, omnia facere teneantur, & debeant. Et donec hoc in priuilegio deſcriptum fœdus, & pax illius Maieſtatis ex parte ſanctè ſeruabitur, & cuſtodietur, ex parte etiam noſtra Cæſarea cuſtodiri, & obſeruari mandamus.

The

The interpretation of the letters, or priuilege of the moſt mightie and Muſumanlike Emperour Zuldan Murad Can, granted at the requeſt of Elizabeth by the grace of the moſt mightie God, and only Creator of heauen and earth, of England, France and Ireland Queene, confirming a peace and league betwixt both the ſaid Princes and their ſubiects.

WE moſt ſacred Muſulmanlike Emperour, by the infinite and exceeding great power, by the euerlaſting and wonderfull clemencie, & by the vnſpeakable helpe of the moſt mighty & moſt holy God, creator of all things, to be worſhipped and feared with all pureneſſe of minde, and reuerence of ſpeech, The prince of theſe preſent times, the onely Monarch of this age, able to giue ſcepters to the potentates of the whole world, the ſhadow of the diuine mercy and grace, the diſtributer of many kingdoms, prouinces, townes and cities, Prince, and moſt ſacred Emperour of Mecca, that is to ſay, of Gods houſe, of Medina, of the moſt glorious and bleſſed Ieruſalem, of the moſt fertile Egypt, Iemen and Iouan, Eden and Canaan, of Samos the peaceable, and of Hebes, of Iabza, and Pazra, of Zeruzub and Halepia, of Caramaria and Diabekiruan, of Dulkadiria, of Babylon, and of all the three Arabias, of the Euzians and Georgians, of Cyprus the rich, and of the kingdomes of Aſia, of Ozakior, of the tracts of the white and blacke Sea, of Grecia and Meſopotamia, of Africa and Goleta, of Alger, and of Tripolis in the Weſt, of the moſt choiſe and principall Europe, of Buda and Temeſwar, and of the kingdomes beyond the Alpes, and many others ſuch like, moſt mightie Murad Can, the ſonne of the Emperour Zelim Can, which was the ſonne of Zoleiman Can, which was the ſonne of Zelim Can, which was the ſonne of Paiizid Can, which was the ſonne of Mehemed Can, &c.

We moſt mightie prince Murad Can, in token of our Imperiall friendſhip, doe ſignifie and declare, that now of late Elizabeth Queene of England, France and Ireland, the moſt honourable Queene of Chriſtendom (to whoſe marchants we wiſh happy ſucceſſe) ſent her letters by her worthy ſeruant William Hareborne vnto our ſtately and moſt magnificent Porch repleniſhed with iuſtice, which is a refuge and Sanctuary to all the princes of the world, by which letters her Maieſtie ſignified, that whereas heretofore certaine of her ſubiects had repaired to our ſaide ſtately Porche, and had ſhewed their obedience to the ſame, and for that cauſe had deſired that leaue and libertie might alſo be granted vnto them, to come and goe for traffiques ſake too and from our dominions, and that our Imperial commandement might be giuen, that no man ſhould preſume to hurt or hinder them, in any of their abodes or paſſages by ſea or land, and whereas ſhee requeſted that we would graunt to all her ſubiects in generall, this our fauour, which before wee had extended onely to a fewe of her people: therefore as wee haue entred into amitie, and moſt holy league with the moſt excellent kings and princes our confederats, ſhewing their deuotion, and obedience or ſeruices towards our ſtately Porch (as namely the French king, the Venetians, the king of Polonia and others) ſo alſo we haue contracted an inuiolable amitie, peace and league with the aforeſaid Queene. Therefore wee giue licence to all her people, and marchants, peaceably and ſafely to come vnto our Imperiall dominions, with all their marchandiſe and goods without any impeachment, to exerciſe their traffique, to vſe their owne cuſtomes, and to buy and ſell according to the faſhions of their owne country.

And further her Maieſtie ſignified vnto vs, that certaine of her people had heretofore bene taken priſoners, and were detained in captiuitie, and required that they might bee ſet at libertie, and that as we had granted vnto other Princes our confederats, priuileges, and Imperiall decrees, concerning our moſt inuiolable league with them, ſo it would pleaſe our Imperial Maieſty to graunt and confirme the like priuileges, and princely decrees to the aforeſaid Queene.

Wherefore according to our humanitie and gracious ingraffed diſpoſition, the requeſts of her Maieſtie were accepted of vs, and we haue granted vnto her Maieſtie this priuilege of ours agreeable to reaſon & equitie. And we ſtraightly command all our Beglerbegs, and Zanziacbegs our ſeruants, and our Reyz, that is to ſay, our Iudges, and all our cuſtomers in all places, hauens and paſſages, that as long as this league and amitie with the conditions, and articles thereof, are kept and obſerued on the behalfe of the aforeſaid Queene, 1 Our Imperiall commandement and pleaſure is, that the people and ſubiects of the ſame Queene, may ſafely and ſecurely come to our princely dominions, with their goods and marchandiſe, and ladings, and other commodities by ſea, in great and ſmal veſſels, and by land with their carriages and cattels, and that no man ſhall hurt them, but they may buy and ſell without any hinderance, and obſerue the cuſtomes and orders of their owne country.

2 Item, if the aforeſaid people and marchants ſhalbe at any time in the courſe of their iourneis and dealings by any meanes taken, they ſhall be deliuered and inlarged, without any excuſe or cauillation.

3 Item, if their ſhips purpoſe to ariue in any of our ports and hauens, it ſhalbe lawfull for them ſo to do in peace, and from thence againe to depart, without any let or impediment.

4 Item, if it ſhall happen that any of their ſhips in tempeſtuous weather ſhall bee in danger of loſſe and periſhing, and thereupon ſhall ſtand in need of our helpe, we will, and command that our men and ſhips be ready to helpe and ſuccour them.

5 Item, if they ſhalbe willing to buy any victuals for their money, no perſon ſhall withſtand them, but they ſhall buy the ſame without any diſturbance to the contrary.

6 Item, if by any caſualtie their ſhippes ſhall bee driuen on ſhoare in perill of ſhipwracke, our Begs and Iudges, and other our Subiects ſhall ſuccour them, and ſuch wares, and goods of theirs as ſhall bee recouered from the loſſe, ſhall bee reſtored to them, and no man ſhall wrong them.

7 Item, if the people of the aforeſayd Queene, their interpreters and marchants, ſhall for traffique ſake, either by lande or Sea repaire to our dominions paying our lawfull toll and cuſtome, they ſhall haue quiet paſſage, and none of our Captaines or gouernours of the Sea, and ſhippes, nor any kinde of perſons, ſhall either in their bodies, or in their goods and cattels, any way moleſt them.

8 Item, if any Engliſhman ſhall grow in debt, and ſo owe money to any other man, and thereupon doth abſent himſelfe that he can not be found, let no man be arreſted or apprehended for any other mans debt, except he be the ſurety.

9 Item, if any Engliſhman ſhall make his will and teſtament, to whom ſoeuer by the ſame hee ſhall giue his goods, the partie ſhall haue them accordingly, and if hee die inteſtate, hee to whom the Conſull or gouernour of the ſocietie ſhall ſay the goods of the dead are to bee giuen, hee ſhall haue the ſame.

10 Item, if the Engliſhmen or the marchants and interpreters of any places vnder the iuriſdiction of England ſhall happen in the buying and ſelling of wares, by promiſes or otherwiſe to come in controuerſie, let them go to the Iudge, and cauſe the matter to be entred into a booke, and if they wil, let them alſo take letters of the Iudge teſtifying the ſame, that men may ſee the booke and letters, whatſoeuer thing ſhall happen, and that according to the tenour thereof the matter in controuerſie and in doubt may be ended: but if ſuch things be neither entred in booke, nor yet the perſons haue taken letters of the Iudge, yet he ſhall admit no falſe witneſſe, but ſhall execute the Law according to iuſtice, and ſhall not ſuffer them to be abuſed.

11 Item, if any man ſhall ſay, that theſe being Chriſtians haue ſpoken any thing to the derogation of our holy faith and religion, and haue ſlandered the ſame, in this matter as in all others, let no falſe witneſſes in any caſe be admitted.

12 Item, if any one of them ſhall commit any great crime, and flying thereupon cannot bee found, let no man be arreſted, or detained for another mans fact, except he be his ſuretie.

13 Item, if any ſlaue ſhall be found to be an Engliſhman, and their Conſull or gouernour ſhall ſue for his libertie, let the ſame ſlaue be diligently examined, and if hee be found in deed to be Engliſh, let him be diſcharged and reſtored to the Engliſhmen.

14 Item, if any Engliſhman ſhall come hither either to dwel or traffique, whether hee be married or vnmarried, he ſhall pay no polle or head money.

15 Item, if either in Alexandria, Damaſco, Samos, Tunis, Tripolis in yͤ weſt, the port townes of Ægypt, or in any other places, they purpoſe to chooſe to themſelues Conſuls or gouernours, let them doe ſo, and if they will alter them at any time, and in the roome of the former Conſuls place others, let them do ſo alſo, and no man ſhall reſtraine them.

16 Item, if their interpreter ſhalbe at any time abſent, being occupied in other ſerious matters, let the thing then in queſtion bee ſtayed and differred till his comming, and in the meane time no man ſhall trouble them.

17 Item, if any variance or controuerſie ſhall ariſe among the Engliſhmen, and thereupon they ſhall appeale to their Conſuls or gouernours, let no man moleſt them, but let them freely doe ſo, that the controuerſie begunne may be finiſhed according to their owne cuſtomes.

18 Item, if after the time and date of this priuilege, any pirats or other free gouernours of ſhips trading the Sea ſhall take any Engliſhman, and ſhall make ſale of him, either beyonde the Sea, or on this ſide of the Sea, the matter ſhalbe examined according to iuſtice, and if the partie ſhalbe found to be Engliſh, and ſhall receiue the holy religion, then let him freely be diſcharged, but if he wil ſtill remaine a Chriſtian, let him then be reſtored to the Engliſhmen, and the buyers ſhall demaund their money againe of them who ſolde the man.

19 Item, if the ſhips of warre of our Imperiall highneſſe ſhal at any time goe forth to Sea, and ſhall finde any Engliſh ſhips laden with marchandiſe, no man ſhall hinder them, but rather ſhall vſe them friendly, and doe them no wrong, euen as wee haue giuen and granted articles, and priuileges to the French, Venetians, and other Kings and princes our confederats, ſo alſo wee haue giuen the like to the Engliſh: and contrary to this our diuine lawe and priuilege, let no man preſume to doe any thing.

20 Item, if either their great or ſmall ſhips ſhall in the courſe of their voyage, or in any place to which they come, bee ſtayed or arreſted, let no man continue the ſame arreſt, but rather helpe and aſſiſt them.

21 Item, if any theeues and robbers ſhall by force take away any of their ſhips, and marchandiſe, let the ſame theeues and robbers be ſought, and ſearched for with all diligence, and let them be puniſhed moſt ſeuerely.

22 Laſt of all the Beglerbegs, and Zanziacbegs, our Captaines, our ſlaues and ſeruants of Captaines vſing the ſea, and our Iudges, cuſtomers and gouernours of ſhips called Reiz, and free Reiz, all theſe, according to the tenor of this priuilege and articles, ſhalbe bound to doe accordingly: and, as long as the Queene of England on her part ſhall duely keepe and obſerue this league and holy peace, expreſſed in this priuilege, we alſo for our Imperial part, do charge and commaund the ſame ſo long to be ſtraightly kept and obſerued.

Her Maieſties letter to the Turke or Grand Signior 1581. promiſing redreſſe of the diſorders of Peter Baker of Ratcliffe, committed in the Leuant.

Elizabeth by the diuine grace of the eternall God, of England, France and Ireland moſt ſacred Queene, and of the moſt Chriſtian faith, againſt all the prophaners of his moſt holy Name the zealous and mightie defendour, &c. To the moſt renowned and Emperious Cæſar, Sultan Murad Can, Emperour of all the dominions of Turkie, and of all the Eaſt Monarchie chiefe aboue all others whoſoeuer, moſt fortunate yeeres with the ſucceſſe of al true happineſſe. As with very great deſire we wiſh and embrace the loue and amitie of forreine Princes, and in the ſame by al good duetics and meanes we ſeeke to be confirmed: ſo to vs there may bee nothing more grieuous and diſliking, then that any thing ſhould happen through the default of our Subiects, which any way might bring our faith and fidelitie into ſuſpition: Although wee are not ignorant how many good princes by the like miſaduenture be abuſed, where the doings of the Subiects are imputed to the want of good gouernment. But ſuch matters of importance and ſo well approued we may not omit: ſuch is to vs the ſacred eſtimation of our honour, and of our Chriſtian profeſſion, as we would the ſame ſhould appeare aſwell in the concluding of our promiſes and agreements, as in the faithfull performing of the ſame.

The matter which by theſe our letters wee ſpecially beholde, is a moſt iniurious and grieuous wrong which of late came vnto our vnderſtanding, that ſhould be done vnto certaine of your ſubiects by certaine of our Subiects, as yet not apprehended: but with all ſeueritie vpon their apprehenſion they are to be awarded for the ſame. And as the deede in it ſelfe is moſt wicked, ſo is it much more intollerable, by how much it doeth infringe the credit of our faith, violate the force of our authoritie, and impeach the eſtimation of our word faithfully giuen vnto your Imperiall dignitie. In which ſo great a diſorder if wee ſhould not manifeſt our hatred towardes ſo wicked and euil diſpoſed perſons, we might not onely moſt iuſtly be reproued in the iudgement of all ſuch as truely fauour Iuſtice, but alſo of all Princes the patrones of right and equitie, might no leſſe be condemned. That therefore conſidered, which of our parts is ordained in this cauſe which may be to the good liking of your highneſſe, we are moſt eſpecially to requeſt of your Imperiall Maieſtie, that through the default and diſorder of a ſort of euill and wicked diſpoſed perſons, you wil not withdraw your gracious fauour from vs, neither to hinder the trafique of our Subiects, which by vertue of your highneſſe ſufferance, and power of your licence are permitted to trade into your dominions & countreys, or that either in their perſons or goods they be preiudiced in their traueyling by land or by water, promiſing vnto your greatneſſe moſt faithfully, that the goods whereof your ſubiects by great wrong and violence haue bene ſpoyled, ſhall wholy againe be reſtored, if either by the liues or poſſeſſions of the robbers it may any way be brought to paſſe: And that hereafter (as now being taught by this euill example) wee will haue ſpeciall care that none vnder the title of our authoritie ſhall be ſuffered to commit any the like wrongs or iniuries.

Neither they which haue committed theſe euil parts had any power vnder your highneſſe ſafe-conduct graunted vnto our ſubiects, but from ſome other ſafeconduct, whether it were true or fained, we knowe not, or whether they bought it of any perſon within the gouernment of Marſeils: but vnder the colour thereof they haue done that, which the trueth of our dealing doeth vtterly abhorre. Notwithſtanding howſoeuer it be, wee will ſurely meaſure their euill proceedings with moſt ſharpe and iuſt correction, and that it ſhall repent them of the impeachment of our honours, as alſo it ſhalbe an example of our indignation, that others may dread at all times to commit the like offence. Wherefore that our amitie might be continued, as if this vnfortunate hap had neuer chanced, and that the ſinguler affection of our Subiects towardes your Imperiall Maieſtie vowed, and dayly more and more deſired, might be conſerued and defended, we thereunto do make our humble ſuite vnto your greatneſſe: And for ſo great goodneſſe towardes vs and our people granted, doe moſt humbly pray vnto the Almightie creatour of heauen and earth, euer to maintaine and keepe your moſt renowmed Maieſtie in all happineſſe and proſperitie.

Dated at our palace of Greenewich the 26. of Iune, Anno 1581.

The letters patents, or priuileges graunted by her Maieſtie to Sir Edward Osborne, Maſter Richard Staper, and certaine other Marchants of London for their trade into the dominions of the great Turke, in the yeere 1581.

ELizabeth by the grace of God Queene of England, France and Ireland, defender of the faith, &c. To all our Officers, miniſters, and Subiects, and to all other people as well within this our Realme of England, as elſe where vnder our obeyſance, iuriſdiction, or otherwiſe, vnto whom theſe our letters ſhall be ſeene, ſhewed or read, greeting. Where our welbeloued Subiects Edward Osborne Alderman of our Citie of London, and Richard Staper of our ſayde City Marchant, haue by great aduenture and induſtrie, with their great coſts and charges, by the ſpace of ſundry late yeeres, trauailed, and cauſed trauaile to bee taken, as well by ſecret and good meanes, as by dangerous wayes and paſſages both by lande and Sea, to finde out and ſet open a trade of Marchandize and trafique into the Lands, Iſlands, dominions, and territories of the great Turke, commonly called the Grand Signior, not heretofore in the memory of any man nowe liuing knowen to be commonly vſed and frequented by way of marchandiſe, by any the Marchants or any Subiects of vs, or our progenitours; and alſo haue by their like good meanes and induſtrie, and great charges procured of the ſayde Grand Signior (in our name,) amitie, ſafetie, and freedome, for trade and trafique of Marchandiſe to bee vſed, and continued by our Subiects within his ſayde Dominions, whereby there is good and apparant hope and likelyhoode both that many good offices may bee done for the peace of Chriſtendome, and reliefe of many Chriſtians that bee or may happen to bee in thraldome or neceſſitie vnder the ſayde Grand Signior, his vaſſals or Subiects, and alſo good and profitable vent and vtterance may be had of the commodities of our Realme, and ſundry other great benefites to the aduancement of our honour, and dignitie Royall, the increaſe of the reuenues of our Crowne, and generall wealth of our Realme: Knowe ye, that hereupon wee greatly tendering the wealth of our people, and the incouragement of our Subiects in their good enterpriſes for the aduauncement of the Common weale, haue of our ſpeciall grace, certaine knowledge and meere motion, giuen and graunted, and by theſe preſents for vs, our heires and ſucceſſours, doe giue and graunt vnto our ſayd truſtie, and welbeloued Subiects Edward Osborne, and vnto Thomas Smith of London Eſquier, Richard Staper, and William Garret of London Marchants, their executors, and adminiſtrators, and to the executours and adminiſtratours of them, and of euery of them, that they, and euery of them, and ſuch other perſon and perſons Engliſhmen borne, not exceeding the number of twelue, as they the ſayde Edward, and Richard ſhall appoint, nominate, or admit to be parteners, aduenturers, or doers with them the ſayde Edward, Thomas, Richard and William, in their ſocietie by themſelues, their ſeruants, Factours or deputies, and to ſuch others as ſhall bee nominated according to the tenour of theſe our letters Patents, ſhall and may during the terme of ſeuen yeeres from the date of theſe Patents, freely trade, trafique, and vſe feates of Marchandiſe into, and from the dominions of the ſayde Grand Signior, and euery of them, in ſuch order, and maner, forme, liberties and condition to all intents and purpoſes as ſhalbe betweene them limitted and agreed, and not otherwiſe, without any moleſtation, impeachment, or diſturbance, any Lawe, ſtatute, vſage, diuerſitie of religion or faith, or other cauſe or matter whatſoeuer to the contrary notwithſtanding.

And that it ſhalbe lawful to the ſaid Edward and Richard their executors and adminiſtrators, (during the ſaid terme) to appoint or admit to be parteners and aduenturers with them the ſayde Edward, Thomas, Richard and William, ſuch perſons not exceeding the number of twelue (as afore is ſaid) to trafique and vſe the ſaid trade & feate of marchandiſe according to our ſaide graunt. And that all and euery ſuch perſon and perſons, as ſhall hereafter fortune to bee appointed or admitted as parteners in the ſaid trade or trafique according to theſe our letters patents, ſhall and may from the time of ſuch appointment or admittance, haue and enioy the freedome and libertie of the ſaid trade end trafique, during the reſidue of the ſaid terme of ſeuen yeeres, according to ſuch limitation and agreement as is aforeſaide, and that it ſhall and may be lawfull to and for the ſaide Edward, Thomas, Richard and William, their executours and adminiſtratours, ſeruants, factours and deputies, and all ſuch as ſhall be ſo appointed, nominated or admitted, to bee parteners or aduenturers in the ſaide trade, or ſo many of them as can and will, to aſſemble themſelues for or about any the matters, cauſes, affaires or buſineſſe of the ſaide trade in any place or places for the ſame conuenient, from time to time during the ſaid terme of 7. yeres, within our dominions or elſewhere, and to make, ordeine, and conſtitute reaſonable lawes and ordinances, for the good gouernment of the ſaid Company, and for the better aduancement and continuance of the ſaid trade and trafique, not being contrary or repugnant to the lawes, eſtatutes or cuſtomes of our Realme, and the ſame lawes or ordinances ſo made to put in vſe, and execute accordingly, and at their pleaſures to reuoke the ſame lawes and ordinances, or any of them, as occaſion ſhall require.

And in conſideration that the ſaid Edward Osborne hath bene the principall ſetter foorth and doer in the opening, & putting in vre of the ſaid trade, we do therfore eſpecially ordeine, conſtitute, and prouide by theſe patents, that the ſaide Edward Osborne ſhall be gouernour of all ſuch as by vertue of theſe our letters patents, ſhall be parteners, aduenturers, or trafiquers in the ſaid trade, during the ſaid terme of ſeuen yeeres, if hee ſo long liue: And that if the ſaid Edward ſhall happen to deceaſe during the ſaide terme, the ſaide Richard Staper then liuing, then the ſayd Richard Staper ſhall likewiſe be gouernour during the reſidue of the ſaid terme (if he ſo long liue) and that if the ſaid Edward and Richard ſhall both happen to deceaſe during the ſaid terme, then the partners or aduenturers for the time being, or the greateſt part of them, ſhall from time to time as neceſſitie ſhall require, chooſe and elect a gouernour of the ſaid Company.

Prouided alwayes, that if there ſhall happen any great or vrgent occaſion to remoue or diſplace any perſon that ſhall be gouernour of the ſaide fellowſhip, that then it ſhall, and may be lawfull for vs, our heires and ſucceſſours, to remooue, and diſplace euery ſuch gouernour, and to place another of the ſaid fellowſhip in the ſame office, during ſuch time as ſuch perſon ſhould haue enioyed the ſame, according to this our graunt, if there had bene no cauſe to the contrary.

And we further for vs, our heires, and ſucceſſors, of our eſpeciall grace, certaine knowledge, and meere motion, do graunt to the ſaid Edward Osborne, Thomas Smith, Richard Staper, and William Garret, their executors and adminiſtrators, that nothing ſhall bee done to be of force or validitie touching the ſayde trade or trafique, or the exerciſe thereof, without or againſt the conſent of the ſaid Edward, during ſuch time as hee ſhall bee Gouernour as afore is ſaide. And after that time without the conſent of the Gouernour for the time being, and the more part of the ſaid Company.

And further, wee of our more ample and abundant grace, meere motion and certaine knowledge, haue graunted, and by theſe patents for vs, our heires and ſucceſſors, doe graunt to the ſaide Edward, Thomas, Richard and William, their executors and adminiſtrators, that they, the ſaide Edward, Thomas, Richard and William, their executors and adminiſtrators, and the ſaid perſon and perſons, by them the ſaid Edward and Richard to be nominated, or appointed as afore is ſaid, together, with ſuch two other perſons, as wee our heires or ſucceſſors from time to time during the ſayd terme ſhall nominate, ſhall haue the whole trade and trafique, and the whole entire onely libertie, vſe and priuilege of trading, and trafiquing, and vſing feate of marchandiſe, into, and from the ſaid dominions of the ſaid Grand Signior, and euery of them. And when there ſhall be no ſuch perſons ſo nominated or appointed by vs, our heires or ſucceſſors, that then the ſaid Edward Osborne, Thomas Smith, Richard Staper, and William Garret, their executors and adminiſtrators, and ſuch perſons by them ſo to be appointed, ſhall haue the ſaide whole trade and trafique, and the whole entire, and onely libertie, vſe, and priuilege of trading and trafiquing aforeſaid. And that they the ſaid Edward, Thomas, Richard and William, their executors & adminiſtrators, and alſo al ſuch as ſhal ſo be nominated or appointed to be partners or aduenturers in the ſaid trade, according to ſuch agreement as is aboueſaid, and euery of them, their ſeruants, factors and deputies, ſhal haue ful and free authoritie, libertie, facultie, licence and power to trade and trafique into and from all and euery the ſaide dominions of the ſaide Grand Signior, and into, and from all places where, by occaſion of the ſaid trade, they ſhall happen to arriue or come, whether they be Chriſtians, Turkes, Gentiles or other, and into, and from all Seas, riuers, ports, regions, territories, dominions, coaſtes and places with their ſhips, barks, pinneſſes and other veſſels, and with ſuch mariners and men, as they will lead with them or ſend for the ſaid trade, as they ſhall thinke good at their owne proper coſt and expenſes, any law, ſtatute, vſage, or matter whatſoeuer to the contrary notwithſtanding. And that it ſhalbe lawful for the ſaid Edward, Thomas, Richard and William, and to the perſons aforeſaid, and to and for the mariners and ſeamen to bee vſed and employed in the ſaid trade and voyage to ſet and place in the tops of their ſhips and others veſſels the armes of England with the red croſſe ouer the ſame, as heretofore they haue vſed the red croſſe, any matter or thing to the contrary notwithſtanding.

And we of our further royal fauor, and of our eſpeciall grace, certaine knowledge and meere motion haue graunted, and by theſe preſents doe graunt to the ſaid Edward Osburne, Thomas Smith, Richard Staper, and William Garret, their executors and adminiſtrators by theſe preſents, that the ſaid lands, territories, and dominions of the ſaid Grand Signior, or any of them, ſhall not be viſited, frequented, nor haunted by way of marchandiſe by any other our ſubiects during the ſaid terme, contrary to the true meaning of theſe patents.

And by vertue of our high prerogatiue royall (which wee will not haue argued or brought in queſtion) we ſtraightly charge and commaund, and prohibite for vs, our heires, and ſucceſſours, all our ſubiects (of what degree or qualitie ſoeuer they be) that none of them directly, or indirectly, do viſite, haunt, frequent or trade, traffique, or aduenture by way of marchandiſe into, or from any of the Dominions of the ſayde Grand Signior, or other places aboueſayde by water or by lande (other then the ſaid Edward, Thomas, Richard and William, their executours or adminiſtrators, or ſuch as ſhalbe admitted, and nominated as is aforeſaide) without expreſſe licence, agreement, and conſent of the ſaid Gouernour, and company or the more part of them, whereof the ſaid Gouernour alwayes to be one, vpon paine of our high indignation, and of forfeiture and loſſe, as well of the ſhip and ſhippes, with the furniture thereof, as alſo of the goods, marchandizes, and things whatſoeuer they be of thoſe our Subiects which ſhall attempt, or preſume to ſaile, traffique, or aduenture, to or from any the dominions, or places aboueſaid, contrary to the prohibition aforeſaid: the one halfe of the ſame forfeiture to be to the vſe of vs, our heires & ſucceſſors, and the other halfe to the vſe of the ſaid Edward, Thomas, Richard and William, and the ſaid companie, and further to ſuffer impriſonment during our pleaſure, and ſuch other puniſhment as to vs, for ſo high contempt, ſhal ſeeme meete and conuenient.

And further of our grace ſpeciall, certaine knowledge, and meere motion we haue condeſcended and graunted, and by theſe patents for vs our heires and ſucceſſors, doe condeſcend and grant to the ſaid Edward, Thomas, Richard & William, their executors and adminiſtrators, that we our heires & ſucceſſors during the ſaid terme, will not grant liberty, licence or power to any perſon or perſons whatſoeuer, contrary to the tenor of theſe our letters patents, to ſaile, paſſe, trade, or traffique into or from the ſaid dominions of the ſaid Grand Signior or any of them, without the cõſent of the ſaid Edward, Thomas, Richard & William, and ſuch as ſhalbe named or appointed as afore is ſaid, or the moſt of them. And that if at any time hereafter during the ſaid terme, yͤ ſaid Edward, Thomas, Richard and William, or the ſuruiuors of them, ſhal admit or nominate any of our ſubiects to be partners & aduenturers in the ſaid trade to the number of 12. or vnder as afore is ſaid, that then we our heires and ſucceſſors at the inſtance and petition of the ſaid Edward, Thomas, Richard and William, or the ſuruiuors of them in our Chauncerie to be made, and vpon the ſight of theſe preſents, will grant and make to the ſaid Edward, Thomas, Richard and William, or to the ſuruiuors of them, and to ſuch perſons as ſo ſhall be nominated or appointed by their ſpeciall names, ſurnames, & additions as is aforeſaid, new letters patents vnder the great ſeale of England in due forme of law with like agreement, clauſes, prohibitions, prouiſoes and articles (mutatis mutandis) as in theſe our letters patents are conteined, for, and during the reſidue of the ſaid terme of ſeuen yeres then remaining vnexpired. And that the ſight of theſe preſents ſhalbe ſufficient warrant to the Lord Chancellour, or Lord keeper of the great ſeale for the time being, for the making, ſealing and paſſing of ſuch new letters patents, without further writ or warrant for the ſame to be required, had, or obtained.

And the ſaid Edward Osburne, Thomas Smith, and Richard Staper, and William Garret and ſuch others as ſhalbe ſo nominated and appointed, as is aforeſaid, to be of their trade or companie, ſhall yeerely during 6. of the laſt yeres of the ſaid 7. yeres, lade out of this our Realme, and bring home yeerely, for, and in the feate and trade of marchandizing aforeſaid, ſo much goods and marchandizes, as the cuſtome, and ſubſidie inwards and outwards, ſhall amount in the whole to the ſumme of 500. li. yeerely. So that the ſaid Edward Osborne, Thomas Smith, Richard Staper, and William Garret and the ſaid perſons ſo to be nominated as is aforeſaid, or any of them, or their ſhip or ſhippes be not barred, ſtayed, reſtrained or let by any reaſonable occaſion from the ſayde trade or trafique, and ſo that the ſaid ſhip or ſhips do not periſh by any miſfortune, or bee ſpoyled by the way in their voyage.

And further, the ſaid Edward Osborne, Thomas Smith, Richard Staper, and William Garret, and ſuch others as ſhall be appointed as aforeſaide to be of their ſaide trade or Company, ſhall giue notice vnto the Lord Admirall of England, or to ſome of the principall officers of the Admiraltie for the time being, of ſuch ſhip or ſhippes as they ſhall ſet foorth in the ſame voyage, and of the number of Mariners appointed to goe in the ſame ſhip or ſhippes, by the ſpace of fifteene dayes before the ſetting or going foorth of the ſame ſhip or ſhippes. And alſo the ſaid Edward Osborne, Thomas Smith, Richard Staper and William Garret, and ſuch other as ſhall be by them the ſaide Edward and Richard, nominated to be of the ſaid trade, ſhall and will at the ſetting foorth of their ſhip, or ſhippes, for the ſame voyage, permit and ſuffer the Maſter of the Ordinance of vs, our heires and ſucceſſors, or ſome others, out of their principall officers of the Ordinance, to take a view of the number and quantitie of ſuch Ordinance, powder, and munition, as ſhall be caried in the ſaid ſhip, or ſhippes, and ſhall alſo at the returne of the ſame ſhip, or ſhippes, ſuffer a view to be taken, and vpon requeſt made, make an accompt to the ſaide officers of our Ordinance, of the expenſes, and waſtes of the ſaid Ordinance, powder, and munition, ſo to bee caried in the ſame ſhip, or ſhippes.

Prouided alwayes, that if any of the ſaid trade or Company, or their ſeruants, factors, or ſailers, in any ſhip by them laden, ſhall commit any piracie or outrage vpon the ſeas, and that, if the ſaid Company or ſocietie ſhall not, or do not, within reaſonable time, after complaint made, or notice giuen to the ſaid Company, or to any of them, either ſatiſfie or recompenſe the parties that ſo ſhall fortune to be robbed, or ſpoiled by any of the ſaid Company, or ſailers, in the ſaid ſhips, or els ſhall not do their endeuour to the vttermoſt of their reaſonable power, to haue the parties ſo offending puniſhed for the ſame their offences, that then, and from thencefoorth, theſe preſent letters patents ſhall be vtterly voyd, ceaſe, and determine.

Prouided likewiſe, that if it ſhall hereafter appeare vnto vs, our heires, or ſucceſſors, that this grant, or the continuance thereof in the whole, or in any part thereof, ſhall not be profitable to vs, our heires, our ſucceſſors, or to this our Realme, that then, and from thencefoorth, vpon, and after one full yeeres warning, to be giuen vnto the ſaid Company, or to the Gouernour thereof, by vs, our heires, or ſucceſſors, this preſent grant ſhall ceaſe, be voyd, and determine, to all intents, conſtructions, and purpoſes.

Prouided alſo, that we, our heires and ſucceſſors, from time to time, during the ſaid 7. yeeres, may lawfully nominate, appoint, and authoriſe two perſons, being fit men, to be of the ſaide company, and for want or lacke of them, two others to be aduenturers in the ſaid trade, for ſuch ſtocke and ſumme of money, as they ſhall put in, ſo that the ſaid perſons to bee nominated, or authoriſed, ſhall be contributorie to all charges of the ſaid trade & aduenture indifferently, according to their ſtockes: and as other aduenturers of the ſaid trade ſhall doe for their ſtockes, and ſo that likewiſe they doe obſerue the orders of the ſaid Company, allowable by this our graunt, and that ſuch perſons ſo to be appointed by vs, our heires or ſucceſſors, ſhall, and may, with the ſaide Company, and fellowſhip, vſe the trade and feate of marchandiſe aforeſaide, and all the liberties and priuileges herein before granted, according to the meaning of theſe our letters patents, any thing in theſe our letters patents contained to the contrary notwithſtanding.

And further of our ſpeciall grace, certaine knowledge, and meere motion, we haue condeſcended and granted, and by theſe preſents for vs, our heires and ſucceſſors, doe condeſcend, and grant to the ſaid Edward Osborne, Thomas Smith, Richard Staper, and William Garret, their executors, and adminiſtrators, that if at the ende of the ſaid terme of ſeuen yeeres, it ſhall ſeeme meete, and conuenient vnto the ſaid Edward Osborne, Thomas Smith, Richard Staper, and William Garret, or the ſuruiuer of them, that this preſent grant ſhall be continued: and if that alſo it ſhall appeare vnto vs, our heires, or ſucceſſors, that the continuance thereof ſhall not be preiudiciall, or hurtfull to this our Realme, that then we, our heires, or ſucceſſors, at the inſtance and petition of the ſaid Edward Osborne, Thomas Smith, Richard Staper, and William Garret, or the ſuruiuer of them, to be made to vs, our heires, or ſucceſſors, will grant and make to the ſaid Edward, Thomas, Richard and William, or the ſuruiuer of them, and to ſuch other perſons, as ſo ſhal be by the ſaid Edward and Richard nominated and appointed, new letters patents, vnder the great ſeale of England, in due forme of lawe, with like couenants, grants, clauſes, and articles, as in theſe preſents are contained, or with addition of other neceſſary articles, or change of theſe in ſome part, for and during the full terme of ſeuen yeeres then next following. Willing, and ſtraightly commanding, and charging all and ſinguler our Admirals, Viceadmirals, Iuſtices, Maiors, Sheriffes, Eſcheaters, Conſtables, Bailiffes, and all and ſinguler our other officers, miniſters, liege men, and ſubiects whatſoeuer, to be aiding, fauouring, helping, and aſſiſting vnto the ſaid Gouernour, and company, and their ſucceſſors, and to their Deputies, officers, ſeruants, aſſignes, and miniſters, and euery of them, in executing, and enioying the premiſſes, as well on land as on ſea, from time to time, and at all times when you, or any of you, ſhall be thereunto required, any ſtatute, act, ordinance, prouiſo, proclamation, or reſtraint heretofore had, made, ſet forth, ordained, or prouided, or any other matter, cauſe or thing to the contrary, in any wiſe notwithſtanding.

In witneſſe whereof we haue cauſed theſe our letters to be made patents, witneſſe our ſelfe, at Weſtminſter, the 11. day of September, in the 23. yeere of our raigne.

The firſt voyage or iourney, made by Maſter Laurence Alderſey, Marchant of London, to the Cities of Ieruſalem, and Tripolis, &c. In the yeere 1581. Penned and ſet downe by himſelfe.

I Departed from London the firſt day of April, in the yeere of our Lord 1581, paſſing through the Nether-land and vp the riuer Rhene by Colen, and other cities of Germanie. And vpon Thurſday, the thirde day of May, I came to Auguſta, where I deliuered the letter I had to Maſter Ieniſe, and Maſter Caſtler, whom I found very willing to pleaſure me, in any thing that I could or would reaſonably demaund. He firſt furniſhed me with a horſe to Venice, for my money, and then tooke me with him a walking, to ſhew me the Citie, for that I had a day to tary there, for him that was to be my guide.

The deſcription of Auguſta in Germanie.

He ſhewed me firſt the State-houſe, which is very faire, and beautifull: then he brought mee to the fineſt garden, and orchard, that euer I ſawe in my life: for there was in it a place for Canarie birdes, as large as a faire Chamber, trimmed with wier both aboue and beneath, with fine little branches of trees, for them to ſit in, which was full of thoſe Canarie birdes. There was ſuch an other for Turtle dooues: alſo there were two pigeon houſes ioyning to them, hauing in them ſtore of Turtle dooues, and pigeons. In the ſame garden alſo were ſixe or ſeuen fiſhponds, all railed about, and full of very good fiſh. Alſo, ſeuen or eight fine fountaines, or water ſprings, of diuers faſhions: as for fruite, there wanted none of all ſorts, as Orenges, figges, raiſons, wallnuts, grapes, beſides apples, peares, filbirds, ſmall nuts, and ſuch other fruite, as wee haue in England.

Then did hee bring mee to the water tower of the ſame Citie, that by a ſleight and deuiſe hath the water brought vp as high, as any Church in the towne, and to tel you the ſtrange deuiſes of all, it paſſeth my capacitie. Then he brought me to another faire garden, called the Shooters hooſe, where are buts for the long bowe, the croſſe bowe, the ſtone bowe, the long peece, and for diuers other exerciſes more.

After this, we walked about the walles of the Citie, where is a great, broade, and deepe ditch, vpon one ſide of the towne, ſo full of fiſh, as euer I ſawe any pond in my life, and it is reſerued onely for the States of the Citie. And vpon the other ſide of the Citie is alſo a deepe place all greene, wherein Deere are kept, and when it pleaſeth the States to hunt for their pleaſure, thither they reſort, and haue their courſes with grayhounds, which are kept for that purpoſe.

Venice.

The fift of May, I departed from Auguſta towards Venice, and came thither vpon Whitſunday, the thirteenth of the ſame moneth. It is needleſſe to ſpeake of the height of the mountaines that I paſſed ouer, and of the danger thereof, it is ſo wel knowen already to the world: the heigth of them is maruellous, and I was the ſpace of ſixe dayes in paſſing them.

I came to Venice at the time of a Faire, which laſted fourteene dayes, wherein I ſawe very many, and faire ſhewes of wares. I came thither too ſhort for the firſt paſſage, which went away from Venice about the ſeuenth or eight of May, and with them about three ſcore pilgrims, which ſhippe was caſt away at a towne called Eſtria, two miles from Venice, and all the men in her, ſauing thirtie, or thereabout, loſt.

Within eight dayes after fell Corpus Chriſti day, which was a day amongſt them of proceſſion, in which was ſhewed the plate and treaſure of Venice, which is eſteemed to be worth two millions of pounds, but I do not accompt it worth halfe a quarter of that money, except there be more then I ſawe. To ſpeake of the ſumptuouſneſſe of the Copes, and Veſtments of the Church, I leaue, but the trueth is, they bee very ſumptuous, many of them ſet all ouer with pearle, and made of cloth of golde. And for the Ieſuits, I thinke there be as many at Venice, as there be in Colen.

The number of Iewes in Venice.

The number of Iewes is there thought to be 1000, who dwell in a certaine place of the Citie, and haue alſo a place, to which they reſort to pray, which is called the Iewes Sinagogue. They all, and their offſpring vſe to weare red caps, (for ſo they are commaunded) becauſe they may thereby be knowen from other men. For my further knowledge of theſe people, I went into their Sinagogue vpon a Saturday, which is their Sabbath day: and I found them in their ſeruice or prayers, very deuoute: they receiue the fiue bookes of Moſes, and honour them by carying them about their Church, as the Papiſts doe their croſſe.

Their Synagogue is in forme round, and the people ſit round about it, and in the midſt, there is a place for him that readeth to the reſt: as for their apparell, all of them weare a large white lawne ouer their garments, which reacheth from their head, downe to the ground.

The Pſalmes they ſing as wee doe, hauing no image, nor vſing any maner of idolatrie: their error is, that they beleeue not in Chriſt, nor yet receiue the New Teſtament. This Citie of Venice is very faire, and greatly to bee commended, wherein is good order for all things: and alſo it is very ſtrong and populous: it ſtandeth vpon the maine Sea, and hath many Iſlands about it, that belong to it.

To tell you of the duke of Venice, and of the Seigniory: there is one choſen that euer beareth the name of a duke, but in trueth hee is but ſeruant to the Seigniorie, for of himſelfe hee can doe litle: it is no otherwiſe with him, then with a Prieſt that is at Maſſe vpō a feſtiual day, which putting on his golden garment, ſeemeth to be a great man, but if any man come vnto him, and craue ſome friendſhip at his handes, hee will ſay, you muſt goe to the Maſters of the Pariſh, for I can not pleaſure you, otherwiſe then by preferring of your ſuite: and ſo it is with the duke of Venice, if any man hauing a ſuite, come to him, and make his complaint, and deliuer his ſupplication, it is not in him to helpe him, but hee will tell him, You muſt come this day, or that day, and then I will preferre your ſuite to the Seigniorie, and doe you the beſt friendſhip that I may. Furthermore, if any man bring a letter vnto him, hee may not open it, but in the preſence of the Seigniorie, and they are to ſee it firſt, which being read, perhaps they will deliuer it to him, perhaps not. Of the Seigniory there be about three hundreth, and about fourtie of the priuie Counſell of Venice, who vſually are arayed in gownes of crimſen Satten, or crimſen Damaſke, when they ſit in Counſell.

In the Citie of Venice, no man may weare a weapon, except he be a ſouldier for the Seigniorie, or a ſcholler of Padua, or a gentleman of great countenance, and yet he may not do that without licence.

The exceſſe of the women of Venice.

As for the women of Venice, they be rather monſters, then women. Euery Shoomakers or Taylors wife will haue a gowne of ſilke, and one to carie vp her traine, wearing their ſhooes very neere halfe a yard high from the ground: if a ſtranger meete one of them, he will ſurely thinke by the ſtate that ſhe goeth with, that he meeteth a Lady.

His embarking at Venice for Ieruſalem.

I departed from this Citie of Venice, vpon Midſommer day, being the foure and twentieth of Iune, and thinking that the ſhip would the next day depart, I ſtayed, and lay a ſhippeboord all night, and we were made beleeue from time to time, that we ſhould this day, and that day depart, but we taried ſtill, till the fourteenth of Iuly, and then with ſcant winde wee ſet ſayle, and ſayled that day and that night, not aboue fiftie Italian miles: and vpon the ſixteene day at night, the winde turned flat contrary, ſo that the Maſter knewe not what to doe: and about the fift houre of the night, which we reckon to be about one of the clocke after midnight, the Pilot deſcried a ſaile, and at laſt perceiued it to be a Gallie of the Turkes, whereupon we were in great feare.

The Maſter being a wiſe fellowe, and a good ſayler, beganne to deuiſe howe to eſcape the danger, and to looſe litle of our way: and while both he, and all of vs were in our dumps, God ſent vs a merry gale of winde, that we ranne threeſcore and tenne leagues before it was twelue a clocke the next day, and in ſixe dayes after we were ſeuen leagues paſt Zante. And vpon Munday morning, being the three and twentie of the ſame moneth, we came in the ſight of Candia which day the winde came contrary, with great blaſts, and ſtormes, vntill the eight and twentie of the ſame moneth: in which time, the Mariners cried out vpon me, becauſe I was an Engliſh man, & ſayd, I was no good Chriſtian, and wiſhed that I were in the middeſt of the Sea, ſaying, that they, and the ſhippe, were the worſe for me. I anſwered, truely it may well be, for I thinke my ſelfe the worſt creature in the worlde, and conſider you your ſelues alſo, as I doe my ſelfe, and then vſe your diſcretion. The Frier preached, and the ſermon being done, I was demaunded whether I did vnderſtand him: I anſwered, yea, and tolde the Frier himſelfe, thus you ſaide in your ſermon, that we were not all good Chriſtians, or elſe it were not poſſible for vs to haue ſuch weather: to which I anſwered, be you well aſſured, that we are not indeede all good Chriſtians, for there are in the ſhip ſome that hold very vnchriſtian opinions: ſo for that time I ſatiſfied him, although (they ſaid) that I would not ſee, when they ſaid the proceſſion, and honoured their images, and prayed to our Lady, and S. Marke.

There was alſo a Gentleman, an Italian, which was a paſſenger in the ſhip, and he tolde me what they ſaid of me, becauſe I would not ſing, Salue Regina, and Aue Maria, as they did: I told them, that they that praied to ſo many, or ſought helpe of any other, then of God the Father, or of Ieſus Chriſt his onely ſonne, goe a wrong way to worke, and robbed God of his honour, and wrought their owne deſtructions.

All this was told the Friers, but I heard nothing of it in three daies after: and then at euening prayer, they ſent the purſer about with the image of our Lady to euery one to kiſſe, & I perceiuing it went another way from him, and would not ſee it: yet at laſt he fetched his courſe about, ſo that he came to me, & offered it to me as he did to others, but I refuſed it: whereupon there was a great ſtirre: the patron and all the friers were told of it, and euery one ſaide I was a Lutheran, and ſo called me: but two of the friers that were of greateſt authoritie, ſeemed to beare mee better good will then the reſt, and trauelled to the patron in my behalfe, and made all well againe.

Cyprus, Miſſagh.

The ſecond day of Auguſt we arriued in Cyprus, at a towne called Miſſagh: the people there be very rude, and like beaſts, and no better, they eat their meat ſitting vpon the ground, with their legges acroſſe like taylors, their beds for the moſt part be hard ſtones, but yet ſome of them haue faire mattraces to lie vpon.

Ioppa.

The Baſha of Ioppa.

Vpon thurſday the eight of Auguſt we came to Ioppa in a ſmall barke, which we hired betwixt Miſſagh and Salina, and could not be ſuffered to come on land till noone the next day, and then we were permitted by the great Baſha, who ſate vpon the top of a hill to ſee vs ſent away. Being come on land, we might not enter into any houſe for victuals, but were to content our ſelues with our owne prouiſion, and that which we bought to carie with vs was taken from vs. I had a paire of ſtirrops, which I bought at Venice to ſerue me in my iourney, and trying to make them fit for me, when the Baſha ſaw me vp before the reſt of the companie, he ſent one to diſmount me, and to ſtrike me, whereupon I turned me to the Baſha, and made a long legge, ſaying, Grand mercie Signior: and after a while we were horſed vpon litle aſſes, and ſent away, with about fiftie light horſemen to be our conduct through the wilderneſſe, called Deſerta fœlix, who made vs good ſport by the way with their pikes, gunnes, and fauchins.

Rama.

That day being S. Laurence day, we came to Rama, which is tenne Italian miles from Ioppa, and there we ſtayed that night, and payed to the captaine of the caſtell, euery man a chekin, which is ſeuen ſhillings and two pence ſterling. So then we had a new gard of ſouldiers, and left the other.

The houſe we lodged in at Rama had a doore ſo low to enter into, that I was faine to creepe in, as it were vpon my knees, & within it are three roomes to lodge trauellers that come that way: there are no beds, except a man buy a mat, and lay it on the ground, that is all the prouiſion, without ſtooles or benches to ſit vpon. Our victuals were brought vs out of the towne, as hennes, egges, bread, great ſtore of fruite, as pomgranates, figges, grapes, oringes, and ſuch like, and drinke we drue out of the well. The towne it ſelfe is ſo ruinated, that I take it rather to be a heape of ſtones then a towne.

Troopes of theeuiſh Arabians.

Then the next morning we thought to haue gone away, but we could not be permitted that day, ſo we ſtayed there till two of the clocke the next morning, and then with a freſh gard of ſouldiers we departed toward Ieruſalem. We had not ridde fiue Engliſh miles, but we were incountred with a great number of the Arabians, who ſtayed vs, and would not ſuffer vs to paſſe till they had ſomewhat, ſo it coſt vs for all our gard aboue twentie ſhillings a man betwixt Ioppa and Ieruſalem. Theſe Arabians troubled vs oftentimes. Our Truchman that payed the money for vs was ſtriken downe, and had his head broken becauſe he would not giue them as much as they asked: and they that ſhould haue reſcued both him and vs, ſtood ſtill, and durſt doe nothing, which was to our coſt.

His arriuall in the ſight of Ieruſalem.

Being come within ſight of Ieruſalem, the maner is to kneele downe, and giue God thankes, that it hath pleaſed him to bring vs to that holy place where he himſelfe had beene: and there we leaue our horſes, and go on foote to the towne, and being come to the gates, there they tooke our names, and our fathers names, and ſo we were permitted to go to our lodgings.

The gouernor of the houſe met vs a mile out of the towne, and very curteouſly bade vs all welcome, and brought vs to the monaſterie. The gates of the citie are all couered with yron, the entrance into the houſe of the Chriſtians is a very low & narrow doore, barred or plated with yron, and then come we into a very darke entry: the place is a monaſtery: there we lay, & dieted of free coſt, we fared reaſonable well, the bread and wine was excellent good, the chambers cleane, & all the the meat well ſerued in, with cleane linnen.

We lay at the monaſterie two dayes, friday and ſaturday, and then we went to Bethlem with two or three of the friers of the houſe with vs: in the way thither we ſaw many monuments, as:

The monuments in and about Ieruſalem.

The mountaine where the Angell tooke vp Abacuck by the haire, and brought him to Daniel in the Lions denne.

The fountaine of the prophet Ieremie.

The place where the wiſe men met that went to Bethlem to worſhip Chriſt, where is a fountaine of ſtone.

Being come to Bethlem we ſawe the place where Chriſt was borne, which is now a chappell with two altars, whereupon they ſay maſſe: the place is built with gray marble, and hath bene beautifull, but now it is partly decayed.

Neere thereto is the ſepulchre of the innocents ſlaine by Herod, the ſepulchres of Paul, of Ierome, and of Euſebius.

Alſo a litle from this monaſterie is a place vnder the ground, where the virgine Mary abode with Chriſt when Herod ſought him to deſtroy him.

We ſtayed at Bethlem that night, and the next day we went from thence to the mountaines of Iudea, which are about eight miles from Ieruſalem, where are the ruines of an olde monaſterie. In the mid way from the monaſterie to Ieruſalem is the place where Iohn Baptiſt was borne, being now an olde monaſterie, and cattell kept in it. Alſo a mile from Ieruſalem is a place called Inuentio ſanctæ crucis, where the wood was found that made the croſſe.

In the citie of Ieruſalem we ſaw the hall where Pilat ſate in iudgement when Chriſt was condemned, the ſtaires whereof are at Rome, as they told vs. A litle from thence is the houſe where the virgin Mary was borne.

There is alſo the piſcina or fiſhpoole where the ſicke folkes were healed, which is by the wals of Ieruſalem. But the poole is now dry.

The mount of Caluaria is a great church, and within the doore therof, which is litle, and barred with yron, and fiue great holes in it to looke in, like the holes of tauerne doores in London, they ſit that are appointed to receiue our money with a carpet vnder them vpon a banke of ſtone, & their legs a croſſe like tailors: hauing paid our money, we are permitted to go into the church: right againſt the church doore is the graue where Chriſt was buried, with a great long ſtone of white marble ouer it, and rayled about, the outſide of the ſepulchre is very foule, by meanes that euery man ſcrapes his name and marke vpon it, and is ill kept.

Within the ſepulchre is a partition, & in the further part thereof is a place like an altar, where they ſay maſſe, and at the doore thereof is the ſtone whereupon the Angell ſate when he ſayde to Marie, He is riſen, which ſtone was alſo rowled to the doore of the ſepulchre.

The altar ſtone within the ſepulchre is of white marble, the place able to conteine but foure perſons, right ouer the ſepulchre is a deuiſe or lanterns for light, and ouer that a great louer, ſuch as are in England in ancient houſes. There is alſo the chappell of the ſepulchre, and in the midſt thereof is a canopie as it were of a bed, with a great ſort of Eſtridge egges hanging at it, with taſſels of ſilke and lampes.

Behinde the ſepulchre is a litle chappell for the Chaldeans and Syrians.

Upon the right hand comming into the church is the tombe of Baldwine king of France, and of his ſonne: and in the ſame place the tombe of Melchiſedech.

S. Helens chappell.

There is a chappell alſo in the ſame church erected to S. Helen, through which we go vp to the place where Chriſt was crucified: the ſtayres are fiftie ſteps high, there are two altars in it: before the high altar is the place where the croſſe ſtood, the hole whereof is trimmed about with ſiluer, and the depth of it is halfe a mans arme deepe: the rent alſo of the mountaine is there to be ſeene in the creuis, wherein a man may put his arme.

Upon the other ſide of the mount of Caluarie is the place where Abraham would haue ſacrificed his ſonne. Where alſo is a chapell, and the place paued with ſtones of diuers colours.

There is alſo the houſe of Annas the high Prieſt, and the Oliue tree whereunto Chriſt was bound when he was whipt. Alſo the houſe of Caiphas, and by it the priſon where Chriſt was kept, which is but the roome of one man, and hath no light but the opening of the doore.

Without Ieruſalem in the vally of Ioſaphat is a church vnder the ground, like to the ſhrowds in Pauls, where the ſepulchre of the virgin Mary is: the ſtaires be very broad, and vpon the ſtaires going downe are two ſepulchres: vpon the left hand lieth Ioſaphat, and vpon the right hand lieth Ioachim and Anna, the father and mother of the virgin Mary.

Going out of the valley of Ioſaphat we came to mount Oliuet, where Chriſt praied vnto his father before his death: and there is to be ſeene (as they tolde me) the water & blood that fell from the eyes of Chriſt. A litle higher vpon the ſame mount is the place where the Apoſtles ſlept, and watched not. At the foot of the mount is the place where Chriſt was impriſoned.

Vpon the mountaine alſo is the place where Chriſt ſtood when he wept ouer Ieruſalem, and where he aſcended into heauen.

His departure from Ieruſalem.

Now hauing ſeene all theſe monuments, I with my company ſet from Ieruſalem, the 20 day of Auguſt, and came againe to Ioppa the 22 of the ſame moneth, where wee tooke ſhipping preſently for Tripolis, and in foure dayes we came to Mecina the place where the ſhips lie that come for Tripolis.

Tripolis in Syria.

The citie of Tripolis is a mile and a halfe within the land, ſo that no ſhip can come further then Mecina: ſo that night I came thither, where I lay nine daies for paſſage, and at laſt we imbarked our ſelues in a good ſhip of Venice called the new Naue Ragaſona. We entred the ſhip the ſecond of September, the fourth we ſet ſaile, the ſeuenth we came to Salina, which is 140 miles from Tripolis: there we ſtayed foure dayes to take in more lading, in which meane time I fell ſicke of an ague, but recouered againe, I praiſe God.

Salina.

Salina is a ruinated citie, and was deſtroyed by the Turke ten yeeres paſt: there are in it now but ſeuenteene perſons, women and children. A litle from this citie of Salina is a ſalt piece of ground, where the water groweth ſalt that raineth vpon it.

Miſſagh a town in Cyprus.

Thurſday the 21 of September, we came to Miſſagh, & there we ſtayed eight dayes for our lading: the 18 of September before we came to Miſſagh, and within ten miles of the towne, as we lay at an anker, becauſe the winde was contrary, there came a great boat full of men to boord vs, they made an excuſe to ſeeke for foure men which (they ſaid) our ſhip had taken from theirs about Tripolis, but our captaine would not ſuffer any of them to come in to vs.

The next morning they came to vs againe with a great gally, manned with 500 men at ye leaſt, whereupon our captaine ſent the boat to them with twelue men to know their pleaſure: they ſaid they ſought for 4 men, and therfore would talke with our maiſter: ſo then the maiſters mate was ſent them, and him they kept, and went their way: the next morning they came againe with him, & with three other gallies, and then would needes ſpeake with our captaine, who went to them in a gowne of crimſon damaſke, and other very braue apparell, and fiue or ſixe other gentlemen richly apparelled alſo. They hauing the Turks ſafe conduct, ſhewed it to the captaine of the gallies, and laid it vpon his head, charging him to obey it: ſo with much adoe, and with the gift of 100 pieces of golde we were quit of them, and had our man againe.

Candie.

That day as aforeſaid, we came to Miſſagh, and there ſtayed eight dayes, and at laſt departed towards Candie, with a ſcant winde.

The 11 day of October we were boorded with foure gallies, manned with 1200 men, which alſo made a ſleeueleſſe arrant, and troubled vs very much, but our captaines paſport, and the gift of 100 chekins diſcharged all.

Zante.

Iſtria.

The 27 of October we paſſed by Zante with a merrie winde, the 29 by Corfu, and the third of Nouember we arriued at Iſtria, and there we left our great ſhip, and tooke ſmall boates to bring vs to Venice.

The 9 of Nouember I arriued again at Venice in good health, where I ſtaied nine daies, and the 25 of the ſame moneth I came to Auguſta, and ſtaied there but one day.

The 27 of Nouember I ſet towards Nuremberg where I came the 29, and there ſtaied till the 9 of December, and was very well intertained of the Engliſh marchants there: and the gouernors of the towne ſent me and my company ſixteene gallons of excellent good wine.

From thence I went to Frankford, from Frankford to Collen, from Collen to Arnam, from Arnam to Vtreight, from Vtreight to Dort, from Dort to Antwerpe, from Antwerpe to Fluſhing, from Fluſhing to London, where I arriued vpon Twelfe eue in ſafetie, and gaue thanks to God, hauing finiſhed my iourney to Ieruſalem and home againe, in the ſpace of nine moneths and fiue dayes.

The paſſeport made by the great Maiſter of Malta vnto the Engliſhmen in the barke Reynolds. 1582.

F*Rere Hugo de Loubenx Verdala*, Dei gratia ſacræ domus hoſpitalis ſancti Ioannis Hieroſolymitani magiſter humilis, pauperumq; Ieſu Chriſti cuſtos, vniuerſis & ſingulis principibus eccleſiaſticis & ſecularibus, archiepiſcopis, epiſcopis, ducibus, marchionibus, baronibus, nobilibus, capitaneis, vicedominis, præfectis, caſtellanis, admiralijs, & quibuſcunque triremium vel aliorum nauigiorum patronis, ac ciuitatum rectoribus, poteſtatibus ac magiſtratibus, cæteriſque officialibus, & quibuſcunque perſonis cuiuſuis dignitatis, gradus, ſtatus & conditionis fuerint, vbilibet locorum & terrarum conſtitutis, ſalutem.

Notum facimus & in verbo veritatis atteſtamur, come nel meſe di Maggio proſſime paſſato le noſtre galere vennero dal viaggio di Barberia, doue hauendo mandato per ſoccorrere a vn galionetto de Chriſtiani che hauea dato trauerſo in quelle parti, eſſendo arriuati ſopra queſta iſola alla parte de ponente trouarono vna naue Ingleſa, ſopra cargo de eſſa il magnifico Giouanni Keale, & David Filly patrono, volendo la reconoſcere che naue foſſe, han viſto, che ſe metteua in ordine per defenderſi, dubitando che dette noſtre galere foſſero de inimici: & per che vn marinaro riuoltoſe contra la volonta de detti magnifico Giouani Keale & David Filly, habbi tirato vn tiro di artiglieria verſo vna de dette galere, & che non ſe amangnaua la vela de la Maieſtra ſecondo la volonta de detti magnifico Giouanni Keale & David Filly patrono, fu rimenſata detta naue nel preſente general porto di Malta, ſecondo l'ordine del venerando Generale de dette galere, & eſſendo qua, monſignor Inquiſitore ha impedita quella per conto del ſancto officio, & ſi diede parte alla ſantita di noſtro ſignor Gregorio papa xiij. A la fin fu licenciata per andarſene al ſuo viaggio. Han donq; humilmente ſupplicato detti magnifico Giouanni Keale & David Filly per nome & parte delli magnifici Edvardo Oſborn ſenatore & Richardo Staper merchanti Ingleſi della nobile citta di Londra, & anco di Thomaſo Wilkinſon ſcriuano, piloti, nocheri, & marinari, gli voleſſimo dare le noſtre lettere patente & ſaluo condutto, acciochè potranno andare & ritornare quãdo gli parera commodo con alcuna roba & mercantia a loro benuiſta: ſi come noi, eſſendo coſa giuſta & che retornera commoda a noſtra relligione & a queſti forreſtieri, per tenor de li preſenti ſe gli habiamo conceſſe con le conditione però infra ſcritte. videlicet:

Che ogni volta che detti mercadanti con ſopradetta naue o con altra non porteranno mercantie de contra bando, & che conſtara per fede authentica & con lettere patente de ſanita, poteran liberalmente victualiarſe de tutte le victuarie neceſſarie, & praticare in queſta iſola & dominij, & poi partirſene & ſeguire ſuo viaggio per doue voleſſero in leuante o altroue, come tutti altri vaſelli & ſpecialmente de Franceſi & altri nationi, & di vendere & comprare qual ſi voglia mercantia a loro benuiſta.

Item, che potera portare poluere de canone & di archibuſo, ſalnitro, carboni di petra roſetta, platine de rame, ſtagno, acciale, ferro, cariſee commune, tela groſſa bianca per far tende de galere, balle de ferro de calibro, petre de molino fine, arbore & antenne de galere, baſtardi & alteri. Et in concluſione, hauenda viſto che loro per il tempo che reſtarano qua, ſi portorno da fideli & Catholici Chriſtiani, & che ſua ſanctita habbia trouato bono il ſaluo condutto del gran Turko a loro conceſſo, per il timor della armata Turkeſca & di altri vaſelli de inimici, inherendo alla volonta di ſua ſanctitá, & maſſime per che hauera de andare & paſſare per diuerſi lochi & tanto lontani come Ingilterra, Flandra, & tutti parti di ponente, & in altroue, a noi ha parſo farle le preſente noſtre lettere patente come fidele conuerſatore noſtro, accio piu ſecuramente & ſenſa obſtaculo poſſa andare & ritornare quando li parera con detta naue o con altre, a loro benuiſta. Per tanto donque tutti & ciaſcun di voi ſudetti affectuoſamente pregamo, che per qual ſi voglia de voſtra iuriſditione, alla quale detto magnifico Giouani Keale & David Filly a nome quo ſupra con la naue & marinari de detti loro principali o altri caſchera, nauigare, paſſare, & venire ſicuramente, alla libera, ſenſa alcuno diſturbo o altro impedimento li laſciate, & facciate laſciare ſtare, & paſſare, tornare, & quando li parera partire, talmente che per amore & contemplatione noſtra il detto magnifico Giouanni Keale a nome quo ſupra con le naue, marinari, & mercantia non habbi difficulta, faſtidio & ritentione alcuna, anzi ſe gli dia ogni agiuto & fauore, coſa degna di voi, giuſta, & a noi gratiſſima, de recompenſaruila con vguale & maggior ſeruitio, quando dall' occaſione ne ſaremo rechieſti. Et finalmente commandammo a tutti & qual ſi voglia relligioſi & frati de noſtra relligione di qual ſi voglia cõditione, grado & ſtato che ſiano, & a tutti riceuitori & procuratori noſtri in tutti & qual ſi voglia priorati noſtri deputati & deputandi in vertu di ſanta obedientia, & a tutti noſtri vaſſalli & alla giuriſditione di noſtra relligione ſoggetti, che in tale & per tale tenghino & reputino il detto magnifico Giouanni Keale a nome vt ſupra, naue, marinari, & mercantia, ſenſa permittere, che nel detto ſuo viaggio, o in alcun altro luogo ſia moleſtato, o in qual ſi voglia manera impedito, anzi tutte le coſe ſue & negotij loro ſian da voi agiontati & continuamente fauoriti. In cuius rei teſtimonium Bulla noſtra magiſtralis in cera nigra præſentibus eſt impreſſa. Data Melita in conuentu noſtro die duodecimo Menſis Iulij. 1582.

FRier Hugo of Loubeux Verdala, by the grace of God, maſter of the holy houſe, the hoſpital of S. Iohn at Ieruſalem, and an humble keeper of the poore of Ieſus Chriſt, to all & euery prince eccleſiaſtical & ſecular, archbiſhops, biſhops, Dukes, Marqueſes, Barons, Capteines, Vicelords, Maiors, Caſtellanes, Admirals, and whatſoeuer patrons of Gallies, or other greater ſhippes, and gouernors of cities, potentates and magiſtrates, and other officers and perſons whatſoeuer, of what dignitie, degree, ſtate and condition ſoeuer they be, dwelling in all places and landes, greeting.

We make it knowne, and in the word of truth do witneſſe, that in the moneth of May laſt paſt, our gallies came on the voyage from Barbarie, where hauing commandement to ſuccour a little ſhip of the Chriſtians which was driuen ouer into that part, being arriued vpon this Iland on the Weſt part they found one Engliſh ſhip vnder the charge of the worſhipfull Iohn Keele, and Dauid Fillie maſter: and our men willing to know what ſhip it was, they ſeemed to put themſelues in order for their defence, doubting that the ſaid our gallies were of the enemies, & therefore one mariner attempted contrary to the will of the worſhipfull Iohn Keele, and Dauid Fillie maiſter, and had ſhot off a piece of artillerie againſt one of the ſaid gallies, and becauſe ſhe would not ſtrike amaine her ſayle, according to the will of the ſaide worſhipfull Iohn Keele and Dauid Fillie maſter, the ſaid ſhip was brought backe againe vnto the preſent port of Malta, according to the order of the reuerend generall of the ſaid gallies: and in being there, maiſter Inquiſitor ſtaid it by authoritie of the holy office, and in that behalfe by the holineſſe of our Lord pope Gregorie the thirteenth, in the end was licenced to depart on her voyage. They therefore the ſaid worſhipfull Iohn Keele and Dauid Fillie, in the name and behalfe of the worſhipfull maſter Eward Oſborne Alderman, and Richard Staper, Engliſh marchants of the noble citie of London, haue humbly beſought together with Thomas Wilkinſon the purſer, pilots, maſter and mariners, that we would giue our letters patents, and ſafe conducts, that they might goe and returne, when they ſhall ſee opportunitie, with their goods and merchandizes at their pleaſure: whereupon the thing ſeeming vnto vs iuſt, and that it might be for the profite of our religion, and of theſe ſtrangers, by the tenor of theſe preſents we haue granted the ſame to them: yet, with the conditions hereunder written. viz.

That euery time the ſaid marchants of the ſaid ſhip, or with any other, ſhall not bring ſuch marchandize as is forbidden, and that by ſufficient proofe and letters teſtimoniall it appeareth that they are free from the infections of the plague, they may victuall themſelues with all neceſſarie victuals, and traffike with vs, and in this Iland and dominion, and afterwarde may depart and follow their voyage whither they will into the Leuant or elſe where, as all other veſſels, and eſpecially of France and other nations do, and ſell and buy whatſoeuer marchandize they ſhal thinke good.

Item, that they may bring powder for cannon and harquebuſh, ſaltpecter, cole of Newcaſtle, plates of lattin, tinne, ſteele, yron, cõmon karſies white, courſe canuas to make ſaile for the gallies, balles of yron for ſhot, fine milſtones, trees & maſts for gallies, licle and others, and in concluſion, hauing ſeene that they for the time of their abode here, did behaue themſelues like faithfull and catholike Chriſtians, & that his holines hath allowed the ſafeconduct of the great Turke to them granted for feare of the Turkiſh armie, and other veſſels of the enemie, ſubmitting our ſelues to the pleaſures of his holineſſe, and eſpecially becauſe our people haue occaſion to paſſe by diuers places ſo farre off, as England, Flanders, and all parts Weſtwards, and in other places, we haue vouchſafed to make theſe our letters patents, as our faithfull aſſiſtant, ſo as more ſurely, and without let they may go and returne when they ſhall thinke good, with the ſaid ſhip or with others at their pleaſure. We therefore pray all and euery of your ſubiects effectually that by what part ſoeuer of your iuriſdiction, vnto the which the ſaid worſhipfull Iohn Keele and Dauid Fillie by name aboueſaid, with the ſhip and mariners of the ſaid principall place or other, ſhall haue acceſſe, ſaile, & paſſe, and come ſafely with libertie without any diſturbance or other impediment, that you giue leaue, and cauſe leaue to be giuen that they may paſſe, ſtay and returne, and when they pleaſe, depart, in ſuch ſort, that for our loue & contentation the ſaid worſhipfull Iohn Keele, with the ſhip and mariners haue no let, hinderance, or retention, alſo that you giue all helpe and fauour, a thing worthy of your iuſtice, and to vs moſt acceptable, to be recompenced with equall and greater ſeruice, when vpon occaſion it ſhalbe required.

And finally, we command all, and whatſoeuer religious people, and brothers of our religion, of whatſoeuer condition, degree, and ſtate they be, and all other receiuers and procurators, in all and whatſoeuer our priories deputed, and to be deputed by vertue of the holy obedience, and all our people, and all that are ſubiect to the iuriſdiction of our religion, that in, and by the ſame they hold, and repute the ſaid worſhipfull Iohn Keele in the name as aboueſaid, the ſhip, mariners, and marchandize, without let in the ſame their voyage, or in any other place, that they be not moleſted, nor in any wiſe hindered, but that in all their cauſes and buſineſſe they be of you holpen, and furthered continually. In witneſſe whereof, our ſeale of gouernment is impreſſed to theſe preſents in blacke waxe. Giuen at Malta in our Conuent, the twelfth of the moneth of Iuly, in the yeere 1582.

The Queenes Commiſſion vnder her great ſeale, to her ſeruant maſter William Hareborne, to be her maieſties Ambaſſadour or Agent, in the partes of Turkie. 1582.

Elizabeth, by the clemencie of the moſt good and moſt great God, the only creator and gouernour of all things, Queene of England, France, and Ireland, inuincible, and moſt mightie defender of the true faith, againſt all Idolaters falſly profeſſing the name of Chriſt, to all and ſinguler perſons, to whoſe ſight and view theſe our preſent letters may come, greeting. Whereas the moſt renowmed, and moſt inuincible Prince Zuldan Murad Can, the moſt mighty gouernour of the kingdom of Turkie, and Monarch of the Eaſt Empire, hath entered into league and friendſhip with vs, (which we for our part, as much as lieth in vs, doe purpoſe ſolemnly, and inuiolablie to keepe in all times to come) and whereas for the better countenancing and authorizing of the ſame, the foreſayd renowmed Emperour hath graunted vnto our ſubiects free libertie of traffique, in all the partes of his ſacred Empire, with as ample and large a grant of priuileges, as is giuen to other good Princes our neighbours and confederates, the grant of which priuileges, we taking very thankfully, and acceptably, are certainely, and throughly determined to keepe and mainetaine, with the like goodneſſe and curteſie of minde, deſiring nothing more, then with an honourable reſpect to nouriſh, and deſerue the beneuolent affections of good Princes toward vs: Know ye, that wee thinking well, and hauing good confidence in the ſingular truſtineſſe, obedience, wiſedome, and diſpoſition of our welbeloued ſeruaunt William Hareborne, one of the Eſquiers of our body, towards vs, and our ſeruice, doe by theſe preſents, make, ordaine and conſtitute him our true and vndoubted Orator, Meſſenger, Deputie, and Agent. Giuing and granting vnto him power and authoritie, in our name, and for vs, to confirme the foreſaid league of friendſhip, to take into his hands, and to ratifie the grant of the priuileges, and to commaund, and enioyne by the authoritie of our Maieſtie, all and ſingular our Subiects trading and dealing in any of the coaſtes and kingdomes of that Empire, that as long as they remaine in traffique with his ſubiects, they be obedient to the preſcription and order of the foreſayd priuileges, applying themſelues in all things, and through all things, to ſuch dueties and ſeruices as appertaine to ſo great a league and friendſhip, and the offenders agaynſt this our league to receiue iuſtice, and puniſhment accordingly. We further giue vnto him power and authoritie ouer all and ſinguler our Subiects, dealing, and vſing traffique in any place or part whatſoeuer, ſubiect to the gouernement of that Empire, to appoint the places of their traffiques, in what Hauen or Citie it ſhall pleaſe him, and to prohibite them from all other places, and whereſoeuer their traffiques are appointed to bee kept, there to make and create Conſuls or Gouernours, to enact lawes and ſtatutes, by the vertue and tenor whereof all our foreſayd ſubiects, and euery one of them, ſhall both publikely and priuately vſe and behaue themſelues, to correct and puniſh the breakers of thoſe lawes: and laſt of all, to doe and fulfill all and ſingular things whatſoeuer, which ſhall ſeeme requiſite and conuenient for the honeſt and orderly gouernment of our ſaid ſubiects, and of the maner of their traffique in thoſe parts. Promiſing aſſuredly, and in the word of a Prince, that whatſoeuer ſhall be done of our ſayd Orator and Agent, in all, or in any of the premiſſes, not repugnant and contrary to our lawes, ſhall be accepted, ratified, and confirmed by vs. In witneſſe whereof, we haue cauſed theſe our letters to be made patents, and our ſeale thereunto to be appenſed. Giuen at our Caſtle of Windſore, the 20. day of Nouember, in the yeere of Chriſt 1582. and of our raigne the 24.

The Queenes Letter to the great Turke 1582. written in commendation of Maſter Hareborne, when he was ſent Ambaſſadour.

ELIZABETH &c. Auguſtiſſimo inuictiſſimóque principi, &c. Cùm ad poſtulatum noſtrum Cæſarea veſtra Maieſtas, anno ſaluatoris noſtri Ieſu 1580. pacis fœdus nobiſcum pepigerit, coniunctum cum liberaliſſima priuilegiorum quorundam conceſſione, quorum beneficio ſubditi noſtri cum omni ſecuritate tutiſſimè liberriméque ad vniuerſas & ſingulas Muſulmanici imperij veſtri partes terra maríque proficiſci, in iiſque commercij exercendi gratia, negotiari, habitare, manere, exindéque ire & redire cum volent queant, ab ijs qui ſub Cæſarea veſtra Maieſtate in magiſtratu ſunt vbique locorum protegendi defendendique ſine vlla vel corporum, vel bonorum læſione: nos tantæ conceſſionis beneficium gratum acceptúmque habentes, quantum in nobis eſt, approbamus confirmamúſque: pollicentes in verbo regio, quod nos eandem pacem ſine vlla violatione ſartam tectámq; conſeruabimus: faciemúſq; vt ſubditi noſtri priuilegiorum ſibi indultorum conceſſione ita vtantur, vt Cæſaream veſtram Maieſtatem magnificentiſſimæ ſuæ liberalitatis nunquam pœnitere queat. Elizabeth by the grace of the moſt mightie God and only creator of heauen and earth, of England, France, and Ireland Queene, the moſt inuincible and moſt mighty defender of the Chriſtian faith againſt all kind of idolatries of all that liue among the Chriſtians and falſly profeſſe the name of Chriſt, vnto the moſt Imperiall and moſt inuincible prince, Sultan Murad Can, the moſt mighty ruler of the kingdom of Turkie, ſole aboue all, and moſt ſoueraigne Monarch of the Eaſt Empire, greeting.

Whereas at our requeſt your Imperiall Maieſtie in the yeere of our Sauiour Ieſus 1580. hath entred into a League of peace with vs, whereunto was vnited a moſt large & bountifull grant of certaine priuileges, by benefite whereof our ſubiects may with all ſecuritie moſt ſafely and freely trauell by Sea and land into all and ſingular parts of your Muſulmanlike Empire, and in the ſame exerciſing the trade of merchandiſe, may traffique, dwell, remaine, depart from thence, and returne thither at their pleaſure, and in all places be maintained and defended from all damage of bodies and goods, by ſuch as are in authoritie vnder your Imperiall Maieſtie: we thankfully and gratefully receiuing the benefite of ſo great a priuilege, as much as in vs lieth doe approoue and confirme the ſame, promiſing in the worde of a Prince, that wee will keepe the ſaid league perfect and inuiolable, and will cauſe our ſubiects ſo to vſe the grant of the priuileges giuen vnto them, as your Imperiall Maieſtie ſhall neuer haue occaſion to repent you of your moſt princely liberalitie. And becauſe the force of this grant, in the iudgement of both our maieſties, ſeemeth rather to conſiſt in the vſe thereof, then in the wordes, we thought good to ſend vnto your Imperiall maieſtie this our ambaſſadour William Hareborne, one of the Eſquiers of our body, which both on our behalfe ſhould yeeld thanks vnto your maieſtie, and alſo that we might vſe his good indeuour for the eſtabliſhing of ſuch order in our ſubiects trade of merchandiſe, as well in your Imperiall citie of Conſtantinople, as in other places of your Muſulmanlike Empire, as according to the preſcript of the priuileges is granted by your princely maieſties goodneſſe, and ſhall be for the benefite of both our ſubiects. For performance whereof, becauſe hee ſtandeth in neede of your Imperiall Maieſties authoritie) wee earneſtly beſeech the ſame, that you would cauſe all thoſe which bee in authoritie vnder your Highneſſe, by all their beſt meanes to aide and aſſiſt this our Ambaſſadour in executing this your Imperiall Maieſties pleaſure, for vnto him wee haue committed this charge: wherein how honeſtly hee will diſcharge his credite toward both our Maieſties, I no whit ſtand in doubt: to whom alſo our pleaſure is, that all our ſubiects ſhall bee obedient, as farre as the grant of your Imperiall maieſtie doeth permit. Moreouer, whereas that worthie perſonage Muſtafa, your Imperiall maieſties Interpreter, hath taken ſpeciall paines for the procuring of this league betweene vs, wee earneſtly beſeech you that for our ſakes your Imperiall Maieſtie would vouchſafe to aduance him vnto the degree of the Muſtafaraks or chiefe penſioners. If in theſe and in all other honeſt cauſes, our aforeſayde Agent and our ſubiectes ſhall finde your Imperiall Highneſſes fauour, a noble traffique will flouriſh betweene theſe nations, and wee (if by any way wee may ſtand your State in ſteade) will alwayes moſt willingly be readie to requite this your Maieſties fauour and good will with all kinde of good offices. Almightie God the maker of the world preſerue and keepe your Imperiall Maieſtie, &c.

M. Wil. Hareborne ſent ambaſſador to the Turke.

A requeſt for the preferring of Muſtafa Beg.

A Letter of the Queenes Maieſtie to Alli Baſſa the Turkes high Admirall, ſent by her ambaſſadour M. William Hareborne, and deliuered vnto him aboord his gallie in the Arſenal.

ELIZABETHA, &c. Illuſtriſſimo viro Alli Baſſa, magni Muſulmanici Cæſaris Admiralio, ſalutem & ſucceſſus fortunatos. Non ignotum eſſe Excellentiæ veſtræ arbitramur, priuilegia quædam à potentiſſimo Cæſare Muſulmanico domino veſtro clementiſſimo ſubditis noſtris Anglicis conceſſa eſſe, vt illis liceat in omnibus imperij Muſulmanici prouincijs tutò & ſecurè manere ac negotiari: non aliter quàm hoc ipſum Francis, Polonis, Venetis, Germanis antea indultum est. Qua ex causa nos Gulielmum Hareborne nobis dilectum, è corporis custodibus vnũ, ac multis nominibus ornatum ad inclytam Constantinopolis ciuitatem pro agente misimus: qui ex priuilegiorum prædictorum præscripto nostras & subditorum nostrorum res in illis locis constitueret. Facere igitur non potuimus, quin Excellentiæ vestræ Guilielmum hunc, pro ea qua apud magnum Cæsarem polles authoritate, commendaremus: petentes summopere vt tutò in mari sine Classiariorum vestrorum violentia, & securè in portibus absque ministrorum rapinis & iniurijs, tam ipse quàm omnes Angli subditi nostri possint versari: vti pro tenore literarum patentium à magno Cæsare concessarum illis licere ex illarum conspectione perspicuum esse potest. Gratissimum ergo nobis excellentia vestra fecerit, si portuum omnium, aliorúmque locorum, qui vestræ iurisdictioni parent, custodibus, item classium & nauium præfectis omnibus mandare velit, vt Guilielmus iste, aliíque Angli subditi nostri cum in illorum erunt potestate, amicè & humaniter tractarentur. Quemadmodum nos vicissim omnes magni Cæsaris subditos omni humanitatis genere tractabimus, si in Oceani maria, aliáue loca venerint, quæ nostro parent imperio. Postremo excellentiam vestram pro eo quem in nostros extendet fauore ijs omnibus officijs prosequemur, quæ à gratissima principe in optime de se merentes debent proficisci. Benè & fœliciter valeas. 3 And also all other herbes vsed in dying in like maner to bee brought in.

4 And all Trees, whose Leaues, Seedes, or Barkes, or Wood doe serue to that vse, to be brought into this realme by Seed or Roote.

5 All little Plants and Buskes seruing to that vse to be brought in.

6 To learne to know all earths and minerals forren vsed in dying, and their naturall places, for possible the like may here be found vpon sight.

7 Also with the materials vsed in dying, to bring in the excellencie of the arte of dying.

8 To procure from Muhaisira a citie in Ægypt to Constantinople, the seed of Sesamum the herbe, and the same into this realme. Common trade is betweene Alexandria and Constantinople, and therefore you may easily procure the seeds. Of this seed much oyle is made, and many mils set on worke about the same in the sayd Muhaisira, and if this seede may prosper in England, infinite benefite to our Clothing trade may rise by the same. This citie is situate vpon Nilus the riuer, and thence this is brought to Venice and to diuers other Cities of Italie, and to Antwerpe.

9 To note all kindes of clothing in Turkie, and all degrees of their labour in the same.

10 To endeuour rather the vent of Kersies, then of other Clothes as a thing more beneficiall to our people.

11 To endeuour the sale of such our clothes as bee coloured with our owne naturall colours as much as you can, rather then such as be coloured with forren colours.

12 To seeke out a vent for our Bonettos, a cap made for Barbarie, for that the poore people may reape great profite by the trade.

13 To endeuour vent of knit Stockes made of Norwich yarne, & of other yarne, which brought to great trade, may turne our poore people to great benefite, besides the vent of the substance, of our colours, and of our diuers labour.

14 To endeuour a vent of our Saffron for the benefit of our poore people: for a large vent found, it setteth many on worke.

Remembrances for maſter S. to giue him the better occaſion to informe himſelfe of ſome things in England, and after of ſome other things in Turkie, to the great profite of the Common weale of this Countrey. Written by the foreſayd maſter Richard Hakluyt, for a principall Engliſh Factor at Conſtantinople 1582.

SInce all men confeſſe (that be not barbarouſly bred) that men are borne as well to ſeeke the common commoditie of their Countrey, as their owne priuate benefite, it may ſeeme follie to perſwade that point, for each man meaneth ſo to doe. But wherein men ſhould ſeeke the common commoditie, and what way, and by what meane that is to bee brought about, is the point or ſumme of the matter, ſince euery good man is ready to imploy his labour. This is to bee done by an infinite ſort of meanes, as the number of things bee infinite that may bee done for common benefite of the Realme. And as the chiefe things ſo to bee done be diuers, ſo are they to bee done by diuers men, as they bee by wit and maner of education more fit, or leſſe fit, for this and for that. And for that of many things that tend to the common benefite of the State, ſome tend more, and ſome leſſe, I finde that no one thing, after one other, is greater then Clothing, and the things incident to the ſame. And underſtanding that you are of right good capacitie, and become a Factor at Conſtantinople, and in other partes in Turkie, I finde no man fitter of all the Engliſh Factors there, then you. And therefore I am ſo bold to put you in minde, and to tell you wherein with ſome indeuour you may chaunce to doe your Countrey much good, and giue an infinite ſort of the poore people occaſion to pray for you here throughout the Realme: this that I meane is in matter of Cloth,&c.

1 FIrſt, you cannot denie but that this Realme yeeldeth the moſt fine Wooll, the moſt ſoft, the moſt ſtrong Wooll, the moſt durable in Cloth, and moſt apte of nature of all other to receiue Die, and that no Iſland or any one kingdome ſo ſmall doeth yeeld ſo great abundance of the ſame: and that no Wooll is leſſe ſubiect to mothes, or to fretting in preſſe, then this, as the old Parliament robes of Kings, & of many noble Peeres to be ſhewed may plainly teſtifie.

2 There is no commoditie of this Realme that may ſet ſo many poore ſubiects on worke, as this doeth, that doeth bring in ſo much treaſure, and ſo much enrich the merchant, and ſo much employ the Nauie of this Realme, as this commoditie of our Wooll doeth.

Ample and full vent of this noble and rich commoditie is it that the common weale of this realme doeth require.

Spaine nowe aboundeth with Wools, and the ſame are Clothed. Turkie hath Wools, and ſo haue diuers prouinces of Chriſtendome and of Heatheneſſe, and cloth is made of the ſame in diuers places.

1 But if England haue the moſt fine, and the moſt excellent Wools of the world in all reſpects (as it cannot bee denied, but it hath) 2 If there may bee added to the ſame, excellent artificiall, and true making, and excellent dying, 3 Then no doubt but that we ſhall haue vent for our Clothes, although the reſt of the world did abound much more with Wool then it doeth, and although their workemanſhip and their dying were in euery degree equal with ours of England, vnleſſe the labour of our people imployed that way, and the materials vſed in dying ſhould be the cauſe of the contrary by dearth.

But if Forren nations turne their Wools, inferiour to ours, into truer and more excellent made cloth, and ſhall die the ſame in truer, ſurer, and more excellent and more delectable colours, then ſhall they ſell and make ample vent of their Clothes, when the Engliſh cloth of better wooll ſhall reſt vnſold, to the ſpoyle of the Merchant, of the Clothier, and of the breeder of the wooll, and to the turning to bag and wallet of the infinite number of the poore people imployed in clothing in ſeuerall degrees of labour here in England.

Which things weyed, I am to tell you what things I wiſh you in this Realme, and after in Turkie, to indeuour from time to time, as your leiſure may permit the ſame.

Before you goe out of the Realme, that you learne:

1 TO know wooll, all kind of clothes made in this realme, and all other employments of wooll, home or forren, be yͤ ſame in Felt clokes, felt hats, in the red knit cap for Barbarie, called Bonettos rugios colorados, or whatſoeuer, &c.

All the deceits in Clothmaking; as the ſorting together of Wools of ſeuerall natures, ſome of nature to ſhrinke, ſome to hold out, which cauſeth cloth to cockle and lie vneuen.

The euill ſorting of threed of good or bad wooll, ſome tootoo hard ſpun, ſome tootoo ſoft ſpun deliuered to be wouen.

The faults in Weauing.

The faults in Walking, Rowing, and Burling, and in Racking the Clothes aboue meaſure vpon the Teintors: all which faults may be learned of honeſt men, which faults are to be knowen to the merchant, to be ſhunned and not to be vſed.

2 Then to learne of the Diers to diſcerne all kind of colours; as which be good and ſure, and which will not hold: which be faire, which not; which colours by the dearth of the ſubſtances bee deare, and which by reaſon of the cheapeneſſe of the Materials with which they be died, be cheape colours.

3 Then to take the names of all the materials and ſubſtances vſed in this Citie or in the realme, in dying of cloth or ſilke.

To learne to know them, as which be good, which bad.

And what colours they die.

And what prices they be of.

And of them which bee the Naturals of this Realme, and in what part of the Realme they are to be had.

And of all the forren materials vſed in dying to know the very naturall places of them, and the plentie or the ſcarceneſſe of each of them.

Theſe things ſuperficially learned in the realme before you goe, you are the fitter in forren parts to ſerue your Countrey, for by this meanes you haue an entrie into the thing that I wiſh you to trauell in.

What you ſhall doe in Turkie, beſides the buſineſſe of your Factorſhip.

1 FOraſmuch as it is reported that the Woollen clothes died in Turkie bee moſt excellently died, you ſhall ſend home into this realme certaine Mouſters or pieces of ſhew to be brought to the Diers hall, there to be ſhewed, partly to remoue out of their heads, the tootoo great opinion they haue conceiued of their owne cunning, and partly to mooue them for ſhame to endeuour to learne more knowledge to the honour of their countrey of England, and to the vniuerſall benefit of the realme.

2 You ſhall deuiſe to amend the Dying of England, by carying hence an apte yoong man brought vp in the Arte, or by bringing one or other from thence of ſkill, or rather to deuiſe to bring one for Silkes, and another for Wooll and for Woollen cloth, and if you cannot worke this by ordinarie meanes, then to worke it by ſome great Baſſas meane, or if your owne credite there be not ſufficient by meane of your ſmall abode in thoſe parties, to worke it by the helpe of the French ambaſſador there reſident, for which purpoſe you may inſinuate your ſelfe into his acquaintance, and otherwiſe to leaue no meane vnſought that tendeth to this end, wherein you are to doe as circumſtances may permit.

3 Then to learne to know all the materials and ſubſtances that the Turkes vſe in dying, be they of Herbes, ſimple or compound, be they Plants, Barkes, Wood, Berries, Seedes, Graines, or Minerall matter, or what els ſoeuer. But before all other, ſuch things as yeeld thoſe famous colours that carrie ſuch ſpeciall report of excellencie, that our Merchants may bring them to this realme by ordinarie trade, as a right meane for the better vent of our clothes.

4 To know the vſe of thoſe, and where the naturall place of them and of ech of them is, I meane the place where ech of them groweth or is bred.

5 And in any wiſe, if Anile that coloureth blew be a naturall commoditie of thoſe parts, and if it be compounded of an herbe, to ſend the ſame into this realme by ſeed or by root in barrell of earth, with all the whole order of ſowing, ſetting, planting, replanting, and with the compounding of the ſame, that it may become a naturall commoditie in this realme as Woad is, to this end that the high price of forreine Woad (which deuoureth yeerely great treaſure) may be brought downe, So ſhall the marchant buy his cloth leſſe deare, and ſo he ſhalbe able to occupy with leſſe ſtocke, be able to afoord cloth cheaper, make more ample vent, and alſo become a greater gainer himſelfe, and all this to the benefit of this realme.

6 To do the like with herbe & plant, or tree that in dying is of any excellent vſe, as to ſend the ſame by ſeed, berry, root, &c: for by ſuch meanes Saffron was brought firſt into this realme, which hath ſet many poore on worke, and brought great wealth into this realme. Thus may Sumack, the plant wherewith the moſt excellent blacks be died in Spaine, be brought out of Spaine, and out of the Ilands of the ſame, if it will grow in this more colde climat. For thus was Woad brought into this realme, and came to good perfection, to the great loſſe of the French our olde enemies. And it doth maruellouſly import this realme to make naturall in this realme ſuch things as be ſpecial in the dying of our clothes. And to ſpeake of ſuch things as colour blew, they are of greateſt vſe, and are grounds of the moſt excellent colours, and therefore of all other to be brought into this realme, be it Anile or any other materiall of that qualitie.

7 And becauſe yellowes and greenes are colours of ſmall prices in this realme, by reaſon that Olde and Greenweed wherewith they be died be naturall here, and in great plentie, therefore to bring our clothes ſo died to common ſale in Turkie were to the great benefit of the marchant, and other poore ſubiects of this realme, for in ſale of ſuch our owne naturall colours we conſume not our treaſure in forren colours, and yet we ſell our owne trifles dearely perhaps.

8 The woolles being naturall, and excellent colours for dying becomming by this meanes here alſo naturall, in all the arte of Clothing then we want but one onely ſpeciall thing. For in this ſo temperate a climat our people may labor the yere thorowout, whereas in ſome regions of the world they cannot worke for extreme heat, as in ſome other regions they cannot worke for extreme colde a good part of the yere. And the people of this realme by the great and bleſſed abundance of victuall are cheaply fed, and therefore may afoord their labour cheape. And where the Clothiers in Flanders by the flatneſſe of their riuers cannot make Walkmilles for their clothes, but are forced to thicken and dreſſe all their clothes by the foot and by the labour of men, whereby their clothes are raiſed to an higher price, we of England haue in all Shires ſtore of milles vpon falling riuers. And theſe riuers being in temperate zones are not dried vp in Summer with drought and heat as the riuers be in Spaine and in hotter regions, nor frozen vp in Winter as all the riuers be in all the North regions of the world: ſo as our milles may go and worke at all times, and dreſſe clothes cheaply. Then we haue alſo for ſcowring our clothes earths and claies, as Walkers clay, and the clay of Oborne little inferior to Sope in ſcowring and in thicking. Then alſo haue we ſome reaſonable ſtore of Alum and Copporas here made for dying, and are like to haue increaſe of the ſame. Then we haue many good waters apt for dying, and people to ſpin and to doe the reſt of all the labours we want not. So as there wanteth, if colours might be brought in and made naturall, but onely Oile: the want whereof if any man could deuiſe to ſupply at the full with any thing that might become naturall in this realme, he whatſoeuer he were that could bring it about, might deſerue immortall fame in this our Common wealth, and ſuch a deuiſe was offered to the Parliament and refuſed, becauſed they denied to endow him with a certaine liberty, ſome others hauing obtained the ſame before, that practiſed to worke that effect by Rauiſh ſeed, which onely made a triall of ſmall quantity, and that went no further, to make that Oile in plentie: and now he that offered this deuiſe was a marchant, and is dead, and withall the deuiſe is dead with him.

Supply of the want of oile.

It is written by one that wrote of Afrike, that in Egypt in a citie called Muhaiſira there be many milles imployed in making of Oile of the ſeed of an herbe called Seſamum. Pena and Lobell, Phyſicians, write in our time, that this herbe is a codded herbe full of oily ſeed, and that there is plenty of this ſeede brought out of Egypt to diuers Cities in Italy. If this herbe will proſper in this realme, our marchants may eaſily bring of it, &c.

Leo Africanus lib. 8.

9 Hauing herein thus troubled you by raiſing to your minde the conſideration of certaine things, it ſhall not be impertinent to tell you that it ſhall not be amiſſe that you note all the order of the degrees of labour vſed in Turky, in the arte of Clothing, and to ſee if any way they excell in that profeſſion our people of theſe parts, and to bring notice of the ſame into this realme.

10 And if you ſhall finde that they make any cloth of any kinde not made in this realme, that is there of great vſe, then to bring of the ſame into this realme ſome Mowlders, that our people may fall into the trade, and prepare the ſame for Turkie: for the more kinds of cloth we can deuiſe to make, the more ample vent of our commodities we ſhall haue, and the more ſale of the labour of our poore ſubiects that els for lacke of labour become idle and burdenous to the common weale, and hurtfull to many: and in England we are in our clothing trade to frame our ſelues according to the deſires of forren nations, be it that they deſire thicke or thinne, broad or narrowe, long or ſhort, white or blacke. 11 But with this proviſo alwayes, that our cloth paſſe out with as much labour of our people as may be, wherein great conſideration ought to be had: for (if vent might ſo admit it) as it were the greateſt madneſſe in the world for vs to vent our wooll vnclothed, ſo were it madneſſe to vent our wooll in part or in the whole turned into broad cloth, if we might vent the ſame in Kerſies: for there is great difference in profit to our people betweene the clothing of a ſacke of wooll in the one, and the like ſacke of wooll in the other, of which I wiſh the marchant of England to haue as great care as he may for the vniuerſall benefit of the poore: and the turning of a ſacke of wooll into Bonets is better then both &c. And alſo not to carry out of the realme any cloth white, but died if it may be, that the ſubiects of this realme may take as much benefit as is poſſible, and rather to ſeeke the vent of the clothes died with the naturall colours of England, then ſuch as be died with forren colours.

12 And if of neceſſity we muſt be forced to receiue certaine colours from forren parts, for that this climat will not breed them, I wiſh that our marchants procure Anile and ſuch other things to be planted in like climats where now it growes, in diuers other places, that this realme may haue that brought in for as baſe prices as is poſſible, and that falling out with one place we may receiue the ſame from another, and not buy the ſame at the ſecond or the third hand &c. For if a commodity that is to be had of meere neceſſity, be in one hand, it is dearely purchaſed.

1 How many ſeuerall colours be died is to be learned of our Diers before you depart.

2 Then how many of thoſe colours England doth die of her owne naturall home materials and ſubſtances, and how many not.

3 Then to bring into this realme herbs and plants to become naturall in our ſoiles, that may die the reſt of the colours, that preſently of our owne things here growing we can not yet die, and this from all forren places.

4 There is a wood called Logwood or Palo Campechio, it is cheape and yeeldeth a glorious blew, but our workmen can not make it ſure. This wood you muſt take with you, and ſee whether the Silke diers or Wooll diers in Turky can doe it, with this one you may enrich your ſelfe very much, and therefore it is to be endeuoured earneſtly by you. It may bring downe the price of Woad and of Anile.

Other ſome things to be remembred.

If you can finde out at Tripoly in Syria or elſewhere a vent for the Cappes called in Barbarie, Bonettos colorados rugios, which is a red Scottiſh cap as it were without brims, you ſhould do your countrey much good: for as a ſacke of wooll turned into fine Deuonſhire kerſies doth ſet many more people on worke then a ſacke ſpunne for broad cloth in a groſſer thred, ſo a ſacke of wooll turned into thoſe Bonets doth ſet many more poore people on worke, then a ſacke turned into Kerſies, by reaſon of the knitting. And therefore if you can indeuour that, you worke great effect. And no doubt that a maruellous vent may be found out of them into Afrike by the way of Alexandria, and by Alcayer Southeaſt and Southweſt thence.

2 And by the vent of our knit hoſe of Woollen yarne, Woorſted yarne, and of Linnen thred, great benefit to our people may ariſe, and a great value in fine Kerſies and in thoſe knit wares may be couched in a ſmall roome in the ſhip. And for theſe things our people are growen apt, and by indeuour may be drawen to great trade.

3 Saffron the beſt of the vniuerſall world groweth in this realme, and foraſmuch as it is a thing that requireth much labour in diuers ſorts, and ſetteth the people on worke ſo plentifully, I wiſh you to ſee whether you can finde out ample vent for the ſame, ſince it is gone out of great vſe in thoſe parts. It is a ſpice that is cordiall, and may be vſed in meats, and that is excellent in dying of yellow ſilks. This commodity of Saffron groweth fifty miles from Tripoli in Syria, on an high hill called in thoſe parts Garian, ſo as there you may learne at that port of Tripoli the value of the pound, the goodneſſe of it, and the places of the vent. But it is ſayd that from that hill there paſſeth yerely of that commodity fifteene moiles laden, and that thoſe regions notwithſtanding lacke ſufficiencie of that commodity. But if a vent might be found, men would in Eſſex about Saffronwalden and in Cambridge ſhire reuiue the trade for the benefit of the ſetting of the poore on worke. So would they doe in Hereford ſhire by Wales, where the beſt of all England is, in which place the ſoile yeelds the wilde Saffron commonly, which ſheweth the naturall inclination of the ſame ſoile to the bearing of the right Saffron, if the ſoile be manured and that way employed.

Leo Africanus lib. 4.

4 There is a walled towne not farre from Barbarie, called Hubbed, toward the South from the famous towne Telenſin, about ſix miles: the inhabitants of which towne in effect be all

Diers. And it is ſayd that thereabout they haue plenty of Anile, & that they employ that, and alſo that they vſe there in their dyings, of the Saffron [illegible]. The trueth whereof, in the Southerly portes of the Mediterran ſea, be eaſily learned in your paſſage to Tripoli, or in returne from thence homeward you may vnderſtand it. It is reported at Saffronwalden that a Pilgrim purpoſing to do good to his countrey, ſtole an head of Saffron, and hid the ſame in his Palmers ſtaffe, which he had made hollow before of purpoſe, and ſo he brought this root into this realme, with venture of his life: for if he had bene taken, by the law of the countrey from whence it came, he had died for the fact. If the like loue in this our age were in our people that now become great trauellers, many knowledges, and many trades, and many herbes and plants might be brought into this realme that might doe the realme good. And the Romans hauing that care, brought from all coaſtes of the world into Italie all artes and ſciences, and all kinds of beaſts and fowles, and all herbs, trees, buſhs and plants that might yeeld profit or pleaſure to their countrey of Italie. And if this care had not bene heretofore in our anceſters, then had our life bene ſauage now, for then we had not had Wheat nor Rie, Peaſe nor Beanes, Barley nor Oats, Peare nor Apple, Vine nor many other profitable and pleaſant plants, Bull nor Cow, Sheepe nor Swine, Horſe nor Mare, Cocke nor Hen, nor a number of other things that we inioy, without which our life were to be ſayd barbarous: for theſe things and a thouſand that we vſe more the firſt inhabitors of this Iland found not here. And in time of memory things haue bene brought in that were not here before, as the Damaſke roſe by Doctour Linaker king Henry the ſeuenth and king Henrie the eights Phyſician, the Turky cocks and hennes about fifty yeres paſt, the Artichowe in time of king Henry the eight, and of later time was procured out of Italy the Muske roſe plant, the plumme called the Perdigwena, and two kindes more by the Lord Cromwell after his trauell, and the Abricot by a French Prieſt one Wolfe Gardiner to king Henry the eight: and now within theſe foure yeeres there haue bene brought into England from Vienna in Auſtria diuers kinds of flowers called Tulipas, and thoſe and other procured thither a little before from Conſtantinople by an excellent man called M. Carolus Cluſius. And it is ſayd that ſince we traded to Zante that the plant that beareth the Coren is alſo brought into this realme from thence; and although it bring not fruit to perfection, yet it may ſerue for pleaſure and for ſome vſe, like as our vines doe, which we cannot well ſpare, although the climat ſo colde will not permit vs to haue good wines of them. And many other things haue bene brought in, that haue degenerated by reaſon of the colde climat, ſome other things brought in haue by negligence bene loſt. The Archbiſhop of Canterburie Edmund Grindall, after he returned out of Germany, brought into this realme the plant of Tamariſke from thence, and this plant he hath ſo increaſed that there be here thouſands of them: and many people haue receiued great health by this plant: and if of things brought in ſuch care were had, then could not the firſt labour be loſt. The ſeed of Tabacco hath bene brought hither out of the Weſt Indies, it groweth heere, and with the herbe many haue bene eaſed of the reumes, &c. Each one of a great number of things were woorthy of a iourney to be made into Spaine, Italy, Barbarie, Egypt, Zante, Conſtantinople, the Weſt Indies, and to diuers other places neerer and further off then any of theſe, yet forſomuch as the poore are not able, and for that the rich ſetled at home in quiet will not, therefore we are to make ſute to ſuch as repaire to forren kingdomes, for other buſineſſes, to haue ſome care heerein, and to ſet before their eyes the examples of theſe good men, and to endeuour to do for their parts the like, as their ſpeciall buſineſſes may permit the ſame. Thus giuing you occaſion by way of a little rememembrance, to haue a deſire to do your countrey good, you ſhall, if you haue any inclination to ſuch good, do more good to the poore ready to ſterue for reliefe, then euer any ſubiect did in this realme by building of Almeshouſes, and by giuing of lands and goods to the reliefe of the poore. Thus may you helpe to driue idleneſſe the mother of moſt miſchiefs out of the realme, and winne you perpetuall fame, and the prayer of the poore, which is more woorth then all the golde of Peru and of all the Weſt Indies.

THe 14 of Nouember 1582, we departed from Blackewall, bound for the Citie of Conſtantinople, in the tall ſhippe called the Suſan of London: the Maſter whereof was Richard Parſons, a very excellent and ſkilfull man in his facultie. William Hareborne her Maieſties Ambaſſadour to the Turke, and his company, and ſailed thence to Yarmouth in the foreſayd Iſle of Wight. The 19 we put from Wight. The 26 we did ſee Cauo de Sant Vincente. The ſame day we were thwart of Cauo Santa Maria. The 27 we paſſed by Tariffa, and Gibraltar. The 28 in the morning we paſſed by Velez Malaga: and that night were thwart of Cauo de Gates. The 29 at night we had ſight of Cauo de Palos. The 30 in the morning we did ſee the high land of Denia, in the kingdome of Valencia, and that night we had ſight of the Iland Formentera. The 31 in the morning appeared the Iland of Cabrera. The firſt of February we put into a Port in Mallorca, called Porto de Sant Pedro: where they would haue euill intreated vs for comming into the Harbour: we thought we might haue bene as bolde there as in other places of Chriſtendome, but it prooued farre otherwiſe. The firſt man we met on land was a ſimple Shepheard, of whom we demaunded whether we might haue a ſheepe or ſuch like to refreſh our ſelues, who tolde vs yea. And by ſuch conference had with him, at the laſt he came aboord once or twiſe, and had the beſt cheare that we could make him: and our Ambaſſadour himſelfe talked with him, and ſtill he made vs faire promiſes, but nothing at all meant to performe the ſame, as the end ſhewed. In the meane time came in a ſhippe of Marſeils, the Maſter whereof did know our Ambaſſadour very well, with whom our Ambaſſadour had conference, and with his Marchants alſo. They came from Alger in Barbarie, which is vnder the gouernement of the Great Turke. They did preſent our Ambaſſadour with an Ape, wherefore he made very much of them, and had them often aboord. By them I ſuppoſe, he was bewrayed of his purpoſe as touching his meſſage, but yet ſtill we had faire words of the Shepheard aforeſayd, and others. So that vpon their words, our Purſer and another man went to a Towne which was three or foure miles from the port, and there were well entertained, and had of the people very faire ſpeeches, and ſuch ſmall things as could be gotten vpon the ſudden, and ſo returned to the ſhippe that day. Then wee were emboldened, and thought all had bene well, according to their talke. The next day, being the ſixth day of Februarie, two of our Gentlemen, with one of our Marchants, and the Purſer, and one of the Ambaſſadours men went to the Towne aforeſayd, thinking to doe as the Purſer and the other had done before, but it prooued contrary: for at their comming thither they had faire wordes a while, and had bread and wine, and ſuch neceſſaries for their money, vntill ſuch time as they were beſet with men, and the Maiorcans neuer ſhewed in their countenance any ſuch matter, but as the maner of all the people in the dominions of Spaine is, for the moſt part to be trecherous to vs, if they thinke they haue any aduantage. For vpon the ſudden they layed handes on them, and put them in holde, as ſure as might be in ſuch a ſimple Towne. Then were they well guarded with men both day and night, and ſtill deluded with faire words, & they ſayd to our men it was for no hurt, but that the Viceroy of the Iland would come aboord to ſee the ſhippe. But they preſently ſent the Purſer to the Towne of Maiorca, where he was examined by the Viceroy very ſtraightly, what their ſhippe and captaine were, and what voyage they intended, but he confeſſed nothing at all. In the meane time they in the Towne were likewiſe ſtraightly examined by a Prieſt and other officers vpon their othes: who for their othes ſake declared the whole eſtate of their voyage. The Ambaſſadours man was a French man, and therefore was ſuffered to goe to the ſhippe on a meſſage, but he could tell the Ambaſſadour none other newes, but that the Viceroy would come aboord the ſhippe, and that our men ſhould come with him, but they had another meaning. For the Marſeilian Marchants were ſtayed in like maner in the Towne, onely to make a better ſhew vnto vs. But in the meane time, being there three or foure dayes, there came men vnto vs euery day, more or leſſe, but one day eſpecially there came two men on horſebacke, whom we tooke to be officers, being luſty men, and very well horſed. Theſe men deſired to ſpeake with our Captaine (for all things that paſſed there were done in the name of our Captaine Iohn Gray) for it was ſayd by vs there, that he was Captaine of one of her Maieſties ſhippes: wherefore all things paſſed in his name: and the Ambaſſadour not ſeene in any thing but rather concealed, and yet did all, becauſe of his tongue and good inditing in that language. For he himſelfe went on land clothed in Veluet, and talked with theſe men, and with him ten or twelue luſty fellowes well weaponed, ech one hauing a Boareſpeare or a Caliuer, the Captaine Iohn Gray being one of them, and our boat lying by very warely kept and ready. For then wee began to ſuſpect, becauſe the place was more frequented with men then it was woont. The men on horſebacke were in doubt to come neere, becauſe hee came ſo well weaponed. But they bade him welcome, and gaue him great ſalutations in words as their maner is: and demaunded why he came ſo ſtrong, for they ſayd he needed not to feare any man in the Iland. Anſwere was made, that it was the maner of Engliſh Captaines to goe with their guard in ſtrange places. Then they tolde our Ambaſſador (thinking king him to be the Captaine) that they were ſent from the Viceroy to know what they did lacke, for they promiſed him beefe or mutton, or any thing that was in the Iland to be had, but their purpoſe was to haue gotten more of our men if they could, and they ſayde that wee ſhould haue our men againe the next day: with ſuch prety deluſions they fed vs ſtill. Then our Ambaſſadour did write a letter to the Viceroy in her Maieſties name, and in our Captaine Iohn Grayes name, and not in his owne, and ſent it by them, deſiring him to ſend his men, and not to trouble him in his voyage, for he had giuen him no ſuch cauſe, nor any of his. So theſe men departed with great courteſie in words on both parts. And in all this time we did ſee men on horſebacke and on foot in the woods and trees more then they were accuſtomed to be, but we could perceiue nothing thereby. The next day, or the ſecond, came either foure or ſixe of the beſt of them as wee thought (the Viceroy excepted) and very many men beſides in the fieldes, both on foot and on horſe, but came not neere the water ſide. And thoſe in like order deſired to ſpeake with the Captaine, and that when he came on land the trumpets might ſound: but then the Ambaſſadour, whom they thought to be Captaine, would not goe, nor ſuffer the trumpets to be ſounded, for that he thought it was a trappe to take himſelfe, and more of his company. But did ſend one of the principall of the Marchants to talke with them. And the Captaine Iohn Gray went alſo with him, not being knowen of the Spaniards, for he went as a ſouldiour. Thus they receiued of thoſe men the like wordes as they had of the other before mentioned, who ſayd we ſhould haue our men againe, for they meant vs no hurt. Then our Ambaſſadour did write another letter, and ſent it by them to the Viceroy, in like order as he did before, but he receiued no anſwere of any of them. In all this time they had priuily gathered together the principall men of the Iland, and had laboured day and night to bring downe ordinance, not making any ſhew of their trecherie towards vs. But the ſame night following, we ſaw very many lights paſſe in the woods among the trees. And in the morning when the watch was broken vp, being Saturday the ninth of Februarie, at faire day light, one of our men looked foorth, and ſaw ſtanding on land the cariage of a piece: then was one commanded to goe into the toppe, and there he did deſcrie two or three pieces, and alſo many men on the ſhoare, with diuers weapons that they brought. Then they ſuddenly tooke foure or fiue braſſe pieces, and placed them on either ſide of the harborough where we ſhould go out, and hid them with ſtones and buſhes that we ſhould not ſee them. Now I thinke the harborough not to be aboue the eight part of a mile ouer. Thus perceiuing their meaning which was moſt plaine; wee agreed to take vp our anker and goe out, and leaue our men there, hauing none other way to take. Then our Ambaſſadour intreated the Maſter of the Marſeilian, his friend, to goe on land with his boat, and to know the trueth: who ſatiſfied his requeſt. And at his returne he tolde vs that it was very true, that they would lay holde of vs if they could. Then we weighed our ankers: but hauing little winde, we towed the ſhippe forward with the boat. The Viceroy himſelfe was at the water ſide with more then fiue hundred men on both ſides of the harbour as we thought. And when we came out with our ſhippe as far as their ordinance, our Ambaſſadour and the Captaine being in their armour, the Maſter commanding of the company, and trimming of the ſailes, the Pilot ſtanding on the poope, attending to his charge, with other very well furniſhed, and euery man in order about their buſineſſe very ready, they on land on the contrary part hauing a very faire piece mounted on the North ſide openly in all our ſights, as the ſhippe paſſed by, they trauerſed that piece right with the maine maſt or after-quarter of the ſhippe, and a Gunner ſtanding by, with a lintſtocke in his hand, about foureteene or fifteene foot long, being (as we thought) ready to giue fire. Our whole noiſe of trumpets were ſounding on the poope with drumme and flute, and a Pinion of braſſe on the ſummer decke, with two or three other pieces, alwayes by our Gunners trauerſed mouth to mouth with theirs on land, ſtill looking when they on land ſhould ſhoot, for to anſwere them againe. The Pilot ſtanding on the poope, ſeeing this readineſſe, and the ſhippe going very ſoftly, becauſe of the calmeneſſe of the winde, he called to them on the South ſide, where the Viceroy was, and ſayd vnto him: Haue you warres with vs? If you haue, it is more then we know; but by your prouiſion it ſeemeth ſo: if you haue, ſhoot in Gods name, and ſpare not, but they held all faſt and ſhot not. Then the Viceroy himſelfe held vp a paper, and ſayd he had a letter for our Captaine, and deſired vs to ſtay for it. Then we anſwered and ſayd we would not, but willed him to ſend it by the Marſeilians boat, and our men alſo. All this while, our trumpets, drum and flute ſounded, and ſo we paſſed out in the face of them all. When they perceiued that they could lay no holde on vs, they preſently ſent to the Towne for our men, whom within leſſe then three houres after they ſent aboord with the ſayd letter, wherein he deſired our Captaine and his company not to take it in ill part, for he meant them no harme, but would haue ſeene our ſhippe. His letter did import theſe and ſuch like faire ſpeeches: for it altogether contained courteous ſalutations, ſaying that he might boldly come into any port within his Iland, and that he and his would ſhew him what friendſhip they might: and that the iniury that was offered was done at the requeſt of the Shepheards and poore people of the countrey, for the more ſafegard of their flockes, and becauſe it was not a thing vſuall to haue any ſuch ſhippe to come into that port, with many other deceitfull words in the ſayd letter. Then our Ambaſſadour wrote vnto him another letter to anſwere that, and gaue him thanks for his men that he had ſent him, and alſo for his good will, and ſent him a preſent. This done, we ſhot off halfe a dozen pieces, hoiſed our ſailes, and departed on our voyage. Then the Purſer and the reſt of our men that had beene in holde, tolde vs that they did ſee the Captaine, and other gentlemen of the Iland, hauing their buſkins and ſtockings torne from their legges, with labouring in the buſhes day and night to make that ſudden prouiſion. The 12 of February we ſaw an Iland of Africa ſide called Galata, where they vſe to drag out of the Sea much Corall, and we ſaw likewiſe Sardinia, which is an Iland ſubiect to Spaine. The 13 in the morning we were hard by Sardinia. The 15 we did ſee an Iland neere Sicilia, and an Iland on Africa ſide called Cyſimbre. The ſame day likewiſe we ſaw an Iland called Pantalaria, and that night we were thwart the middle of Sicilia. The 16 at night we were as farre as Capo Paſſaro, which is the Southeaſt part of Sicilia. The 24 we were put into a port called Porto de Conte, in an Iland called Cephalonia: it is an out Iland in the dominions of Grecia, and now at this preſent gouerned by the Signory of Venice, as the reſt of Grecia is vnder the Turke, for the moſt part. The 27 we came from thence, and that day arriued at Zante which is alſo in Grecia; for at this preſent wee entred the parts of Grecia. The ſecond of March we came from Zante; and the ſame day were thwart of an Iland called Prodeno: and the 4 we were thwart of an Iland called Sapientia. There ſtandeth a faire Towne and a Caſtle on the maine ouer againſt it, called Modon. The ſame day by reaſon of contrary windes we put backe againe to Prodeno, becauſe we could not fetch Sapientia. The ninth we came from thence, and were as farre as Sapientia againe.. The tenth we were as farre ſhot as Cauo Matapan; and that day we entred the Archipelago, and paſſed thorow betweene Cerigo and Cauo Malio. This Cerigo is an Iland where one Menelaus did ſometimes reigne, from whome was ſtollen by Paris faire Helena, and carried to Troy, as ancient Recordes doe declare. The ſame day we had ſight of a little Iland called Bellapola, and did likewiſe ſee both the Milos, being Ilands in the Archipelago. The 11 in the morning we were hard by an Iland called Falconara, and the Iland of Antemila. The 12 in the morning we were betweene Fermenia and Zea, being both Ilands. That night wee were betweene Negroponte and Andri, being likewiſe Ilands. The 13 in the morning we were hard by Pſara and Saraſo, being Ilands nine or tenne miles from Chio, and could not fetch Chio. So we put roome with a port in Metelin called Sigra, and about nine of the clocke at night we ankered there. The 15 we came from thence, the ſixteenth we put into Porto Delfi. This port is 9 Engliſh miles to the Northward of the City of Chio, (and it may be twelue of their miles) this night we ſtayed in the ſayd port, being in the Iland of Chio. Then went our Marchant and one or two with him to the City of Chio. And when the By, who is the gouernour of the Iland (and is in their language a Duke) had communed with the Marchant, and thoſe that were with him, and vnderſtood of our arriuall within his dominion, the day following he armed his gallies, and came to welcome our Ambaſſadour, accompanied with the Ermine, that is, the Kings Cuſtomer, and alſo the French Conſull, with diuers of the chiefe of the City, and offered him as much friendſhip as he could or would deſire: for he did offer to attend vpon vs, and towe vs if need were to the Caſtles. The 21 we departed from thence, and that day paſſed by port Sigra againe. This Iland of Metelin is part of Aſia, and is neere to Natolia. The 22 we paſſed by a head land called Baberno, and is alſo in Aſia. And that day at night we paſſed by the Iſle of Tenedo, part of Aſia, and by another Iland called Maure. And the ſame day we paſſed thorow the ſtraights of Galipoli, and by the Caſtles, and alſo by the Towne of Galipoli it ſelfe, which ſtandeth in Europa. And that night we were in ſight of Marmora which is neere Natolia, and part of Aſia. The 23 in the morning we were thwart of Araclia, and that night we ankered in Silauria. The 24 in the morning the Marchant and the Pilot were ſet on land to goe to the City about the Ambaſſadours buſineſſe, but there they could not land becauſe we had the winde faire. That place of ſome is called Ponte grande, and is foure and twenty miles on this ſide of Conſtantinople, and becauſe of the winde, they followed in the ſkiffe vntill they came to a place called Ponte picola, and there is a little bridge, it ſtandeth eight Turkiſh miles from Conſtantinople, there the Marchant and the Pilot landed. At this bridge is an houſe of the great Turkes with a faire Garden belonging vnto it, neere the which is a point called Ponta S. Stephano, and there the ſhippe ankered that day. The 26 day the ſhip came to the ſeuen Towers, and the 27 we came neerer. The 29 there came three gallies to bring vs vp further: and when the ſhippe came againſt the great Turks palace, we ſhot off all our ordinance to the number of foure and thirty pieces. Then landed our Ambaſſadour, and then we diſcharged foure and twenty pieces, who was receiued with more then fifty or threeſcore men on horſebacke. The ninth of April he preſented the great Baſſa with ſixe clothes, foure cannes of ſiluer double gilt, and one piece of fine holland, and to three other Baſſas, that is to ſay, the ſecond Baſſa, which is a gelded man, and his name is Mahomet Baſſa, to the third who maried the great Turks ſiſter, and to the fourth whom they call Abraham Baſſa, to euery one of theſe he gaue foure clothes. Now, before the great Baſſa, and Abraham Baſſa, at their returne from the Court (and as we thinke at other times, but at that time for a certaine) there came a man in maner of a foole, who gaue a great ſhout three or foure times, crying very hollowly, the place rebounded with the ſound, and this man, ſay they, is a prophet of Mahomet, his armes and legges naked, on his feet he did weare wodden pattens of two ſorts, in his hand, a flagge, or ſtreamer ſet on a ſhort ſpeare painted, he carried a mat and bottels, and other trumpery at his backe, and ſometimes vnder his arme, on his head he had a cappe of white Camels haire, flat like an helmet, written about with letters, and about his head a linnen rowle. Other ſeruingmen there were with the ſayd Baſſas, with red attire on their heads, much like French hoods, but the long flappe ſomewhat ſmaller towardes the end, with ſcuffes or plates of mettall, like vnto the chape of an ancient arming ſword, ſtanding on their foreheads like other Ianiſaries. Theſe Baſſas entertained vs as followeth: Firſt, they brought vs into a hall, there to ſtand on one ſide, and our Ambaſſadour and gentlemen on the other ſide, who ſate them downe on a bench couered with carpets, the Ambaſſadour in the midſt; on his left hand ſate our gentlemen, and on his right hand the Turkes, next to the doore where their maſter goeth in and out: the common ſort of Turkes ſtayed in the Court yard, not ſuffered to come neere vs. When our Ambaſſadour had ſitten halfe an houre, the Baſſas (who ſate by themſelues in an inner ſmall roome) ſent for him; to whom the Ambaſſadour and his gentlemen went: they all kiſſed his hand, and preſently returned (the Ambaſſadour onely excepted, who ſtayed there, and a Turks chaus with him) with the Ambaſſadour and his gentlemen went in alſo ſo many of our men as there were preſents to cary in, but theſe neither kiſſed his hand nor taried. After this I went to viſit the church of Santa Sophia, which was the chiefe church when it was the Chriſtians, and now is the chiefe ſee and church of primacie of this Turke preſent: before I entred I was willed to put off my ſhoes, to the end I ſhould not prophane their church, I being a Chriſtian. The pillers on both ſides of the church are very coſtly and rich, their Pulpets ſeemely and handſome, two are common to preach in, the third reſerued onely for their Paſchall. The ground is couered with Mats, and the walles hanged with Tapiſtry. They haue alſo Lamps in their churches, one in the middle of the church of exceeding greatneſſe, and another in another part of the church of cleane golde, or double gilded, full as bigge as a barrel. Round about the church there is a gallery builded vpon rich and ſtately pillers. That day I was in both the chappels, in one of the which lieth the Turkes father, and fiue of his ſonnes in tombes right coſtly, with their turbents very white and cleane, ſhifted (as they ſay) euery Friday, they be not on their heads, but ſtand on mouldes made for that purpoſe. At the endes, ouer, and about their tombes are belts, like girdles, beſet with iewels. In the other chappell are foure other of his ſonnes, and one daughter, in like order. In the firſt chappell is a thing foure foot high, couered with greene, beſet with mother of pearle very richly. This is a relique of Mahomet, and ſtandeth on the left ſide of the head of the great Turks tombe. Theſe chappels haue their floores couered, and their walles hanged with Tapiſtrie of great price, I could value the couering and hangings of one of the chappels, at no leſſe then fiue hundred poundes, beſides their lamps hanging richly gilded. Theſe chappels haue their roofes curiouſly wrought with rich ſtone, and gilded. And there lie the bookes of their Lawes for euery man to reade. The 11 day of April the ſhippe came to the Key of the Cuſtome houſe. The 16 the Ambaſſadour and we his men went to the Captaine Baſſa, who is Admirall of the ſeas, his name is Vchali, he would not receiue vs into his houſe, but into his gallie, to deliuer our preſent, which was as followeth: Foure pieces of cloth, and two ſiluer pots gilt & grauen. The poope or ſterne of his gally was gilded both within and without, and vnder his feet, and where he ſate was all couered with very rich Tapiſtry. Our Ambaſſadour and his gentlemen kiſſed his hand, and then the gentlemen were commanded out, and our Ambaſſadour ſate downe by him on his left hand, and the chaus ſtood before him. Our men might walke in the gally fore and after, ſome of vs taried, and ſome went out againe. The gally had ſeuen pieces of braſſe in her prowe, ſmall and great, ſhe had thirty bankes or oares on either ſide, and at euery banke or oare ſeuen men to rowe. The 18 day the ſhippe went from the Key. And 21 the Admirall tooke his leaue of the great Turke, being bound to the Sea with ſixe and thirty gallies, very fairely beautified with gilding and painting, and beſet with flags and ſtreamers, all the which gallies diſcharged their ordinance: and we for his farewell gaue him one and twenty pieces. Then he went to his houſe with his gallies, and the 22 he went to the Sea, and the Caſtle that ſtandeth in the water gaue him foureteene or ſixteene pieces: and when he came againſt the Turks Seraglio he ſhot off all his caliuers and his great pieces, and ſo hee went his way. The 24 our Ambaſſadour went to the Court, whoſe entertainement with the order thereof followeth. When wee came firſt on land there was way made for vs by two or three Baſſaes and diuers chauſes on horſebacke with their men on foot, to accompany our Ambaſſadour to the Court. Alſo they brought horſes for him and his gentlemen for to ride, which were very richly furniſhed: and by the way there met with vs other chauſes to accompany vs to the Court. When we came there wee paſſed thorow two gates, at the ſecond gate there ſtood very many men with horſes attending on their maſters. When we came within that gate we were within a very faire Court yard, in compaſſe twiſe ſo bigge as Pauls Church-yard. On the right hand of the ſayd Court was a faire gallerie like an Alley, and within it were placed railes and ſuch other prouiſion. On the left ſide was the like, halfe the Court ouer: it was diuided into two parts, the innermoſt fairer then the other. The other part of that ſide is the place where the Councell doe vſually ſit, and at the inner end of that is a faire place to ſit in, much like vnto that place in Pauls Church-yard, where the Maior and his brethren vſe to ſit, thither was our Ambaſſadour brought, and ſet in that place. Within that ſayde place is another like open roome, where hee did eate. Aſſoone as wee came in, wee were placed in the innermoſt alley of the ſecond roome, on the left ſide of the Court, which was ſpread with carpets on the ground fourescore or fourescore and tenne foot long, with an hundred and fiftie ſeuerall diſhes ſet thereon, that is to ſay, Mutton boiled and roſted, Rice diuerſly dreſſed, Fritters of the fineſt faſhion, and diſhes daintily dight with pretty pappe, with infinite others, I know not how to expreſſe them. We had alſo roſted Hennes with ſundry ſorts of fowles to me vnknowen. The gentlemen and we ſate downe on the ground, for it is their maner ſo to feede. There were alſo Greekes and others ſet to furniſh out the roome. Our drinke was made with Roſe water and Sugar and ſpices brewed together. Thoſe that did ſerue vs with it had a great bagge tied ouer their ſhowlders, with a broad belt like an arming belt full of plates of copper and gilt, with part of the ſayd bagge vnder his arme, and the mouth in his hand: then he had a deuiſe to let it out when he would into cuppes, when we called for drinke. The Ambaſſadour when hee had eaten, paſſed by vs, with the chauſes aforeſayd, and ſate him downe in an inner roome. This place where he ſate was againſt the gate where we came in, and hard by the Councell chamber end, ſomewhat on the left ſide of the Court, this was at the Eaſt end of the Court, for we came in at the Weſt. All this time our preſents ſtood by vs vntill we had dined, and diner once ended, this was their order of taking vp the diſhes. Certaine were called in, like thoſe of the Blacke gard in the Court of England, the Turks call them Moglans. Theſe came in like rude and rauening Maſtifs, without order or faſhion, and made cleane riddance: for he whoſe hungry eye one diſh could not fill turned two, one into the other, and thus euen on the ſudden was made a cleane riddance of all. Then came certaine chauſes and brought our gentlemen to ſit with the Ambaſſadour. Immediatly came officers & appointed Janiſers to beare frō vs our preſents, who caried them on the right ſide of the Court, and ſet them hard by the doore of the Priuy chamber, as we call it: there all things ſtoode for the ſpace of an houre. Thus the Ambaſſadour and his gentlemen ſate ſtill, and to the Southward of them was a doore whereas the great Turke himſelfe went in and out at, and on the South ſide of that doore ſate on a bench all his chiefe lordes and gentlemen, and on the North ſide of the Weſt gate ſtood his gard, in number as I geſſe them a thouſand men. Theſe men haue on their heads round cappes of mettall like ſculles, but ſharpe in the toppe, in this they haue a bunch of Oſtridge feathers, as bigge as a buſh, with the corner or edge forward: at the lower end of theſe feathers was there a ſmaller feather, like thoſe that are commonly worn here. Some of his gard had ſmal ſtaues, & moſt of them were weaponed with bowes and arrowes. Here they waited, during our abode at the Court, to gard their Lord. After the Ambaſſadour with his gentlemen had ſitten an houre and more, there came three or foure chauſes, and brought them into the great Turkes preſence. At the Priuy chamber doore two noble men tooke the Ambaſſadour by ech arme one, and put their fingers within his ſleeues, and ſo brought him to the great Turke where he ſumptuouſly ſate alone. He kiſſed his hand and ſtood by vntill all the gentlemen were brought before him in like maner, one by one, and yede backewards againe his face towards the Turke; for they might neither tarry nor turne their backs, and in like maner returned the Ambaſſadour. The ſalutation that the Noble men did, was taking them by the hands. All this time they trode on cloth of golde, moſt of the Noble men that ſate on the South ſide of the Priuy chamber ſate likewiſe on cloth of golde. Many officers or Ianiſaries there were with ſtaues, who kept very good order, for no Turke whatſoeuer might goe any further then they willed him. At our Ambaſſadours entring they followed that bare his preſents, to ſay, twelue fine broad clothes, two pieces of fine holland, tenne pieces of plate double gilt, one caſe of candleſticks, the caſe whereof was very large, and three foot high and more, two very great cannes or pots, and one leſſer, one baſin and ewer, two poppiniayes of ſiluer, the one with two heads: they were to drinke in: two bottles with chaines, three faire maſtifs in coats of redde cloth, three ſpaniels, two bloodhounds, one common hunting hound, two greyhounds, two little dogges in coats of ſilke: one clocke valued at fiue hundred pounds ſterling: ouer it was a forreſt with trees of ſiluer, among the which were deere chaſed with dogs, and men on horſebacke following, men drawing of water, others carrying mine oare on barrowes: on the toppe of the clocke ſtood a caſtle, and on the caſtle a mill. All theſe were of ſiluer. And the clocke was round beſet with iewels. All the time that we ſtayed at the Councell chamber doore they were telling or weighing of money to ſend into Perſia for his Souldiours pay. There were carried out an hundred and three and thirty bags, and in euery bagge, as it was tolde vs, one thouſand ducats, which amounteth to three hundred and thirty thouſand *   , and in ſterling Engliſh money to fourescore and nineteene thouſand pounds. The Captaine of the guard in the meane time went to the great Turke, and returned againe, then they of the Court made obeiſance to him, bowing downe their heads, and their hands on their breaſts, and he in like order reſaluted them: he was in cloth of ſiluer, he went and came with two or three with him and no more. Then wee went out at the firſt gate, and there we were commanded to ſtay vntill the Captaine of the guard was paſſed by and all his guard with him, part before him and part behinde him, ſome on horſebacke and ſome on foot, but the moſt part on foot carrying on their ſhoulders the money before mentioned, and ſo we paſſed home. There was in the Court during our abode there, for the moſt part a foole reſembling the firſt, but not naked as was the other at the Baſſas: but he turned him cōtinually, & cried Hough very hollowly. The third of May I ſaw the Turke go to the church: he had more then two hundred and fifty horſes before and behinde him, but moſt before him. There were many empty horſes that came in no order. Many of his Nobilitie were in cloth of golde, but himſelfe in white ſattin. There did ride behinde him ſixe or ſeuen youthes, one or two whereof carried water for him to drinke as they ſayd. There were many of his guard running before him and behinde him, and when he alighted, they cried Hough very hollowly, as the aforeſayd fooles.

The Turke is preſented with a rich preſent.

Generoſus & virtuoſus Gulielmus Hareborne legatus veſtræ ſacræ Maieſtatis venit ad portam excelſiſſimam potentiſſimi & inuictiſsimi, & ſemper Auguſtiſsimi Cæſaris Sultan Murad Can, cui Deus omnipotens benedicat. Et quanto honore, quanta dignitate, quantáque humanitate aliorum confœderatorum legati accipiuntur, præfatus quoque legatus veſter tanta reuerentia, tantáque amplitudine acceptus & collocatus eſt in porta excelſiſsima. Et poſthac ſubditi & homines veſtræ ſacræ Maieſtatis ad ditiones omnes Cæſareas venire, & ſua negocia tractare, & ad ſuam patriam redire ſine impedimento, vt in literis excelſiſsimi, potentiſsimi, & inuictiſsimi, & ſemper Auguſtiſsimi Cæſaris ad veſtram ſacram Regiam Maieſtatem datis facile patet, tranquillè & pacificè poſſunt. Ego autem imprimis diligentem operam & fidele ſtudium & nunc eodem confirmando nauaui, & in futurum quoque vſque in vltimum vitæ ſpiritum in negotijs potentiſsimi & inuictiſsimi Cæſaris, & veſtræ ſacræ Regiæ Maieſtatis egregiam nauabo operam. Quod Deus omnipotens ad emolumentum & vtilitatem vtriúſque Reipublicæ ſecundet. Amen. Sacram Regiam Maieſtatem fœliciſsimè valere exopto. Datum Conſtantinopoli anno 1583, die octauo Maij.

A letter of the Engliſh Ambaſſadour to M. Haruie Millers, appointing him Conſull for the Engliſh nation in Alexandria, Cairo, and other places of Egypt.

HAuing to appoint our Conſull in Cayro, Alexandria, Egypt, and other parts adiacent, for the ſafe protection of body and goods of her Maieſties ſubiects; being well perſwaded of your ſufficient abilitie; in her Maieſties name I doe elect and make choiſe of you, good friend Haruie Millers, to execute the ſame worſhipfull office, as ſhall be required for her Maieſties better ſeruice, the commodity of her ſubiects, and my contentation: hauing and inioying for merit of your trauell in the premiſſes the like remuneration incident to the reſt of ours in ſuch office in other parts of this Empire. Requiring you (all other affaires ſet aſide) to repaire thither with expedition, and attend vpon this your charge, which the Almighty grant you well to accompliſh. For the due execution whereof, we heere with ſend you the Grand Signiors Patent of priuilege with ours, and what els is needfull therefore, in ſo ample maner, as any other Conſull whoſoeuer doeth or may enioy the ſame. In ayd whereof, according to my bounden duety to her Maieſty our moſt gracious Miſtreſſe, I will be ready alwayes to employ my ſelfe to the generall benefit of her Maieſties ſubiects, for your maintenance in all iuſt cauſes incident to the ſame. And thus eftſoones requiring and commanding you as aboueſayd, to performe my requeſt, I bid you moſt heartily well to fare, and deſire God to bleſſe you. From my manſion Rapamat nigh Pera this 25 of April 1583.

Commiſſion giuen by M. VVilliam Hareborne the Engliſh Ambaſſadour, to Richard Forſter, authoriſing him Conſul of the Engliſh nation in the parts of Alepo, Damaſco, Aman, Tripolis, Ieruſalem, &c.

I William Harborne, her Maieſties Ambaſſadour, Ligier with the Grand Signior, for the affaires of the Leuant doe in her Maieſties name confirme and appoint Richard Forſter Gentleman, my Deputie and Conſull in the parts of Alepo, Damaſco, Aman, Tripolis, Ieruſalem, and all other ports whatſoeuer in the prouinces of Syria, Paleſtina, and Iurie, to execute the office of Conſull ouer all our Nation her Maieſties ſubiects, of what eſtate or quality ſoeuer: giuing him hereby full power to defend, protect, and maintaine all ſuch her Maieſties ſubiects as to him ſhall be obedient, in all honeſt and iuſt cauſes whatſoeuer: and in like caſe no leſſe power to impriſon, puniſh, and correct any and all ſuch as he ſhall finde diſobedient to him in the like cauſes, euen in ſuch order as I my ſelfe might doe by vertue of her Maieſties Commiſſion giuen me the 26 of Nouember 1582, the copie whereof I haue annexed to this preſent vnder her Maieſties Seale deliuered me to that vſe. Straightly charging and commanding all her Maieſties ſubiects in thoſe parts, as they will auoid her Highneſſe diſpleaſure and their owne harmes, to honour his authoritie, and haue due reſpect vnto the ſame, aiding and aſſiſting him there with their perſons and goods in any cauſe requiſit to her Maieſties good ſeruice, and commoditie of her dominions. In witneſſe whereof I haue confirmed and ſealed theſe preſents at Rapamat my manſion houſe by Pera ouer againſt Conſtantinople, the 20 of Iune 1583.

A letter of directions of the Engliſh Ambaſſadour to M. Richard Forſter, appointed the firſt Engliſh Conſull at Tripolis in Syria.

COuſin Forſter, theſe few words are for your remembrance when it ſhall pleaſe the Almighty to ſend you ſafe arriuall in Tripolis of Syria. When it ſhall pleaſe God to ſend you thither, you are to certifie our Nation at Tripolis of the certaine day of your landing, to the end they both may haue their houſe in a readineſſe, and alſo meet you perſonally at your entrance to accompany you, being your ſelfe apparelled in the beſt maner. The next, ſecond, or third day, after your comming, giue it out that you be crazed and not well diſpoſed, by meanes of your trauell at Sea, during which time, you and thoſe there are moſt wiſely to determine in what maner you are to preſent your ſelfe to the Beglerbi, Cadi, and other officers: who euery of them are to be preſented according to the order accuſtomed of others formerly in like office: which after the note of Iohn Blanke, late Vice-conſull of Tripolis for the French, deliuered you heerewith, is very much: and therefore, if thereof you can ſaue any thing, I pray you doe it, as I doubt not but you will. They are to giue you there alſo another Ianizarie according as the French hath; whoſe outward proceedings you are to imitate and follow, in ſuch ſort as you bee not his inferiour, according as thoſe of our Nation heeretofore with him reſident can informe you. Touching your demeanour after your placing, you are wiſely to proceede conſidering both French and Venetian will haue an enuious eye on you: whome if they perceiue wiſe and well aduiſed, they will feare to offer you any iniurie. But if they ſhall perceiue any inſufficiencie in you, they will not omitte any occaſion to harme you. They are ſubtile, malicious, and diſſembling people, wherefore you muſt alwayes haue their doings for ſuſpected, and warily walke in all your actions: wherein if you call for Gods diuine aſſiſtance, as doth become euery faithfull good Chriſtian, the ſame ſhall in ſuch ſort direct you as he ſhall be glorified, your ſelfe preſerued, your doings bleſſed, and your enemies confounded. Which if contrarywiſe you omit and forget, your enemies malice ſhalbe ſatiſfied with your confuſion, which God defend, and for his mercies ſake keepe you. Touching any outlopers of our nation, which may happen to come thither to traffike, you are not to ſuffer, but to impriſon the chiefe officers, and ſuffer the reſt not to traffike at any time, and together enter in ſuch bonds as you thinke meete, that both they ſhall not deale in the Grand Signiors dominions, and alſo not harme, during their voyage, any his ſubiects ſhippes, veſſels, or whatſoeuer other, but quietly depart out of the ſame country without any harme doing. And touching thoſe there for the company, you are to defend them according to your priuiledge & ſuch commandements as you haue had hence, in the beſt order you may. In all and euery your actions, at any hand, be ware of raſhneſſe and anger, after both which repentance followeth. Touching your dealings in their affaires of marchandiſe, you are not to deale otherwiſe then in ſecret and counſell. You are carefully to foreſee the charge of the houſe, that the ſame may be in all honeſt meaſure to the companies profit and your owne health through moderation in diet, and at the beſt hand, and in due time to prouide things needfull, to ſaue what may be: for he that buyeth euery thing when he needeth it, harmeth his owne houſe, and helpeth the retailer. So as it is, in mine opinion, wiſdome to foreſee the buying of all things in their natiue ſoile, in due time, and at the firſt hand euery yeere, as you are to ſend the company the particular accounts of the ſame expenſes. Touching your ſelfe, you are to cauſe to be employed fifty or threeſcore ducats, videlicet, twenty in Sope, and the reſt in Spices, whereof the moſt part to be Pepper, whereof we ſpend very much. The Spices are to be prouided by our friend William Barrat, and the Sope buy you at your firſt arriuall, for that this ſhippe lading the ſame commodity will cauſe it to amount in price. From our manſion Rapamat, the fift of September 1583.

A letter to the right honourable VVilliam Hareborne her Maieſties Ambaſſadour with the Grand Signior from Alger.

Right honorable, we haue receiued your honors letters dated in Conſtantinople the 5 of Nouember, and accordingly deliuered that incloſed to the king of this place, requiring of him, according as you did command vs in her Maieſties name, that he would vouchſafe to giue order to all his Captaines & Raies that none of them ſhould meddle with our Engliſh ſhippes comming or going to or from theſe parts, for that they haue order not to paſſe by the Chriſtian coaſt, but vpon the coaſt of Barbary, and ſhewing him of the charter giuen by the Grand Signior, requiring him in like caſe that for the better fulfilling of the amity, friendſhip and holy league betweene the Grand Signior and her Maieſty, he would giue vs fiue or ſix ſafeconducts for our ſhips, that meeting with any of his gallies or galliots, they might not meddle with them neither ſhoot at them: who made me anſwere he would neither giue me any ſafe conduct nor commiſſion to his men of war not to meddle with them, for that he truſted to take ſome of them this yere, and made good account thereof. In like maner I ſpake to the chiefe of the Ianiſers and the Leuents, who made me anſwere, the beſt hope they had this yere was to take ſome of them, and although they haue the Grand Signiors commandement we care not therefore: for we will by policy, or one meanes or other prouoke them to ſhoot ſome ordinance, which if they do but one piece, the peace is broken, and they be good prizes. And ſome of them ſay further, we care not for their ſafeconduct, for if they ſhew it vs, we will conuey it away, we are ſure the dogs cannot be beleeued againſt vs. The premiſſes conſidered, your honor is with all ſpeed to procure the Grand Signior his fauorable letters directed to Hazan, the Cady, Captaines, Ianiſers, & Leuents, & another like to Romadan Baſſa, king of Tripolis, cõmanding them in no maner whatſoeuer to deale with our Engliſh ſhips bound into thoſe parts or returning thence with their commodities, although they ſhould ſhoot one at another: for when our ſhips ſhall meet them, for that, as your honor is aduertiſed, the gallies of Carthagena, Florence, Sicilia and Malta haue made a league to take all our ſhips comming in or going out of the Grand Signiors dominions, therefore if they meet with any of theſe gallies of Alger or Tripolis, thinking they be of them, and not knowing them a far off, they may ſhoot at them, which if therefore they ſhould make them prizes, were againſt Gods lawes, the Grand Signior his league, all reaſon and conſcience, conſidering that all the world doth know that Marchants ſhips laden with marchandiſe do not ſeeke to fight with men of warre, but contrariwiſe to defend themſelues from them, when they would do them harme. Wherefore if your honor do not get out two letters of the Grand Signior as aforeſayd, & ſend them hither with all ſpeed by ſome one of your gentlemen accompanied with a chaus of the Court, or ſome other of the Grand Signiors ſeruants, it is impoſſible that our Engliſh ſhips can eſcape freely from theſe or the Chriſtians: for either they muſt of force go on the Chriſtian coaſt, and ſo fall into their hands, or els on this coaſt, and fall into the kings of this towne, or Tripolis, their hands, which if they ſhould, will neuer be recouered. And if your honor cannot obtaine this thing, I beſeech your honor in the behalfe of all the Engliſh marchants (who ſent me hither to follow ſuch order as your honor ſhould giue me) to certifie her Maieſtie, to the end that they may be commanded to leaue off traffique, and not to loſe their goods, and her poore ſubiects the Mariners. And thus humbly taking my leaue, I deſiſt from troubling your honor. From Algier the tenth of February 1583.

get

A letter of M. Harborne to Muſtapha, challenging him for his diſhoneſt dealing in tranſlating of three of the Grand Signior his commandements.

Domine Muſtapha, neſcimus quid ſibi velit, cum nobis mandata ad finem vtilem conceſſa perperàm reddas, quæ male ſcripta, plus damni, quàm vtilitatis adferant: quemadmodum conſtat ex tribus receptis mandatis, in quibus ſummum aut principale deeſt aut aufertur. In poſterum noli ita nobiſcum agere. Ita enim ludibrio erimus omnibus in noſtrum & tuum dedecus. Cum nos multarum actionum ſpem Turcicè ſcriptarum in tua prudentia reponimus, ita prouidere debes; vt non eueniant huiuſmodi mala. Quocirca deinceps cum mandatum aut ſcriptum aliquod accipias, verbum ad verbum conuertatur in Latinum ſermonem, ne damnum inſequatur. Noſti multos habere nos inimicos conatibus noſtris inuidentes, quorum malitiæ veſtræ eſt prudentiæ aduerſari. Hi noſtri, Secretarius & minimus interpres ex noſtra parte dicent in tribus illis receptis mandatis errata. Vt deinceps ſimiles errores non eueniant precamur. Iſta emendes, & cætera Sereniſſimæ regiæ Maieſtatis negocia, vti decet veſtræ conditionis hominem, meliùs cures. Nam vnicuique ſuo officio ſtrenuè eſt laborandum vt debito tramite omnia ſuccedant: quod ſpero te facturum. Bene vale.

The Paſport in Italian granted to Thomas Shingleton Engliſhman, by the king of Algier. 1583.

NOi Aſſan Baſha Vicere & lochotenente e capitan della iuriſditione de Algier doniamo e concediamo libero ſaluo condutto a Thomas Shingleton mercadante, che poſſi con ſuo vaſſello e marinari de che natione ſe ſiano, e mercadantia di qualſi voglia natione, andare & venire, e negotiare, e contrattare liberamente in queſta citta de Algier & altri lochi de la noſtra iuriſditione coſi di ponente comi di Leuante: & coſi anchora commandiamo al capitan di mare di Algier & d' altri lochi de noſtra iuriſditione, Rais de Vaſſelli & capitani de Leuante, & altri capitani di vaſſelli tanto groſſi como picholi, ſi commanda a qual ſi voglia, che trouando il ſopradetto Thomas Shingleton Ingleſe nelli mari di Genua, Francia, Napoli, Calabria, e Sardigna con ſuo vaſſello e mercantia, & homini de che nationi ſi ſiano, non gli debba moleſtare, ne pigliare, ne toccare coſa de neſſuna manera tanto di denare, como di qual ſi voglia altra robba, ſotto la pena e diſgratia di perdir la vita & la robba: Et per quanto hauete a caro la gratia del Gran Signor noſtro patrone Soltan Murates Ottomano, lo laſciarete andare per ſuo camino ſenza dargli neſſuno impedimento. Dato in Algieri in noſtro reggio Palazzo, ſigillato del noſtro reggio ſigillo, e fermato della gran ferma, & ſcritto del noſtro reggio Secretario, il di 23 de Ienaro, 1583.
